Portgreve, or Portreeve, (Portgreivius, in Saxon portsefer, that is, urbis vel portus prefectus) Signifies with us a magistrate in certain sea-coast towns; and as Camden, in his Brit. 325. saith, The chief magistrate of London was so called, as appears by a charter of King William the Conqueror to the same city in these words: William King, greeteth, William Bishop and Godfrey Portgreve, and all the burghers within London, French and English: And I grant you, that I will that you be all your law-worth that ye were in Edward's days the King: And I will that each child be his father's eyer, and I will suffer that any man yeu any wrongys beed. And God you keep. Ex libro perveusto.

Instead of the portgreve, Richard the first ordained two bailiffs, but presently after him King John granted them a mayor for their yearly magistrature. And Camden, speaking of Maidstone in Kent, says, Immunitates plurimas Regina Elizabetha fert acceptas. quæ majorem summum magistratum instituit pro portgrevio quem primum habuit, &c. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 406.

Portion, Is that part of a person's estate, which is given or left to a child. And if a term of years settled to raise a daughter's portion, is so short that the ordinary profits of the land are not sufficient, the court of Chancery may order timber to be felled, &c. to make up the money at the time appointed. Preced. Canc. 27. A sale of lands has been also decreed, for payment of of portions devised at a certain time, out of the rents and profits, where they were not judged sufficient for raising the money; altho' the land subject to the portions was given to others in remainder. Ibid. 396.

Where a portion was devised by will to a daughter, to be raised out of a real and personal estate, and paid at her age of twenty-one years, without saying or marriage; the daughter married, and died under age: It was here said, that the portion was then due and payable, marriage being the cause of daughters portions. Ibid. 109. But see 267, 268.

A husband must make a suitable provision for his wife, when he sues for her portion in equity. 2 Vern. 494. If any child marry under the age of twenty-one, without consent of the father or mother; or any man-child be a thief, common whore hunter, or gameller; or a woman child commit whoredom, &c. they are barred to demand their portions, by the custom of the city of London: This is by an act of common council, 5 Edw. 6. but it is observed. Cit. Lib. 132. See Children, and Vin. Abr. 16 V. tit. Portions. As to the method of raising portions, see the Appendix to 2 V. of Black. Com. vii.

Portioner, (Portionarius) Where a parsonage is served by different ministers alternately, the ministers are called portioners; because they have but their portion or proportion of the tithes or profits of the living: And portion is that allowance which a vicar commonly has out of a rectory or impropriation. 27 H. 8. c. 28.

Portmen, The burghesses of Ipswich are so called. So also are the inhabitants of the cinque ports, according to Camden. 13 Eliz. c. 24.

Portmote, (from portus & gemot, conventus) Is a court kept in haven towns or ports; and is called the portmote court. 43 Eliz. cap. 15.—Curia portmotorium est curia in civitate Cestrie coram majore in aula motorum tenenda. Pl. in Itin. Ibid. 14. Hen. 7. The portmote, or portmannimote, i. e. portmen's court, is said to be held not only in port towns, as generally rendered; but in inland towns, the word port in Saxon signifying the same with city.

Portsale, Is a publick sale of goods to the highest bidder; or of fish presently on its arrival in the port or haven. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 7.

Portfoka, or Portfokne, The suburbs of a city, or any place within its jurisdiction; from the Saxon word, which is civitas, and foea, jurisdiction. Concessit quod nulus de civitate vel portfoka sua captus, &c. Somner's Gavelkind 135. Hen. 3. granted by charter to the city of London—Quintantiam murdri, &c. infra urbem & in Portfokne, &c. within the walls of the city, and the liberties without the walls. Placit. Temp. Ed. 1.

Portuas, (mentioned in 3 & 4 Edw. 6. 10.) Is reckoned amongst books prohibited by that statute; it is a breviary. Cowell. It is also by some, called portus or portose.

Positive Proof, Is always required, where from the nature of the case it appears it might possibly have been had. But, next to positive proof circumstantial evidence, or the doctrine of presumptions must take place: For when the fact itself cannot be demonstratively evinced, that which comes nearest to the proof of the fact, is the proof of such circumstances which either necessarily, or usually, attend such facts; and these are called presumptions, which are only to be relied on till the contrary be actually proved. Black. Com. 3 V. 371.

Poss, Is an infinitive mood, but used substantively, to signify a possibility, as we say, such a thing is possible, that is, such a thing may possibly be; but of a thing in being, we say it is in esse.

Poss Comitatus, The power of the county, according to Lambard, contains the aid and attendance of all knights, and other men above the age of fifteen, within the county; because all of that age are bound to have harness, by the statute of Winchester: But ecclesiastical persons, and such as labour under any infirmity, are not compellable to attend. Persons able to travel being required to be assistant in in this service; it is used where a riot is committed, a possession is kept on a forcible entry, or any force or rescue made contrary to the commandment of the King's writ, or in opposition to the execution of justice. Stat. 2 H. 5. c. 8.

Sheriffs are to be assisting to justices of peace in suppressing riots, &c. and raise the posse comitatus, by charging any number of men to attend for that purpose, who may take with them such weapons as shall be necessary; and they may justify the beating, and even killing such rioters as resist, or refuse to surrender, and persons refusing to assist herein, may be fined and imprisoned. 17 R. 2. cap. 8. 13 Hen. 4. cap. 7. 2 Hen. 5. cap. 8. Lamb. 313, 318. Crompt. 62. Dalt. cap. 46. 2 Inst. 193.

Justices of peace, having a just cause to fear a violent resistance, may raise the posse in order to remove a force in making an entry into or detaining lands: And a sheriff, if need be, may raise the power of the county to assist him in the execution of a precept of restitution; therefore if he make a return thereto, that he could not make a restitution by reason of resistance, he shall be amerced. 1 Hawk. P. C. 152, 156.

It is the duty of a sheriff, or other minister of justice, having the execution of the King's writs, and being resisted in endeavouring to execute the same, to raise such a power as may effectually enable them to quell such resistance; tho' it is said not to be lawful for them to raise a force for the execution of a civil process, unless they find resistance. 2 Inst. 193. 3 Inst. 161.

It is lawful for a peace officer, or a private person, to assemble a competent number of people, and sufficient power to suppress rebels, enemies, rioters: but there must be great caution, lest under a pretence of keeping the peace, they cause a greater breach of it; and sheriffs, &c. are punishable for using needless violence, or alarming the country in these cases, without just grounds. 1 Hawk. P. C. 156, 161. See Black. Com. 1 V. 343. 4 V. 122.

Possessio fratris. Where a man hath a son and a daughter by one woman or Venter, and a son by another Venter, and dies, if the first son enters and dies without issue, the daughter shall have the land as heir to her brother, altho' the second son by the second Venter is heir to the father: But if the eldest son dies without issue, not having made an actual entry and seisin, the younger brother by the second wife, as heir to the father, shall enjoy the estate; not the sister. 1 Inst. 11, 15.

Lands are settled on a man, and the heirs of his body, and he hath issue a son and a daughter by one woman, and a son by another, and dieth; and then the eldest son dies, before any entry made on the lands either by his own act, or by the possession of another, the younger brother shall inherit, he claiming as heir of the body of the father, and not generally, as heir to his brother; yet if the elder brother enter, and by his own act gained the possession; or if the lands were leased for years, or in the hands of a guardian, there the possession of the lessee or guardian doth vest the fee in the elder brother, and then on his death the sister shall inherit as heir to her brother, for there is possessio fratris. 3 Rep. 42. There can be no possessio fratris of a dignity; in such case the younger brother is heir natus: Lord Grey being created a baron to him and his heirs, had issue a son and a daughter by one Venter, and a son by another; and after his death, the eldest being possessed of the barony, and dying without issue, it was adjudged, that the younger brother, and not the sister should have it. Cro. Car. 437. 2 Nels. Abr. 923.

Possession. (Possessio, quasi pedis positio) Is either actual, where a person actually enters into lands or tenements descended or conveyed to him; or in law, when lands, &c. are descended to a man, and he hath not actually entered into them: Also before, or till an office is found of lands escheated to the King by attainder, he hath only a possession in law. Brañ. lib. 2. cap. 17.

Possession beyond the memory of man, establishes a right; but if by the knowledge of man, or proof of record, &c. the contrary is made out, tho' it exceeds the memory of man, this shall be construed within memory. 1 Inst.

115. A long possession the law favours, as an argument of right, altho' no deed can be shewn; rather than an ancient deed, without possession. 1 Inst. 6. Continued quiet possession is a violent presumption of a good title: And where two persons enter into, and claim the same land, the possession will always be adjudged in him who has right, &c. 2 Inst. 256, 323.

He who is out of possession, if he brings his action, must make a good title: And to recover any thing from another, it is not sufficient to destroy the title of him in possession; but you must prove your own better than his. Vangb. 8, 58, 60. But in action against a person for digging of coney-boroughs in a common, &c. it was held, that the action being grounded on the possession of the tenement, to which the common belonged, the plaintiff need not shew a title; and in this case the defendant may be a stranger; besides the title is not traversable, but ought to be given in evidence upon the trial of the issue. 3 Salk. 12.

A defendant in trespass, &c. for taking cattle damage-secant, has been allowed to justify the taking on his possession, without shewing his title; the matter of justification being collateral to the title of the land. 2 Mod. 70. 3 Salk. 220. Tho' in such a case, on its being insisted, that there was the same reason for justifying on a possession, as there was for maintaining an action on a bare possession; it hath been adjudged, that a justification on a possession, only, is not good; for a possession may not be but by contract, but a seisin may be by right or wrong. Hill. 2 & 3 Jac. 2.

In replevin, if defendant had the possession, it is a good bar against the plaintiff if he has no title; but there cannot be a return, unless he shews a property in the goods. Pasch. 2 Ann.

Action of the case lies for shooting at and frightening away ducks from a decoy pond, which is in the plaintiff's possession, without shewing that he had any property in them. 3 Salk. 9.

A man on a lease and release of lands, &c. is in possession to all intents, except bringing trespass, which cannot be without an entry, pedis positio. 2 Lill. Abr. 335. And to make possession good on entry, the former possessor and his servants, &c. are to be removed from the land; and if possession be lost by entry of another, it must be regained by re-entry, &c. Pasch. 1650.

A person in possession may bring an action, for loss of his shade, shelter, fruit, when trees are injured; and he in reversion, for spoiling the trees. 3 Lev. 209. One in defence of his lawful possession, may assemble his friends to resist those who threaten to make an unlawful entry into a house, &c. 5 Rep. 91. There is an unity of possession, when by purchase the seignory and tenancy, become in one man's possession. Kitch. 134. See 16 Lill. Abr. 454, 460. And Black. Com. 2 V. 163, 195, 389. 3 V. 177, 179, 180, 202, 412. xii. 253 to possession action, see ib. 2 V. 198. 3 V. 180.

Possibilitas. Is taken for an act wilfully done, and impossibilitas for a thing done against our will. Si autem ocales asnas reddat veram ejus, & possibilitatis accusetur in eo facto, where factum possibilitatis is a wilful act. Leg. Alfred. cap. 38. So in the laws of Cambrus, c. 66. Et si quis agat impossibiliter, non est omnino simile si voluntarie faciat. Leg. Sax. Edw. senior. c. 88.

Possibility. In our law is defined to be an uncertain thing, which may or may not happen. 2 Lill. Abr. 336. And it is either near or remote; as for instance: Where an estate is limited to one, after the death of another, this is a near possibility; but that one man shall be married to a woman, and then that she shall die, and he be married to another; this is a remote or extraordinary possibility: And the law doth not regard a remote possibility, that is never like to be. 15 H. 7. 10. Hardr. 417. 2 Rep. 50. A possibility cannot be granted over; no possibility, right or chose in action, &c. may be granted or assigned to a stranger. 4 Rep. 66. 10 Rep. 48.

A lease was made to husband and wife of a term of years, for their lives, remainder to the executors of the survivor; the husband granted the term, and it was adjudged, that it should not bind the wife, the husband having only a possibility to have it, if he survived his wife, and no interest till then. 2 Nels. Abr. 1274.

If husband and wife are tenants in special tail, and the husband only levies a fine of the lands, &c. the wife's estate is turned into a possibility, and only reducible by entry, if she survive. Heb. 257.

Where a lease is made for life, the remainder to the right heirs of J. S. this is good; for by common possibility J. S. may die during the life of tenant for life. 2 H. 7. 13. 3 Rep. Abr. 36.

A man made a lease to his brother for life, and that if he married, and his wife should survive, then she should have it for her life; the lessee before he married, made a feoffment of the lands to another, and afterwards the lessor levied a fine to him; then the lessee married, and died, and his wife survived: And it was held, that the remainder to the wife for life was gone by this feoffment, and the possibility of her having it was included in the fine, which was likewise barred. Moor. 554.

A testator possessed of a lease for years, devised the profits thereof to W. R. for life, remainder to another; and afterwards the devisee for life entered with the assent of the executor, and then he in remainder for life assigned all his interest to another, and after the devisee for life died; it was resolved, that this assignment was void, because whilst the devisee for life was living, he in remainder had only a possibility to have the term, for the devisee for life had an interest in it sub modo, and might have survived the whole term. 4 Rep. 64.

The devise of the possibility of a term is void; as where a term is devised to A. for life, remainder to B. and B. devises this remainder to C. and dies; and then A. dies; this devise to C. is void, and the executors of B. shall have it. 3 Lev. 427. A possibility founded on a trust, differs from a mere possibility; the first may be devised, but the other cannot. Moor. 808. 2 Nels. 1275. See Black. Com. 2 V. 290.

Post, A swift or speedy messenger to carry letters, &c. And the Post Office is of the greatest consequence to this kingdom, being a country of trade. The first law that introduced this very great convenience, was made in the reign of King Car. 2.

By the 12 Car. 2. cap. 35. a general letter or Post Office was erected, &c. and the rates for carriage of letters appointed. See the Table to the Statutes.

A person having inclosed Exchequer bills in a letter sent by the post, which were lost, the owner brought an action against the Postmaster; and by three judges it was held, that the action did not lie, because the office is for INTELLIGENCE ONLY; and it is impossible the Postmaster General, who is to execute this office in such distant places, by so many several hands, should be able to secure every thing, and for that, this is not a conveyance for treasure: But Holt was of a contrary opinion; he considered this as a letter lost in the office, not on the road, and held that the Postmaster General is liable, the whole care being committed to him, and the law makes the officer answerable for himself and his deputies; he has a reward, which is the reason why innkeepers, carriers, &c. are liable for goods lost; and where a man takes on him a publick employment, he is bound to serve the publick, or action lies against him, &c. 1 Salk. 17.

The Post-Office in London is managed by the Postmaster, and other officers to the number of seventy-seven; one of which is called the Court Post, constituted by patent for life, with a handsome salary: And the Postmaster General has under him one hundred eighty-two deputy Postmasters in England and Scotland, most of them keeping regular offices in their stages, and Sub Postmasters in their branches.

The conveyance of post letters extends to every considerable market-town, and is so expeditious, that every twenty-four hours the post goes sixscore miles.

By 26 Geo. 2. c. 13. Letters containing inclosed several patterns of cloth, silk, or other goods, not exceeding one ounce weight, shall be paid for only as for a double letter. See Master of the Posts.

Penny-Post, Letters or parcels, not exceeding sixteen ounces weight, or ten pounds value, are conveyed daily by the penny-post, to and from all places within the Bills of Mortality, and ten miles distance from the General Post-Office, for 1 d. each packet, letter, &c. stat. 9 Ann. c.

10. And several general offices: re kept at convenient distances, to receive penny-post letters every day, Sundays excepted: Also letters that come from all parts by the general post, directed to persons in any country-towns to which the penny-post goes, are delivered the same day they come to London: And the answers are carried every 1st night to the General Post-Office in Lombard street, being left at the receiving houses.

Penny-post men carrying letters out of the cities of London and Westminster, or borough of Southwark, and the suburbs thereof, may demand and take 1 d. at delivery for every letter, above the penny paid on putting the letters into the Penny-Post Office; except letters passing by the general post, &c. stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 33.

Post Conquestum, Were words inserted in the King's title, by King Edw. 1. and constantly used in the time of Edw. 3. Clayt. 1 Edw. 3. indors. m. 33.

Post Dicitur, Is where a writ is returned after the day assigned, for which the custos brevium hath a fee of 4 d. whereas he hath nothing if it be returned at the day.

Post-Disseisin, Is a writ that lies for him who having recovered lands or tenements by præcipe quod reddat, upon default or reddition, is again disseised by the former disseisor; then he shall have this writ, and recover double damages, and the party shall be punished by imprisonment, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 26. Reg. Orig. 258. F. N. B. 190.

The writ of post-disseisin ought to be brought by the parties who first recovered, or some of them, and of the same land which was recovered, or part thereof, and against those or some of them, against whom the recovery was: But if a man recover by a præcipe quod reddat, and after is disseised by him against whom he recovered, and the disseisor makes a feoffment, and takes back an estate to him and another, a post-disseisin may be had against him and his jointenant; and if he who lost the land by default, &c. after disseise him who recovered, and make a feoffment to another person, he who recovered shall have this writ against the disseisor, altho' he be not tenant of the land; for in a writ of post-disseisin, the demandant shall not have judgment to recover the land; but the sheriff shall restore the plaintiff to his possession, if the disseisin be found, and take the defendant and keep him in prison. New Nat. Br. 423. And the defendant is not to be delivered out of prison, until he hath paid a fine to the King, and without the King's special command, upon a certiorari to remove the record into B. R. whereupon a writ shall go to the sheriff to deliver him. Ibid.

Nontenure is no plea in a post-disseisin, for the defendant ought to answer the disseisin, &c. See Black. Com. 3 V. 188.

Postea, Is the return of the judge, before whom a cause was tried, after a verdict, of what was done in the cause; and is indorsed on the back of the Nisi prius record: It begins, POSTEA die & loco, &c. wherefore it is so called. 2 Lill. 337.

A postea is a record of the court, trusted with the attorney in the cause by the clerk of the assize; and the attorney so intrusted, is to deliver it into the office, that the judgment may be entered by it by the officer of the court. Trin. 1651.

It is brought into court at the day in bank, and recorded there and delivered back to the attorney, who gives a rule for judgment upon it; and if there be no rule to the contrary, after the rule for judgment is out, the attorney brings his postea to the secondary, who signs his judgment, and then he enters all this matter on the issue roll. 2 Lill. 337.

The court may stay the bringing in of the postea, and entering up the judgment upon a verdict, if they find cause to do it, for any undue practice in the proceedings to trial: And if the party for whom the verdict passed, will not bring in the postea, upon notice given by the other party, that he intends to move in arrest of judgment; the court, on motion will order judgment to be stayed, until four days after the postea is brought in, allowed to speak in arrest of judgment. Mish. 22 Car. B. R.

Altho' the verdict, be prejudicial to the plaintiff, he ought to bring in the possea; for he must abide by the trial.

There is no general rule of court for the clerk of assize, &c. to bring the possea into court of B. R. by a precise time; but if it be not returned in convenient time, the court may be moved at the side bar for a rule to bring it in speedily. 2 Lill. 337. If the clerk of assize hath mistaken in drawing up the possea, he may amend it by his notes, before it is filed; and the return of a possea hath been amended by the memory of a judge, who tried the cause. Cro. Car. 338. See Black. Com. 3 V. 386. xi Posterority, (Posterioritas) Signifies the being or coming after, and is a word of comparison and relation in tenures, the correlative whereof is priority: As a man holding lands or tenements of two lords, holds of his ancestor lord by priority, and of his latter lord by posterority. Staundt. Prerog. 10, 11. 2 Inst. 392.

Post-fine, Is a duty to the King for a fine formerly acknowledged in his court, paid by the cognizee after the fine is fully passed, and it is so much, and half so much as was paid to the King for the pre-fine, collected by the sheriff of the county where the land lies of which the fine was levied, to be answered by him into the Exchequer. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. See stat. 32 Geo. 2. c. 14. See Black. Com. 2 V. 350.

Posthumous, Is where a child is born after his father's death, &c. And posthumous children are enabled to take estates by remainder in settlements, as if born in their father's life-time, tho' no estate be limited to trustees to preserve them till they come in offe. 10 & 11 W. 3. cap. 16. See in Ventre ja mere. And Black. Com. 2 V. 169.

Post-man, in the Exchequer. In the court of Exchequer two of the most experienced barristers, called the Post-man and the Tub-man, (from the places in which they sit) have a precedence in motions. Black. Com. 3 V. 28.

Postnatus, Is a word that signifieth the second son, or one born afterwards; often mentioned in Bracton, Glanville, Fleta, and other ancient writers; and as to postnati and antenati, it was solemnly adjudged, that those who after the descent of the crown of England to King James 1. were born in Scotland, were not aliens here in England: But the antenati, or those born in Scotland, before the descent, were aliens here, in respect of the time of their birth. Calvin's case. Children of persons attainted of treason, born after the King's pardon, may inherit lands; tho' not those born before, &c. 1 Inst. 391.

Posts, see Highways, Inclosures.

Post-terminum, Is the return of a writ, not only after the return thereof, but after the term; on which the costs brevium takes 20 d. It is also used for the fee so taken.

Postulation, (Postulatio) Signifies a petition. Formerly, when a bishop was translated from one bishoprick to another, he was not elected to the new see; for the Canon law is electus non potest eligi; and the pretence was, that he was married to the first church, which marriage could not be dissolved but by the lope; thereupon he was petitioned, and consenting to the petition, the bishop was translated, and this was said to be by postulation: But being an usurpation, and against law, it was restrained by 16 R. 2. and 9 H. 4. c. 8. Since which, translations of bishops have been by election, and not by postulation. 1 Jones 160. 1 Salk. 137.

Postulations were made on the unanimous voting any person to a dignity or office; of which he was not capable by the ordinary canons or statutes, without special dispensation: And by the ancient customs, an election could be made by a majority of votes; but a postulation must have been nemino contradicente.

Pound, (Parcus) Is generally any place inclosed, to keep in beasts; but especially a place of strength to keep cattle which are distrained, or put in for any trespass done by them, until they are replevied or redeemed. In this signification, it is called pound overt and pound covert; a pound overt is an open pound, usually built on the lord's waste, and which he provides for the use of himself and tenants, and is also called the lord's or the common pound; and a backside, yard, &c. whereto the owner of beasts impounded may come to give them meat, without offence, is a pound overt: A pound covert is a close place, as the owner of the cattle cannot come to, without giving offence; such as a house, &c. Kitch. 144. Terms de Ley. 1 Inst. 96. There is a difference between a common pound, an open pound, and a close pound, as to cattle impounded: For where cattle are kept in a common pound, no notice is necessary to the owner to feed them; but if they are put into any other open place, notice is to be given; and if beasts are impounded in a pound close, in part of the distrainer's house, &c. he is to feed them, at his peril. 1 Inst. 47.

A common pound belongs to a township, lordship or village; and ought to be in every parish, kept in repair by them who have used to do it time out of mind: The oversight whereof, and want of it, is to be by the steward in the leet, where any default herein is punishable. Dyer 288. Ney 52. See Distress. And Black. Com. 3 V. 12.

Poundage, Is a subsidy to the value of twelve-pence in the pound, granted to the King, of all merchandize exported or imported; and of such subsidies see 1 & 2 Edw. 6. cap. 13. and 1 Jac. c. 33. 12 Car. 2. cap. 4. 14 Car. 2. cap. 24. and Black. Com. 1 V. 315. 4 V. 430.

Pound-breach, If a distress be taken and impounded, tho' without just cause, the owner cannot break the pound, and take away the distress; if he doth, the party distrained may have his action, and retake the distress where-ever he finds it: And for pound-breaches, &c. action of the case lies, whereon treble damages may be recovered. 1 Inst. 261. 2 W. & M. c. 5. Also pound-breaches may be inquired of in the sheriff's turn; as they are common grievances, in contempt of the authority of the law. 2 Hawk. P. C. 67. See Black. Com. 3 V. 146.

Pound in Money, (from the Sax. pund, i. e. poundus) Is twenty shillings: In the time of the Saxons it consisted of 240 pence, as it doth now: and 240 of those pence weighed a pound, but 720 scarce weigh so much at this day. Lambard 219.

Pour fait proclamier, que null insect fimes on Ordures en fosses, ou Rivières, pres Citiez, &c. Is an ancient writ directed to the mayor or bailiff of a city or town, requiring them to make proclamation, That none cast filth into places near such city or town, to the nuisance thereof: and if any be cast there already, to remove the same; It is founded on the stat. 12 R. 2. c. 13. F. N. B. 176.

Pourparty, (Propars, propartis, propartia,) Is contrary to pro indiviso: For to make pourparty is to divide the lands that fall to parceners, which before partition they hold jointly and pro indiviso. Old Nat. Brev. 11.

Pourpresture, (Pourprestura, from the French pourpris. consuetum, an inclosure) Is thus defined by Glanville, lib. 9. cap. 11. Pourprestura est proprie quando aliquid super Dominum Regem injuste occupatur; ut in Dominicis Regis, vel in viis publicis obsistuntis vel in aquis publicis transverfis a recto cursu, vel quando aliquis in civitate super Regiam plateam aliquid edificando occupaverit, & generaliter quoties aliquid fit ad nocumentum Regi tenementi vel Regie vie vel civitatis.

Crompton, in his Jurisd. 152. defines it thus: Pourpresture is properly when a man taketh unto himself, or incroacheth any thing he ought not, whether it be in any jurisdiction, land or franchise; and generally when any thing is done to the nuisance of the King's tenants. See Kitchin, 10. and Manwood's Forest Laws, cap. 10.

Stene de verbor. signif. verbo Pourpresture, makes three sorts of this offence, one against the King, a second against the lord of the fee, the third against a neighbour by a neighbour. See 2 Inst. 38 & 272. Et lib. niger in facc. 37 & 38. That against the King happens by the negligence of the sheriff or deputy, or by the long continuance of wars, inasmuch as those who have lands near the the crown lands, take or inclose part of it, and lay it to their own.

Pourpresture against the lord, is when the tenant neglects to perform what he is bound to do for the chief lord, or in any wise deprives him of his right. Cowell.

Pourpresture against a neighbour is of the same nature: 'Tis mentioned in the Monast. 1 tom 843. and in Thorn. 2623. Et de purprestura quam Bercharius abbas purprestavit super prædictum Heliam.

Pour seisir terres le feme que tient en dower, &c. Was a writ whereby the King seised the land which the wife of his tenant who held in capite deceased, had for her dowry, if she married without his leave; was grounded on the statute of the King's prerogative, cap. 3. See F. N. B. 174.

Poursuivant, (from the French poursuivre, i. e. persequi.) Signifies the King's messenger attending him, to be sent on any occasion or message; as for the apprehending a person accused or suspected of any offence: Those employed in martial causes are called pursuivants at arms, 24 H. 8. 13. See Herald.

Stow speaking of Richard the Third's death, pag. 784. hath these words, His body was naked to the skin, not so much as one clout about him, and was trussed behind a PURSUIVANT AT ARMS like a hog, or a calf, &c. The rest are used upon other messages in time of peace, and especially in matters touching jurisdiction. Nicholas Upton, in his book De Militari Officio, viz. lib. 1. cap. 11. mentions the ancient form of making these pursuivants, and tells us, that they were called militæ linguæ, because their chief honour was in custodia linguæ, and he divides them into cursores equitantes and profutores. Cowell.

Pourveyance or Purveyance, Is the providing necessities for the King's house.

By 12 Car. 2. c. 24. it is provided, "That no person by colour of buying or making provision or purveyance shall take any thing of any subject, without the full and free consent of the owner, obtained without menace or force," &c. See the Antiquity of Pre-emption and Purveyance, and 3 Inst. 82.

The profitable prerogative of purveyance and pre-emption, was a right enjoyed by the crown of buying up provisions and other necessities, by the intervention of the King's purveyors, for the use of his royal household, at an appraised valuation, in preference to all others, and even without consent of the owner; and also of forcibly impressing the carriages and horses of the subject, to do the King's business on the publick roads, in the conveyance of timber, baggage, and the like, however inconvenient to the proprietor, upon paying him a settled price. A prerogative, which prevailed pretty generally throughout Europe, during the scarcity of gold and silver, and the high valuation of money consequential thereupon. In those early times the King's household (as well as those of inferior lords) were supported by specific renders of corn, and other victuals, from the tenants of the respective demesnes; and there was also a continual market kept at the palace gate to furnish viands for the royal use. 4 Inst. 273. And this answered all purposes, in those ages of simplicity, so long as the King's court continued in any certain place. But when it removed from one part of the kingdom to another (as was formerly very frequently done) it was found necessary to send purveyors beforehand, to get together a sufficient quantity of provisions and other necessities for the household: And, lest the unusual demand should raise them to an exorbitant price, the powers before-mentioned were vested in these purveyors; who in process of time greatly abused their authority, and became a great oppression to the subject, tho' of little advantage to the crown; ready money in open market (when the royal residence was more permanent, and specie began to be plenty) being found upon experience to be the best provider of any. Wherefore by degrees the powers of purveyance have declined, in foreign countries as well as our own; and particularly were abolished in Sweden by Gustavus Adolphus, towards the beginning of the last century. And, with us in England, having fallen into disuse during the suspension of monarchy, King Charles at his restoration consented, by 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

to resign intirely these branches of his revenue and power; And the parliament, in part of recompence, settled on him, his heirs, and successors, for ever, the hereditary excise of fifteen pence per barrel on all beer and ale sold in the kingdom, and a proportionable sum for certain other liquors. Black. Com. 1 V. 287. 8. and 4 P. 116, 417, 432.

Pourveyer; or Purveyor, (Provisor, derived from the French pourvoir, i. e. providere) Signifies an officer of the King or Queen, or other great personage, who provides corn and other victual for their house. See Magna Charta, c. 22. and 3 Edw. 1. cap. 7. § 31. § ann. 28. ejusdem. Articuli super chartas 2. and other statutes. The name of purveyor was so odious in times past, that by statute 36 Edw. 3. 2. the heinous name of purveyor was changed into buyer; but the office is restrained by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

Pow-dike. To perversely and maliciously cut down or destroy the pow-dike, in the fens of Norfolk and Ely, is felony, by 22 Hen. 8. c. 11.

Power, Is an authority which one man gives another to act for him; and is sometimes a reservation which a person makes in a conveyance for himself to do some acts, as to make leases, or the like. 2 Litt. Abr. 339.

1. Upon what estate, and by what words a power shall be raised.

2. How a power shall be expounded.

1. Upon what estate, and by what words a power shall be raised.

In conveyances to an use, a man may direct or model the use, as he pleases, and the stat. 27 H. 8. c. 10. executes the possession to the use: Therefore he may annex powers to estates, which cannot be annexed to them by a conveyance at the Common law. Co. L. 237. c. Mod. 610. And therefore to the limitation of an use for life, he may annex a power to make leases for years, or lives, or to make a jointure to a wife. Mo. 381. 2 Low. 58. Or to grant annuities, raise portions, &c. Mo. 381. Or to make a jointure, and also a lease to commence after his death for portions, &c. Hard. 413. So he may annex a power of revocation of all uses limited, and to make a limitation of new uses, and this will not be repugnant. Co. L. 237. a. Mod. 610.

So a power may be annexed to an estate by another deed, executed at the same time, tho' it be not in the same conveyance by which the estate is conveyed. 1 Vent. 279. So a man may give a power or authority by will, which is a naked authority, not annexed to an estate: A, if he devises to A. for life, and afterwards that it shall be at his disposal to any of his children then living; he hath but an estate for life, with a naked power to dispose, in the manner directed by the will. 1 Sul. 24. 3 Sul. 276. So he may give a power to a stranger, which is a naked collateral power, and annexed to an estate. Or a power in gross, which takes effect after his estate is determined. Hard. 415.

If a power be to A. or his assigns, to make leases, &c. the power runs with the estate to the assignee in deed, &c. in law. 1 Vent. 340. 2 Jen. 110. So in all cases a power coupled with an interest may be assigned: As, a power to a lessor, and his assigns, to cut down trees. 2 Mod. 317. But a man cannot annex a power of revocation to a feoffment, or grant; for that will be void. Co. L. 237. 2. Mo. 610. So if a man seised in fee, covenant to stand seised to the use of himself for life, with power to make leases, remainder to another in fee, the power is not well raised. Ca. 66. 161. If the consideration of the covenant does not extend to the power to make leases. Mo. 145. 1 Co. 175. Ray. 248. Upon such covenant he cannot reserve a power to make leases, jointures, or for preferment of younger children, &c. Mr. 383, 383.

Words which show the intent of the party, are sufficient to create a power; as if a power be to demise or lease, tho' the intent is, that he declare the uses of the first settlement for life or years: For the lease does not take effect by by demise, but by declaration of the uses. Mo. 611. So, if a man expresses the power only by implication, it is well: As, provided, that he shall not have power to alien, &c. otherwise than to make a jointure, and leases for 21 years; it is a good power to make a jointure and leases. 1 Leo. 148. So, if a devise be to A. for life, to set, let and make estates out of it as I might, and afterwards to his daughter in tail; A. has power to make leases, it being the custom of the country where the land lies, to let for lives or years. 2 Roll. 261. l. 35.

But a power, being executory, may be restrained or enlarged by a subsequent deed: As, if a power be general, to revoke; by a covenant afterwards, that he will not revoke without the consent of B. the power is restrained. Jon. 411. So, if the consideration upon which the power was founded, does not extend to the person to whom the lease is made, the lease shall be void: As, if a man covenant, in consideration of natural affection, to stand seised to the use of himself for life, &c. with power to make leases, &c. a lease to a stranger is void: For he is not within the consideration. 2 Roll. 260. l. 30. So, if a power, at its creation, be to make leases to a person, to whom the consideration does not extend, it will be void, tho' the lease be executed to a person within the consideration. 2 Roll. 260. l. 35.

2. How a power shall be expounded.

A power shall be expounded strictly; therefore if a man has power to make leases generally, this extends to make leases in possession only, and not in reversion. 2 Roll. 261. c. 5. 2 Cro. 318. Yel. 222. Ry. 248. 1 Ld. Raym. 267. 2 Sal. 537. 1 Lew. 168. 6 Co. 33. a. Mo. 199. 1 Leo. 35. 3 Leo. 131. Nor a lease to commence in futuro. Ray. 248. 1 Leo. 35. Yel. 222. 2 Cro. 318. Mo. 494. So, if the power be to make leases for two or three lives, he cannot make a lease to one not in esse; as, to the son of B. not born, &c. Per Wind. Ray. 163. So, if the power be to make leases in possession, he cannot make a lease of land in reversion, tho' it be to commence in presenti. 1 Sid. 101. Ca. Ch. 18.

So, if part of a lease be in reversion, the whole lease shall be void. 3 Sal. 276. So, if the power be to make leases in possession, or in reversion, he cannot make a lease in possession, and another lease of the same land in reversion; but his power to lease in reversion extends only to make leases of the land, which was not then in possession. 1 Ld. Ray. 269. 2 Sal. 537. So a power to make leases in reversion does not warrant a lease to commence at the end of an estate then in esse. 1 Ld. Ray. 269. 2 Sal. 537. So a power to make a lease of three lives or three years in possession, or for two lives or thirty years in reversion, warrants only a concurrent lease for two lives; for a lease for lives cannot commence at a future day. 1 Ld. Ray. 269. 2 Sal. 537.

But if a power be annexed to the estate of him in reversion, to make leases generally, he may make a lease in presenti of the reversion. 1 Lew. 168. Tho' the power be to make leases in possession. Ca. Ch. 18. 1 Lew. 168. 1 Sid. 260, 261. So, if a fine be to the conusee for 15 years, afterwards to B. for life, &c. with power to lease for three lives, or twenty-one years in possession; he may make a lease during the 15 years of land in lease at the time of the fine, when such lease expires. 2 Roll. 260. l. 50. 2 Cro. 347. 2 Roll. 216. 1 Roll. 12. So if husband and wife lease pursuant to the Stat. 32 H. 8. And then, by act of parliament, the estate is settled to the husband for life, with power to lease for three lives or 21 years; he may make leases of the reversion during the first lease by the husband and wife. 2 Roll. 261. l. 15. 1 Lew. 36. Cuth. Dyer 357. a. So, if a power be to make leases in reversion for three lives, &c. he may lease for three lives, when there is another life in esse, tho' the power does not say to make leases of the reversion; for there is no prejudice. 2 Roll. 261. l. 30. So he may make a lease for years determinable upon three lives, to commence after the end of the former lease in esse. 8 Co. 70. See 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Power.

Power of the Parson. See ib. 452.

Poyning's Law, Is an act of parliament made in Ireland in the reign of Hen. VII. so called because Sir Edward Poyning was Lieutenant there when it was made, whereby all the statutes in England were declared of force in Ireland; which before that time were not, nor are any since that time, but by special words. 12 Rep. 109. See Black. Com. 1 V. 102—3.

Practice. The law loves plain and fair practice, and will not countenance fraud in proceedings, nor suffer advantage to be taken thereby. 2 Lill. 342. Private clandestine proceedings, in several cases, are said to be by practice.

Præceptories, (Præceptorie) Were a kind of benefices, having their name from being possessed by the more eminent Templars, whom the chief master by his authority created and called Præceptores Templi: And of these Præceptores there are recorded sixteen, as belonging to the Templars in England, viz. Cressing Temple, Balphal, Shengay, Newland, Tevely, Wisbam, Templebrure, Wallington, Rokeley, Ovington, Temple Combe, Trebigh, Ribstone, Mount St. John, Temple Newsum and Temple Harst. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. 543. But some authors say, these places were cells only, subordinate to their principal mansion the Temple in London. 32 Hen. 8. c. 24.

Præcipe. Original writs are either optional or peremptory; or, in the language of our law, they are either a præcipe, or a sic fecerit securum. The præcipe is in the alternative, commanding the defendant to do the thing required, or shew the reason wherefore he hath not done it. The use of this writ is where something certain is demanded by the plaintiff, which is in the power of defendant himself to perform; as, to restore the possession of land, to pay a certain liquidated debt, to perform a specific covenant, to render an account, and the like: In all which cases the writ is drawn up in the form of a præcipe or command, to do thus, or shew cause to the contrary; giving the defendant his choice, to redress the injury or stand the suit. Black. Com. 3 V. 274.

Præcipe in capite, Was a writ issuing out of the Chancery, for a tenant holding of the King in capite, viz. in chief as of his crown. Magn. Chart. cap. 24. Reg. Orig. 4. Black. Com. 3 V. 195.

Præcipe quod reddat, Is the form of a writ, which extends as well to a writ of right, as to other writs of entry or possession, beginning præcipe A. quod reddat B. unum messuagium, &c. Old Nat. Bx. 13. See Black. Com. 2 V. 358. xvii. As to Præcipe in Fines, see ib. 350. xiv. And as to Tenant to the Præcipe, see ib. 3 V. 182.

Præcipitium, Was a punishment inflicted on criminals, by casting them from some high place. Malmf. lib. 5. p. 155.

Prædicti, Prædictus (Lat.) In English, aforesaid, Is a word used in pleadings, applied to places, towns, lands, names, parties, &c. before mentioned. In a deed or grant, the words prædicti manerii are a description of the manor before named: And a town, repeated by the name of parish prædicti, shall be held all one; for the word aforesaid couples them. Hob. 6. A difference as to prædicti term granted, &c. see 10 Rep. 65.

Præfatus Willæ, Is the same as propofitus willæ, i. e. the mayor of a town. Leg. Ed. Confess. c. 28.

Præfine, Is that fine which on suing out the writ of covenant on levying fines, is paid before the fine is passed. 22 & 23 Car. 2.

Præmunire, Is taken either for a writ so called, or for the offence whereon the writ is granted; the one may be understood by the other.

The church of Rome, under pretence of her supremacy, and the dignity of St. Peter's chair, took on her to bestow most of the ecclesiastical livings of any worth in England, by mandates, before they were void; pretending therein great care to see the church provided of a successor before it needed. Whence these mandates or bulls were called gratie expectativæ or provisiones, whereof see a learned discourse in Duarenus de beneficiis. lib. 3. cap. 1.

These provisions were so common, that at last Edward the Third, not digesting so intolerable an encroachment, made a statute in the twenty-fifth year of his reign, stat. 5. cap. 28. and another stat. 6. cap. 1. and a third anno 27. against those who drew people out of the realm, to answer things belonging to the King's court; and another anno 28 stat. 2. cap. 1. 2. 3 & 4 whereby he greatly restrained this liberty of the pope; who notwithstanding still adventured to continue the provisions; inasmuch that Richard the Second likewise made several statutes against them, but most expressly that of 16 Ric. 2. 5. which appoints their punishment to be thus, That they should be out of the King's protection, attached by their bodies, and lose their lands, tenements, goods and chattels. After him Henry the Fourth, in like manner aggrieved at other abuses, not fully met with in the former statutes, in the second year of his reign, c. 3 & 4. adds certain new cases, and lays on the offenders the same punishment. See also 9 Hen. 4. c. 8. and 3 Hen. 5. c. 4. and Smith de Republ. Angl. lib. 3. cap. 9.

Some later statutes inflict this punishment upon other offenders.

The word is most commonly applied to the punishment first ordained by the statutes beforementioned, for such as transgressed them: For where it is said, that any man for an offence committed, shall incur a præmunire, it is meant that he shall incur the same punishment as is inflicted on those who transgress 16 Ric. 2. c. 5. commonly called the statute of præmunire; which kind of application is not unusual in our statutes.

As to the etymology of the word, it proceeds from the verb præmonere, being barbarously turned into præmunire, to forewarn or bid the offender to take heed: For which a reason may be gathered from the words of 27 Ed. 3. c. 1. and the form of the writ, in Old Nat. Brev. 143. Præmunire facias præfatum præpositum, & J. R. procuratorem, &c. quod tunc sint coram nobis, &c. which words can be referred to none but parties charged with the offence. Corwell. See 3 Inst. 110. and Black. Com. 4 V. c. 8. p. 102, 421.

1. What offences come under the notion of a præmunire.
2. Of the punishment in a præmunire.
3. To what time the attainder shall relate.
4. To what estates the statute of præmunire doth not extend, and of the suit, &c.
5. Of the King's power as to pardoning a præmunire, &c.

1. What offences come under the notion of a præmunire.

The offences coming under the notion of a præmunire, or for which the party incurs a præmunire, are reduced by Hawkins to the following particulars:

1. Making use of papal bulls is made a præmunire, by many statutes, to which purpose it is enacted by 25 Ed. 3. called the statute of provisors, that whoever shall by a papal provision disturb any patron to present to a benefice, &c. shall be fined and imprisoned till he make full renunciation. And by 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. cap. 22. If any one purchase a provision of an abbey or priory, he shall be out of the King's protection; and by 38 Ed. 3. and 12 Ric. 2. cap. 15. and 13 Ric. 2. stat. 2. cap. 2. Whoever shall accept a benefice contrary to 25 Ed. 3. shall be banished; and by 13 Ric. 2. stat. 2. cap. 3. Whoever shall bring a sentence of excommunication against any person for executing the statute of 25 Ed. 3. shall suffer pain of life and member; and by 16 Ric. 2. c. 5. Whoever shall purchase or pursue, or cause to be purchased or pursued, in the court of Rome or elsewhere, any translations, processes, sentences of excommunication, bulls, instruments, or other things contrary to the tenure of that statute, or bring them within this realm, or receive, &c. shall be out of the King's protection; and their lands and tenements, goods and chattels forfeited to the King, and be attached by their bodies; and by 2 Hen. 4. c. 3. Whoever shall purchase from Rome a provision of exemption from ordinary obedience; and by 2 Hen. 4. cap. 4. Whoever shall put in execution bulls purchased by those of the order of Cisterciens, to be discharged of tithes, shall incur the like penalty; they are further restrained by 6 Hen. 4. cap. 1. 7 Hen. 4. cap. 8. 9 Hen. 4. cap. 8. and 3 Hen. 5. cap. 4. by which the statutes abovementioned are enforced and explained; and by 23 Hen. 8. cap. 2. sect. 22. Whoever shall sue for or execute any licence, dispensation or faculty from the see of Rome; and by 28 Hen. 8. cap. 16. (by which all bulls, briefs, &c. obtained from Rome are made void) Whoever shall use, allege, or plead the same in any court, unless they were confirmed by this statute, or afterwards by the King, shall incur the like penalty. Vide Reg. 54. 3 Inst. 127.

By the 13 Eliz. cap. 2. Those who purchase any bulls, &c. from Rome, are guilty of high treason; but those ancient statutes continue still in force, and it is in the election of the crown to proceed either upon them, or 13 El. Also the aiders of such offenders, after the offence, to the intent to uphold the same usurped power, incur a præmunire. Davis 84.

Secondly, Derogating from the King's Common law courts, is said to have been an high offence at Common law, and is made a præmunire by many ancient statutes; for by 27 Ed. 3. cap. 1. of provisors, If any subject draw any out of the realm in plea, wherein the cognizance pertains to the King's court, or of things whereof judgments be given in the King's courts, or in any other court to defeat or impeach the judgments given in the King's courts, he shall be warned to appear, &c. in proper person, at a day, containing the space of two months, at which if he appear not, he and his proctors, &c. shall be put out of the King's protection, his lands and chattels forfeited, his body imprisoned, and ransomed at the King's will, &c. See 16 R. 2. c. 5.

In the construction of these statutes it hath been held, that certain commissioners of travel, for summoning one before them who had got a judgment at law, and imprisoning him till he would release it, were guilty of a præmunire. 2 Bull. 299. 3 Inst. 127. Cro. Jac. 336.

Also suits in the admiralty or ecclesiastical courts within the realm, for matters which upon the face of the libel itself appear to belong only to the cognizance of the temporal courts, are said to be within 16 Ric. 2. by force of the words, "or elsewhere." 1 Hawk. P. C. 51.

And it hath been formerly holden, that even suits in a court of equity, to relieve against a judgment at law, are within the danger of these statutes, especially if they tend to controvert the very point determined at law, or to relieve in a matter relievable at law. 4 New Abr. 146.

Thirdly, Appeals to Rome are made præmunires by 24 Hen. 8. cap. 12. and 25 Hen. 8. cap. 19. by which it is enacted, That such appeals as formerly were made to Rome shall be made henceforth to Chancery.

Fourthly, Exercising the jurisdiction of a suffragan without the appointment of the bishop of the diocese, is made a præmunire by 26 Hen. 8. cap. 14. which sets forth at large how suffragans are to be nominated, &c.

Fifthly, By 25 Hen. 8. cap. 20. If a dean and chapter refuse to elect one named in the King's letter for a bishoprick, and to certify such election to the King within twenty days after the licence come to his hands, or if any archbishop or bishop after such election (or nomination by the King in default thereof, &c.) refuse to confirm and consecrate within twenty days the person signified to them by the King's letters patent, they incur a præmunire.

Sixthly, Maintaining the pope's power is made a præmunire by 5 Eliz. cap. 1.

Seventhly, By 13 Eliz. cap. 7. "If any one bring into the realm, &c. any superstitious things, pretended to be hallowed by the bishop of Rome, &c. and deliver or offer the same to any subject to be used in any wise; or if any one receive the same to such intent, and not discover the offender, &c. or if a justice of peace, having any offence in that act declared to him, do not within sixteen days declare it to a privy counsellor, he incurs a præmunire."

Eighthly, By 27 Eliz. c. 2. "Sending relief to any jesuit, seminary priest, or college of priests or jesuits beyond the seas, or to one not returning out of such college into England, incur a præmunire."

Ninthly, Persons refusing to take the oaths, incur a præmunire by several statutes, as 1 and 5 Eliz. 3. and 7 Jac. 1. 1 W. & M. &c.

Tenthly, By the 6 Ann. cap. 7. If any person maliciously and directly, by preaching, teaching, or advised speaking, declare, maintain and affirm, that the pretended Prince of Wales hath any right or title to the crown of this realm; realm; or that any other person hath any right or title to the same, otherwise than according to 1 W. & M. cap. 2. and 2 W. 3. cap. 2. and the acts then lately made in England and Scotland mutually for the union of the two kingdoms; or that the Kings or Queens of this realm with the authority of parliament are not able to make laws to limit the crown and the descent, &c. thereof, shall incur a præmunire.

2. Of the punishment in a præmunire.

Most of the statutes of præmunire refer the punishment to 16 Rich. 2. c. 5. which enacts, "That those who offend shall be put out of the King's protection, and their lands and tenements, goods and chattels forfeited to the King; and that they be attached by their bodies if they may be found, and brought before the King and his council, to answer; or that process be made against them by præmunire facias, in manner as is ordained in other statutes of provisors."

The judgment in præmunire at the suit of the King, against the defendant being in prison, is, that he shall be out of the King's protection; and that his lands and tenements, goods and chattels shall be forfeited to the King; and that his body shall remain in prison at the King's pleasure; but if the defendant be condemned on his default of not appearing, whether at the suit of the King or party, the same judgment shall be given as to the being out of the King's protection and the forfeiture; but instead of the clause, that the body shall remain in prison, there shall award a capiatur. Co. Lit. 129. b. 3 Inst. 125, 218. 2 Hawk. P. C. 444.

As the 16 R. 2. cap. 5. expressly saith, that such offenders shall be put out of the King's protection; and also the statute of 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. cap. 22. had farther added, that any one might do with a purchaser of the provisions therein prohibited, as with the King's enemy; and that he who should offend against such an one in body, lands or goods, should be excused; it was formerly holden, that a person attainted in a præmunire might lawfully be slain by any one, as being the King's enemy, and out of the protection of the laws; but the later opinions seem to have disapproved of this severity; and it is now expressly enacted by 5 Eliz. cap. 1. sect. 21, 22. "That it shall not be lawful to kill any person attainted in a præmunire, saving such pains of death or other punishment, as might with danger of law be done on any person that shall send or bring into the realm, or within the same shall execute any process, &c. from the see of Rome." Co. Lit. 12. 68. 130. 3 Inst. 128. Bro. Car. 197. Jenk. 199.

It is clearly agreed, that a person attainted in a præmunire can bring no action; neither is it safe for any one, knowing him to be guilty, to give him any relief. Co. Lit. 130.

A statute, by appointing that an offender shall incur the penalty and danger mentioned in 16 Ric. 2. c. 5. does not confine the prosecution for the offence to the particular process thereby given. 1 Vent. 173.

It is holden, that the statute of præmunire, which gives a general forfeiture of all the lands and tenements of the offender, extends not to lands in tail. Co. Lit. 130.

It hath been adjudged, that a pardon of all misprisions, trespasses, offences and contempts, will pardon a præmunire. Cro. Jac. 336. 2 Bull. 299.

The defendant in a præmunire must regularly appear in person, whether he be a peer or commoner, unless he is dispensed with by some writ of grant for that purpose; but in the case of Sir Anthony Mildmay, he was allowed to plead a pardon to a præmunire by attorney; but it has been thought that there was some clause to this effect in the pardon. 3 Inst. 125. 1 Roll. Rep. 190. 2 Bull. 290. 2 Hawk. P. C. 273.

On an indictment of a præmunire, a peer of the realm shall not be tried by his peers. 12 Co. 92.

On an information on 6 Geo. 1. c. 18. for setting up a bubble called the South Sea, it was determined that the court was not obliged by that act to give the whole judgment, as in case of a præmunire, against defendant, but only such parts of it as in their discretions they should think fit; and accordingly a fine of 5*l.* was set on the party convicted, and judgment that he should remain in prison during the King's pleasure. 2 Ld. Raym. 361.

3. To what time the attainder shall relate.

A person being seized in fee of lands, was indicted for a præmunire upon 13 Eliz. but before conviction he made an entail of his lands; and it was adjudged, that the attainder should relate to the time of the offence, and that was before he entailed the lands, and not the time of the judgment, which was afterwards; and the freehold being in him at the time of the attainder, shall not be devested without an inquisition under the Great Seal. Cro. Car. 123, 172.

4. To what estates the statute of præmunire doth not extend, and of the suit, &c.

It is said the statute of præmunire doth not extend to the forfeiture of rents, annuities, fairs, &c. or any other hereditaments that are not within the word terra. 3 Inst. 126.

This suit need not be by original in B. R. for if defendant be in custodia marischalli, the suit may be against him by bill; and defendants cannot be sued in any other court when they are in custodia marischalli. And if a defendant come not at the day, &c. or if he appears and pleads, and the issue be found against him, or he demurs in law, &c. judgment shall be given, that he shall be out of protection, &c. 3 Inst. 124.

Tenant in tail is attainted in a præmunire, he shall forfeit his lands only during life; and afterwards the issue in tail shall inherit. 11 Rep. 56.

5. Of the King's power as to pardoning a præmunire, &c.

The laws making offences to be præmunire, it has been observed, are so very severe, that they are seldom put in execution: And notwithstanding the statutes, the King may protect and pardon an offender; for this protection is given him by the law of nature. 2 Bull. 299. A præmunire is said to be a defence of the crown, and the laws of the land, from the tyranny and oppression of the pope's jurisdiction, &c. The præmunire clause in the bubble act leaves power in the court to moderate the judgment. 1 Strange 472. See Pope.

Præpositus Ecclesiæ, Is used for a church reeve, or church warden.

Præpositus Villæ, Sometimes is used for the constable of a town, or petit-constable. Crompt. Jurisd. 205. Yet the same author, 194. seems to apply it otherwise; for there quatuor homines præpositi are those four men, who must appear for every town before the justices of the forest in their circuit. It is sometimes used for an head or chief officer of the King, in a town, manor or village, or a reeve. See Reeve. Animalia & res inventæ coram ipso (præposito) & sacerdote ducenda erant. LL. Edw. Confessor. cap. 28. This præpositus villæ, in our old records, does not answer to our present constable, or headborough of a town; but was no more than the reeve, or bailiff of the lord of the manor, sometimes called serviens villæ.

By the laws of Henry the First, the lord answered for the town where he was resident; where he was not, his dapifer, or seneschal, if he were a baron: But if neither of them could be present, then præpositus & quatuor de unaquaque villa, i. e. the reeve and four of the most substantial inhabitants were summoned. See Dr. Brady's Glossary to Introduction to English History, pag. 97.

Præter. See Service and Sacraments.

Prayers of the Church. Vide Common Prayer.

Preaching. Every beneficed preacher, residing on his benefice, and having no lawful impediment, shall in his own cure, or some neighbouring church, preach one sermon every Sunday of the year: And if any beneficed person be not allowed to be a preacher, he shall procure sermons to be preached in his cure by licensed preachers; and every Sunday whereon there shall not be a sermon, he or his curate is to read one of the homilies: No person not examined and approved by the bishop, or not licensed to preach, shall expound the Scripture, &c. nor shall any be permitted to preach in any church, but such as appear to be authorized thereto, by shewing their licence; and churchchurchwardens are to note in a book the names of all strange clergymen who preach in their parish; to which book every preacher is to subscribe his name, the day he preached, and the name of the bishop of whom he had licence to reach. Can. 44, 45, 49.

If any person licensed to preach, refuses to conform to the ecclesiastical laws, after admonition, the licence of every such preacher shall be void: And if any parson preach doctrine contrary to the word of God, or the articles of religion, notice is to be given of it to the bishop by the churchwardens, &c. So likewise of matters of contention and impugning the doctrine of other preachers in the same church; in which case, the preacher is not to be suffered to preach except he faithfully promise to forbear all such matter of contention in the church, until the bishop hath taken farther order therein. Can. 53, 54.

No minister shall preach or administer the sacrament in any private house, unless in times of necessity, as in case of sickness, &c. on pain of suspension for the first offence, and excommunication for the second; which last punishment is also inflicted on such ministers as meet in private houses, to consult on any matter tending to impeach the doctrine of the church of England. Can. 71, &c.

Preamble, (Proœmium, from the preposition præ, before, and ambulo, to walk; as to walk before) The beginning of an act is called the preamble; which is a key to the intent of the makers of the act, and the mischiefs which they would remedy by the same.

Pre-audience. A custom has of late years prevailed of granting letters patent of precedence to such barristers, as the crown thinks proper to honour with that mark of distinction; whereby they are intitled to such rank and pre-audience as are assigned in their respective patents; sometimes next after the King's Attorney-General, but usually next after his Majesty's counsel then being. These (as well as the Queen's Attorney and Solicitor-General) rank promiscuously with the King's counsel, and together with them sit within the bar of the respective courts, but receive no salaries, and are not sworn; therefore are at liberty to be retained in causes against the crown.

Pre-audience in the courts is reckoned of so much consequence, that it may not be amiss to subjoin a short table of the precedence which usually obtains among the practitioners.

1. The King's premier Serjeant, (so constituted by special patent.)
2. The King's antient Serjeant, or the eldest among the King's Sejeants.
3. The King's Advocate-General.
4. The King's Attorney-General.
5. The King's Solicitor-General.
6. The King's Serjeants.
7. The King's Counsel, with the Queen's Attorney and Solicitor.
8. Serjeants at Law.
9. The Recorder of London.
10. Advocates of the Civil law.
11. Barristers.

In the court of Exchequer two of the most experienced barristers, called the post-man and the sub-man, (from the places in which they sit) have also a precedence in motions. Black. Com. 3 V. 28.

Prebend (Præbenda) Is the portion which every prebendary of a cathedral church receives, in right of his place, for his maintenance; as canonica portio is properly used for that share, which every canon receiveth yearly out of the common stock of the church. And præbenda is a several benefice rising from some temporal land, or some church, appropriated towards the maintenance of a clerk, or member of a collegiate church, and is commonly named of the place whence the profit arises.

Præbenda, strictly taken, is that maintenance which daily præbatur to another; but now it signifies the profits belonging to the church, divided into those portions called præbenda, and is a right of receiving the profits for the duty performed in the church, sufficient for the support of the parson in that divine office where he resides. Decret. tit. De Præbend.

The spirituality and temporality make a prebend, but the spirituality is the highest and most worthy; and a person is not a complete prebend, to make any grant, &c. before installation and induction. Dyer 221.

Prebends are simple and dignitary.

A simple prebend hath no more than the revenue for its support; but a Prebend with dignity hath always a jurisdiction annexed, and for this reason the prebendary is stiled a dignitary, and his jurisdiction is gained by prescription.

Prebends are some of them donative; and some are in the gift of laymen, but in such case they must present the prebendary to the bishop, and the dean and chapter inducts him, and places him in a stall in the cathedral church, and then he is said to have locum in choro; at Westminster, the King collates by patent, and by virtue thereof the prebendary takes possession, without institution or induction. 3 Roll. Abr. 356.

As a prebend is a benefice without cure, &c. a prebend and a parochial benefice are not incompatible promotions; for one man may have both without any avoidance of the first: For tho' prebendaries are such as have no cure of souls, yet there is a sacred charge incumbent on them in those cathedrals where they are resident, and they are obliged to preaching by the canons of the church; and it is not lawful for a prebendary to possess two prebends in one and the same collegiate church. Roll. Abr. 361.

Prebendaries are said to have an estate in fee-simple in right of their churches, as well as bishops of their bishopricks, Jeans of their deaneries, &c.

Corpus præbendæ is that which is received by a prebendary above the profits which are always for his daily maintenance. Præbenda and probenda were also in old deeds used for provisions, provand or provender.—Pro equo suo unum bushel avenarum pro præbenda capiendæ. Coucher Book in Dutchy-office, tom. 1. fol. 45. Cowel.

Prebendary, (Præbendarius) Is he who hath such a prebend; so called, not a prebendo auxilium & consilium episcopo, &c. but from receiving the prebend: And if a manor be the body of a prebend, and is evicted by title paramount; yet the prebendary is not destroyed. 3 Rep. 75.

There is a golden prebendary of Hereford, otherwise termed præbendarius episcopi, who is one of the twenty-eight minor prebendaries there, and has ex officio the first canon's place that falls; he was antiently confessarius of the cathedral church, and to the bishop, and had the offerings at the altar, whereby, in respect of the gold commonly given there, he had the name of golden prebendary. Blount. See Black. Com. 1 V. 383.

Præcariae, Are days works, which tenants of some manors are bound, by reason of their tenure, to do for their lord in harvest; and in divers places are vulgarly called bind-days for biden-days, which in the Saxon dies præcarias sonat: For biden is to pray or intreat. This custom is plainly set forth in the great book of the Customs of the Monastery of Battel, tit. Appelderham, fol. 60. Cowell.

Precedence, Statute for regulating precedence of lords and other great officers in parliament, 31 Hen. 8. c. 10. As to patent of precedence, see tit. Pre-audience, and Black. Com. 3 V. 28.

Precedent Conditions. See Black. Com. 2 V. 154.

Precedents, Are authorities to follow, in determinations in courts of justice.

Precedents have always been greatly regarded by the sages of the law: The precedents of the courts are said to be the laws of the courts; and the court will not reverse its judgment, contrary to many precedents. 4 Rep. 93. Cro. Eliz. 65. 2 Lill. Abr. 344. But new precedents are not considerable; precedents without judicial decision on argument are of no moment; and an extrajudicial opinion given in or out of court, is no good precedent. Vaugh. 169, 382, 399, 429.

It has been held, that there can be no precedent in matters of equity, as equity is universal truth; but according to Lord Keeper Bridgman, precedents are necessary in equity to find out the reasons thereof for a guide; and besides the authority authority of those who made them; it is to be supposed they did it on great consideration, and it would be strange to set aside what has been the course for a long series of time. 1 Mod. 307. If a man doubt whether a case be equitable, or no, in prudence he will determine as the precedents have been; especially if made by men of good authority and learning. Ibid.

Precedents must be shewed by plaintiff for the court to go ag inst what is generally held. 1 Keb. 47. And where precedents are alledged contrary to the opinion of the court, day may be given to produce them. Mod. Caf. 199.

Precedents in some cases may make an act good, which otherwise would be void in strictness of law: And tho' the forms of writs ought not to be altered, yet precedents and constant usage must be observed. Jenk. Cent. 162, 172.

If there be cause to alter an ancient precedent of a writ, by reason of any new statute, &c. the cursitors are not to keep to the old form, but to alter it as the case requires; to prevent abatement of writs, and vexation to the people. Trin. 1650.

Lord C. Talbot said, He thought it much better to stick to the known general rules, than to follow any one particular precedent which may be founded on reasons unknown to us. Such a proceeding would confound all property. And then citing the case of Lady Laneborough v. Fox, as of the strongest authority to the case in point, his Lordship said, that tho' it had not been in the house of Lords, he should have thought himself bound to go according to the general and known rules of law. Cases in Chan. in Ld. Talbot's time 26, 27.

It is dangerous to alter old established forms. Cases in Chan. in Ld. Talbot's time 196. See 16 Vin. Abr. tit. Precedents. And vide Innovation.

Proce partium, Is when a suit is continued by the prayer, assent or agreement of both parties. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 27.

Precept, (Præceptum) Is diversly taken in law, as sometimes for a command in writing, by a justice of peace, or other officer, for bringing a person or records before him; of which there are many examples in the table of the Register Judicial. And in this sense it seems to be borrowed from the customs of Lombardy, where præceptum significeth scripturam vel instrumentum. Hotom. in verb. Feudal. & lib. 3. Commentar. in libros feudor. in præfatione. Sometimes it is taken for the provocation, whereby one man incites another to commit a felony, as theft, murder, &c. Standf. Pl. Cor. 105. Brañon, lib. 3. tract. 2. cap. 9. calls it præceptum or mandatum. Whence we may observe three divisions of offending in murder, præceptum, fortia, consilium; præceptum being the instigation used beforehand; fortia the assistance in the fact, as to help to bind the party murdered or robbed; consilium, advice either before, or in the fact. The Civilians use mandatum in this case. Cowell. Precept of election to parliament, see Black. Com. 1 V. 177.

Precontract, (mentioned in stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 23.) Is a contract made before another contract, but hath relation especially to marriage, see Black. Com. 1 V. 434.

Prædial tithes, (Decimæ prædiales.) Are those which are paid of things arising and growing from the ground only, as corn, hay, fruit of trees, and such like. 2 Ed. 6. 13. See Inst. 649^o and Black. Com. 2 V. 24. See Tithes.

Pre-emption, (Præemptio) Signifies the first buying of a thing; and it was a privilege allowed the King's Purveyor, to have the choice and first buying of provisions for the King's house. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See Purveyance.

Pregnancy, (Plea of.) Where a woman is capitally convicted, and pleads her pregnancy, tho' this is no cause to stay the judgment, yet it is to respite the execution till she is delivered. This is a mercy dictated by the law of nature, in favorem prolis; and therefore no part of the bloody proceedings, in the reign of Queen Mary, hath been more justly detested than the cruelty, that was exercised in the island of Guernsey, of burning a woman big with child: For when thro' the violence of the flames, the infant sprang forth at the stake, and was preserved by the by-stander, after some deliberation of the priests who assisted at the sacrifice, they cast it again into the fire AS A YOUNG HERETICK. A barbarity which they never learned from the laws of antient Rome; which directs, with the same humanity as our own, "quod prægnantis mulieris damnatæ poena differatur, quoad pariat:" Which doctrine has also prevailed in England, as early as the first memorials of our law will reach. In case this plea be made in stay of execution, the judge must direct a jury of twelve matrons, or discreet women to enquire the fact: And if they bring in their verdict quick with child (for barely with child, unless it be alive in the womb, is not sufficient) execution shall be staid generally till the next session; and so from session to session, till either she is delivered, or proves by the course of nature not to have been with child at all.

But if she once hath had the benefit of this reprieve, and been delivered, and afterwards becomes pregnant again, she shall not be intitled to the benefit of a farther respite for that cause. For she may now be executed before the child is quick in the womb; and shall not, by her own incontinence, evade the sentence of justice. Black. Com. 4 V. 387, 8.

Premises, Is that part in the beginning of a deed, the office of which is to express the grantor and grantee, and the land, or thing granted. 5 Rep. 55.

The office of the premises is to name the grantor and grantee, and the thing to be granted or conveyed.

No person, not named in the premises, can take any thing by the deed, tho' he be afterwards named in the habendum, because the premises of the deed makes the gift; therefore when the lands are given to one in the premises, the habendum cannot give any share of them to another, because that would be to retract the gift made, and consequently to make a deed repugnant in itself; thus for instance, If a charter of feoffment be made between A. of the one part, and B. and C. of the other part, and A. gives lands to B. habendum to B. and C. and their heirs; C. takes nothing by the habendum, because all the lands were given to B. consequently C. cannot hold those lands which are given before to another; but in this case, if the habendum had been to B. and C. and their heirs, to the use of B. and C. this had been a good limitation of a use, consequently the statute of uses would carry the possession to the use, and B. and C. thereby become joint-tenants. Co. Lit. 6. a. 9 Co. 47. b. Hob. 275, 313. 2 Roll. Abr. 65. Cro. Jac. 564. Cro. Eliz. 58. 13 Co. 54. Poph. 126.

If lands be given to a husband, habendum to him and his wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies, the wife takes nothing, because she was not mentioned in the premises; therefore shall take nothing of that which was before given intirely to her husband. 2 Roll. Abr. 67.

But there are four exceptions to this rule: 1. If lands be given in frank-marriage, the woman who is the cause of the gift may take by the habendum, tho' she be not named in the premises; as if lands be given to J. S. habendum maritagium una cum the woman who is daughter of the donor; this is a good estate in frank-marriage to them both; because the gift being totally on her account, 'tis necessary to the creation of the estate in the husband that the wife should take. Co. Lit. 21. Plow. 158. Cro. Jac. 454. Poph. 126. 2 Roll. Abr. 67.

2. In grants of copy of court roll; as if a copyholder surrenders to his lord, without limiting any use, and then the lord grants it in this manner; J. S. cepis de domino; habendum to the said J. S. and his wife, and the heirs of their bodies begotten, this is a good estate-tail in the wife; for these customary grants, that are made in pursuance of a former surrender, are construed according to the intention of the parties, as wills are; besides the custom of the manor is the rule for the exposition of such sort of grants, and in many manors such form is usual. Poph. 125, 126. Cro. Jac. 434. 2 Roll. Abr. 67. Cro. Eliz. 323.

3. A man not named in the premises may take an estate in remainder by limitation in the habendum. 2 Roll. Abr. 68. Hob. 313. Cro. Jac. 564.

4. In wills; for if a man devises lands to J. S. habendum to him and his wife, this is a good devise to the wife: because because in construction of wills, the intention of the deviser is chiefly regarded; and wherever that discovers itself it shall take place, tho' it be not expressed in those legal forms that are required in conveyances executed in a man's life-time. Plow. 158, 414. 2 Roll. Abr. 68. See Black. Com. 2 V. 298.

Premium, (Præmium.) A reward: Amongst merchants it is used for the money the insurer gives the insurer for ensuring the safe return of any ship or merchandize. Stat. 19 Car. 2. c. 4.

Prender, Is the power or right of taking a thing before it is offered; from the French prendre, i. e. accipere: It lies in render, but not in prender. Rep. 1. Sir John Peter's case.

Prender de Baron, Signifieth literally to take an husband; and it is used for an exception to disabla a woman from pursuing an appeal of murder, against one who killed her former husband. S. P. C. lib. 3. c. 59.

Prepensel, (Præpensus) Forethought; as prepensel Malice is Malitia Præcogitata, which makes killing, murder: and when a man is slain on a sudden quarrel, if there were malice prepensel formerly between the parties, it is murder, or as it is called by the statute prepensel Murder. 12 H. 7. c. 7. 3 Inst. 51. See Murder.

Prerogative, (from præ, ante, and rogare, to ask or demand) Is a word of large extent, including all the rights which by law the King hath, as chief of the Commonwealth, and as intrusted with the execution of the laws. 4 New Abr. 149. See Stamf. Prærog. cap. 1. Co. Lit. 90.

The nature of our constitution is that of a limited monarchy, in which the legislative power is lodged in the King, Lords and Commons; but the King is intrusted with the executive part, and from him all justice is said to flow; hence he is stiled the head of the Commonwealth, supreme governor, parens patriæ, &c. but still he is to make the law of the land the rule of his government; that being the measure as well of his power, as of the subjects obedience: for as the law asserts, maintains and provides for the safety of the King's royal person, crown and dignity, and all his just rights, revenues, powers and prerogatives; so it likewise declares and asserts the rights and liberties of the subject. 1 And. 153. Co. Lit. 19, 75. 4 Co. 124. 4 New Abr. 149.

Hence it hath been established as a rule, that all prerogatives must be for the advantage of the people, otherwise they ought not to be allowed by law. Moor 672. Shou. P. C. 75. 4 New Abr. 149.

The rights and prerogatives of the crown are in most things as ancient as the law itself; for tho' the stat. 17 Edw. 2. c. 1. commonly called the statute De prærogativa Regis, seems to be introductive of something new, yet for the most part it is but a collection of certain prerogatives that were known law long before: As that the King's wardship of lands held in capite, did attract the wardship of land held of others; that the grant of a manor did not pass an advowson appendant, unless named; that the King hath a right to escheats, wrecks, royal fishes and many others which were ancient prerogatives of the crown. Bendl. 117. 2 Inst. 263, 496. 10 Co. 64. 4 New Abr. 149.

1. Of the commencement of the King's reign, and his prerogative as universal occupant.

2. Of the King's prerogative in escheats; in seas and navigable rivers; in swans and fish; in beacons and light-houses; in wreck; in coins and mines; in derelict goods, and in waifs, strays and treasure trove.

3. Of the King's prerogative over the persons of his subjects, in restraining them from going abroad, and commanding them to return home.

4. Of the King's prerogative in relation to Civil and Ecclesiastical jurisdiction: in creating officers, and making war and peace.

5. Of the King's prerogative in relation to his debts.

1. Of the commencement of the King's reign, and his prerogative as universal occupant.

On the death or demise of the King, his heir is that moment invested with the regal power, and commences his reign the same day his ancestor dies; whence it is held as a maxim, that the King never dies. 7 Co. 12. in Calvin's case. 6 Co. 27. 7 Co. 30. See Perpetuity of the King.

N. B. Discontinuance of process by demise of the King, is remedied by statute.

It may not be improper here to explain another maxim in law, viz. "That the King can do no wrong": The King cannot misuse his power without the advice of evil counsellors, and the assistance of wicked ministers. These men may be examined and punished. The constitution hath provided by means of indictments and parliamentary impeachments, that no man shall dare to assist the crown in contradiction to the laws of the land. But it is at the same time a maxim in those laws, that the King himself can do no wrong. Since it would be a great weakness and absurdity in any system of positive law, to define any possible wrong without any possible redress. Black. Com. 1 V. 244.

See the author's sentiments as to the exertion (on particular occasions) of the inherent, (tho' latent) powers of society, which no climate, no time, no constitution, no contract can ever destroy, or diminish.

N. B. He is treating of the glorious revolution. Com. 1 V. 245. And see tit. Oppression of the Crown.

But, to proceed, as to the King's prerogative, &c.

With respect to the descent of the crown, the rules of descent are the same with those that govern private inheritances, except only as to the rule of possessio fratris; which does not hold in the descent of the crown or its possessions: Neither is half blood any impediment in such case; for the brother of the half blood shall be preferred to the sister, in the enjoyment of the crown, as the most capable of the two, by the advantage and prerogative of his sex.

Therefore, if the King hath issue a son and a daughter by one venter, and a son by another venter, and purchases lands and dies, and the eldest son enters, and dies without issue, the daughter shall not inherit those lands, nor any other fee-simple lands of the crown, but the younger brother shall have them together with the crown. Co. Lit. 15. b.

As the King commences his reign from the day of the death of his ancestor, it hath been held, that compassing his death before coronation, or even before proclamation, is compassing of the King's death within the statute of 25 Ed. 3. he being King presently, and the proclamation and coronation only honourable ceremonies for the further notification thereof. 3 Inst. 7. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 101.

Every King for the time being in the actual possession of the crown, is a King within the intention of the above-mentioned statute; for there is a necessity that the realm should have a King, by whom, and in whose name, the laws are to be administered; and the King in possession, being the only person who either doth or can administer those laws, must be the only person who hath a right to that obedience which is due to him who administers those laws; and since by virtue thereof he secures to us our lives, liberties and properties, and all other advantages of government, he may justly claim return of duty, allegiance and subjection. 1 Hart. P. C. 35.

All judicial acts done by Henry the Sixth, while he was King, and also all pardons of felony and charters of denization granted by him, were valid; but a pardon made by Ed. 4. before he was actually King, was void even after he came to the crown. 1 Hart. 36.

The right heir of the crown, during such time as the usurper is in plenary possession of it, and no possession thereof in the heir, is not a King within this act; as was the case of the house of York, during the plenary possession of the crown in Hen. 4. Hen. 5. Hen. 6. But if the right heir had once the possession of the crown, as King, tho' an usurper had got the possession thereof, yet the other continues his title, title and claim thereto, and afterwards.

afterwards re-obtains the full possession thereof; a compassing the death of the rightful heir, during that interval, is compassing of the King's death within this act; for he continued a King still, quasi in possession of his kingdom; which was the case of Ed. 4. in that small interval wherein Hen. 6. re-obtained the crown; and the case of Ed. 5. notwithstanding the usurpation of his uncle Rich. 3. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 104.

King Car. 2. was King de facto as well as de jure, from his father's death; therefore all those who acted against and kept him out of possession, in obedience to the powers then in being, were traitors. Keeling 14, 15. 1 Keb. 315. No person was in possession of any sovereign power known to our laws. 1 Harwk. P. C. 36.

By the 1 M. ft. 3. cap. 1. sect. 3. "The kingly office of this realm, and all prerogative, royal power, authorities, and jurisdiction thereunto annexed, being invested in either male or female, are as absolutely invested in the one as the other."

By 1 W. & M. ft. 2. c. 2. sect. 9. "Every person who shall be reconciled to, or hold communion with the see or church of Rome; or shall profess the popish religion; or shall marry a papist, shall be incapable to inherit or enjoy the crown, and in such case the people shall be absolved of their allegiance, and the crown shall descend to such persons, being protestants, as should have inherited the same, in case the person so reconciled, &c. were dead."

And by stat. 10. "Every King and Queen, who shall succeed in the crown, shall on the first day of the meeting of the first parliament, next after coming to the crown, sitting in the throne in the house of peers, in the presence of the lords and commons, or at the coronation, before such person as shall administer the coronation oath, at the time of taking the oath, (which shall first happen) make, subscribe and repeat the declaration mentioned in the statute 30 Car. 2. ft. 2. for preserving the King's person and government, by disabling papists from sitting in either house of parliament."

The King, as King, cannot be a minor; so that grants, leases, &c. made by him, tho' under age, bind presently, and cannot be avoided by him, either during his minority, or when he comes of age; for the politic rules of government have thought it necessary, that he who is to govern the kingdom, should never be considered as a minor incapable of governing his own affairs. Dyer 209. pl. 22. Plow. 209. Co. Lit. 43. 5 Co. 27. Raym. 90.

The King by law is universal occupant, and all property is presumed to have been originally in the crown; and that he partitioned it out in large districts to the great men who deserved well of him in the wars, and were able to advise him in time of peace. Hence the King hath the direct dominion; and all lands are holden mediately or immediately from the crown. Co. Lit. 1. Dyer. 154. 1 Bendl. 237. Seld. Mare Claus.

If the sea leaves any shore by a sudden falling off of the water, such derelict lands belong to the King; but if a man's lands lying to the sea are increased by insensible degrees, they belong to the soil adjoining. Dyer 326. 2 Roll. Abr. 170.

So, if a river, so far as there is a flux of the sea, leaves its channel, it belongs to the King; for the English sea and channels belong to the King; and he hath a property in the soil, having never distributed them out to subjects. 2 Roll. Abr. 170.

But if a river, in which there is no tide, should leave its bed, it belongs to the owners on both sides; for they have in that case the property of the soil; this being no original part or appendix to the sea, but distributed out as other lands. 2 Roll. Abr. 170.

If land be drowned, and so continue for years; if it be after regained, every owner shall have his interest again, if it can be known by the boundaries. 8 Co. Sir Francis Barrington's case.

It is said, that there is a custom in Lincolnshire, That the lords of the manors shall have derelict lands; and that as such it is a reasonable custom; for if the sea wash away the lands of the subject, he can have no recompence, unless he should be intitled to what he regains from the sea. 8 Mod. 197.

2. Of the King's prerogative in escheats; in seas and navigable rivers; in swans and fish; in beacons and light-houses; in wreck; in coins and mines; in derelict goods, and in waisifs, Arays and treasure trove.

An escheat may be either per defectum sanguinis, or per delictum tenentis; but it is said, That in case of an attainder of felony, the escheat to the lord is pro defectu tenentis; and the not descending, the consequence of the corruption of the blood; but in case of treason, the lands come to the crown as an immediate forfeiture, and not as an escheat. Co. Lit. 13, 92. Godb. 211.

If the King's tenant dies without heir, the lands shall escheat and revert again to the crown; but the lands holden of any other lord shall, for want of heirs of the tenant, escheat to the lord. 2 Inst. 34. Kelw. 104. 2 Roll. Rep. 251. 4 Inst. 224.

If lands be held of the King, as of an honour come to him by a common escheat, as the tenants dying without heir, or committing felony, these lands are part of the honour; otherwise if forfeited for treason, for then they come to the King by reason of his person and crown; and if he grants them over, &c. the patentee shall hold of the King in chief. 2 Inst. 64.

It was found by special verdict, That the prior of Menton was seised of a house in Southwark, held of the archbishop of Canterbury, as of his borough of Southwark; and 30 Hen. surrendered it to the King Hen. 8. who granted it and other lands to J. S. and his heirs, to hold of him in libero burgagio, by fealty, for all services and demands, and not in capite; and afterwards Queen Mary granted the manor and borough of Southwark to the mayor and commonalty of London; and the tenant of the messuage died without issue; and the question was, whether Queen Eliz. or the patentees of the borough should have the escheat; and adjudged for the Queen; for the first patentee of the messuage held it of the Queen in foage in capite, as of a seignory in gross; and the words in libero burgagio are merely void; for the land out of the borough cannot be held in libero burgagio; and there shall not be several tenures, for one tenure was reserved by the King for all; therefore of necessity it shall be a tenure in foage of the King. Cro. Eliz. 120.

The King hath the sovereign dominion in all seas and great rivers; which is plain from Selden's account of the ancient Saxons who dealt very successfully in all naval affairs; therefore the territories of the English seas and rivers always resided in the King. Seld. Mar. Cl. 251, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 168, 169. 5 Co. 106. 1 Co. 141.

And as the King hath a prerogative in the seas, so hath he likewise a right to the fishery and to the soil; so that if a river as far as there is a flux of the sea leaves its channel, it belongs to the King. Dyer 326. 2 Roll. Abr. 170.

Hence the Admiralty court, which is a court for all maritime causes or matters arising on the high seas, is deemed the King's court; and its jurisdiction derived from him who protects his subjects from pirates, and provides for the security of trade and navigation. 4 Inst. 142. Molloy 66.

From the King's dominion over the sea it was holden, That the King, as protector and guardian of the seas, might before any statute made for commissions of sewers, provide against inundations by lands, banks, &c. and that he had a prerogative herein as well as in defending his subjects from pirates, &c. 10 Co. 141.

But notwithstanding the King's prerogative in seas and navigable rivers, yet it hath been always held, That a subject may fish in the sea; which being a matter of common right, and the means of livelihood, and for the good of the commonwealth, cannot be restrained by grant or prescription. 8 Ed. 4. 18, 19. Bro. Custom, 46. Fitz. Bar. 1 Mod. 105. 2 Salk. 637.

Also it is held, That every subject of common right may fish with lawful nets, &c. in a navigable river as well as in the sea; and the King's grant cannot bar them thereof; but the crown only has a right to royal fish, and that the King may only grant. 6 Mod. 73. 1 Salk. 357. S. C. & S. P.

The

The King, as a perpetual sign and acknowledgment of his dominion of the seas, hath several creatures reserved to him under the denomination of royal creatures, as swans, sturgeons and whales; all which are natives of seas and rivers. 7 Co. 16.

It is clearly agreed, that the King only has a prerogative in beacons and light-houses; and that he may erect any such, and in such places as will be most convenient for the safety and preservation of ships, mariners and navigation; also it seems to be the better opinion, that this being for the publick utility, and one of the prerogatives that he is intrusted with for the safety of the whole realm, he may erect such beacon, &c. as well in the soil of a subject as in that of the crown; and that he may do this without the subjects consent. 4 Inst. 148. 12 Co. 13. Carter 90. 2 Keb. 114. 3 Inst. 204.

Also it is clear, that the subject hath not any power to erect any such beacon, &c. without the King's licence and authority for that purpose. See the authorities supra and Carter 90.

But by the 8 Elix. it is enacted, "That the master, wardens and assistants of the Trinity house of Deptford Strand, may erect such beacons, marks and signs for the sea, as to them shall seem meet; whereby dangers may be avoided, and the ships better come to their ports; and all beacons, marks and signs so erected, shall be maintained at the charges of the master, wardens and assistants."

By the Common law the King hath an undoubted rights to wrecks; and his prerogative herein is founded on the dominion he has over the seas; and being sovereign thereof and protector of ships and mariners, he is intitled to the derelict goods of the merchant; which is the more reasonable, as it is a means of preventing the barbarous custom of destroying persons who in shipwrecks approach the shore, by removing the temptations to inhumanity. Gro. Jur. Belli 117, 132, 141. 2 Inst. 167. Molloy 237. Moor 224.

The King hath a prerogative in, and is intitled to, all royal mines of gold and silver, and treasures of gold and silver hid in the earth; and is intrusted with the coinage and making money current; and he alone can bring the treasure of any conquered country into use, by coining them into his money; and this prerogative is lodged in the King as he administers justice to all: therefore the regulation of that which is the common standard and measure of commerce is committed to his care. Dav. 19. 2 Roll. Abr. 166. 5 C. 114. 1 Co. 146.

Also this prerogative is given to the King as a necessary consequence of the power of war and peace; for there can be no war without the expence and consumption of treasure. Plow. 315.

Besides, if any other persons had power of mines of gold and silver, they might by these immense treasures grow too formidable, and wrest that authority from the King which was deposited in his hands only. Plow. 316.

All derelict goods, and in which no man hath a property, belong to the King as well as derelict lands; so of extraparochial tithes, tho' things of an ecclesiastical nature. Bro. tit. Prærog. pl. 12. 2 Vent. 267, 8. 5 Co. 18. 2 Inst. 646.

So if a person dies intestate, and without kindred, his goods belong to the King; and herein the usual course is said to be for a person to procure the King's letters patents, and then the ordinary admits the patentee to administration. 1 Salk. 37.

As to goods waived, these belong to the King, and are in him without any office; because the property is in nobody, therefore by publick agreement is put out of the finder, in whom it was by the state of nature, and is vested in the King, in recompence for his trouble in the execution of justice. 5 Co. 109.

But at the Common law, the owner pursuing the felon, and the felon waiving the goods, the owner may retake them; also upon an appeal of felony, the owner is intitled to a writ of restitution; and as a farther encouragement for the prosecution of felons, by the 21 H. 8. c. 11, it is provided, that if the party comes in as evidence on the indictment, and attaint the felon, he shall have a writ of restitution awarded by the judge of assize. 4 New Abr. 164.

3. Of the King's prerogative over the persons of his subjects, in restraining them from going abroad, and commanding them to return home.

All persons born in any part of the King's dominions and within his protection are his subjects, and also those born in Ireland, Scotland, Wales, the King's plantations or on the English seas; who by their birth owe such an inseparable allegiance to the King, that they cannot by any act of theirs renounce or transfer their subjection to any foreign prince. 7 Co. 1, &c. Calvin's case. Molloy 370. Co. Lit. 129. Dyer 300. See Alienf.

All the subjects of a foreign prince coming into England, and living under the protection of our King, may, in respect of that local ligeance which they owe him, be guilty of high treason, and indicted that they contra dominum regem (the words naturalem dominum suum being omitted) did compass &c. contra ligeantiam suam debitam; and it is said, that even an ambassador committing treason against the King's life, may be condemned and executed here, and that for other treasons he shall be sent home. 3 Inst. 4, 5. Dyer 145. Salk. 630. 1 Hawk. P. C. 35. 1 Hal. list. P. C. 59.

But aliens who in an hostile manner invade the kingdom, whether their King were at war or peace with ours, and whether they come by themselves, or in company with English traitors, cannot be punished as traitors, but shall be dealt with by martial law. 1 Hawk. P. C. 35.

If the King makes a new conquest of any country, the persons there born are his subjects; for by saving the lives of the people conquered he gains a right and property in such people, and may impose on them what law he pleases. Dyer 224. Vaugh. 281.

But until such laws given by the conquering prince, the laws of the conquered country hold place; (unless where these are contrary to our religion, or enact any thing that is malum in se, or are silent;) for in all such cases the laws of the conquering country prevail. 2 P. Will. 75, 76.

If there be a new and uninhabited country found out by English subjects, as the law is the birth-right of every subject, so wherever they go they carry their laws with them, therefore such new found country is to be governed by the laws of England; tho' after such country is inhabited by the English, acts of parliament made in England without naming the foreign plantations, will not bind them. 2 P. Will. 75. 2 Salk. 411.

By the Common law every subject may go out of the kingdom for merchandize or travel, or other cause, as he pleases, without any licence for that purpose; this appears from the statute 5 R. 2. cap. 2. made to restrain persons passing out of the realm, but excepts lords, great men and notable merchants; as also by the statute 26 H. 8. cap. 10. which gave power to the King during his life to restrain persons from trading to certain countries; which acts had been vain and idle, if the King by his prerogative might have done it. F. N. B. 85. Dyer 165, 296. 2 Roll. Rep. 12. 3 Mod. 131. Stil. 442.

But notwithstanding this general liberty allowed by the Common law, it appears plainly that the King by his prerogative, and without any help of an act of parliament, may prohibit his subjects from going out of the realm; but this must be by some express prohibition; as by laying on embargoes, which can be only done in time of danger, or by writ of Ne exeat Regno, which, from the words Quamplurima nobis & corona nostra præjudicialia ibidem prosequi intendis, appears to be a state writ, but is never granted universally, but to restrain a particular person, on oath made that he intends to go out of the realm; indeed Fitzherbert says, that the King may restrain his subjects by proclamation; and assigns as a reason for it, that the King may not know where to find his subjects, so as to direct a writ to him. 12 Cp. 33. 11 Co. 92. Fitz. N. B. 89. 2 Inst. 54.

As the King may restrain any of his subjects from going abroad, in like manner he may command them to return home; and disobeying a privy seal for this purpose is the highest contempt. 1st, It is a disobedience to the command of the King himself directed to the party. 2dly, The command is, that he shall return upon his faith and allegiance, which is the strongest compulsion that can be used. 3dly, The thing required by the King is the principal duty of a subject, viz. to be at the service of his King and country. Dyer 128. b. Lane 44. Moor 109. 3 Inst. 179.

The punishment for this offence is, seizing the party's estate till he return; and of this there are many instances in our books. And when he does return he shall be fined. 1 Hawk. P. C. 59, 60.

William de Brittain in the 19 of Ed. 2. refusing to return on the King's writ, his goods and chattels, lands and tenements, were seized into the King's hands; so in the case of Edward of Woodstock, Earl of Kent in the same reign. Dyer 128. b.

So in the case of one Bartue, who married the Dutchess of Suffolk, they obtained a licence from Q. Mary to go out of the realm, under pretence of recovering debts as executors to the Duke; when in reality it was on account of the religion established by Queen Mary, and living with other fugitives under the protection of the Palsgrave of the Kine in Germany, who was an eminent Calvinist, were sent to by privy seal; but the messenger, in endeavouring to serve them with his letters, being obstructed and abused by their attendants, a certificate was made of this, and their lands and tenements seized. Dyer 176. jenk. Cent. 220.

So in the case of Sir Francis Englefield, who departed the kingdom on a licence obtained for three years; but not returning at the expiration of the three years, a privy seal was sent to him by Queen Elizabeth, which he not obeying, and this matter certified into Chancery by the Queen, under her sign manual, in the fifth year of her reign, by virtue of a commission under the Great seal, his lands and tenements were seized. 1 Leon. 9. Moor 109. 1 And. 95. S. C. See also 7 Co. 18. Popb. 18. 4 Leon. 135.

So in the case of Sir Robert Dudley, who intending to travel, obtained a licence from James the First to go to Venice; but before his departure he by indenture inrolled for valuable consideration, as was expressed in the deed (but none paid) conveyed the manor of Killingworth with other lands to the Earl of Nottingham and others in fee, with a proviso, that on tender of an angel of gold all should be void; and with a covenant on the part of the bargainees that they should make all such estates as the said Sir Robert should appoint; the bargainees were not parties to the deed, nor had they notice of it 'till some time after; but afterwards they made a lease to Sir Robert Lee, to the intent that Lady Dudley should take the profits of part of the premises for ten years, if their estate continued so long unrevoked. The King hearing that Sir Robert had been guilty of some bad practices beyond sea, in the fifth year of his reign sent his Privy seal to him, which he not obeying, the great question in this case was, Whether those lands thus conveyed were forfeited; and adjudged that they were, the conveyance being fraudulent as to the King. Lane 42, &c.

In these cases it hath been held, that the King hath only an interest in the offender's lands, till he return; and that his restoring them is not a matter of grace but of right. Lane 48.

4. Of the King's prerogatives in relation to Civil and Ecclesiastical jurisdiction; in creating officers, and making war and peace.

All jurisdiction exercised in these kingdoms that are in obedience to our King, is derived from the crown; and the laws, whether of a temporal, ecclesiastical or military nature, are called his laws; and it is his prerogative to take care of the due execution of them. Hence all judges derive their authority from the crown, by some commission warranted by law; and must exercise it in a lawful manner, and without any the least deviation from the known and stated forms. Flota, c. 17. Co. Lit. 99. a. 144.

So altho' the King is the fountain of justice, and intrusted with the whole executive power of the law, yet he hath no power to alter the laws which have been established, and are the birthright of every subject; for by those very laws he is to govern; and as they prescribe the extent and bounds of his prerogative, in like manner they declare and ascertain the rights and liberties of the people, therefore admit of no innovation or change but by act of parliament. 4 Inst. 164. 2 Inst. 54, 478. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 131, 282. Vaugb. 418. 2 Salk. 510.

From the inherent right inseparable from the King to distribute justice among his subjects, it hath been held, that an appeal from the Ist of Man lies to the King in council, without any reservation in the grant of the Ist of Man of any such right; and tho' there had been exclusive words, yet the grant must have been construed to be void on the King's being deceived, rather than the subject should be deprived of a right inseparable to him as a subject, of applying to the crown for justice. 1 P. Will. 329.

The supremacy of the crown of England in matters ecclesiastical, is a most unquestionable right, which may be proved by records of undoubted authority; and tho' the pope made great incroachments on this right, yet these were always complained of as illegal; and those incroachments are now taken off by the 25 Hen. 8. cap. 19, 20, 21. and 26 Hen. 8. cap. 1.

So that the King doth not recognize any foreign authority in this kingdom, neither do the laws of the emperor or pope of Rome, as such, bind in the kingdom of England; but all the strength that either the papal or imperial laws have obtained in this kingdom, is only because they are and have been admitted in this kingdom, either by consent of parliament, or immemorial usage and acceptance in some particular courts and matters, and not otherwise. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 16.

The King therefore is said to have two jurisdictions, one temporal, the other ecclesiastical; the latter of which is derived from the Common law, tho' the form of the proceedings, and the coercive power exercised in the ecclesiastical courts, is after the form of the Canon and Civil law, and this being an indulgence, the judges give credit to their proceedings in matters in which they have a jurisdiction, and believe them consonant to the law of holy church, altho' against the reason of the Common law; and if there be a gravamen it must be redressed by appeal. 1 Show. Rep. 218. 1 Roll. Abr. 530. 4 Co. 29. 7 Co. 42. 5 Co. 7. 2 Vent. 43.

The King, as the fountain of justice, hath an undoubted prerogative in creating officers, and all officers are said to derive their authority mediately or immediately from him; those who derive their authority from him are called the officers of the crown, and are created by letters patents; such as the great officers of state, judges, &c. and there needs no stronger evidence of a right in the crown herein, than that the King hath created all such officers time immemorial. Dyer 176. 2 Roll. Abr. 152. 4 Co. 32. 2 Inst. 425, 540. 12 Co. 116. 1 Roll. Rep. 206. Show. Par. Ca. 111. * 1 Lev. 219.

But tho' all such officers derive their authority from the crown, and from whence the King is termed the universal officer and disposer of justice, yet it hath been held, that he hath not the office in him to execute it himself, but is only to grant or nominate; nor can the King grant any new powers to such officers, but they must execute their offices according to the rules prescribed by law. Co. Lit. 3, 114. 2 Vent. 270. 4 Inst. 125. 6 Co. 11, 12.

Neither can the King create any new office inconsistent with our constitution or prejudicial to the subject. 2 Inst. 540. 2 Sid. 141. Moor 808. 4 Inst. 200.

And on this foundation an office created by letters patents for the sole making of all bills, informations and letters missive in the council of York, was unreasonable and void. 1 Jow. 231.

The power of making war or peace is inter jura summi imperii, and in England is lodged singly in the King; tho' it ever succeeds best when done by parliamentary advice. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 159. 7 Co. 25.

A general war is of two kinds, 1. Bellum solenniter denunciatum. 2. Bellum non solenniter denunciatum. The first is, When war is solemnly declared or proclaimed by our King against another prince or state; which is the most formal solemnity of a war now in use. 2dly, When a nation slips suddenly into a war without any solemnity, which happens by granting letters of marque, by a foreign prince invading our coasts, or setting on the King's navy at sea; and hereupon a real, tho' not a solemn war may and hath formerly arisen; therefore to prove a nation to be at enmity with England, or to prove a person to be an alien enemy, there is no necessity of shewing any war proclaimed; but it may be averred, and so put upon the trial of the country, whether there was a war or not. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 163.

5. Of the King's prerogative in relation to his debts.

By 9 H. 3. c. 8. "The King nor his bailiffs shall levy any debts upon lands or rents so long as the debtor hath goods and chattels to satisfy, neither shall the pledges be distrained so long as the principal is sufficient; but if he fail, then shall the pledges answer the debt; howbeit they shall have the debtor's lands and rents until they be satisfied, unless he can acquit himself against the pledges."

Goods and chattels] By order of the Common law, the King for his debt had execution of the body, lands and goods of his debtor; this is an act of grace, and restrains the power the King had before. 2 Inst. 19.

Pledges be distrained] This act does not extend, nor was ever taken to extend to sureties in a bond or recognizance, if they may be so called, being bound themselves equally with the principal, as sureties to perform covenants and agreements are in like manner; but to pledges and manucaptors only, who by express words are not responsible, unless their principals become insolvent, and so are conditional debtors only. And so the act has always been construed, and the words themselves imply as much. Hard. 378.

By Stat. 9 Hen. 3. c. 18. "The King's debtor dying, the King shall be served before the executor."

By this statute, the King by his prerogative shall be preferred in satisfaction of his debt by the executors before any other. And if the executors have sufficient to pay the King's debt, the heir nor any purchaser of his lands shall not be charged. 2 Inst. 32.

Stat. Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 19. enacts, "That the sheriff having received the King's debt, upon his next account shall discharge the debtor thereof, in pain to forfeit three times so much to the debtor, and to make fine at the King's will. And the sheriff and his heirs shall answer all monies that they whom he employed receive; and if any other that is answerable to the Exchequer by his own hands do so, he shall render thrice so much to the plaintiff, and make fine as before. And on payment of the King's debt, the sheriff shall give a tally to the debtor, and the process for levying the same shall be shewed him on demand without fee, on pain to be grievously punished."

The King's debt] Under this word debt all things due to the King are comprehended, and not only debt in the proper sense, but duties on things due, as rents, fines, issues, amercements and other duties to the King received or levied by the sheriff; for debt in its large sense signifies whatever a man doth owe; and debere dicitur quia deest habere; debitori enim deest quod habet, cum sit creditoris, maxime in casu domini regis. 2 Inst. 198.

The sheriff and his heirs shall answer] This is to be understood, quoad restitutionem, but not quoad penam; that is for the civil but not for the criminal part; for it is a maxim in law, pena ex delicto defuncti heres teneri non debet; and again in restitutionem non in penam heres succedit. 2 Inst. 198.

Stat. 28 Ed. 1. cap. 12. enacts, "That beasts of the plough shall not be distrained for the King's debts so long as others may be found, on such pain as is elsewhere ordained by statute (viz. by the statute de districtione scaccarii, 51 H. 3.) And the great distresses shall not be taken for his debts, nor driven too far; and if the debtor can find convenient surety, the distress shall in the mean time be released; and he that does otherwise shall be grievously punished."

This is an act of grace, and on this act there lies a writ directed to the sheriff, commanding him to receive surety according to this act, which if he refuses, an attachment lies against him, or the party offering surety according to this act, if it be refused, may have an action against the sheriff, &c. 2 Inst. 565.

Stat. 25 Ed. 3. stat. 5. cap. 19. enables a common person to sue a debtor of his (who is likewise a debtor to the King) to judgment, but he cannot proceed to execution, unless the plaintiff gives security to pay the King's debt first, and then he may take execution for his own and the King's debt too.

For otherwise, if without giving such security, the party takes forth execution upon his judgment, and levies the money, the same money may be seized upon to satisfy the King's debt.

Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 39. s. 2. enacts, "That all obligations and specialties concerning the King and his heirs, or made to his or their use, shall be made to his Highness and to his heirs, Kings, in his or their name or names, by these words, domino regi, and to no other person to his use, and to be paid to his Highness, by these words, solvend' eidem domino regi heredi vel executoribus suis, with other words used in common obligations, which obligations and specialties shall be in the nature of a statute staple."

None other is to be charged, but such as were liable to the bond when it was made. Sav. 10.

An obligation for performance of covenants is within this act, after the covenants are broken. 7 Rep. 20. b. Hard. 368, 442.

By stat. 3. of the said act 33 Hen. 8. c. 39. All such obligations, the debt not being paid, shall come, remain, and be to the heirs or executors of the King as he shall appoint; and if any person take any obligation to the use of the King or his heirs, otherwise than as aforesaid, he shall suffer such imprisonment as shall be adjudged by the King or his honourable council.

Stat. 6. Costs and damages are given to the King.

Stat. 7. Directs debts to be sued for in proper courts.

Stat. 13. And every of the courts are impowered to set such fines, &c. on persons for their defaults, &c. as to the courts seem expedient. And all trials shall be by due examination of witnesses, writings, proofs or such other way as by the courts shall be thought expedient.

Stat. 25. And in all actions in any of the courts for any debt due to the King by reason of any attainder, outlawry, forfeiture, gift of the party, or by any other collateral ways or means, it shall be sufficient in law to shew and alledge generally, that the party to whom the said debt did belong, such a year and day did give the same to the King, or was attainted, outlawed, &c. whereby the said debt did accrue to the King; and the same shall be of the same effect, as if the whole matter had been declared at large according to the order of the Common law.

Stat. 26. If any suit be commenced, or any process awarded for the King, for the recovery of any debt, then the same suit and process shall be preferred before any person. And that the Lord, his heirs and successors, shall have first execution against any defendant for his debt, before any person; so always that the King's suit be commenced, or process awarded for the debt, at the suit of the King, his heirs or successors, before judgment given for the other person.

This statute abridges the prerogative, and controuls the Common law; and here is a negative implied, tho' the statute sounds in the affirmative; for it enacts a new thing, and the ita quod makes a condition precedent and a limitation: And the words are introductive. Hard. 27.

Strange Arg. said That on this act he took it, the suit must be said to be then taken or commenced when the first step is made towards the proceeding to execution, and the first step to be taken is to procure a fiat of a baron, and then it is in fact that the process is awarded. G. Eq. R. 222.

Stat. 27. All manors, lands, tenements, possessions and hereditaments, which be, or that hereafter shall be in the the hands, possession, occupation, or seisin of any person, to whom the manors, &c. have heretofore or hereafter shall descend, revert or remain in fee-simple or in fee-tail, general or special, by, from or after the death of any ancestor as heir, or by gift of his ancestors whose heir he is, which ancestor was, is or shall be indebted to the King or to any person to his use, by judgment, recognizance, obligation or other specialty, the debt whereof is or shall not be paid; then in every such case the same manors, &c. shall be chargeable for payment of the debt.

All manors] A. seised of the manor of F. in consideration of a marriage to be had between B. his son and M. daughter of J. S. covenanted to levy a fine to the use of himself and wife for their lives, remainder to the use of B. and M. and the heirs of their bodies with remainders over; afterwards A. acknowledged a recognizance to the Queen and died. His wife died; the manor is extended for the Queen's debt, by force of the statute. It was argued by Coke, that the manor is not chargeable by the statute; but it was made for the King's benefit in two points. 1. To make lands intailed liable for the King's debts, where they were not so before, against the issue. 2. To make bonds taken by the officers of the King to the use of the King, as effectual as statutes; that the words (was or shall be indebted) shall not be intended after the gift made; that (shall be) is to be intended of future debts after the statute, whereas at the time of the settlement A. was not receiver or other officer to the Queen; the words are (by gift after the debt acknowledged to the Queen); that this case is not within the statute; for the words are (of the gift of his ancestor) but here B. has not the manor of the gift of A. but rather by the statute of uses, and so he is in the post, and not in the per, by his ancestor; for the fine was levied to divers persons to the uses aforesaid, nor was the gift a meer gratuity, but in consideration that he should marry the daughter of J. S. and the debt accrued not till after the gift. He admitted that had there been any fraud in the case, or any purpose in A. when he made the conveyance, to become the King's debtor or officer, it would be within the statute, and the gift had been a meer gratuity, &c. and afterwards (as Coke reported) B. and his lands were discharged. 2 Le. 90, 91.

Shall be indebted] This is intended an immediate debt, and not such debts as are due to the subject and accrue to the King by any collateral means; for which this statute has a clause for the writ and general manner and form of pleading in such cases, of the part of the King for the recovery of them, that the party such a year and day, &c. (which see at f. 25. above.) So that the several manners of penning these two branches manifest the intention of the makers of the act to prefer immediate debts due to the King by judgment, &c. before debts of the subject which accrue to the King by assignment, attainder, outlawry, &c. and the reason was, because debts due immediately to the King by judgment, recognizance, obligation, or other specialty, are in their nature more high, and may be better known, and upon search found, than debts due to subjects. 7 Rep. 2. a. Jenk. 226. pl. 99. S. P. But for such debts the King is left at Common law. If the King's debtor, officer or accountant has leases for years or goods; these leases and goods are not liable if the debtor sold them bona fide: But if he sold them by cowin it is otherwise. If land be purchased with the King's money, it is liable to satisfy the King.

The debt ought to be immediately to the King himself, or if it be to any other than to the King, it ought to be originally to the use of the King. 7 Rep. 22. a.

If tenant in tail becomes indebted to the King, unless it be by judgment, recognizance, obligation or other specialty, and dies, the lands in the seisin of the issue in tail by force of this act shall not be extended by this act for such debt; for the statute extends only to the said four cases, and all other debts remain at Common law. 7 Rep. 21. b.

The issue in tail (the land being in his hands) is also liable in either of the said four cases, but not the bona fide alienee of the issue; for the words of the statute do not extend to this alienee; the Common law did not help the King in these cases; the statute helps the King in the case against the issue in tail. Jenk. 226. pl. 99. S. P. Ibid. 285. pl. 19.

The issue in tail shall not be charged by this statute for the penalty on a conviction of reculancy of the tenant in tail by proclamation, by the statute 28 Eliz. but otherwise it had been if he had been convicted by the 23 Eliz. 1 Roll. Rep. 94.

In every such case] By the express purview of this act, the land shall be solely extended as long as it is in the possession or seisin of the heir in tail; for this act says, That in every such case the land shall be charged. And as the land against the issue in tail was not extendable before this act, the King has benefit to extend it in the possession of the heir in tail, which he could not do before; but the King cannot extend the lands of the alienee; for the statute does not extend to this, and the makers of the act have reason to favour the purchasers, farmers, &c. of the heir in tail, more than the heir himself; for they are strangers to the debts of tenant in tail, and they come to the land on good consideration. 7 Rep. 21. b.

The same manors] If the goods and chattels of the King's debtors be sufficient, and so can be made appear to the sheriff, whereupon he may levy the King's debt, then the sheriff ought not to extend the lands of the debtor or his heir; or of any purchaser or tenant. 2 Inst. 19.

Sec. 28. The King shall not be excluded to demand his debts against any of his subjects, as heretofore to any person indebted to his Highness or to his use, albeit this word heir be not comprized in such recognizance or specialty, or that such persons shall say, that they have not any hereditaments to them descended, but only such as be intailed or given to them by the ancestors.

By this clause the intent of the makers of the act appears, that the heir in tail shall be only charged with the debt of the King; but lands in fee-simple were extendable at the Common law in whatever hands they came, therefore as to them this statute was only declarativum antiqui juris: But as to the estates in tail, it was introducivum novi juris against the issue in tail. 7 Rep. 21. b.

One P. was indebted to the Queen, and one W. was bound to P. in 100*l.* in which obligation W. did not mention his heirs; P. assigned the obligation in which W. was bound to him, to the Queen, and on this process was made against the heir of W. And it was held by the court, that as W. did not oblige himself and his heirs, that the heir by the death of the father was discharged: And if the assignment had been made in the life-time of the father, and then the father had died, the heir should be discharged, but the son may be charged as executor or administrator, &c. Sav. 2.

Sec. 29. Provided, That the King may at his liberty demand his debts of any executors or administrators of any person indebted, if the executors, &c. have assets.

J. S. was obliged to Sir Richard Cavendish, Treasurer of the Chamber to Henry VIII. in 100*l.* who was indebted to the King, on which process was made against those who were tenants of J. S. tempore confessionis scripti præd. made to the said Sir Richard. Per Manwood Ch. B. The tenants are not chargeable in this case, but the heirs and executors. Per Shute second Baron, If an obligation be made to the King, it shall be of the same nature as a statute staple to all intents, by this statute; but obligations made to other persons to the use of the King, shall be executory against the obligor, his heirs, executors or administrators, and not against other persons, but if J. N. be bound to J. S. and J. S. assigns this to Sir Richard Cavendish, and he over to the King, no process shall be made thereon, which the court and all the clerks agreed. And it was held, that if obligor, after the obligation made, voluntarily makes feoffment of lands, such feoffees shall be charged; otherwise it is of purchasers before the obligation made in case of the King. Sav. 12.

Sec. 30. If the hereditaments be evicted out of the possession of such persons by just title without fraud, whose hereditaments shall be chargeable as is aforesaid; then such hereditaments shall be acquitted of the debts.

B. was indebted to the Queen, for the payment of which debt certain lands, of B. at the time of the debt, were were purchased by one W. against whom and one C. and D. the said B. exhibited his bill in the Exchequer-chamber, praying, that the equity of the case might there be examined. Before any answer made W. paid the debt, and then demanded judgment if the court would hold further plea, as the cause of privilege was determined, which is the debt due to the Queen. And it was held, that on this reason the court ought to dismiss the cause, and so it was done. Sav. 15.

Sett. 31. If any person of whom any such debt shall be demanded, shew sufficient matter, in law, reason, or good conscience, why such persons ought not be charged with the same, and it be sufficiently proved, the courts have power to allow the proof, and acquit all persons so impleaded.

Sufficient matter in law] This provisi. does not give benefit only to him who has matter in good conscience, but also to him who has good and sufficient cause, and matter in law, reason (and then comes) good conscience; and without question the first words, viz. cause and matter in law, shall extend to all the debts of the King, and process thereupon, as well at Common law as on this act. And the conclusion of the branch does not make against it. For the sense thereof was, that he should plead matter in law or good conscience, and that nothing contained in the act should be an impediment thereto. 7 Rep. 19. b.

Scire facias issued against Sir W. H. as heir, to M. H. his father, on a recognizance acknowledged to Edward VI. by the said M. H. the sheriff returned scire feci, and on his default judgment was given. And because in truth he never was summoned, and had good matter, if he had had notice thereof, to plead in discharge of the recognizance acknowledged, all which he shewed in certain in a bill in the Exchequer; upon which, on conference had by Manwood and the other Barons, with the two Ch. J. he was discharged of the recognizance. 7 Rep. 20. a. As 3 Rep. Trin. 37 Eliz. Sir William Herbert's case.

In law, reason or good conscience] A. obtained of the King a privy seal, whereby the forfeiture of certain recognizances for appearing at the sessions, amounting in the whole to 800 l. was granted her. And it was made a question, Whether the court might compound those forfeitures by virtue of their privy seal which was granted before the privy seal and grant to A.? And it was doubted whether the privy seal did not take away and revoke the power given to the court in this particular? But it was held clearly, that the court might upon good matter in equity discharge these debts by virtue of this statute. And the case in question seemed a hard case to the court, because the party himself was the cause why there was no appearance, by beating the party so heinously the very day before they ought to have appeared, that they were disabled thereby to appear. Hard. 334.

W. put 100 l. out at interest to defendant, and took bond in the name of one J. who became felo de se, and the plaintiff was relieved against the King on this trust, in equity upon this statute. Sett. quere, Whether this statute extends to any equity against the King, otherwise than in case of pleas by way of discharge? But it was likewise decreed in this cause that the plaintiff should be saved harmless from all others. Hard. 176.

And the matter so shewed be sufficiently proved] Scire facias issued against T. the father and T. the son, to shew cause wherefore they did not pay the King 1000 l. for the mean profits of certain lands holden by them from his Majesty, for which land judgment was given for him in the Exchequer. and the mesne rates were found by inquisition, which returned that the said mesne profits came to 1000 l. upon which inquisition this scire facias issued; whereupon the sheriff returned that T. the father was dead; and T. the son appeared, and pleaded that he took the profits but as a servant to his father, and by his command, and rendered an account to his father for the profits, and also the judgment for the lands was given against his father and him for default of sufficient pleading, and not for the truth of the fact; and he shewed this statute, which he pretended aided him for his equity: Whereupon the King demurred. Tanfield Ch. B. said, that the matter in equity ought to be sufficiently proved, and here is nothing but the allegation of the party, and the demurrer for the King; and if the demurrer be in law an admittance of the allegation, and so a sufficient proof within the statute, is to be advised on; and for that joint the case is but this: A scire facias issues to have execution of a recognizance, which within this act ought by pretence and allegation of the defendant to be discharged for matter in equity, and the defendant pleads his matter in equity, and the King supposing this not to be equity within this statute, demurs in law, whether that demurrer be an insufficient proof of the allegation within the statute or not? Adjournatur. Lane 51.

Sett. 33. This act shall not take away any liberties belonging to the dutchy and county palatine of Lancaster.

Sett. 34. Process and executions for debts in the court of Exchequer shall be made in the Exchequer by such officer as hath been used, as by this act is limited.

13 Eliz. cap. 4. Sett. 1. enacts, That all the lands, &c. which any accomptant of the Queen, her heirs and successors, hath while he remains accountable, shall for the payment of the debts of the Queen, her heirs and successors, be liable, and put in execution in like manner, as if such accomptant had stood bound by writ obligatory (having the effect of the statute-staple) to her Majesty, her heirs and successors, for payment of the same.

The Queen by her letters patents, granted catalla ut legatorum & felonum de se, within such a precinct; one who was indebted to the Queen is felo de se within the precinct. It was ruled, that notwithstanding the grant by the letters patents, the Queen shall have the goods for satisfying her debt. 3 Le. 113. Mo. 126, 127. S. C. between The Queen and Bishop of Sarum and Coxhead; and there per Manwood Ch. B. the patent does not extend to have the goods of felo de se against the Queen for her debt, because it wanted the words (licet tangat nos;) but he agreed, that if the lands of the felon be liable [sufficient to answer] all the debt of the Queen, the court may in discretion take all the lands in extent, and leave the goods to the patentee. And as to a petition of Coxhead praying a discharge of the lands, &c. by him purchased of the officer debtor to the Queen, it was answered, that the land was subject to the Queen's extent for all arrears of receipts by his office received before the conveyance thereof, tho' the receipt be after the conveyance, and that by reason of this statute; but as to another office accepted after the conveyance of the land, the arrears of that shall not charge the land so conveyed.

B. L. having purchased a long term for years in houses, afterwards purchased the inheritance; afterwards he became receiver of North Wales, and having occasion for 500 l. assigned over the term by way of mortgage to J. S. Afterwards on the marriage of E. L. his son, he settled the houses in St. Clement's (inter alia) on himself for life, remainder to E. L. his son, and the heirs of his body. There was issue of the marriage a daughter, the wife of P. after this B. L. mortgages these houses to N. for 1800 l. The King extends these houses for the debt of B. L. N. gets an assignment of the extent, and a privy seal for the debt. Resolved, 1st, That by the statute of Elizabeth the land and the real estate of B. L. was bound and stood liable to answer the King's debt, altho' he was not actually a debtor to the King, nor any extent against him in several years after. 2^{dly}, That where a term is attendant on the inheritance, if the King extends the inheritance, he shall have a right to the term; but if it be a term in gross, and assigned before any actual extent, the assignment will stand good, and the term not liable to the King's debt. 2 Vern. 389, 390.

Sett. 2, 3. If this super be not paid within six months after the account paid, the Queen, &c. may sell so much of his estate as will answer the debt, and the overplus of the sale is to be rendered to the accomptant or his heirs, by the officer that receives the purchase money, without further warrant.

Upon this statute many questions were moved. 1st, If the debtor died, whether the land might be sold 2^{dly}, When the account is determined after his death? 3^{dly}, When the accountant, after becoming debtor, and in arrears, makes feoffment, or other estate over, or charges or incumbers the land, either to his issue, or others of his blood, lood, to prevent the Queen's selling, or on other consideration, whether she may sell the land, the words of the Act being make sale, &c. of so much of the lands, &c. of every such accountant or debtor so found in arrears, &c. and that the sale shall be good and available in law against the party accountant, and his heirs claiming as theirs. 4thly, If the accountant was seized of land in tail, whether this land might be sold to be good against the issue; for the ousting of which doubts the statute of 27 Eliz. cap. 3. was made, but this gives remedy only, that the land shall be sold after the death of the debtor, and when the account is made after his death, therefore to remedy the other mischiefs, the statute 29 Eliz. cap. 7. was made [But the same being only a temporary act is expired.] Mo. 646, &c. pl. 895. Anon., [where part of the last mentioned act is set forth and explained.]

Sect. 5. If such accountant or debtor purchase lands in others names in trust for their use, that being found by office or inquisition, those lands also shall be liable to satisfy the debt in such manner as before is expressed.

Sect. 6. Lands purchased by accountants since the beginning of the Queen's reign, either in their own names, or in the names of others in trust for their use, shall be also liable to be sold for the discharge of their debts as aforesaid, rendering the overplus to the accountant.

Sect. 9. Provided, That bishops lands shall be only chargeable for subsidies or tenths, as they were before making this act, and not otherwise.

Sect. 10. Neither shall this act extend to charge any accountant whose yearly receipt exceeds not 300*l.* otherwise than as he was lawfully chargeable before this act.

Sect. 11, 12. Neither shall this act extend to such accountants, as by order of their offices, and charge, immediately after their accounts past, are to lay out money again; such as are Treasurers of war, garrisons, navy, provision of victuals, or for fortifications or buildings, and the master of the wardrobe; unless the Queen, &c. command present pay.

Sect. 13. Neither does this act extend to sheriffs, escheators or bailiffs of liberties, concerning whose accounts the course remains the same as before.

Sect. 14. Lands bought of an accountant bona fide, and without notice of any fraudulent intent in the accountant, shall be discharged; and if they be bound by office, yet shall they on traverse be discharged without livery, ouster le main or other suit.

If a man is receiver to the King, and not indebted, but is clear, and sells his land, and ceases to be receiver, and afterwards is appointed receiver again; and then a debt is contracted with the King, the former sale is good. 2 Mod. 247.

Sect. 15. The Queen, &c. being satisfied by sale of lands, the sureties shall be discharged for so much, and if any yet remain unpaid, the sureties shall pay the residue ratably according to their abilities.

By 27 Eliz. cap. 3. Sect. 2. The Queen, &c. may make sale of the accountant's lands, &c. as well after his death as in his life-time, and as well where the account is made, and the debt known within eight years after his death, as where the account is made, and the debt known in his life-time.

Sect. 3. Provided, that after the accountant's death, and before the lands be sold, a scire facias shall be awarded to garnish the heirs, to shew cause why lands, &c. should not be sold, &c. whereupon, if the heir, upon such garnishment or two nibils returned, do not prove that the executors or administrators of the accountant have sufficient, then ten months after such two nibils or garnishment returned, the land, &c. shall be sold and disposed according to the statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 4.

Sect. 4. Nevertheless, the heir's sale bona fide upon good consideration before the scire facias awarded, shall be good to him who is not consenting to defraud the Queen, &c.

Sect. 5. This statute shall extend to all officers of receipts and accounts to her Majesty, and to no other.

Sect. 6. If the debt grow in the courts of the dutchy of wards, a Privy seal shall issue out against the heir to appear at a certain day, to shew cause, &c. when, if he appear not, on affidavit made that it was duly served, an attachment with proclamation shall issue against him, to be proclaimed in some open market in the county where he dwelt twenty days (at least) before the return thereof, whereupon, if he appear not, the lands, &c. shall be sold and disposed as aforesaid.

Sect. 7. The heir's land shall not be sold during his minority; but at any time within eight years after his full age they shall be liable as aforesaid.

Prerogative court, (Curia prerogativa Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis,) Is the court wherein all wills are proved, and all administrations taken which belong to the Archbishop by his prerogative; that is, in case where the deceased had goods of any considerable value out of the diocese wherein he died; and that value is ordinarily 5*l.* except it be otherwise by composition between the Archbishop, and some other Bishop, as in the diocese of London it is ten pounds: And if any contention grow between two or more, touching such will or administration, the cause is properly decided in this court. The judge whereof is termed Judex curia Prærogativæ Cantuariensis, the Judge of the Prerogative court of Canterbury.

The Archbishop of York hath also the like court, which is termed his Exchequer, but inferior to this in power and profit. 4 Inst. 335. As to the Prerogative of the Bishop of Canterbury or York, (Prærogativa Archiepiscopi Cantuariensis sive Eboracensis,) See the book, intituled, De Antiquitate Britannicæ Ecclesiæ Cantuariensis Historia, especially the eighth chapter, pag. 25. Corwell.

Presbyterium, A Presbytery; or that part of the church where divine offices are performed, applied to the choir or chancel, because it was the place appropriated to the bishop, priests and other clergy, while the laity were confined to the body of the church. Mon. Ang. Tom. 1. pag. 243.

Prescription, (Præscriptio) Is a title acquired by use and time, and allowed by law; as when a man claims any thing, because he, his ancestors, or they whose estate he hath, have had or used it all the time, whereof no memory is to the contrary: Or it is where for continuance of time, ultra memoriam hominis, a particular person hath a particular right against another. Kitch. 104. 1 Inst. 114. 4 Rep. 32.

Prescriptions are properly personal, therefore are always alleged in the person of him who prescribes, viz. That he, his ancestors, or all those whose estate he hath, &c. or of a body politick or corporation, they and their predecessors, &c. Also a parson may prescribe, quod ipse & prædecessores sui, and all they whose estate, &c. for there is a perpetual estate, and a perpetual succession, and the successor hath the very same estate which his predecessor had, which continues, tho' the person alters, like the case of ancestor and heir. 3 Salk. 279.

There is a difference between prescription, custom and usage.

Prescription hath respect to a certain person, who by inheritance may have continuance for ever; as for instance; he and all they whose estate he hath in such a thing, this is a prescription: But

Custom is local, and always applied to a certain place, as time out of mind there has been such a custom in such a place, &c. And prescription belongeth to one or a few only; but custom is common to all:

Usage differs from both, for it may be either to persons or places; as to inhabitants of a town, to have a way, &c. 2 Nels. Abr. 1277.

A custom and prescription are in the right; usage is in possession; and a prescription that is good for the matter and substance, substance, may be bad by the manner of setting it forth; but where that which is claimed as a custom, in or for many, will be good, that regularly will be so when claimed by prescription for one. Godb. 54.

Prescription is to be time out of mind; tho' it is not the length of time, that begets the right of prescription, nothing being done by time; altho' every thing is done in time, but it is a presumption in law; that a possession cannot continue so long quiet, if it was against right, or injurious to another. 3 Salk. 278.

A prescription cannot be annexed to any thing but an estate in fee, which must be set forth; but it is always applied to incorporeal inheritances, one cannot make title to land by prescription; but only to rent, or profit out of land. 2 Mod. 318. 4 Rep. 31.

A person may make title by prescription, to an office, a fair, market, toll, way, water, rent, common, park, warren, franchise, court-leet, waifs, estrays, &c. But nothing may be prescribed, which cannot be raised by grant, and a prescription must not be laid in an uncertainty; no person can prescribe against an act of parliament, or against the King where he hath a certain estate and interest, against the publick good, religion, &c. Nor can one prescription be pleaded against another, unless the first is answered or traversed; or where one may stand with the other. Lutw. 381. Raym. 232. 2 Roll. Abr. 264. 2 Inst. 167. 7 Rep. 28. Cro. Car. 432. 1 Bullf. 115. 2 Lill. 346.

Tenants in fee-simple are to prescribe in their own name, and tenants for life or years, &c. tho' they may not prescribe in their own names, yet they may in the name of him who hath fee: and where a person would have a thing that lies in grant by prescription, he must prescribe in himself and his ancestors, whose heir he is by descent; not in himself, and those whose estate, &c. (unless the que estate is but a conveyance to the thing claimed by prescription;) for he cannot have their estate that lies in grant without deed, which ought to be shewed to the court. 1 Inst. 113. Wood's Inst. 297.

A copyholder, by reason of the baseness of his tenure, cannot lay a prescription in himself and his ancestors; but he may prescribe in the name of the lord of the manor, that the lord and his ancestors have had common, &c. for themselves and tenants, &c. And this serves where persons cannot prescribe in their own name, or of any certain person.

Parishioners cannot generally prescribe, but they may allege a custom; and inhabitants may prescribe in a matter of easement, way to a church, burying place, &c. 2 Saund. 325. 1 Lev. 253. Cro. Eliz. 441. Cro. Car. 419. 2 Roll. 290.

To lay a prescription for common, a man must shew, that he and his ancestors, or all those whose estate he hath, have time out of mind had and used to have common of pasture in such a place, being the land of another, &c. And as a prescription is a title or claim of a real interest or profit in the land of another person, it must be pleaded according to certain rules; and they are not like customs, or improper prescriptions, that are by way of discharge, or for easements, or for matters of personal exemption or privilege. Wood's Inst. 298, 299.

A prescription may be laid in several persons, where it tends only to matters of easement or discharge; tho' not where it goes to matter of interest or profit in alieno solo, for that is a title, and the title of one doth not concern the other; therefore several men having several estates, cannot join in making a prescription. 1 Mod. 74. 3 Mod. 250.

The word easement is a genus to several species of liberties, which one may have in the soil of another, without claiming any interest in the land itself; but where the thing was set forth in a prescription to catch fish in the water of another, &c. and no instance could be given of a prescription for such a liberty by the word easement, a rule was made to set the prescription right, and to try the merits. 4 Mod. 362.

In trespass for breaking the plaintiff's close, the defendant prescribed, that the inhabitants of such a place, time out of mind, had used to dance there, at all times of the year, for their recreation, and so justified; issue being taken on this prescription, defendant had a verdict; it was objected against it, that a prescription to dance in the freehold of another, and spoil his grass was ill; especially as laid in the defendant's plea, viz. At all times of the year, and not at seasonable times, and for all the inhabitants; who tho' they may prescribe in easements which are necessary, as a way to a church, &c. they cannot in easements for pleasure only: But adjudged, that the prescription is good, issue being taken on it, and found for defendant; altho' it might have been ill on demurrer. 1 Lev. 175. 2 Nels. 1280.

A custom that the farmers of such a farm have always found ale, &c. to such a value at perambulations, was held naught; because it is no more than a prescription in occupiers, which is not good in matter to charge the land. 2 Lev. 164.

Prescription by the inhabitants of a parish to dig gravel in such a pit, the soil of W. R. it was doubted whether this was good or not, tho' it was to repair the highway; but the inhabitants may prescribe for a way, and by consequence for NECESSARY MATERIALS to repair it. 2 Lutw. 1346.

Defendant pleaded, that within such a parish, all occupiers of a certain close habent, & habere consueverunt, a way leading over the plaintiff's close, to the defendant's house; this was held ill, for it is not like a prescription to a way to the church or marker, which are necessary, & pro bono publico. 2 Ventr. 186.

Where a man prescribes for a way to such a close, he must shew what interest he hath in the close: Aliter if he prescribes for a way to such a field; because that may be a common field by intendment. Lutw. 160.

Plaintiff declared, that the occupiers of the adjoining field have, time out of mind, repaired the fences, which being out of repair, his beasts escaped out of his own ground, and fell into a pit; it is good, without shewing any estate in the occupiers; but it had not been to if defendant had prescribed. 1 Ventr. 264.

Prescription, &c. to take underwood growing on the lands of another, to make hedges, is not good. 1 Leon. 313.

A man may claim a fold-course, and exclude the owner of the soil by prescription. 1 Saund. 153. But a diversity has been taken where a prescription takes away the whole interest of the owner of the land; and where a particular profit is retained: In one case it is good, in the other void. 1 Leon. 11.

If a person prescribes for common appurtenant it is ill, unless it be for cattle levant & couchant, &c. And the reason is, because by such a prescription the party claims only some part of the pasture, and the quantum is ascertained by the levancy and couchancy, the rest being left for the owner of the soil; therefore if he who thus prescribes, should put in more cattle than are levant and couchant on his tenement, he is a trespasser. Noy 145. 2 Saund. 324.

In a prescription to have common, the jury found it to be paying every year a penny: Here the prescription is entire, whereof the payment of one penny is parcel; which ought to be entirely alledged in the prescription in the plea, or it will not be good. Cro. Eliz. 563, 564. But where the payment is collateral from the prescription, a prescription may be good without alledging it. Cro. Eliz. 405.

It was a question, Whether a toll, independent of markets and fairs, might be claimed by prescription, without shewing that the subject hath some benefit; and some arguments were brought for it, from an authority in Dyer 352. Tho' by Holt this prescription cannot be good, because there was no recompence for it; and every prescription to charge the subject with a duty, must import some benefit to him who pays it; or else some reason must be shewed why the duty is claimed. 4 Mod. 319.

A court-leet is derived out of the hundred; and if a man claims a title to the leet, he may prescribe that he and his ancestors, and all those whose estate he hath in the hundred, time out of mind had a leet. 1 Inst. 125.

There may be a prescription for a court to hold pleas of all actions, and for any sum or damage, and it will be good. Jenk. Cent. 327. If a court held by prescription is granted and confirmed by letters patent; this doth not not destroy the prescription, but it is said the court may be held by prescription as before. 2 Roll. Abr. 271.

A grant may enure as a confirmation of a prescription; and the prescription continue unaltered by a new charter, &c. where the charter is not contrary to the prescription. Moor 818, 834. But in some cases it is intended, that a prescription shall begin by grant; and as to prescriptions in general, the law supposes a descent, or purchase originally. Cro. Eliz. 709. 1 Inst. 113.

Every prescription is taken strictly: And a man ought not to prescribe to that which the law of common right gives. 3 Leon. 13. Noy 20.

A prescription must have a lawful commencement, and peaceable possession and time are inseparably incident to it. 1 Inst. 113. Tho' a title gained by custom or prescription, will not be lost by interruption of the possession for ten or twenty years; but it may be lost by interruption in the right. 1 Inst. 114. 2 Inst. 653.

Prescription at Common law, is time out of memory of man; and by statute, where a certain time is limited, as from the reign of Rich. 1, &c. Co. Litt. 115. See Black. Com. 2 V. 263. As to prescription by corporations, see ib. 1 V. 472. and as to the time of prescription, see ib. 2 V. 31. Prescriptions for repairing highways, see Highways.

Prescriptions against Actions and Statutes, The 7 Hen. 8. ordains, That four years being past after the offences committed, provided against by this statute, no suit can be commenced.

By 31 Eliz. cap. 5. all actions, &c. brought on statutes, the penalty whereof belongs to the King, shall be brought within two years after the offence done, or shall be void. And the stat. 23 Eliz. cap. 1. enacts, that offences comprised in that statute, &c. are determinable before justices of peace and assize, within a year and a day after the offence, &c. so that whoever offendeth against any of these statutes and escapes unquestioned for four years, two, or one year, may be said to prescribe against the actions and punishments ordained by those statutes: And there are other statutes which have the like appointments or limitations of time, whence may arise the like prescription and bar. 4 Rep. 84. 2 Inst. 652. Vide Action.

Prescription by the Ecclesiastical Law, as to tithes, &c. See Modus Decimandi.

Presence. Sometimes the presence of a superior magistrate, takes away the power of an inferior. 9 Rep. 118. And the presence of one may serve for all the feoffees or grantees, &c. 3 Rep. 26. When presence of a man, in the place where an offence is done, may make him guilty, vide Accessary.

Presentation, (Presentatio) Is properly the act of a patron, offering his clerk to the bishop of the diocese, to be instituted in a church or benefice of his gift, which is void. 2 Lill. Abr. 351.

Anciently presentation was said to be in the bishop of common right, till since it has been indulged to the laity, to encourage them to build and endow churches; and now if the patron neglects to present to the church, then this right returns to the bishop by lapse, &c. 1 Nelf. Abr.

An alien born cannot present to a benefice in his own right; for if he purchase an advowson, and the church becomes void, the King shall present after office found that the patron is an alien. 2 Nelf. 1290. And by statute no alien shall purchase a benefice in this realm; nor occupy the same, without the King's licence, on pain of a præmunire. 7 R. 2. cap. 12.

Papists are disabled to present to benefices, and the universities are to present, &c. But a Popish recusant may grant away his patronage to another, who may make presentation, where there is no fraud. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. 1 W. & M. 1 Jon. 19.

All persons who have ability to purchase or grant, have likewise ability to present to vacant benefices: but a dean and chapter cannot present the dean; nor may a clergyman who is patron present himself, tho' he may pray to be admitted by the ordinary, and the admission shall be good.

An infant may present, because guardians have not power to do it in right of the heir; a guardian in socage cannot present to a church, he being not to meddle with any thing, but for what he may account, which he cannot do for a presentation, for he is to take nothing for it: If a feme covert hath title to present, the presentation ought to be in the name of husband and wife, and not by her alone; or he may present in his own name during coverture: Coparceners are but as one patron, and ought to agree in the presentation of one person; if they cannot agree, the eldest shall present first alone, and the bishop is obliged to admit her clerk, and afterwards the others in their order shall prefer their clerks; jointenants and tenants in common must regularly join in presentation, and if either present alone, the bishop may refuse his clerk, as he may also the clerk presented by the major part of them; but if there are two jointenants of the next avoidance, one may present the other, and two jointenants may present a third, but not a stranger.

The next presentation was granted to four persons, & eorum cuilibet conjunctim & divisim, &c. And the church becoming void, one of the grantees alone presented one of the others; and it was adjudged, that this presentation by one was good.

When an aggregate corporation presents, it must be under their common seal, and by the true name of their corporation. The King may present by letters patent under the Great Seal, and by these words, viz. Damus & concedimus; for this amounts to a warrant for the bishop to admit the clerk; it is said the King may present by word, or in writing under any seal, who cannot do any other legal act but by matter of record; and in the opinion of some, the King may present to a church by his letter sent to the ordinary to institute and induct such a one his clerk to the living; but the most secure way is to have a presentation under the Great Seal. If a rector is made bishop, the King shall present to the rectory, unless he grant to the bishop before he is consecrated, a dispensation to hold it with his bishoprick; and if an incumbent of a church is made a bishop, and the King presents or grants that he should hold the church in commendam, which is quasi a presentation, a grantee of the next avoidance or presentation hath lost it, the King having the next presentation. If the King present to a church by lapse, where he ought to present pleno jure, and as patron of the church, such a presentation is not good; for the King is deceived in his grant, by mistaking his title, which may be prejudicial to him; the presenting by lapse intitling only that presentation: The Lord Chancellor presents to the King's benefices under 20 l. &c. 2 Roll. Abr. 354. 3 Inst. 156. 1 Inst. 186. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1288, 1290. 2 Lill. 351.

The King may repeal a presentation, before his clerk is inducted; and this he may do by granting the presentation to another, which without any farther signification of his mind is a revocation of the first presentation. Dyer 293, 360.

A patron may revoke his presentation before institution, but not afterwards; a presentation being no more than a power given to the ordinary to admit the clerk, and if the patron die before induction, his presentation is determined. But this was in the case of the King; for in the case of a common person, if he die after institution, and before induction, the presentation is not determined by his death. Latch. 191. Dyer 348.

If two patrons present their clerks to a church, the bishop is to determine who shall be admitted by a jus patronatus, &c. And two patrons pretending a title to present, one of them presented W. R. but the bishop refused institution; whereupon he sued in the court of audience of the Archbishop, and had an inhibition to that bishop, and on that suit he obtained an institution by the archbishop, on which he was inducted; afterwards the bishop who was inhibited, granted institution upon the presentation of the other patron, and his clerk was likewise inducted; and thereupon W. R. who had been instituted and inducted before, on a motion procured a prohibition, because by the first induction the incumbency was determined: So that quoad the incumbency, the prohibition was granted, but not as to the contempt of the ordinary after he had been inhibited. Moor 499.

The father was incumbent, and after his death the patron presented his son, who was refused by the bishop, because by the Canon law Filius non potest succedere patri in eadem eadem ecclesia, and the patron presented another person; then the son who was first presented; obtained a dispensation non obstante the canon; but the ordinary admitted the second presentee, who was also instituted and inducted; thereupon the son sued him and the bishop in the Spiritual court, but a prohibition was granted. Latch 191.

A clerk may be refused by the bishop, if the patron is excommunicate; or if the clerk is not persona idonea, which includes ability of learning, and honesty in conversation, &c. But in a quare impedit brought against the bishop for refusal of a clerk, he must shew the cause of his refusal specially and directly; and because the clerk is of ill life, or a schismatic in general, is not sufficient, without shewing what crimes, or sort of schism he has been guilty of: And the temporal court then will judge whether the cause be just or not; and if the party denies the same, the court may write to the metropolitan to examine the matter, and certify; and tho' the matter be of a spiritual nature, it shall be tried by a jury: For whether the cause be temporal or spiritual, the examination of the bishop concludes not the clerk; he is judge of the ability, but not the ultimate judge: but in case of refusal for insufficiency in learning, it hath been adjudged, that the ordinary is not accountable to any temporal judge; and that in literatura minus sufficiens, &c. is a good plea, without setting forth the kind of learning, or degrees of it. 5 Rep. 58. 2 Inst. 631. 3 Lev. 311. Show. 88. Wood's Inst. 32, 33. That the presentee has a benefice already, is no good cause of refusal, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 355.

If the bishop refuses to admit the clerk presented, he must give notice of his refusal, with the cause of it forthwith; and on such notice the patron must present another clerk, within six months from the avoidance, if he thinks the objection against his first clerk contains sufficient causes of refusal; but if not, he may bring his quare impedit against the bishop. 2 Roll. Abr. 364. And where a church becomes void by deprivation by the Canon law, or resignation, the patron must have notice from the ordinary, to present another person: But if the church becomes void by the act of God, as death of the incumbent; or by creation, or cession, &c. the patron is bound to take notice himself of the avoidance, and to present, &c. Wood's Inst. 154.

If a defendant, or any stranger, presents a clerk pending a quare impedit, and afterwards the plaintiff obtains judgment, he cannot by virtue of that judgment remove him who was thus presented; but he is to bring a scire facias against him to shew cause quare executionem non habet; and then, if it be found that he had no title, he shall be removed.

The way to prevent such a presentation, is to take out a ne admittas to the bishop; and then the writ quare incumbravit lies, by virtue whereof the incumbent shall be removed, and put to his quare impedit, let his title be what it will; but if a ne admittas be not taken out, and another incumbent should come in by good title pendente lite, he shall hold it. Sid. 93. 2 Cro. 93.

A man must set forth a presentation in himself, or those under whom he claims, in a quare impedit; and it ought to be alledged in him who hath the inheritance: And when six months pass hanging the writ, &c. by the disturbance of any one, so that the bishop hath a right to present by lapse, damages shall be recovered by two years value of the church, if the person lose his presentation; and if he recovers his presentation within the six months, damages to half a year's value, &c. 2 Inst. 362. Vaugh. 7, 57. Cro. Eliz. 518. 13 Ed. 1. c. 5.

Where a person gets the fee to his presentation, which is his title, he must in his declaration alledge the presentation to be tempore pacis, or it may be intended to be tempore belli, and then it is no title; but where the bare presentation is not his title, but only in pursuance of a former right, in such case he may alledge it generally: As for instance; where he declares that A.B. was seised of the manor of D. as of fee, to which an advowson was appendant, and that being so seised he presented W. R. and afterwards granted the next avoidance to the plaintiff; this is good, for plaintiff shews a precedent right, and doth not make the presentation itself his title. 1 Mod. 130. 2 Mod. 183. 3 Salk. 280.

If a church becomes void in the life-time of a bishop, he cannot devise the next presentation; but if the bishop, or any incumbent of a church, has the advowson in fee, and then either of them deviseth, that on the next avoidance his executor shall present; this is good, tho' they devise the inheritance to another. Dyer 285.

When a bishop hath a presentation in right of his bishoprick, and dies, his executor, nor heir, shall not have the void turn; but the King, in whose hands are the temporalities, and he hath a right to present on an avoidance after the seizure, on death of the bishop; tho' where an incumbent was seised of the advowson in fee, and died; on a question who should present, either his heir or executor, the advowson not descending to the heir till after the death of his ancestor, and immediately upon his death the church was void, therefore that avoidance was vested in the executor; it was adjudged, that the heir shall present, because the descent to him, and the avoidance to the executor, happened at one and the same instant, and where two titles concur in an instant, the elder title shall be preferred. 3 Lev. 47.

A grant was made of the next presentation to a church, the grantee died, and then the church became void; and it was held, that the executor of the grantee shall have the presentation as a chattel. Glanvil. lib. 6. c. 7. 2 Nels. Abr. 1286. But in quare impedit, defendant pleaded, that the patron granted the next presentation to B. B. who died, and made his executor, who presented the defendant; issue was taken upon non concessit, and the jury found, that the patron granted the presentation to B. B. during his life, and that he died before the church became void; adjudged that this was not an absolute grant of the next presentation, but restrained during the life of the grantee; wherefore it shall not go to the executor, unless the church became void in the life-time of the testator. Cro. Car. 363.

Tenant in tail of an advowson, and his son and heir, joined in a grant of the next presentation, tenant in tail died; this grant was held void as to the son and heir, because he had nothing in the advowson at the time that he joined with his father in the grant. Hob. 45.

The right of presenting to the next avoidance, may be devised by will to any person; and by deed, the next avoidance of a church may be granted, where the church is then full; also whilst a church is void, the next avoidance that shall happen, or the inheritance of the advowson may be granted away, and by deed or grant, the right of presenting will pass: but the void turn itself is not grantable by any common person, tho' it may be granted by the King, and be good; for it is a meer spiritual thing annexed to the person of the patron, and during the time of the vacation it is a thing in right and in action, the fruit and execution of the advowson, not the advowson itself. 2 Cro. 371. Clergym. Law 154.

As a void turn is not grantable; so if two have a grant made to them of a next avoidance, and after the church is void, one release all his right and title which he had in the advowson and presentation to his companion, who presents to the church, this presentation is void; because after the avoidance, the interest was attached in both, and both had a power to present, which could no more be released by one to the other, than it could be granted in that manner, being but a right, and not a chattel in possession: But a release in this case may be good, if it be made before the church is void; and the party to whom made may present, &c. 1 And. 223. 3 Cro. 173. Moor 467.

If a presentation itself bears date whilst the church is full of another clerk, it is void: And where two or more have a title to present by turns, one of them presents, his clerk is admitted, instituted and inducted, and afterwards deprived, he shall not present again, but that presentation shall serve his turn: tho' where the admission and institution of his clerk is void, there the turn shall not be served; as if after induction he neglects to read the thirty-nine articles, &c. his institution is void by the Stat. 13 Eliz. and the patron may present again. F. N. B. 33. 5 Rep. 102.

The right of presenting to a church, may pass from one seised of the same by the patron's acknowledging of a statute, &c. which being extended, if the church becomes void, during the conusee's estate, the conusee may present. Owen 49.

Every church living is to be given and received by presentation, collation, &c. And wherever a writ of quare impedit, or right of advowson will lie for any man on a disturbance; there he hath a right to the presentation for that time at least. 1 Shep. Abr. 240, 241.

Where the patron of a church hath an estate in the manor or other thing to which it is appendant, or has it in gross for life or years only; if the church becomes void during his estate, he may present to it: Or he may grant the next avoidance to another for a term; and this will be good, if it happen in the time. But if one be disseised of his manor, and the disseisor die seised, and after the church become void; in this case the disseisor cannot present till he hath recontinued the manor, but before the dying seised he might do it. Co. Litt. 120. 8 Rep. 145. Dyer 29. Plowd. 500.

A presentation by a person who had not right, at Common law, put the rightful patron out of possession, and obliged him to bring the writ of right of advowson, &c. And presentment by usurpation, and admission upon it, gains the fee to the presenter, till he be evicted by action. 6 Rep. 30. 1 And. 300. Yel. 91.

One may not make a deputy to present for him: And yet a presentation by a proctor is said to be good, as if done by the party himself. F. N. B. 35. If a man present in time of war, the law hath such regard to the original act, viz. the presentation, that all which follows thereon is void. 6 Ed. 3, 41. 2 Rep. 93.

Where a common person is patron, he may present by parol; as well as by writing to the bishop. Co. Litt. 120. A presentation doth not carry with it the formality of a deed; but is in the nature of a letter missive, by which the clerk is offered to the bishop; and it passeth no interest, as a grant doth, being no more than a recommendation of a clerk to the ordinary to be admitted. Young Clergym. Lawyer 17, 18. But where a plaintiff declared upon a grant of the next presentation, and on oyer of the deed it appeared to be only a letter written by the patron to the father of the plaintiff, that he had given his son the next presentation; adjudged, that it would not pass by such letter, without a formal deed. Owen 47.

Where the crown has a right to present on promoting the incumbent to a bishoprick, it is not necessary to be done during the life of the promotee. 2 Strange 841. See Black. Com. 1 V. 389. 2 V. 23. As to Presentative Advowsons, see ib. 2 V. 22.

A Grant of the next Presentation to a Church.

TO all to whom these presents shall come, A. B. of, &c. the true and undoubted patron of the rectory or parish church of D. in the county and diocese of, &c. send greeting. Know ye, that the said A. B. for divers good causes and considerations him thereunto moving, hath given, granted and confirmed, and by these presents, doth for him and his heirs, give, grant and confirm unto C. D. of, &c. his executors, administrators and assigns, the first and next advowson, presentation, free disposition and right of patronage, of and to the parsonage, rectory, or parish church of D. aforesaid, with all its appurtenances, with full power and authority to and for the said C. D. his executors, administrators and assigns, to present a learned and fit person to the said parsonage, rectory, or parish church, with all its rights and appurtenances, whenever the same shall first and next happen to become void, by the death, resignation, cession, or deprivation of E. F. the present incumbent, or otherwise howsoever; and to do and perform all and every other act and acts, thing and things whatsoever, in order to the same, in as full and ample manner, to all intents and purposes, as the said A. B. or his heirs might, or hereafter could have done, if this present grant had not been made. In witness, &c.

Right of presentation may be forfeited in several cases: As by attainder of the patron, or by outlawry, and then the King shall present; and if the outlawry be reversed, where the advowson is forfeited by the outlawry, and the church becomes void after, the presentation is vested in the crown; but if at the time of the outlawry the church was void, then the presentation is forfeited as a chattel, and on reversing the same, the party shall be restored to it. By appropriation without licence from the crown, right of presentation may be forfeited; tho' the inheritance in this case is not forfeited, only the King shall have the presentation in nature of a distress, till the party hath paid a fine for his contempt. By alienation in fee of the advowson, by a grantee for life of the next avoidance, a presentation is forfeited; and after such alienation the grantor may present, but then he must enter for the forfeiture of the grantee in the life-time of the incumbent, to determine his estate before the presentation vests in him on the incumbent's death. And by simony it may be likewise forfeited and lost, where any person for money, &c. present to a benefice. Moor 269. Plowd. 299. 2 Roll. Abr. 352. Stat. 31 Eliz. See Advowson, Patron, Simony, &c.

Presentee, The clerk presented to a church by the patron. In our statutes there is mention of the King's presentee, that is, he whom the King presents to a benefice. 13 R. 2. c. 1.

Presentment, Is a mere denunciation of jurors, or some officers, &c. (without any information) of an offence inquirable in the court whereto it is presented. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 4. c. 5. Or presentment is an information made by the jury in a court, before a judge who hath authority to punish an offence: It is that which a grand jury finds and presents to the court, without any bill or indictment delivered; and it is afterwards reduced into the form of an indictment. 2 Inst. 739.

The presentment is drawn up in English by the jury, in a short note, for instructions to draw the indictment by; and differs from an indictment, in that an indictment is drawn up at large, and brought ingrossed to the grand jury to find. 2 Lill. Abr. 353.

There are presentments of justices of peace in their sessions, of offences against statutes, in order to their punishment in superior courts; and presentments taken before commissioners of sewers, &c. But a presentment of commissioners of sewers was quashed, because it did not appear in the presentment by what authority the commissioners did sit who took the presentment, or that any of them were of the quorum, as directed by statute. Hill. 1649. And presentments are made in courts leet and courts baron, before stewards; and in the latter of surrenders, grants, &c. Also by constables, churchwardens, surveyors of the highways, &c. of things belonging to their offices. See Black. Com. 2 V. 369. 4 V. 298.

President, (Præses) Is used for the King's lieutenant in any province, as President of Wales, &c.

President of the Council, Relates to the function of the person, and is the fourth great officer of state: He is as ancient as the reign of King John; and hath sometimes been called Principalis Consiliarius, and other times Capitalis Consiliarius.

The office of President of the Council was ever granted by letters patent under the Great Seal durante bene placito; and and this officer is to attend on the King, to propose business at the council table, and report to his Majesty the transactions there: Also he may associate the Lord Chancellor, Treasurer and Privy Seal, at naming of sheriffs; and all other acts limited by any statute, to be done by them. 21 H. 8. c. 20. See Black. Com. 1 V. 230.

Press, (Liberty of the) See Black. Com. 4 V. 151.

Pressing, for sea-service. In time of war, the King has power to impress seamen; tho' he ought not to imprison them. Comber. 340. But watermen withdrawing themselves during the time of pressing, shall be liable to imprisonment, &c. Stat. 2 & 3 P. & M.

Where a man receives press money to serve the King, and is delivered over to a captain; (not common pressmasters) if he runs away without licence, it is felony, having benefit of clergy, by the 7 Hen. 7. cap. 1. Hale's Hist. P. C. 678.

Every person who serves in any merchant ship belonging to the subjects of Great Britain, being fifty-five years of age, or under eighteen; and also every foreigner in such ships are privileged from being pressed into his Majesty's service; and all others of any age, for the space of two years after their first going to sea; but apprentices are thus exempted three years. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 17. See Navy.

It is not improper to observe, that the power of impressing men for the sea service by the King's commission, has been a matter of dispute, and submitted to, with great reluctance, tho' (as observed by Blackstone 1 V. 418.) it hath been very clearly and learnedly shewn, by Sir Michael Foster, that the practice of impressing and granting powers to the admiralty, for that purpose, is of very ancient date, and hath been uniformly continued by a regular series of precedents to the present time: whence he concludes it to be part of the Common law. See Foster's Reports, fo. 154. Broadfoot's case.

Pressing to Death. See Mute, and Black. Com. 4 V. 323.

Press, Is used for a duty in money, to be paid by the sheriff on his account, in the Exchequer, or for money left, or remaining in his hands. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 4.

Præstation-money, (Præstatio, a paying or performing) Is a sum of money paid by archdeacons yearly to their bishop pro exteriore jurisdictione—Et sint quieti a præstatione muragii. Cart. H. 7. Burgens. Mount-Gomer. Præstatio was also antiently used for purveyance. See Philip's book on that subject, pag. 222. And see Spiritualties.

Press-money, Is so called from the French word press, that is, promptus expeditus, for that it binds those who receive it, to be ready at all times appointed, being meant commonly of soldiers. 18 H. 6. 19. 7 H. 7. 1. 3 H. 8. 5. and 2 Ed. 6. 2.

Presumption, (Præsumptio) Is a supposition, opinion or belief previously formed; and is of three sorts; 1. Violent, which is many times a full proof; as if one be killed in a house, and a man is seen to come out of the house with a bloody sword, and no other person was at that time in the house; this, tho' but presumption, is as a proof. 2. Probable, which hath but a small effect. 3. Levius, seu temeraria, which is of no prevalence at all: So in case of a charter of feoffment, if all the witnesses to the deed be dead; the violent presumption, which stands for a proof, is continual and quiet possession. Co. on Lit. lib. 1. c. 1. sect. 1. Præsumptio stat in dubio, it is doubted of, yet accounted veritatis comes, quatenus in contrarium nulla est probatio, ut regula se habet, stabitur præsumptio donec probetur in contrarium. Cowell.

If defendant pleads payment to a bond, and it appears that the debt is long standing by the bond, and hath not been demanded, nor interest paid for many years, it shall be presumed that the money is paid, tho' the plaintiff hath the bond in his custody: Also if a rent be behind and in arrear for twenty years, and the landlord gives a receipt for the last year that is due, all the rest is presumed to be paid, &c. 1 Inst. 6, 373. Wood's Inst. 599.

Where many houses are let by one lease, the court will presume that the lessee is in possession of them all, if he be in possession of any one of them, and the contrary doth not appear to the court: So in other cases, tho' presumption is what may be doubted of, yet it shall be accounted truth, if the contrary be not proved. 2 Lill. Abr. 354. But no presumptions ought to be admitted against the presumptions of law, and wrong shall never be presumed. 1 Inst. 232, 273.

If the eldest son be beyond sea at the death of the ancestor, and the youngest enters into the land, he is not accounted in law a disseisor; because the law presumes, that he preserves the possession for his brother; but if on his brother's return he keeps him out of possession, then the law looks on him as a disseisor. Lat. 68.

Where the law intrusts persons with the execution of a power, the court ought to give credit to them in the execution of that power; tho' if they make a false return whereby the party and justice are abused, they may be punished. 12 Mod. 382. See Black. Com. 3 V. 371.

Presumptio, Was antiently taken for intrusion, or the unlawful seizing of any thing. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 11.

Presumptive Evidence of Felony, Should be admitted cautiously; for the law holds, that it is better that ten guilty persons escape, than that one innocent suffer. And Sir Matthew Hale in particular lays down two rules, most prudent and necessary to be observed:

1. Never to convict a man for stealing the goods of a person unknown, merely because he will give no account how he came by them, unless an actual felony be proved of such goods: And

2. Never to convict any person of murder or manslaughter, till at least the body be found dead; on account of two instances he mentions, where persons were executed for the murder of others, who were then alive, but missing. 2 Hal. P. C. 290.

Presumptive Heirs, Are such, who, if the ancestor should die immediately, would in the present circumstance of things be his heirs; but whose right of inheritance may be defeated by the contingency of some nearer heir being born: As a brother, or nephew, whose presumptive succession may be destroyed by the birth of a child; or a daughter, whose present hopes may be hereafter cut off by the birth of a son. Nay, even if the estate hath descended, by the death of the owner, to such brother, or nephew, or daughter; in the former case the estate shall be devested and taken away by the birth of a posthumous child; and, in the latter, it shall also be totally devested by the birth of a posthumous son. Black. Com. 2 V. 208.

Pretended Titles. No one shall sell or purchase any pretended right or title to land, unless the vendor hath received the profits thereof for one whole year before such grant, or hath been in actual possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder; on pain that both purchaser and vendor shall each forfeit the value of such land to the King and the prosecutor. This offence relates chiefly to the commencement of civil suits. 32 Hen. 8. c. 9. Black. Com. 4 V. 135.

Pretended Right (Jus Prætesum) Is where one is in possession of land, and another who is out of possession claims and sues for it; here the pretended right or title is said to be in him who so claims and sues for the same. See Mod. Caf. 302.

Pretium Sepulchri, Is applied to those goods which accrue to the church when a corpse is buried. Irish Can. lib. 19. c. 6.

Price. Things are to be sold at reasonable prices: And, justices in corporations, &c. may set the price of victuals and other things, by statute 23 Ed. 3. c. 6. 3 H. 8. c. 8. See Black. Com. 2 V. 446, 454.

Prime-gavel, (from prim. the last syllable of lamprim, and gavel, a rent or tribute) In the manor of Rodeley in the county of Glocester is a rent paid to the lord, by certain tenants, in duty and acknowledgment to him for the privilege of fishing for lamprays or lamprids in the river Severn. Tayl. Hist. Gavelk. 112.

Priests, In general signification, are any ministers of a church; but in our law, this word is particularly used for ministers of the church of Rome. Priests saying mass forfeit 200 marks, by Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1. And persons apprehending a Romish priest, saying mass, have 100*l.* from the sheriff of the county, to be paid within four months after conviction of the offence, &c. And such priests, priests, &c. keeping schools, are liable to perpetual imprisonment. 11 & 12 H. 3. c. 4. See Jesuits, Papists, Recusants, Rome, and Black. Com. 1 V. 388.

Primage, Is a duty at the water-side, due to the master and mariners of a ship; to the master for the use of his cables and ropes, to discharge the goods of the merchant; and to the mariners for loading and unloading in any port or haven; it is usually about 12 d. per tun, or six-pence per pack or bale, according to custom. Merch. Dict. See 32 H. 8. c. 14.

Primer Fine, On suing out the writ or præcipe, called a writ of covenant, there is due to the King, by ancient prerogative, a primer fine, or a noble for every five marks of land sued for; that is, one tenth of the annual value. Black. Com. 2 V. 350.

Primicerius, The first of any degree of men; sometimes it signifies the nobility. Primicerios totius Angliæ were the nobility of England. Mon. 1 tom. p. 838.

Primer seisin, (Prima seisin) The first possession, seisin was heretofore used as a branch of the King's prerogative, whereby he had the first possession, that is, the entire profits for a year of all the lands and tenements, whereof his tenant (who held of him in capite) died seised in his demesne as of fee, his heir being then at full age, until he do homage, or if under, until he were of age. Staundf. Prærog. cap. 3. and Brañton, lib. 4. tract. 3. c. 1. But all the charges arising by primer seisin are taken away by 12 Car. 2. c. 24. See Black. Com. 2 V. 66, 88. 4 V. 411.

Primer Serjeant, Is the King's first Serjeant at Law.

Primo beneficio, The first benefice in the King's gift, &c. See Beneficio.

Primogeniture, (Primogenitura) The title of an elder brother in right of his birth: The reason of which Co. upon Lit. says, is, Qui prior est tempore, potior est jure; affirming moreover, That in King Alfred's time, knights fees descended to the eldest son; because by the division of such fees between males, the defence of the realm might be weakened. And Doderidge in his treatise of nobility saith, (pag. 119.) it was anciently ordained, That all knights fees should come unto the eldest son by succession of heritage, whereby he succeeding his ancestors in the whole inheritance, might be the better enabled to maintain the wars against the King's enemies, or his lords: And that the socage should be partible among the male children, to enable them to increase into many families, for the better furtherance in, and increase of husbandry. Cowell. and Leg. Alfred Dodd. Treat. Nobil. 119. See Black. Com. 1 V. 194. 2 V. 214. 4 V. 414.

Prince, (Princeps) Is sometimes taken at large for the King himself; but more properly for the King's eldest son, who is called Prince of Wales.

It is said by some writers, that the King's eldest son is Prince of Wales by nativity; but others say, that he is born Duke of Cornwall, and afterwards created Prince of Wales, tho' from the day of his birth he is stiled Prince of Wales, a title originally given by Edward 1. And all his titles are, Prince of Wales, Duke of Cornwall, and Earl of Chester.

Before Edw. 2. who was the first Prince of Wales, and born at Carnarvan in that principality, (his mother being sent there big with child by Edward 1. to appease the tumultuous spirit of the Welch) the eldest son of the King was called Lord Prince; but Prince was a name of dignity long before that time in England. Staundf. Prærog. cap. 22. 75. See 27 H. 8. c. 26. and 28 H. 8. 3. And Stowe's Annals, p. 303. But Prince was a name of dignity long before that time in England; for in a charter of King Offa, after the bishops had subscribed their names, we read, Brordanus Patritius, Binnanus princeps; and afterwards the dukes subscribed their names. And in a charter of King Edgar in Mon. Ang. tom. 3. pag. 302. Ego Edgarus Rex rogatus ab episcopo meo Deorivulfe, & principe meo Alfredo, &c. And in Matt. Paris, pag. 155. Ego Hallden princeps Regis pro viribus assensum præbeo, & ego Turketillus dux concedo.

As Duke of Cornwall, and likewise Earl of Chester, the Prince of Wales is to appoint the sheriffs, and other officers in those counties, by 1 Geo. 2. c. 5. The Prince of Wales, besides the principality of Wales, dutchy of Cornwall, &c. has also a revenue, settled on him by parliament. See the Table to the Statutes. See also Black. Com. 1 V. 225. 4 V. 81.

Principal, (Principalium) Is variously used in our law; as an heir loom, &c.

The word principal, was also sometimes used for a mortuary, or corse-present — Item lego equum meum vocatum le Bay-Gelding, ut offeratur ante corpus meum in die sepulture meæ, nomine Principalii. Ult. volun. Johannis Murcfield. 9 Hen. 5.

In Urchensfield, in the county of Hereford, certain principals, as the best beast, the best bed, the best table, &c. pass to the eldest child, and are not liable to partition. Also the chief person in some of the inns of Chancery is called principal of the house. Cowell.

Principal and accessory. The principal is the person who actually commits a crime; and the accessory he who is assisting in the doing thereof. 2 Lill. Abr. 355. And if one wilfully hold a man in his arms, whilst another kills him, he is a principal. 9 Rep. 67.

A man is present, and moves a person to kill another, who doth so; by this he is as much a principal as he who killeth the person: And all those who come in company in any place or assembly, where any murder, robbery, or felony is committed, if they come there for that cause, are principals, altho' they do nothing. Staundf. P. C. cap. 45. Fitz. Coron. 314, 350. Poult. 138. But if one happen to be present when another is killed, or a felony done, and he came not in company of the felons, nor is of their confederacy; he will not be a principal or accessory. Fitz. Coron. 314, 395.

No man can regularly be a principal in felony, without being present, unless it be in case of wilful poisoning, wherein if the persons intended or any others take the poison in the absence of him who lays it, he is a principal. Hale's Hist. P. C. 615.

In the highest offences, as in treasons, &c. all are principals; so in the lowest, such as riots, forcible entries, and other trespasses, there are no accessories. 1 Inst. 71.

By the Common law, if a principal be pardoned before judgment, or hath his clergy, the accessory may not be tried; but if it be after attainder, the accessory shall be arraigned: And where the principal dies before attained, or is acquitted by verdict, &c. the accessory shall be discharged: Also if the principal appears not, tho' the accessory may be put to answer, he shall not be tried till the principal is attained, &c. 4 Rep. 43 H. P. 47. Dalt. 339. But this is altered by stat. 1 Ann. cap. 9.

Whatever will make a man an accessory before in felony, will make him a principal in high treason and trespass; as battery, riot, forcible entry, and even in forgery and petit larceny. Therefore, wherever a man commands another to commit a trespass, who afterwards commits it in pursuance of such command, he seems by necessary consequence to be as guilty of it, as if he had done it himself; from whence it follows, that being in judgment of law a principal offender, he may be tried and found guilty, before any trial of the person who actually did the fact. 2 Haw. P. C. 310.

It seems agreed, that whoever agrees to a trespass on lands or goods done to his use, thereby becomes a principal in it; but that no one can become a principal in trespass on the person of a man by any such agreement: also it seems agreed, that no one shall be adjudged a principal in any common trespass, or inferior crime of the like nature, for barely receiving, comforting and concealing the offender, tho' he knew him to have been guilty, and that there is a warrant out against him, which by reason of such concealment cannot be executed. And if he cannot be punished as a principal, it is certain that he cannot be punished as an accessory; because in such offences, all who are punished as partakers of the guilt of him who did the fact, must be punished as principals in it, or not at all. Yet if a man knowing there is a warrant against such offender; advise him to absent himself, perhaps he may be indictable for a contempt of the law in hindering the due course of justice. 2 Haw. P. C. 311. See Accessory, and 2 Haw. P. C. 311—326. and Black. Com. 4 V. 34.

Principal challenge. See Black. Com. 3 V. 363.

Principal money, On mortgages, &c. Vide Scrivenor and Usury.

Printing. See the Table to the Statutes, and vide Libel.

Prior, Was first in dignity next to the Abbot, or the chief of a convent, &c. And there was a Lord Prior of St. John's of Jerusalem. 26 H. 8. cap. 2. See Black. Com. 1 V. 155.

Priors aliens, (priores alieni) Were certain religious men, born in France and Normandy, governors of religious houses erected for outlandish men here in England; but were suppressed by Henry 5. and afterwards their livings were given to other monasteries and houses of learning, and especially towards the erecting of the King's colleges, at Cambridge and Eaton. 2 Inft. 584. See Stow's Annals, pag. 582. and 1 Hen. 5. c. 7.

Priority, (Prioritas) Is an antiquity of tenure, in comparison of another less ancient. Old Nat. Br. 94. So, to hold by posteriority, is used in Staundf. Præreg. cap. 2. 11. And Crompton in his Jurisd. fol. 117. useth this word in the same signification. The lord of the priority shall have the custody of the body, &c. and fol. 120. If the tenant hold by priority of one, and by posteriority of another, &c. To which effect, see also F. N. B. 142.

Priority of debts and suits. A prior suit depending may be pleaded in abatement of a subsequent action or prosecution.

A prior mortgage ought to be first paid off; and debts first due should be first satisfied; for as the first creditor advances his money before his debt is incumbered, it is but reasonable he should be paid his debt before the discharge of the subsequent incumbrances: but debts first due must likewise be first prosecuted; otherwise in some cases priority will not be allowed. Comp. Attorn. 120.

There is no priority of time, in judgments; for the judgment first executed shall be first paid.

Wherever any suit on a penal statute may be said to be actually depending, it may be pleaded in abatement of a subsequent prosecution, being expressly averred to be for the same offence. Neither will it be any exception to such a plea, that the offence in the subsequent prosecution is laid on a day different from that in the former. Neither doth a mistake in such a plea of the very day, whereon the suit pleaded as prior was commenced, seem to be material on the issue of nil in record, if it appear in truth to have been commenced before the other, and for the same matter.

And if two informations be exhibited on the very same day, it seems that they may mutually abate one another, because there is no priority to attach the right of the suit in one informer, more than in the other. Alto it seems, that an information or bill the same day that they are filed, may be so far said to be depending before any process sued on them, that they may be pleaded in abatement of any other suit on the same statute. And from the same reason it seems also, that a writ of debt may be so pleaded in abatement of any other suit on the same statute. And from the same reason it seems also, that a writ of debt may be so pleaded after it is returned; because then it seems to be agreed, that it may be properly said to be depending; and whether it may not also be so pleaded before it be returned, seems questionable; because, according to some opinions, a writ may be said to be depending as soon as purchased. 2 Hawk. P. C. 275.

Those points of law, where Hawkins seems to doubt, are now, in general, pretty clearly settled, according to what seemed to be his opinion. See Black. Com. 2 V. 511.

Prisage, (Prisagium) Is that share which belongs to the King, or Admiral, out of such merchandises as are taken at sea, by way of lawful prize, which is usually a tenth part.—Prisagium est jus prisas capiendi, &c. Stat. 31 Eliz. c. 5.

And prisage of wines is an ancient duty or custom on wines, payable at certain ports, except London, Southampton, &c. It is where the King claims out of every ship or vessel laden with wines, containing twenty tons or more, two tons of wine, the one before, the other behind the mast, at his price, which is twenty shillings for each ton; but this varies according to the custom of places; and at Boston every bark laden with ten tons of wine or above, pays prisage: This word is almost out of use, being now called builrage, because the King's chief butler receives it. 1 Hen. 8. cap. 5. 4 Inft. 20. Calib:rp's Rep. 20. See Black. Com. 1 V. 314.

Prize, or Prize, (Captio, Præda, from the Fr. Prendre) Signifies a booty taken from an enemy in time of war, &c.

If ships are laden with contraband goods, both ship and goods may be taken as prize; and instruments and provisions of armature for sea or land, bound for an enemy from a neutral nation, &c. shall be taken as a prize; so money, &c. in time of necessity. Lex Mercat. 178.

Whether a ship be prize or not, shall be tried in the Admiralty, and no prohibition be granted: And if a suit be commenced between the captor of a prize and a claimant, and a decree is obtained either for, or against the claimer; on giving security, such sentence or decree shall be put in execution, notwithstanding any appeal. 1 Sid. 320. 2 Keb. 158. See Privatcers, and Table to the Statutes.

Priso, Is used for a prisoner taken in war. Hoveden. pag. 541.

Prison, (Prisona) Is a place of confinement for the safe custody of persons, in order to their answering any action, civil or criminal: And it has been observed, that the Salva custodia must be only custodia; for carcer ad homines custodiendos, non ad puniendos dari debet. Co. Litt. 1b. 3. cap. 7.

Any place where a man is restrained of his liberty, is a prison: And when any one is arrested on process, he is to be committed to prison, or be bound in recognisance with sureties, or give bail, according to the nature of the case, to appear at a day in court, and answer what is alleged against him. Dalt. 421.

If one is brought before a justice of peace for suspicion of felony, where a felony has been committed, the justice may send him to prison, or bail him; and if no felony be done, he hath power to discharge him. H. P. C. 98. But when a person is committed to prison for treason, or felony, he cannot regularly be discharged from prison, till indicted, and acquitted, &c. Tho' one taken and committed to prison in a civil cause, may be released by the plaintiff in the suit. 3 Inft. 209. H. P. C. 94. But see Habeas Corpus, &c. Vide Gaul.

Prison-breaking, Is not only where a felon is formally committed to gaol by mittimus; but if he be put in the stocks, or kept in the constable's house, &c. and he break prison, it is felony. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 610. And if A. arrest B. for suspicion, and carry him to the common gaol, and there deliver him; if he breaks prison, and be indicted on it, there must be an averment in the indictment, that there was a felony done, and that A. having probable cause did suspect B. and arrested and committed him, and that he broke the prison, all which must be proved on the evidence: But where a felon is taken by capias, and committed, and break prison, there needs no such averment, &c. because all appears by matter of record. 2 Inft. 590. Hale's Hist. P. C. 610.

The felony of breach of prison is within clergy, tho' the offence for which the party was committed be excluded clergy. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 612. See Escape, and Black. Com. 4 V. 130.

Prisoner, (Prisonarius, Fr. Prisonnier) Signifies one confined in prison, on an action, or commandment: And a man may be a prisoner on matter of record, or of fact; a prisoner on matter of record, is he who being present in court, is by the court committed to prison; and the other is on an arrest, by the sheriff, &c. Staundf. P. C. 34. 35.

A prisoner for the King may not be charged in an action at the suit of the subject, without leave of the court. 1 Lev. 125, 146.

The court of King's Bench hath power to send for a prisoner out of the Marshalsea court, by rule of court, and need not issue an habeas corpus, as that prison belongs to this court; but they cannot send for a prisoner out of any other prison, without writ of habeas corpus. Mich. 1650. Every

Every judge of B. R. may remit prisoners, with their indictments, to the places where the offences wherewith they are charged were committed; and a prisoner for debt may be removed from the Fleet to the King's Bench, and thence to the Marshalsea, on something charged against him in the habeas corpus or return, or on bringing him into court. Dyer 275. 2 Lill. Abr. 357.

Prisoners in the King's Bench and Fleet prisons, on mesne process, &c. are to be actually confined within the prisons, or rules of the same, till discharged; and the profits of the marshal's and warden's places are liable to sequestration for payment of debt on judgment, on an escape, besides the common remedy.

Judgment may be signed against a prisoner, in the Fleet, in a personal action, entering a declaration, and leaving a copy thereof with the prisoner, &c. after a rule to plead, to be out at eight days, &c. Prisoners in the King's Bench are not to pay above 2 s. 6 d. per week, chamber-rent, on pain of keepers taking more, to forfeit 20 l. Stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 7. And prisoners going at large, may be taken up, on an escape warrant. 1 Ann. cap. 6. But prisoners may go out of the rules, on a day-rule of court, about their business, so as they do not go into the country, or to plays, diversions, &c. 2 Lill. 366.

A person in execution in the King's Bench prison, was put in irons by the marshal; and the court ordered the marshal to keep his prisoner according to law: tho' they said he might justify putting him in irons, if he feared an escape, or if the prisoner was unruly. Farrest. 52. In the second year of Geo. 2. Sir William Rich being laid in irons in the Fleet prison, had his irons taken off by order of the House of Commons; who thereupon began an inquiry into the conduct of gaolers to prisoners, &c.

Prisoners discharged. A variety of acts have been made, on liberal principles, for relief of insolvent debtors. 'Tis immaterial to set them forth, as they in general vary in some particulars; and the last is too prolix, to insert at large, and yet too particular, to admit of a proper abridgment. Vide the Stat. 9 Geo. 3. c. 26.

Privat. See Black. Com. 4 P. 333.

Privateers, Are a kind of private men of war, the persons concerned wherein administer at their own costs a part of a war, by fitting out these ships of force, and providing them with all military stores; and they have, instead of pay, leave to keep what they take from the enemy, allowing the Admiral his share, &c.

Privateers may not attempt any thing against the laws of nations; as to assault an enemy in a port or haven, under the protection of any prince or republick, whether he be friend, ally, or neuter; for the peace of such places must be inviolably kept; therefore by a treaty made by King William and the States of Holland, before a commission shall be granted to any privateer, the commander is to give security, if the ship be not above 150 tons, in 1500 l. and if the ship exceeds that burden, in 3000 l. that they will make satisfaction for all damages which they shall commit in their courses at sea, contrary to the treaties with that state; on pain of forfeiting their commissions, and the ship is made liable. Lex Mercat. or Mercb. Compan. 177, 178.

Besides these private commissions, there are special commissions for privateers, granted to commanders of ships, &c. who take pay, who are under a marine discipline; and if they do not obey their orders, may be punished with death: And the wars in latter ages, have given occasion to princes to issue these commissions, to annoy the enemies in their commerce, and hinder such supplies as might strengthen them, or lengthen out the war; and likewise to prevent the separation of ships of greater force from their fleets or squadrons. Ibid.

Ships taken by privateers, were to be divided into five parts; four parts whereof to go to the persons interested in the privateer, and the fifth to his Majesty: And as a farther encouragement, privateers, &c. destroying any French man of war, or privateer, shall receive for every piece of ordnance in the ship so taken 10 l. reward, &c. 4 & 5 W. & M.

By a particular statute lately made, the Lord Admiral, or Commissioners of the Admiralty, may grant commissions to commanders of privateers, for taking ships, &c.

which being adjudged prize, and the tenth part paid to the Admiral, &c. wholly belong to the owners of the privateers and the captors, in proportions agreed on between themselves; and the officers and seamen of ships of war, are to have the sole property of all ships they take, to be divided as his Majesty shall order by proclamation: Also if any ships belonging to the English be taken by the enemy, and afterwards retaken by any of our men of war or privateers, they are to be restored to the owners, on paying an eighth part of the value, in lieu of salvage, after having been in the enemy's possession 24 hours; and if above that time, paying further to a moiety, &c. And ships of war or privateers, taking any ship of war or privateer of the enemy, the officers and seamen shall be paid by the treasurer of the navy 5 l. for every man who was on board such ship at the beginning of the engagement. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 4. See 29 Geo. 2. c. 34. for what duties shall be paid on prize goods. See Stat. 30 Geo. 2. c. 18.

Privation, (Privatio) A taking away or withdrawing; most commonly applied to a bishop or rector, when by death, or other act they are deprived of their preferments; it seems to be an abbreviation of the word deprivation. Co. Litt. 329.

Privement enffent, Is where a woman is with child by her husband; but not quick with child. Wood's Inst. 662.

Privies, (From the Fr. Privee, i. e. Familiaris) Are those who are partakers, or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to another: As every heir in tail is privy to recover the land entailed, &c. Old Nat. Br. 117. There are five several kinds of privies, viz. Privies of blood, such as the heir to the ancestor; privies in representation, as executors or administrators to the deceased; privies in estate, between donor and donee, lessor and lessee, &c. Privies in respect of contract; and privies on account of estate and contract together. 3 Rep. 23, 123. 4 Rep. 123. Latch. 260.

If a fine be levied, the heirs of him who levied it, are termed privies. If a lessor grants his reversion, the grantee and lessee are privies in estate: And privies in contract extend only to the persons of the lessor and lessee; and where the lessee assigns all his interest, here the lessor and lessee remain privy in contract, but not in estate, which is removed by the assignment. 3 Rep. 23.

Privies in respect of estate and contract appears, where the lessee assigns his interest, but the contract between the lessor and lessee as to action of debt continues, the lessor not having accepted of the assignee. 3 Lev. 295. But where there are privies in contract, and the privy is altered by assignment of an executor, &c. before any rent due, and after the privy of estate by the assignment of the executor's assignee, nothing remains whereby to maintain any action. Latch. 260.

There are likewise privies in deed, or in law; where the deed makes the relation; or the law implies it, in case of escheats to the lord, &c. And only parties and privies shall take advantage of conditions of entry on lands, &c. 1 Inst. 516. See Black. Com. 2 V. 355. and Privy and Privy.

Privilege, (Privilegium,) Is defined by Cicero in his oration pro domo sua, to be lex privata homini irrogata. It is, says another, Jus singulare, whereby a private man, or a particular corporation is exempted from the rigor of the Common law. It is sometimes used in law for a place which hath some special immunity. Kitchin, 118.

Privilege is either personal or real: A personal privilege is, that which is granted to any person, either against or beyond the course of the Common law: As for example, A member of parliament may not be arrested, nor any of his servants, during the sitting of parliament; nor for a certain time before and after. A privilege real is that which is granted to a place, as to the universities, that none of either may be called to Westminster Hall, on any contract made within their own precincts, or prosecuted in other courts: And one belonging to the court of Chancery cannot be sued in any other court, certain cases excepted; and if he be, he may remove it by writ of privilege, grounded on the statute 18 E. 3. Conwell.

Privilege is an exemption from some duty, burthen or attendance, to which certain persons are intitled, from a supposition of law, that the stations they fill, or the offices they are engaged in, are such as require all their care; that therefore without this indulgence it would be impracticable to execute such offices to that advantage which the publick good requires. 4 New Abr. 215.

1. Of privilege in suits allowed officers and attendants in the courts of justice.

2. Of the privilege of peers and members of parliament.

3. Of the proceedings in courts by and against persons intitled to privilege of parliament.

1. Of privilege in suits allowed officers and attendants in the courts of justice.

The officers, ministers and clerks of the courts in Westminster-Hall are allowed particular privileges in respect of their necessary attendance on those courts; they are regularly to sue and be sued in the courts they respectively belong to, and cannot, (except in certain cases,) be impleaded elsewhere; which privilege arises from a supposition of law, that the business of the court or their clients causes would suffer by their being drawn into another than that in which their personal attendance is required. 2 Inst. 551. 4 Inst. 71. Vaugb. 154. Dyer 377. a. pl. 30.

Anderson Ch. J. of C. B. brought trespass by bill for breaking his house in the city of Worcester, against a citizen of the city; the mayor and commonalty came and shewed a charter granted by Edward VI. and demanded continuance of pleas; but it was refused, because the privilege of that court, of which the plaintiff was a chief member, is more ancient than the patent; for the justices clerks and attorneys ought to be there attending their business, and shall not be impleaded or compelled to implead others elsewhere; and this privilege was given the court on the original erection of it. 3 Leon. 149.

An attorney so long as he remains on record, shall have his privilege; therefore where it was moved, that J. S. should put in special bail, being an attorney at large, and having discontinued his practice, the court said, that attorneys at large have the same privilege with the clerks of the courts, and are to appear de die in diem; and they were not satisfied that he had discontinued his practice. Bro. tit. Attorney 67. Tit. Bill 24. 1 Vent. 1.

But where J. S. was arrested in B. R. and after the arrest he procured himself to be made an attorney of C. B. and prayed his privilege, it was disallowed, because it accrued pendente lite. 2 Roll. Rep. 115.

In debt against the warden of the Fleet, by bill of privilege, he refused to appear; the court doubted how they could compel him, as they could not forejudge him the court, he having an inbriance in his office; but it being surmised that he made a lease of his office, it was held, that he should not have his privilege, for that the lessee, and not he, was the officer during the lease. 2 Leon. 173.

So if the marshal of B. R. grants his place for life; the grantor has no privilege during that time. 1 Vent. 65.

A clerk of B. R. was sued in an inferior court for a debt under five pounds, and had a writ of privilege allowed; for the stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 23. never intended to take away the privilege of attorneys. Palm. 403.

In the court of Exchequer there are three sorts of privilege: 1st, As debtor. 2dly, As accountant. 3dly, As officer. Hard. 365.

J. S. was sued in London, which he removed into B. R. and afterwards prayed his privilege of the court of Exchequer; and on the puisne Baron's coming into court, and bringing the red book of the Exchequer, which shewed that he was an escheator, and so an accountant to the King, the privilege was allowed. Noy 40.

If one holds of the Queen as of her manor, he shall not have the privilege of the Exchequer for that cause; but if the King grants tithes, and thereupon reserves a rent nominis decimarum, and a tenure of him, there he shall have privilege. 2 Leon. 21.

A latitat being sued out against the commissioners of the Treasury, the puisne Baron of the Exchequer came into the court of B. R. and brought the red book of the Exchequer, which is deemed record in that court; and thereby it appeared, that the Treasurer had privilege of being sued only in that court; and the patent being produced in court which constituted defendants, &c. and granted them the office of Treasurer of England, their privilege was allowed without putting them to bring a writ of privilege; the court grounding themselves on the record before them. 2 Show. 299.

It hath been held, that the Treasurer of the navy is eo ipso an accountant; and that an accountant's privilege will hold against a special privilege in another court, as officer of the court or otherwise; tho' it be not alleged, that such an accountant is entred on his account; for that every accountant may be attached by the court to make up his account, and must attend for that purpose de die in diem. Hard. 316. See Moor 753. 2 Inst. 23, 551. Bro. Privilege 16.

In debt in B. R. against J. S. he pleaded to the jurisdiction, That none of the privy chamber ought to be sued in any other court, without the special licence of the lord chamberlain of the household, and that he was one of the privy chamber; on demurrer to this plea, the court overruled it with great resentment, and awarded a Respondens ouster. Raym. 34. 1 Keb. 137.

It was agreed, that the privilege of the court of C. B. which Serjeants claimed, extended only to inferior courts, not to the courts in Westminster-Hall; and that he may be sued in any of these, because he is not confined to that court alone, but may practise in any other court; but it is otherwise as to attorneys or prolocutors, who cannot practise in their own name in any other court but such as they respectively belong to; that therefore a Serjeant at law is to be sued by original, not by bill of privilege. 2 Lev. 129. 3 Keb. 42. Moor 296. S. C.

So in action by bill brought in C. B. against a serjeant at law, he pleaded that he ought to have been sued by original, and not by bill; and on demurrer, the court held, that the case of a serjeant and prothonotary's clerk were on the same foot, neither of them being bound to personal attendance, as prothonotaries and attorneys were; that therefore he ought to have been sued by original, accordingly gave judgment for defendant. Trin. 7 Geo. 2. Serjeant Girdler's case.

J. S. being arrested by a writ out of C. B. brought his writ of privilege as clerk of the crown office; but it appearing that he was only a clerk to a clerk of that office, and not an immediate clerk of the office, a supersedeas to the writ of privilege was granted on motion; the court having agreed, That he had no more privilege than an attorney's clerk. 2 Show. 287.

A Serjeant at law, barrister, attorney or other privileged person, whose attendance is necessary in Westminster-Hall, may lay his action in Middlesex, tho' the cause of action accrued in another county; and the court on the usual affidavit will not change the venue. Stil. 460. Moor 64. 2 Show. 242.

But it hath been held, That if a privileged person be sued, and the action brought against him in the right county, his privilege will not intitle him to have it tried in Middlesex. Carth. 126. 1 Show. 148.

If an attorney lays his action in London, the court will change the venue on the usual affidavit; for by not laying it in Middlesex, he seems regardless of his privilege, and is to be considered as a person at large. 2 Vent. 47. Salk. 668.

On a motion to discharge a rule which had been obtained for changing the venue, it appeared, That the plaintiff was a barrister and master in Chancery; and the court held that he had privilege, by reason of his attendance, to lay his action in Middlesex, therefore discharged the rule. 2 Raym. 1556.

2. Of the privilege of peers and members of parliament.

All peers, without distinction are intitled to privilege; for they are equally obliged to attend the service of the publick, and are always supposed amenable, and to have sufficient sufficient property to answer in suits brought against them, and on these grounds are not to be arrested or molested in their persons. This privilege extended formerly to abbots, as it does to bishops, members of the convocation, and members of the house of commons at this day. 4 Inst. 24. Stil. 222, 253. Dyer 314. 1 Mod. 66. Bro. Exig. 3. Moor 767. Scobel's Memorials 88, 103. Sir Simon Dew's Journals 414. Finch 355. Dyer 60. a. in margin. Noy 102. Moor 78. Standf. P. C. 38.

The privilege of parliament according to the law of parliament is of a very extensive nature; but all that is here intended to be treated of is only the taking notice of, and pointing out such cases relative hereto, as are to be found in the books of law; not to determine concerning this privilege as settled by the rules and orders of each house, of which they themselves are the sole judges, tho' the King's courts incidentally take notice thereof, and are bound to determine in matters of privilege when so directed by act of parliament. Lord Coke says of this law, ab omnibus querenda est, a multis ignorata, a paucis cognita. 4 Inst. 15. 13 Co. 63. 4 Inst. 23, 50, 363. Prinne's Animad. on 4 Inst. 12. Cro. Car. 181, 604. Lord Raym 1111. See 1 Mod. 66.

This privilege extends only to the peers of Great Britain; so that a nobleman of any other country, or a lord of Ireland, hath not any other privileges in this kingdom than a common person; also the son and heir apparent of a nobleman is not entitled to the privilege of being tried by his peers, which is confined to such person as is a lord of parliament at the time; but it seems that an infant peer is privileged from arrests, his person being held sacred. Co. Lit. 156. 2 Inst. 48. 3 Inst. 30.

The peers of Scotland had no privilege in this kingdom before the union, but now by the 23d article of the union, the sixteen elected peers have all the privileges of the peers of parliament of Great Britain; also all the rest of the peers of Scotland have all the privileges of the peerage of England, excepting only that of sitting and voting in parliament. 9 Co. 117. 1 P. Will. 583.

A peeress by birth is intitled to privilege; so of a peeress by marriage, and that as well during coverture as after; but as a peeress by marriage, is said to lose her dignity by marrying a commoner, 2. If after such marriage she is intitled to any privilege. 2 Inst. 50. Stil. 222, 234, 252. 2 Cha. Ca. 224. Co. Lit. 16. 6 Co. 53. Dyer 79.

It was holden by Holt, that where a person is called by writ to the house of Peers, he is no peer 'till he sits in parliament, the writ giving him no nobility or honour; but that it was the sitting in the house of Lords, and associating himself with them that ennobled his blood; that therefore, if the King or he dies before a parliament meets, the writ is determined, and the party remains a commoner; but he held it otherwise in a creation by letters patents, by which the party is immediately noble without any other act or ceremony; and tho' the parliament never meets, or the King dies, the nobility remains to him and his posterity, according to the limitations in the patent. 4 New Abr. 229.

A member of parliament shall have privilege of parliament, not only for his servants, but for his horses, &c. or other goods distrainable. 4 Inst. 24.

J. S. brought debt against H. who pleaded that he was tenant and servant to Lord Moon, and prayed writ of privilege might be allowed him; plaintiff demurred; it was argued, that the matter of the plea was against the Common statute law; but per Roll Ch. J. you ought not to argue generally against the privilege of parliament; every court hath its privilege; I conceive a writ of privilege belongs to a parliament man, so far as to protect his lands and estate; and you have admitted his privilege by your demurrer. Stil. 139. See Litch 150. and the S. C. Stil. 167, 223. 1 Jon. 155.

The warden of the Fleet insisted on a writ of privilege, alledging that he was obliged to attend the house of Lords; but it appearing that he was sued on an escape, and the court considering the great inconvenience that would ensue, and being of opinion that it was in their discretion whether they would grant such writ or no, on a motion they said he might plead if he would, but they would not award such writ, or if his privilege was infringed, he might complain to the house of Lords. 2 Vent. 154.

In debt, the defendant pleads he was a servant to a member of parliament, and ideo capi seu arrestari non debet; the plaintiff prays judgment, and quia videtur quod tale privilegium quod magnates, &c. & eorum familiares capi seu arrestari non debent; sed nullum habetur privilegium quod non debent implacitari, ideo respondeat onster. 1 Mod. 146.

Defendant after a general imparlance pleaded, That he was servant to a peer, and by North Ch. J. it is not receivable, for it is the privilege of the master and not the servant; but the defendant ought to sue his writ of privilege, for perhaps his master will not protect him; and if he will not, he is then left to answer; like to the case of a counsellor, where it is the privilege of the client that he shall not be compelled to discover the secrets of his client; but if the client be willing, the court will compel the counsel to discover what he knows; North said, as it was a matter of great consequence, he would advise with the Chancellor and judges, what used to be done in such cases; afterwards it was moved again, and North said it was moved in the house of Lords, and that they had left it to the judges; therefore the plea was rejected. Pasch. 30 Car. 2. in C. B. Lea v. Wheatley.

By an order of the 24th of January 1696, in the house of Lords, it was resolved, That no common attorney or solicitor, tho' employed by a peer, should have the privilege of that house.

By an order of the 24th of May 1724, this privilege was restrained to menial servants, and others necessarily employed about the estates of peers.

By an order of the 22d of January 1715, it was resolved, That every peer should upon his honour certify to the house, that the persons protected were within the privilege of the house; and should by letter acquaint the party, arresting such privileged person, with the same.

An attorney was taken in execution on a ca. sa. but upon a letter under the hand and seal of the Lord Say and Seal, the sheriff discharged him as steward to his lordship; a rule was obtained at the side-bar for the return of the writ; and on motion to discharge this rule, it was urged in behalf of the sheriff, that this privilege belonged only to the peer, not to the party, and was not returnable to the process; that therefore the court ought not to insist upon a return, as the sheriff could not justify the detention of defendant, but under peril of the house of peers; but on consideration of the above-mentioned orders, and on considering the nature of this case, that the plaintiff was within the ordinary justice of the court intitled to a return of his writ; that without such return he might be debarred from any further execution; but principally from the great inconvenience that might arise by allowing attorneys, who are officers to the courts in which they respectively practise, and therefore amenable to those courts, this kind of privilege; the court gave the plaintiff liberty to proceed against the sheriff, but gave him time to make his return. 4 New Abr. 230.

In all civil causes this privilege is regularly to be allowed; so that a peer, or member of the house of Commons, is not to be arrested or molested in his person or estate. Bro. Exigent.

But privilege of parliament doth not extend to high treason, felony, breach of the peace, or surety of the peace. 4 Inst. 25.

Therefore in an indictment for treason or felony, trespass vi & armis, assault or riot, process of outlawry shall issue against a peer; for the suit is for the King, and the offence is a contempt against him; but in civil actions between party and party, regularly a capias or exigent lies not against a lord of parliament. 2 Hal. Hist. P. C. 199. 2 Hawk. P. C. 424.

If a peer of parliament be convicted of a disseisin with force, a capias pro fine and exigent shall issue; for the fine is given by statute, in which no person is exempted. Cro. Eliz. 170. See Dyer 314.

So in debt on an obligation against the Earl of Lincoln, who pleaded non est factum, which being found against him, the judgment was ideo capiatur; which on a writ of error brought by him was objected to, in that a capias does not lie against a peer, sed non allocatur; for by this plea found against him, a fine is due to the King, against whom none shall have any privilege. Cro. Eliz. 503.

An information was exhibited in B. R. against the Earl of Devonshire, for striking in the King's palace; which being in time of parliament, he insisted on his privilege, and refused to plead in chief, but put in his plea of privilege, to which there was a demurrer, and the plea over-ruled, and he was fined 30,000*l.* Comb. 49.

In the case of the seven bishops it was insisted, that peers of the realm could not be committed in the first instance, for a misdemeanor before judgment; and that no precedent could be shewed where a peer had been brought in by a capias, which is the first process for a bare misdemeanor; and they put in a plea in writing of their being peers, &c. but the plea was rejected. 3 Med. 215.

Peers are punishable by attachment for contempts in many instances; as for rescuing a person arrested by due course of law; for proceeding in a cause against the King's writ of prohibition; for discharging other writs, wherein the King's prerogative, or the liberty of the subject are nearly concerned; and for other contempts which are of an enormous nature. 2 Hawk. P. C. 152.

If a peer be returned on a jury, on his bringing a writ of privilege he may be discharged; also it seems the better opinion, that without such writ he may either challenge himself, or be challenged by the party. Dyer 314. Moor 767. 9 Co. 49. Co. Lit. 157. 1 Jon. 153.

Also in the case of Sir Edward Bainton, who being returned on a jury, the court would not force him to be sworn against his will, he being a parliament man, and the parliament then sitting. Pasch. 27 Car. 2. in B. R.

A day of grace shall not be given against a lord of parliament; for he is presumed to be attendant on the service of the publick. 9 Co. 49. a.

So if a peer be made steward of a base court, or ranger of a forest, he may from the dignity of his person, and the presumption that he is engaged in the more weighty affairs of the Commonwealth, exercise these offices by deputy; tho' there are no words for this purpose in his creation. 9 Co. 49. a.

So if a licence be granted to a peer to hunt in a chase or forest, he may take such a number of attendants with him as are suitable to his dignity. 9 Co. 49. b.

A peer or lord of parliament cannot be an approver; for it is against Magna Charta for him to pray a coroner, 3 Inst. 129.

If a peer bring an appeal, defendant shall not be admitted to wage battle, by reason of the dignity of his person. 2 Hawk. P. C. 427.

In Jenkins the following privileges are laid down as belonging to peers: 1. They are intitled to a letter misfiv. 2. They have a knight to try an issue which concerns them. 3. They are not to be arrested for any personal action. 4. They are exempted from serving on juries. 5. To have no day of grace against them. 6. Upon the trial of a peer for treason or felony, they try him on their honour only not on oath. 7. When they pass thro' any of the King's forests to attend the King, on blowing a horn they may have a buck or doe, as the season of the year is. 8. They have power in their house to reverse judgments given in the King's Bench. 9. They have the benefit of clergy, tho' they cannot read. 10. They are not liable to find carriages for the King when he removes from one place to another. Jenk. 107.

In the case of Colonel Pit, the parliament was prorogued the 16th of April 1734, dissolved the 17th, and the new writs bore teste the 18th following, and Pit, who was a member of that parliament, was arrested on the 20th; one of the questions in this case was, Whether the arrest was within the time of privilege? And it was determined that it was, altho' defendant had lived for two years before no farther distant from London than Exmouth; but the court did not think it necessary, in the determination of this cause, to ascertain the exact time of privilege that members of the house of Commons were intitled to after a dissolution of parliament. Trin. 8 Geo. 2. in B. R. Col. Pit's case. See Stran. Rep. 985. and Reports in Time of Lord Hardwicke 6—27.

3. Of the proceedings in courts by and against persons intitled to privilege of parliament.

By 12 & 13 W. 3. cap. 13. sect. 1. Any person may prosecute any suit against any person intitled to privilege of parliament, at any time immediately after the dissolution or prorogation of parliament until a new parliament shall meet, or the same be re-assembled, and immediately after any adjournment of both houses for above fourteen days until both houses meet; and the courts may after such dissolution, prorogation or adjournment, proceed to give judgment, and to make final decrees and sentences; any privilege of parliament notwithstanding.

sect. 2. Provided, That this act shall not subject the person of any person intitled to privilege of parliament, to be arrested during time of privilege; nevertheless if any person have cause of action against any peer, such person after dissolution, prorogation or adjournment, or before any sessions of parliament, may have such process against such peer, as he might have had out of time of privilege; and if any person have cause of action against any person intitled to privilege of parliament, after any dissolution, prorogation or such adjournment, &c. such person may prosecute such person intitled to privilege, by summons and distress infinite, or by original bill and summons, attachment and distress infinite, which the courts are empowered to issue, until they enter a common appearance, or file common bail; and any person having cause of suit may in the times aforesaid exhibit any bill or complaint against any person intitled to privilege, in the Chancery, Exchequer or Dutchy court, and proceed thereon by letter or subpoena as usual; and on leaving a copy of the bill with defendant, or at his last place of abode, may proceed thereon; and for want of an appearance or answer, or for non-performance of any order or decree, may sequester the estate of the party, as is used where the defendant is a peer, but shall not arrest the body of any privileged person, during the continuance of privilege of parliament.

sect. 3. Where any plaintiff by reason of privilege of parliament be stayed from prosecuting any suit commenced, such plaintiff shall not be barred by any statute of limitation, or nonsuited, dismissed, or his suit discontinued for want of prosecution, but shall on the rising of the parliament be at liberty to proceed.

sect. 4. No suit or proceeding against the King's original and immediate debtor, for the recovery of any debt originally and immediately due to his Majesty, or against any person liable to render an account to his Majesty for any part of his revenues, or other original or immediate duty, or the execution of any such process, shall be impeached or delayed by privilege of parliament; yet so that the person of such debtor or accountant, being a peer, shall not be liable to be arrested, or being a member of the house of Commons, shall not, during the continuance of privilege, be arrested by any such proceeding. See stat. a & 3 Ann. c. 18. 11 Geo. 2. c. 24.

sect. 5. This act shall not give any jurisdiction to any court to hold plea of any real, or mixed action in other manner than such court might have done before.

A great improvement hath been made on this law, by the Stat. 10 Geo. 3. c. 50. whereby liberty is given to proceed against persons intitled to privilege during the sitting of parliament. See the statute, and tit. Parliament, and Peers.

A peer is to put in his answer to a bill in equity, on his honour only, not on oath; but when he is examined as a witness, he must be sworn.

Also if a peer is by order of court to be examined on interrogatories, as to make an affidavit, the same must be on oath. Salk. 513. & vid. Preced. Chan. 92.

Lord Stourton brought a bill against Sir Thomas Meers, to compel him to a specifick performance of articles for purchasing Lord Stourton's estate. Sir Thomas in his defence fence insisted, that there were defects in Lord Stourton's title to the estate; and it being ordered that Lord Stourton should be examined ex interrogatories touching his title; it was objected, that Lord Stourton being a peer ought to answer on honour only; but it was ruled by Lord Harcourt, that tho' privilege did allow a peer to put in his answer on honour only, yet this was restrained to an answer; and as to all affidavits, or where a peer is examined as a witness, he must be on oath; and that this examination on interrogatories, being in a cause wherein his Lordship was plaintiff, to force the execution of an agreement, as his Lordship would have equity, so he should do equity, and allow the other side the benefit of a discovery, and that in a legal manner; and accordingly ordered Lord Stourton to put in his examination on oath. 1 P. Will. 145.

It hath been held, that in an action founded on the 12 W. 3. defendant should have an imparlance; and that the practice is to file a bill in nature of a special capias against defendant, and then to summon him; and if he appears on such summons, plaintiff may declare against him, as in custodia mariscalii. Hill. 10 Geo. 1. in B. R. Wadsworth v. Handiside.

Peers are intitled to a letter missive, which method was introduced on a presumption that peers would pay obedience to the Chancellor's letter; and is founded on that respect which is due to the peerage. Jenk. 107.

If the Lord doth not appear on the letter, a subpoena on motion, is awarded against him; because no subsequent process can be awarded but on a contempt to the Great Seal, and the Chancellor's letter is only ex gratia.

If on the service of the subpoena, the peer doth not appear, or if he appears, and does not put in his answer, no attachment can be awarded against him, because his person cannot be imprisoned; but the proceedings must be by sequestration, unless cause, &c. And this is regularly made out, on affidavit made of the service of the letter and subpoena, tho' sometimes it is moved for without, since the peer may shew want of service at the day assigned to shew cause why the sequestration should not issue; and this order for a sequestration is never made absolute without an affidavit of the service of the order to shew cause, and a certificate of no cause shewn. 2 Vent. 342.

A bill being filed against a peer or peers, the first application is for the Chancellor's letter returnable in term time; or it may be immediate, if the peer lives in town; but in this case there must be an affidavit, that the original letter is left with the peer at his house, with a copy of the petition as answered; and therewith also is left an office copy of the bill signed by the fix clerk; for if the bill is not signed, the service is irregular. 4 New Abr. 238.

This letter is only a compliment, and no process to found proceedings on; so that the peer may appear or not, as he pleases; if he fails, a subpoena issues against him, and his time for appearing and answering being out, an attachment must be actually sealed and entered against him, tho' never executed, to ground a sequestration. It is a motion of course for a sequestration on an attachment for want of an answer. 4 New Abr. 238.

The peer must be personally served with this order, and he hath eight days to shew cause after personal service of the order; if no cause, the order is absolute; but if the sequestration is for want of an appearance, and he appears, the plaintiff must run the same race over again for want of an answer, and the peer must pray time to answer, as suitors do. 4 New Abr. 238.

The same proceeding is against a member of the house of Commons; there the party proceeds by way of sequestration, only with this difference, that instead of a letter, there always a subpoena sued out. Id.

A sequestration was granted, unless cause, against Lord Clifford for want of an answer; he afterwards put in answer, which being reported insufficient, it was moved for a sequestration absolutely, an insufficient answer being as no answer; but the court thought it a hardship in the case of a peer or member of the House of Commons, that a sequestration, which in some respects is in nature of an execution, should be the first process against them; therefore allowed, that in case of an answer which is reported insufficient, the plaintiff is to move again de novo, for a sequestration nisi. 2 P. Will. 385.

It was moved for a sequestration nisi, for want of an answer, against a menial servant of a peer, as the first process for contempt, in the same manner as in the case of the peer himself; and tho' the motion was granted by the Master of the Rolls, yet the Register refused to draw it up as thinking it against the course of the court; which being moved again before the Chancellor, his Lordship, on reading the Stat. 12 W. 3. likewise granted the motion, it appearing to be both within the meaning and words of the statute; and if it were not so, as it was plain no attachment would lie against their persons, consequently there would be no remedy against them, and they would have a greater privilege than their Lord, if the process against such menial servant were to be a subpoena. 1 P. Will. 535.

Privileged Places. Formerly one of the greatest obstructions to publick justice, both of the civil and criminal kind, was the multitude of pretended privileged places, where indigent persons assembled together to shelter themselves from justice, (especially in London and Southwark) under the pretext of their having been antient palaces of the crown, or the like: All of which sanctuaries for iniquity are now demolished, and the opposing of any process therein is made highly penal. Black. Com. 4 V. 129.

A person was arrested in the Temple, and on motion to set it aside, it was insisted for him, that the Temple is privileged from arrests by the King's grant; for which the authority of Stow's Chronicle and Dugdale were alledged: But by Holt, If the King hath made any such grant to that society, 'tis void in law, they having no court of justice within themselves: 'Tis true, the Temple is extraparochial, and not within any parish, nor in the city, so as to come within the customs of the city, but 'tis within the county of the city; and White Friars is within the jurisdiction of the city: Yet the court inclined not to countenance arrests in the Temple, especially in term time; tho' they would not set aside this arrest; so defendant was held to special bail.

By 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26. for preventing the many ill practices used in privileged places to defraud persons of their debts; the pretended privileges of White Friars, the Savoy, Salisbury-Court, Ram-Alley, Mitre Court, Fuller's Rent, Baldwin's Gardens, Montague Close, the Minorie, Mint, Clink, or Deadman's Place are taken away. And the sheriffs of London or their officers are enabled to take the posse comitatus, and such other power as shall be requisite, and enter such privileged places to make any arrest on legal process, and in case of refusal to break open doors.

The Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 28. enacts, That if any person within Suffolk Place, or the Mint, or the pretended limits thereof, wilfully obstruct persons in executing any writ, &c. or abuse any person executing the same, whereby he receive damage or bodily hurt, the person offending shall be transported. And on complaint to three justices, &c. by any person who shall have a debt owing from any one who resides in the Mint, having a legal process taken out for recovery thereof, if the debt be above 50 l. on oath thereof the justices are empowered to issue their warrant to the sheriff of Surrey, to raise the posse, and to enter the pretended privileged place, and arrest the party, &c.

Privy, (Privitas) Private familiarity, friendship, inward relation: If there be lord and tenant, and the tenant holds of the lord by certain services, there is a privy between them in respect of the tenure. Cowell.

There are three sorts of privities, viz. Privy in estate, in blood and in law.

Privies in blood are intended of privies in blood inheritable, and this is in three manners, viz. inheritable as general heir, or as special heir, or as general and special heir. Privies in estate are as joint tenants, baron and feme, donor and donee, lessor and lessee, &c. Privies in law law are, when the law without blood or privity of estate casts the land on one, or makes his entry lawful, as lord by escheat, lord who enters for mortmain, lord of villain, &c. 8 Rep. 42. b. Jo. 32.

There are three other sorts of privities, viz. in respect of estate only, contract only, estate and contract together.

Privy of estate is, as if the lessor grants over his reversion, (or if the reversion escheat.) Now between the grantee (or the lord by escheat) and the lessee, there is privy in estate only. So between the lessor and assignee of lessee; for no contract was made between them.

Privy of contract only, is personal privy, and extends only to the person of the lessor, and to the person of the lessee; as in the principal case when the lessee assigned over his interest, notwithstanding his assignment the privy of the contract remained between them, tho' privy of the estate be removed by the act of the lessee himself; and the reason of this is, 1st, Because the lessee himself shall not prevent by his own act such remedy which the lessor had against him by his own contract; but when the lessor granted over his reversion, there, against his own grant, he cannot have remedy, because he has granted the reversion to the other, to which the rent is incident. 2dly, The lessee may grant the term to a poor man, who shall not be able to manure the land, and who will by indigence, or for malice, permit it to lie fresh, and then the lessor shall be without remedy, either by distress, or by action of debt, which shall be inconvenient, and will concern in effect every man, (because for the most part every man is a lessor, or a lessee;) and for those two reasons all the cases of entry by tort, eviction, suspension and apportionment of the rent are answered; for in such cases it is either the act of the lessor himself, or the act of a stranger, and in none of the cases, the sole act of the lessee himself shall prevent the lessor of his remedy, and will introduce such inconvenience as has been said.

Privy of contract and estate together, is between the lessor and lessee himself. 3 Rep. 23.

Privy, (derived from the French prive, familiaris) signifies him who is partaker, or hath an interest in any action or thing; as privies of blood, (Old Nat. Brew. 117) are those who are linked in consanguinity; every heir in tail is prive to recover the land intailed. Lit. fol. 147. No privy was between me and the tenant. Lit. fol. 106.

If I deliver goods to a man, to be carried to such a place, and he, after he hath brought them thither, steal them, 'tis felony; because the privy of delivery is determined as soon as they are brought thither. Stamf. Pl. Cor. lib. 1. cap. 15. 25. Merchants privy are opposite to merchant strangers. 2 Ed. 3. 9 & 14.

The author of the New Terms of the Law maketh many sorts of privies, viz. privies in estate, privies in deed, privies in law, privies in right, and privies in blood. See Perkins 831, 832, 833. and Co. l. 3. fol. 23. and lib. 4. 123, 124. mentions four kinds of privies, viz. Privies in blood, as the heir to his father; privies in representation, as executors, or administrators to the deceased; privies in estate, as he in the reversion, and he in the remainder, when land is given to one for life, to another in fee, for that their estates are created both at one time: The fourth is privy in tenure, as the lord by escheat, that is, when the land escheateth to the lord for want of heirs. Cowell.

Privies inheritable, as heir general, shall take benefit of the infancy, as if infant tenant in fee-simple makes feoffment, and dies, his heir shall enter. The same law of him who is heir general and special, and also of him that is heir special, and not general. But privies in estate (unless in some special cases) shall not take advantage of the infancy of the other. 8 Rep. 42. b. 43. See Privies and Privy.

A surrender by an idiot of an estate for life to destroy a contingent remainder is void ab initio, therefore any person may take advantage of it, as well privy in estate as heir at law. But a feoffment in livery made proprio manu of the idiot, not being merely void, makes a difference. Carth. 436.

Privy Council, (Consilium Regii, Privatum Consilium) Is a most honourable assembly of the King and Privy Counsellors in the King's court or palace, for matters of state. 4 Inst. 53.

The King sits himself in council, and appoints Privy Counsellors without patent or grant, by putting them on the list, and on their removal striking them out, which he may do as he pleases: They take an oath to the King, justly to advise him, to keep secrecy, &c. Their number at the first institution was twelve; but at this time is without limitation, at the King's will.

Next to the Lord Privy Seal of the Council, the Lord Privy Seal sits in Council, the Secretaries of State, and many other Lords and Gentlemen: And in all debates of the Council, the lowest delivers his opinion first, and the King declares his judgment last; and thereby the matter of debate is determined. 4 Inst. 55.

It is consistent with safety for a Privy Counsellor to give the King counsel when demanded; and the best counsel is ever given to a Prince, when the question is to evenly pronounced, as the Counsellor cannot discern which way the King himself inclines; resolution should never precede deliberation, nor execution go before resolution; and when on debate and deliberation, any matter is well resolved by the Council, a change of it on some private information is neither safe nor honourable. 4 Inst.

The Court of Privy Council is of great antiquity: The government in England was originally by the King and Privy Council; tho' at present the King and Privy Council only intermeddle in matters of complaint on sudden emergencies; their constant business being to consult for the publick good in affairs of state. 4 Inst. 53.

The Lords and Commons assembled in Parliament have often transmitted matters of high concern to the King and Privy Council: And acts of the Privy Council, whether orders or proclamations, were of great authority; and Hen. 8. procured an act of parliament to be made, that with the advice of his Privy Council, he might set forth proclamations, which should have the force of acts of parliament; but that statute was repealed in the reign of Ed. 6.

Tho' acts of the Privy Council still continued of great authority until the reigns of Charles the First and Second: And by these were controversies sometimes determined touching lands and rights, as well as the suspension of penal laws, &c. But this seemed to be contrary to the 25 Ed. 3. cap. 4.

And by 16 Car. 1. cap. 10. it is declared, that neither the King, nor the Privy Council, have authority by petition, &c. to determine or dispose of lands, &c. of any subject.

The King, with advice of his Council, publishes proclamations binding to the subject; but they are to be consonant to, and in execution of the laws of the land.

It is in the power of the Privy Council to inquire into crimes against government; they may commit persons for treason, and other offences against the state, in order for their trial in other courts; and any of the Privy Council may lawfully do it.

But they take cognizance of no private matters that may be determined in other courts; yet the kingdom of Ireland and the Plantations are in many respects subject to the controul, and under the direction of the Privy Council; and law controversies among the subjects of Jersey and Guernsey, &c. are determined by the Privy Council. 3 Inst. 182. 4 Inst. 53. Wood's Inst. 458.

By 33 Hen. 8. cap. 23. Persons examined by the Privy Council, on treasons, &c. done within or without the realm, may be tried before commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, appointed by the King in any county of England: This statute, as far as it relates to treason committed within the kingdom, is repealed by 1 & 2 P. & M. cap. 10.

If a person be killed beyond sea, out of the realm, the fact may be examined by the Privy Council, and the offender tried according to the aforesaid statute.

Conspiracy by the King's servants, against the life of a Privy Counsellor, &c. is felony. 3 Hen. 7. cap. 14. And persons attempting to kill or unlawfully assault any Privy Counsellor, when in the execution of his office, are guilty of felony without benefit of clergy, by the 9 Ann. cap. 16. And antiently if one did strike another in the house of a Privy Counsellor, or in his presence, the party offending was to be fined. 4 Inst. 53.

No person born out of the King's dominions, except of English parents, shall be of the Privy Council. 12 W. 3. c. 2.

There is to be but one Privy Council in Great Britain: And the Privy Council is not dissolved by death of the King; but continue for six months, &c. 6 Ann. c. 5, 7. Vide the Stat. 3 H. 7. c. 14. Also 9 Ann. c. 16, and 1 Hawk. P. C. c. 17. sect. 25. c. 18. sect. 8. 2 Hawk. P. C. c. 16. sect. 4. c. 15. sect. 66 to 72. And see Black. Com. 1 V. 229, &c.

Privy Seal, (Privatum Sigillum) Is a seal which the King useth to such grants or things, as pass the Great Seal. 2 Inst. 554.

First, they pass the Privy Signet, then the Privy Seal, and lastly, the Great Seal of England; and the clerks of the Privy Signet office write out such grants, patents, &c. as pass the Sign Manual, which being transcribed and sealed with the signet, is a warrant to the Privy Seal, as the Privy Seal is a warrant to the Great Seal. Wood's Inst. 457.

How the King's grants, writings, and leases, shall pass the Privy Signet, Privy Seal, and Great Seal; and the duties of the clerks of the Privy Signet, and Privy Seal, and what fees shall be paid them and many articles concerning passing the King's grants, &c. are mentioned in the statute 27 H. 8. cap. 11.

No protection can be granted under the Privy Seal, but under the Great Seal: But a warrant of the King under the Privy Seal to issue money out of his coffers, is sufficient; tho' not under the Privy Signet. 2 Inst. 555. 2 Rep. 17. 2 Roll. Abr. 183. And the Privy Seal is sometimes used in things of less consequence, that never pass the Great Seal; as to discharge a recognisance, debt, &c. But no writ shall pass under the Privy Seal, which touch the Common law. 2 Inst. 555. And matters of the Privy Seal are not issuable, or returnable in any court, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 211. See Keeper of the Privy Seal, and Black. Com. 2 V. 347.

Privy Council. See Verdict, and Black. Com. 3 V. 377.

Pro, Is a preposition, signifying for, or in respect of a thing; as pro consilio, &c. And in law, pro in the grant of an annuity pro consilio, shewing the cause of the grant amounts to a condition: But in a feoffment, or lease for life, &c. it is the consideration, and doth not amount to a condition; and the reason of the difference is, because the state of the land by the feoffment is executed, and the grant of the annuity is executory. Plowd. 412. Wood's Inst. 231.

Probate, In the laws of Canutus, was used for to claim a thing as a man's own. Leg. Canut. cap. 44.

Probate of Testaments, (Probatio Testamentorum) Is the exhibiting and proving wills and testaments before the ecclesiastical judge, delegated by the bishop, who is ordinary of the place where the party dies: And if all the deceased's goods, chattels and debts owing to him, were in the same diocese, then the bishop of the diocese, &c. hath the probate of the testament; but if the goods and chattels were dispersed in divers dioceses, so that there were any thing out of the diocese where the party lived, to make what is called bona notabilia, then the archbishop of Canterbury or York, is the ordinary to make probate by his prerogative. Blount.

The probate of a will is usually made in the spiritual court, and is done by granting letters testamentary to an executor under seal of the court, by which the executor is enabled to bring any action, &c. And if such letters testamentary are granted to the party who exhibits the will, merely on his oath, by swearing that he believeth it to be the last will of the deceased; this is called proving it in common form, and such a probate may be controverted at any time: But if the executor, besides his own oath, produces witnesses to prove it to be the last will of the deceased, and this in the presence of the parties who claim any interest, or in their absence, if summoned and do not appear; this is termed a probate per testes, which cannot be questioned after thirty years. 2 Nels. Abr. 1301.

On an issue whether the deceased made an executor or no, the probate of the will was adjudged good proof. 2 Lill. Abr. 375. And where the probate of a will is produced in evidence at a trial, defendant cannot say that the will was forged, or that the testator was non compos mentis, because it is directly against the seal of the ordinary, in a matter where he had a proper jurisdiction; but defendant may give in evidence that the seal itself was forged, or that the testator had bona notabilia, or he may be relieved on appeal. 1 Lev. 235. Raym. 405. 1 Strange 481.

As the judge of the Spiritual Court only can determine the validity of wills for things personal; therefore the probate of such a will is undeniable evidence to a jury, and may not be controverted at Common law. 1 Ld. Raym. 262.

A probate, according to Holt, is evidence of a will only as to chattels: But if a will of lands be lost, it shall be allowed for such a will concerning lands. Ibid. 731, 735.

When probate is to be granted of a will, wherein a legacy is interlined in a different hand, and supposed to be forged, the executor has no remedy but in the Spiritual Court; where the will ought to be proved, with a special reservation as to that clause. 1 Peer Will. 358.

Notwithstanding appeal from a will, a person is complete executor by the probate; tho' the probate may be traversed, if an executor plaintiff do not conclude with a profert hic in curia, or defendant may demand oyer of the will. 3 Bulst. 72.

An executor being made by the act of the party deceased, the law intitles him to the probate of the will; and the probate cannot be revoked or altered, which would in effect make a new will; yet it may be suspended by an appeal: But if administration be granted to one, this is by act of the court; and if he afterwards become bankrupt, &c. the administration may be repealed. 1 Kell. Rep. 226. Show. 293. 1 Salk. 36. 2 Nels. Abr. 1302.

By 21 Hen. 8. c. 5. it is ordained, that on probate of wills, &c. 6 d. and no more shall be taken by the Register, where the goods of the deceased do not exceed five pounds value; and when the goods are above the value of 5 l. and under 40 l. the fee to the Judge shall be 2 s. 6 d. and to the Register 1 s. and if the goods exceed 40 l. in value, the Judge's fee is 2 s. 6 d. and to the Register 2 s. 6 d. but this he may refuse, and take a penny for every ten lines of the will, &c. And if the officer takes more than his due fees, he shall forfeit 10 l. to be divided between the King and the party grieved.

But it hath been held on this statute, that a transcript of the will must be brought to the Register ready ingrossed, and with wax to be sealed, so that the Register, &c. may have nothing to do but to annex the probate to it; and then no fee shall be taken for such transcript. 4 Inst. 336. Co. Ent. 166.

The power of granting probates and administrations of the goods of persons dying, for wages or work done in the King's docks and yards, shall be in the ordinary of the diocese where the person dieth, or in him to whom power is given by such ordinary, exclusive of the prerogative court, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. See Executor, &c. and Black. Com. 2 V. 508.

Probator, An accuser, or approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another.

The word was strictly meant of an accomplice in felony, who to save himself confessed the fact, and accused any other principal or accessory, against whom he was bound to make good the charge by duel, or trial by the country, and then was pardoned life and members, but yet to suffer transportation. — Cum probator persequitur quod promissit, tenetur ei conventio, scilicet ut vitam habeat & membra. Sed in regno remanere non debet, etiam si velit plegios invenire. Bracton. Vid. Fleta, lib. 2. cap. 52. sect. 42, 44.

Procedendo,

Procedendo, Is a writ which lieth where an action is removed from an inferior to a superior court, as the Chancery, King's Bench, or Common Pleas, by habeas corpus, certiorari, or writ of privilege; to send down the cause to the court from whence removed, TO PROCEED ON it, it not appearing to the higher court that the suggestion is sufficiently proved. F. N. B. 153. 45 Rep. 63. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 23.

And if the party who sues out a habeas corpus, or certiorari, doth not put in good bail in time, (where good bail is required) then there goes this writ to the inferior court TO PROCEED non obstante the habeas corpus, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 376.

If a certiorari or habeas corpus, to remove a cause, be returned before a judge, the judge will give a rule thereon to put in good bail, by such a day, which if defendant on serving his attorney with a copy of the rule, doth not do, then the judge will sign a warrant for a procedendo, to remove the cause where the action was first laid: Also if bail be put in at the time, and do not prove good, the judge will grant a rule for better bail to be put in by such a day, or else to justify the bail already put in; which if defendant doth not do, the judge will then likewise grant a warrant for a procedendo. 2 Lill. 377.

Where bail put in on removal of a cause into B. R. is disallowed by the court, if defendant on a rule for that purpose, and notice given, refuse to put in better bail, such as the court shall approve of, a procedendo may be granted; for disallowing the bail makes defendant in the same condition as if he had put in no bail, and until the bail is put in and filed, the court is not possessed of the cause so as to proceed in it. Mich. 24 Car. B. R.

After a record returned, and defendant hath filed bail in B. R. on a cause being removed, a procedendo ought not to be granted; because by giving and filing bail in this court, the bail below is discharged. Sid. 313. 2 Nels. Abr. 1304. And it hath been held, that by the Common law, if a certiorari be once filed, the proceedings below can never be revived by any procedendo. Hawk. P. C. 294.

When a cause by the custom of London is actionable, and will not bear an action at the Common law, if on habeas corpus or certiorari, brought to remove such cause into B. R. it doth so appear to the court; the court will grant a procedendo to authorise the court of London to proceed in the matter; otherwise the party who brought the action would be without remedy. 2 Lill. Abr. 376. This writ of procedendo is called a procedendo in loquela. See Black. Com. 1 V. 353.

Procedendo on Aid Prayer. If a man pray in aid of the King, in a real action, and aid be granted; it shall be awarded that he sue to the King in Chancery, and the justices in the Common Pleas shall stay until the writ of procedendo de loquela come to them: And if it appear to the judges by pleading, or shewing of the party, that the King hath interest in the land, or shall lose rent, &c. there the court ought to stay until they have from the King a procedendo in loquela: And then they may proceed in the plea, until they come to give judgment; when the justices ought not to proceed to judgment, without a writ for that purpose. New Nat. B. R. 342. So in a personal action, if defendant pray in aid of the King, the judges are not to proceed till they receive a procedendo in loquela. And tho' they may then proceed and try the issue joined, they shall not give judgment until a writ comes to them to proceed to judgment. Ibid.

Procedendo ad Judicium. Lies where the judges of any court delay the party, plaintiff or defendant, and will not give judgment in the cause, when they ought to do it. Wood's Inst. 570.

If verdict pass for the plaintiff in assise of novel disseisin before the justices of assise, and before they give judgment, by a new commission, new justices are made; the plaintiff in assise may sue forth a certiorari, directed to the other justices to remove the record before the new justices; and another writ to the new justices to receive and inspect the record, and then proceed to judgment, &c. New Nat. Brev. 342, 343.

Where the authority of commissioners of oyer and terminer, &c. is suspended by writ of superseas; their power may be restored by a writ of procedendo. Regist. 124. 12 Aff. 21. H. P. C. 162. See Black. Com. 3 V. 109.

Processus, (Processus a procedendo ab initio usque ad finem) Is so called, because it proceeds & goes out, upon former matter, either original or judicial; and hath two significations: First, it is largely taken for all the proceedings in any action, real or personal, civil or criminal, from the beginning to the end: Secondly, We call that the process by which a man is called into any temporal court; because it is the beginning or principal part thereof, by which the rest is directed; or if taken strictly, it is the proceeding, after the original, before judgment. Britton 138. Lamb. lib. 4. Crompt. 133. 8 Rep. 157.

Process is general or special; and special process is that which is especially appointed for any offence, &c. by statute: And there is great diversity of process. F. N. B.

Process to call persons into court, &c. must be in the name of the King; and if it issue from the court of King's Bench, it ought to be under the teste of the Chief Justice, or of the senior Judge of the court, if there be no Chief Justice; and if it issueth from any other court, it is to be under the teste of the first in commission, &c. Dalt. cb. 132. Finch 436. Cro. Car. 393.

No process shall regularly issue in the King's name and by his writ, to apprehend a felon or other malefactor, unless there be an indictment or matter of record in the court, upon which the writ issues. 1 Halt's Hist. P. C. 575.

All legal proceedings commence by original writ, indictment, or information; or in B. R. by bill of Middlesex, or latitat, which is the original process of this court; and is in nature of an original to cause appearance. 2 Lill. Abr. 377.

There is no need of process on an indictment, &c. where defendant is present in court; only where he is absent. 2 Hawk. 281.

The process on indictment of capias, &c. is appointed by the 25 Ed. 3. and 8 Hen. 6. In actions of the case, and writs of annuity and covenant, by Stat. 19 Hen. 7. 23 Hen. 8. And no writ, process, &c. shall be discontinued by the King's death. 4 & 5 W. M. 1 Ann.

If process is awarded out of a court, which hath not jurisdiction of the principal cause, it is coram non judice and void: And the sheriff executing it will be a trespasser. 2 Leon. 89.

Proceedings in the superior and inferior courts must be regularly and formally entered, according to the legal course; or they may be reversed for error, in B. R. 2 Lill. 379.

Antiently all law proceedings, &c. were in French: Tho' by statute since made, it was enacted, that it should be pleaded and answered in English, and entered and enrolled in Latin. 36 Ed. 3. c. 15. 22 Car. 2. c. 3. The old entries of the law proceedings in French was required by William the Conqueror, it being a language which he himself knew; and the use of Latin is said to be introduced by the clergy, when the bishops and other spiritual persons were judges, and chief officers of our courts; and this they did, as knowing whatever alterations there were in national languages, the Latin would be generally understood. Yet some give another reason for it, that it was done to keep the people in ignorance, and to have in their own power only the interpretation of the laws. Forsters 100.

By a late statute, all proceedings in the courts of justice shall be in the English tongue, and be written in a common ingrossing hand, not court hand, in words at length, &c. on pain of forfeiting the sum of 50*l.* And mistranslations, errors in form, and mistakes of clerkship, may be amended before or after judgment: Also the statutes of jeofails extend to all forms, and proceedings in English, except in criminal cases. But this statute extendeth not to the court of Admiralty, as to certifying any proceedings beyond the seas, &c. which may be in Latin as formerly. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 26. And in the court of Receipt of the Exchequer in England, officers and clerks may carry on their business in their usual course; also writs, process, pleadings, &c. may be written expressing numbers by figures, and with usual abbreviations in English; and names of of writs, &c. to be expressed in the same language as hath been commonly used, by 6 Geo. 2. c. 6. 14.

As to civil process, see Black. Com. 3 V. 279. xiii.— And as to the criminal process, see ib. 4 V. 313.

Obstructing the execution of lawful process, is an offence against public justice, of a very high and presumptuous nature; but more particularly so, when it is an obstruction of an arrest upon criminal process. And it hath been holden, that the party opposing such arrest becomes thereby particeps criminis; that is, an accessory in felony, and a principal in treason. Black. Com. 4 V. 129.

Procession. In cathedral and conventual churches, the members had their stat d processions, wherein they walked in their most ornamental habits, with musick, singing hymns, and other suitable solemnity: And in every parish, there was a customary annual procession of the parish priest, the patron of the church, with the chief flag, or holy banner, and the other parishioners, to take a circuit round the limits of the parish or manor, and pray for a blessing on the fruits of the earth; to which we owe our present custom of perambulation, which in most places is still called processioning and going in procession, tho' we have lost the order and devotion, as well as pomp and superstition of it.

Processum Continuando, Is a writ for the continuance of process, after the death of the Chief Justice, or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer. Reg. Orig. 128.

Prochein Amy, (Proximus Amicus) Is used in law for him who is the next friend, or next of kin to a child in his nonage, and in that respect is allowed to deal for the infant in the management of his affairs; as to be his guardian if he holds lands in socage, and in the redress of any wrong done him. Stat. West. 1. c. 48. West. 2. c. 15. 2 Inst. 261.

Prochein amy is commonly taken for guardian in socage; but otherwise it is he who appears in court for an infant who sues any action, and aids the infant in pursuit of his action: For to sue, an infant may not make an attorney, but the court will admit the next friend of the infant plaintiff; and a guardian for an infant defendant.

If no guardian is appointed by the father, &c. of an infant, the course of B. R. hath been to allow one of the officers of the court to be prochein amy to the infant to sue. Terms de Ley. 2 Lill. Abr. 52.

It hath been held, that a guardian and prochein amy are distinct, tho' either of them may be admitted for the plaintiff being an infant.

Prochein amy was never before the Statute Westm. 1. and was appointed in case of necessity, where an infant was to sue his guardian, or the guardian would not sue for him; for which reason he may be admitted to sue by prochein amy, when he is to demand or gain any thing. 2 Nelf. Abr. 997.

The plaintiff infant may sue per guardianum, or per proximum amicum ad prosequendum; and if the admission is to sue per guardianum, when it should be per proximum amicum, it will be well enough, there being many precedents both ways: But if he is sued, it must be per guardianum. Cro. Car. 86, 115. Hut. 92. If an infant be disturbed by the chief lord, so that he cannot bring assise, his prochein amy shall be admitted. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 48. So where the infant is elained, &c. 13 Ed. 1. c. 15. See Infant, and Black. Com. 1 V. 464.

Prochein Avoidance, Is nothing but a power to present a minister to a church when it shall become void: As where one hath presented a clerk to a church, and then grants the next avoidance to another, &c. See Avoidance.

Proclamation, (Proclamatio) Is a notice publicly given of any thing, whereof the King thinks fit to advertise his subjects, and so it is used. 7 Ric. 2. cap. 6.

It is plain that the King by his prerogative may, in certain cases and special occasions issue out Proclamations for prevention of offences, to ratify and confirm an antient law, or as some books express it, quoad terrorem populi, to admonish them that they keep the laws on pain of his displeasure; and such Proclamations being grounded on the laws of the realm are of great force. Fortesc. de Laud. cap. 9. 12 Co. 74, 75. 11 Co. 87. Dalf. 20. pl. 10. 2 Roll. Abr. 209. 3 Inst. 162.

It is likewise clear, that the subject is obliged on pain of fine and imprisonment to obey every Proclamation legally made; and that tho' the thing prohibited were an offence before, that yet the Proclamation is a circumstance which highly aggravates it; and on which alone the party disobeying may be punished. 12 Co. 74. Hob. 251.

It is clearly agreed, that no private person can make any Proclamation of a publick nature except by custom, as is usual in some cities and boroughs; this being a prerogative act, with which alone the King is intrusted. Bro. Proclamat. pl. 1. 12 Co. 75. Crom. Jur. 41.

But the King cannot by his Proclamation change any part of the Common law, statutes or customs of this realm; nor can he by his Proclamation create any offence which was not an offence before; for these things cannot be done without a legislative power, of which in our constitution the King is but a part. Dalf. 20. pl. 10. 12 Co. 75. 11 Co. 87. b.

On this foundation it hath been held, that the King's Proclamation prohibiting the importation of wines from France on pain of forfeiture, was against law and void; there being no war at that time subsisting between the nations. 2 Inst. 63.

So where an act was made by which foreigners were licensed to merchandize within London; and H. 4. by Proclamation prohibited the execution of it, and ordered that it should be in suspense usque ad proximum parliamentum; and this was held to be against law. 12 Co. 75.

On a conference between some Lords of the Privy Council and the two Chief Justices (of which Lord Coke was one) and Ch. B. and Baron Altham, the question was, 1st, Whether the King by Proclamation might prohibit new buildings in and about London. 2dly, If the King might prohibit the making starch of wheat. And the judges were of opinion, that the subject could not be restrained in these particulars by the King's Proclamation. 12 Co. 74.

The King by proclamation may call or dissolve parliaments, declare war or peace; for these are prerogative acts with which he is intrusted as the executive part of the law; but if there be an actual war, it is not necessary in pleading to shew that such war was proclaimed. 3 Inst. 162. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 163. Owen 45. Raff. Ent. 605.

The King by proclamation may legitimate foreign coin, and make it current money of this kingdom, according to the value imposed by such proclamation; he may legitimate base coin, or mixed below the standard of sterling; he may enhance coin to a higher denomination or value; and may decry money that is current in use and payment; and in all these cases a proclamation, with a proclamation writ under the Great seal, is necessary. Co. Lit. 207. b. 5 Co. 114. b. Daw. 21. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 192, 197.

The King by proclamation may appoint fasts and days of thanksgiving and humiliation; and issue proclamations for preventing and punishing immorality and profaneness; and injoin reading the same in churches and chapels. Comp. Incumb. 354.

A proclamation must be under the Great seal, and if denied is to be tried by the record thereof; but if a man pleads that he was prevented doing a thing by proclamation; it seems the better opinion, that he need not aver that such proclamation was under the Great seal; for alleging, that such proclamation was made, it shall be intended to have been duly made. Cro. Car. 180. See 1 Roll. Rep. 172.

By the stat. 31 Hen. 8. c. 8. The King's proclamation was to be of the same effect as an act of parliament; not to prejudice life, liberty, &c. and contemnors of it to be adjudged traitors.

But, as very justly observed by Mr. Justice Blackstone in his Com. 1 V. 271. this was "a statute, calculated to introduce the most despotic tyranny, and which must have proved fatal to the liberties of this kingdom, had it not been luckily repealed in the minority of his successor, about five years after," viz. by stat. 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. See also Black. Com. 4 V. 424.

The King may make a proclamation to his subjects, Quoad terrorem populi, and put them in fear of his displeasure; pleasure; but not on any other certain pain, as forfeiture of their land or goods, or to undergo the penalty of a fine and imprisonment, &c. Dalif. 20. 2 Lill. Abr. 381, 382. Yet the King by his proclamation may inhibit his subjects that they go not out of the realm, without licence; and if the subject act contrary, for this contempt he shall be fined to the King. 12 & 13 Eliz. Dyer 296.

There are proclamations of divers kinds; and a proclamation is to be pleaded under the Great seal, without which it doth not bind, &c. Cro. Car. 130. Vide King and Privy Council. And Black. Com. 1 V. 270. 4 V. 424.

Proclamation of Courts. Is used particularly in the beginning or calling of a court, and at the discharge or adjourning thereof; for the attendance of persons, and dispatch of business: And before a parliament is dissolved, &c. Publick proclamation is to be made, that if any person hath any petition, he shall come in and be heard. Lex Constitut. 156.

At the latter end of the assizes, there is usually proclamation made, that no more records of Nisi prius shall be put in to be tried at that assizes; after which they will not be received, and all persons who have not then put in their records of Nisi prius may depart, and are bound to give no longer attendance at that assizes. 2 Lill. Abr. 381.

Proclamation is made in Courts Baron, for persons to come in and claim vacant copyholds, of which the tenants died seised since the last courts; and the lord may seize a copyhold, if the heir come not in to be admitted on proclamation, &c. 1 Lev. 63.

Proclamation of Exigents. On awarding an exigent, in order to outlawry, a writ of proclamation issues to the sheriff of the county where the party dwells, to make three proclamations for defendant to yield himself, or be outlawed. Stat. 6 Hen. 8. c. 4. 31 Eliz. c. 3. 4 & 5 Will. & Mar. See Black. Com. 3 V. 284, xvi. 3 V. 314.

Proclamation of a Fine. When any fine of land is passed, proclamation is solemnly made thereof in the court of Common Pleas where levied, after ingrossing it; and transcripts are also sent to the justices of assize, and justices of the peace of the county in which the lands lie, to be openly proclaimed there. 1 R. 3. c. 7. See Black. Com. 2 V. 352. xvi.

Proclamation of Nuisances. By statute, proclamation is to be made against nuisances, and for the removal of them, &c. 12 R. 2.

Proclamation of Rebellion. Is a writ whereby a man not appearing upon a subpoena, or an attachment in the Chancery, is reputed and declared a rebel, if he render not himself by a day assigned. See Commission of Rebellion. And Black. Com. 3 V. 444.

Proclamation of Recusants. There is a proclamation of recusants, by which they shall be convicted, on non-appearance at the assizes. 29 Eliz. 3 Jac. 1.

Pro confesso. Is where a bill is exhibited in Chancery, to which defendant appears, and is afterwards in contempt for not answering; when the matter contained in the bill shall be taken as if it were confessed by defendant. Terms de Ley.

If a defendant is in custody for contempt in not answering, on a habeas corpus, which is granted by order of court, to bring him to the bar, the court assigns him a day to answer; and the day being expired, and no answer put in, a second habeas corpus is issued, and the party being brought into court a further day is assigned; by which day, if he answer not, the bill on the plaintiff's motion shall be taken pro confesso, unless cause be shewed by a day; and for want of such cause shewed on motion, the substance of the bill shall be decreed to plaintiff. Hill. 1662. Also after a fourth insufficient answer, the matter of the bill not sufficiently answered unto by the defendant shall be taken pro confesso, and decreed accordingly.

Stat. 5 Geo. c. 25. enacts, That if in any suit in equity any defendant, against whom process shall issue, shall not cause his appearance to be entered according to the rules of the court, in case such process had been served, and affidavit shall be made, that such defendant is beyond the seas; or that, on inquiry at his usual place of abode, he could not be found, se as to be served, and that there is just ground to believe that such defendant is gone out of the realm, or absconds to avoid being served; the court may make an order, appointing defendant to appear at a day therein to be named, and a copy of such order shall, within 14 days, be inserted in the London Gazette, and published on some Lord's day, after divine service, in the parish church where defendant made his usual abode within 30 days next before his absenting; and a copy of such order shall be posted up, viz. a copy of such order made in Chancery, Exchequer or Dutchy Chamber, shall be posted up at the Royal Exchange; and a copy of every such order made in any of the courts of equity of the counties Palatine, or of the great sessions in Wales, shall be posted up in some market town within the jurisdiction of the court, nearest to the place where defendant made his usual abode, such place of abode being also within the jurisdiction of the court; and if defendant do not appear within such time as the court appoint, then, on proof made of publication of such order as aforesaid, the court may order plaintiff's bill to be taken pro confesso, and make such decree as shall be just; and the court may order plaintiff to be paid his demands out of the estate sequestered according to the decree; such plaintiff giving security, to abide such order touching the restitution of such estate, as the court shall make on defendant's appearance. But in case plaintiff refuse to give security, then the court shall order the effects sequestered to remain under the direction of the court, until the appearance of defendant to defend such suit.—Provided, That this act shall not affect persons beyond the seas, unless affidavit be made of their being in England within two years before the subpoena: Nor extend to courts having a limited jurisdiction, unless oath be made of personal residence in such jurisdiction one year before the subpoena.

Barnardiston (401 to 404.) tells us, That it is not sufficient on this statute to make affidavit, that the party making it was informed, and believes that defendants withdrew themselves, in order to avoid being served with the process of the court. But it must be likewise sworn by whom the deponent received such information.

Defendant appeared, and stood out to a sequestration, and afterwards, on getting time, put in an answer, which was reported insufficient in near twenty exceptions, and was served with a subpoena to make a better answer. The defendant put in another answer, a-like insufficient. It was insisted for defendant, that the practice of taking bills pro confesso is not of long standing, the ancient way being to put the plaintiff to make proof of the substance of the bill; and that, in this case, taking all the bill pro confesso, where part had been sufficiently answered, seemed very strange. But it was answered, that an insufficient answer is as no answer, therefore the whole to be taken pro confesso; and the Master of the Rolls decreed for plaintiff. But Lord Chancellor King, on an appeal, said, He would consider how matters stood at the time of such decree, and that it was sufficient that there then was an answer, and which the plaintiff had admitted to be so by suing his process for a better; and that so defendant confessed the whole bill true, when by the Master's report, (which was a record of the same court) he had answered the greatest part; and when the plaintiff himself had taken the first answer to be an answer in part by serving the defendant with process to put in a better, was against common sense; and reversed the former decree. 2 Will. liam's Rep. 556.

If defendant obstinately insists on his demurrer, and refuses to answer, where the court is of opinion, that sufficient matter is alleged in the bill to oblige him to answer, and for the court to proceed upon, the court will decree the matter of the plaintiff's bill; for by the demurrer are confessed all matters of fact that are alleged. Curf. Canc. 209.

Proctor, (Procurator) Is he who undertakes to manage another man's cause, in any court of the Civil or Ecclesiastical law, for his fee: Qui aliena negotia gerenda suscipit. Proctor not to practise, if a popish recusant. 3 Jac. c. 5. Not to act as justice of peace: 5 Geo. 2. c. 18. See Black. Com. 3 V. 25.

Proffors of the Clergy. (Procuratores cleri) Are those who are chosen and appointed to appear for cathedral or other collegiate churches; as also for the common clergy of every diocese, to sit in the Convocation house in the time parliament.

On every new parliament the King directeth his writ to the archbishop of each province, for the summoning of all bishops, deans, archdeacons, &c. to the convocation, and generally of all the clergy of his province, assigning them the time and place in the writ; then the archbishop of Canterbury, on his writ received, according to custom directeth his letters to the bishop of London, as his provincial dean, first citing him peremptorily, and then willing him to cite in like manner all the bishops, &c. and generally all the clergy of his province, to the place, and against the day prefixed in the writ; but directeth withal, that one proffor be sent for every cathedral or collegiate church, and two proffors for the body of the inferior clergy of each diocese; and by virtue of these letters authentically sealed, the bishop of London directeth his like letters severally to the bishop of every diocese of the province, citing them in like sort, and willing them not only to appear, but also to admonish the deans and archdeacons personally to appear; and the cathedral and collegiate churches, and the common clergy of the diocese to send their proffors to the place at the day appointed; and also willet them to certify to the archbishop the names of every person so warned by them, in a schedule annexed to their letter certificatory: Then the bishops proceed accordingly, and the cathedral and collegiate churches, and the body of the clergy make choice of their proffors; which being done and certified to the bishop, he returneth all at the day. Cowell.

Proconsules, Were those who were called justices in eyre, or Justiciarii errantes, in England. Cowell.

Procurations, (Procuraciones) Are certain sums of money which parish priests pay yearly to the bishop or archdeacon, ratione visitationis; formerly the visitor demanded a proportion of meat and drink for his refreshment, when he came abroad to do his duty, and examine the state of the church; afterwards these were turned into annual payments of a certain sum, which is called a procuration, being so much given to the visitor, ad procurandum cibum et potum. And complaints were often made of the excessive charges of the procurations, which were prohibited by several councils and bulls; and that of Clement the Fourth is very particular, wherein mention is made that the Archdeacon of Richmond, visiting the diocese, travelled with one hundred and three horses, twenty-one dogs, and three hawks, to the great oppression of religious houses, &c.

These are also called Proxies; and it is said there are three sorts of procurations or proxies; ratione visitationis, consuetudinis, & parochialis; and that the first is of ecclesiastical cognifiance, but the two last are triable at law. Hardr. 180.

A libel was brought in the Spiritual court for procurations by the archdeacon of York, setting forth, that for ten or twenty years, &c. there had been due and paid to him so much yearly by a parson and his predecessors; who suggested for a prohibition, that the duty had been payable, but denied the prescription, and that the Ecclesiastical court cannot try prescriptions; but it was adjudged, that procurations are payable of common right, as tithes are, and no action will lie for the same at Common law; if he had denied the quantum, then a prohibition might go. Raym. 360. See stat. 34 Hen. 8. c. 19.

Procurator, Is one who hath a charge committed to him by any person; in which general signification it hath been applied to a vicar or lieutenant, who acts instead of another; and we read of procurator regni, and procurator reipublice, which is a publick magistrate: Also proxies of lords in parliament are in our law-books called Procuratores; the bishops are sometimes termed procuratores ecclesiarum; and the advocates of religious houses, who were to solicit the interests, and plead the causes of the societies, were denominated procuratores monasterii; and from this word comes the common word proffor. It is likewise used for him who gathers the fruits of a benefice for another man; and procuracy for the writing or instrument whereby he is authorized. 3 R. 2. c. 3.

Procuratores ecclesiae parochialis, The churchwardens who were to act as proxies and representatives of the church, for the true honour and interest of it. Paroch. Antiq. 562.

Procuratorium, The procuratory, or instrument by which any person or community did constitute or delegate their proffor or proffors, to represent them in any judicial court or cause.

Prodes homines, Is a title often given in our old books to the Barons of the realm, or other military tenants, who were summoned to the King's council, and were no more than discreti & fideles homines, who according to their prudence and knowledge were to give their counsel and advice.

Proditorie, A word necessary to indictments of treason. 2 Hawk. P. C. 224.

Profaneness, (Qu. procul à sano) Is a disrespect paid to the name of God, and to things and persons consecrated to him. Wood's Inst. 396.

Profaneness is punishable by statute; as for reviling the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper, profanely using the name of God in plays, &c. Profaning the Lord's Day, cursing and swearing, &c. 1 Ed. 6. c. 1. 1 Elix. c. 1. 3 Jac. 1. c. 21. 1 Car. 1. c. 1. 13 Car. 2. c. 9. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 11. See Black. Com. 4 V. 59.

Profer, (Profrum, vel proferum, from the Fr. proferer, i. e. producere) Is the time appointed for the accounts of officers in the Exchequer, which is twice in the year. Stat. 51 H. 3.

As to the profers of sheriffs, tho' the certain debet of the sheriff could not be known before the finishing of his accounts; yet it seems there was anciently an estimate made of what his constant charge of the annual revenue amounted to, according to a medium, which was paid into the Exchequer at the return of the writ of summons of the pipe; and the sums so paid were and are to this day called profer vicecomitis: But altho' these profers are paid, if on the conclusion of the sheriff's accounts, and after allowance and discharges had by him, it appears that there is a surplusage, or that he is charged with more than he could receive, he hath his profers paid or allowed him again. Hale's Sher. Account 52.

There is a writ, De attornato vicecomitis pro proffo faciendo. Reg. Orig. 139. And we read of proffors in the statute 32 H. 8. c. 21. in which place profer signifies the offer and endeavour to proceed in an action. See Brit. c. 28. and Flota, lib. 1. c. 38.

Profer the Half-Mark, That is to offer or tender the half mark. Vide Half Mark.

Profer in Curia, Is where the plaintiff in an action declares on a deed, or defendant pleads a deed, he must do it with a proffert in curia, to the end that the other party may at his own charges have a copy of it, and until then he is not obliged to answer it. 2 Lill. Abr. 382. And if a man pleads by virtue of an indenture, which is lost, on affidavit made thereof, the court will compel the plaintiff to shew the counterpart, that defendant may plead thereto; or will grant an imparlance. Cro. Jac. 429.

When he who is party or privy in estate or interest, or who justifies in the right of him who is party or privy, pleads a deed; notwithstanding the party privy claims but part of the original estate, yet he must shew the original deed. 10 Rep. 92, 93. But where a man is a stranger to a deed, and claims nothing in it, &c. there he may plead the patent or deed, without a proffert in curia. Ibid.

A man may claim under a deed of uses, without shewing it; because the deed doth not belong to him, tho' he claims by it, but the convenantor's, and he hath no means to obtain it; and for that it is an estate executed by the statute of uses, so as the party is in by law, like to tenant in dower, or by statute, &c. who may have a rent-charge extended, and need not shew the deed. Cro. Car. 442. And in things executed, or estates determined, there need not be any proffert in curia. 3 Lev. 204. Also an assignee of commissioners of bankrupts need not shew the the bond to the bankrupt, because he comes in by act of law, &c. Pro. Car. 209.

No advantage or exceptions shall be taken for want of a proferit in curia; but the court shall give judgment according to the very right of the cause, without regarding any such omission and defect, except the same be specialty and particularly set down, and shewn for cause of demurrer. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16.

Where a deed is pleaded and shewn in court, the deed in judgment of law remains in court all the term in which it is shewn; and if it be not denied, then at the end of the term it is delivered to the party whose it is: And if it be denied, it shall still remain in court, for if it be found Non est factum, it shall be damned. 3 Rep. 47, 74, 75. See Monfrans de fait, and Oyer, &c. And Black. Com. 3 V. xxii.

Profession, (Professio) Is used particularly for the entering into any religious order, &c. By which a monk offered himself to God, by a vow of obedience, chastity, and poverty, which he promised constantly to observe; and this was called Sanctæ religionis professio, and the monk a religious professed. This entering into religion, whereby a man is shut up from all the common offices of life, is termed a Civil Death. See Black. Com. 1 V. 132. &c.

Profits. A devise of the profits of lands, is a devise of the land itself. Dyer 210.

A husband devised the profits of his lands to his wife, until his son came of age, this was held to be a devise of the lands until that time: Tho' if the lands were devised to the son, and that his mother should take the profits of it until he came of age, &c. this would give the mother only an authority, not an interest. 2 Leon. 221.

By devise of profits, the lands usually pass; unless there are other words to shew the intention of the testator. Moor 753, 758. 2 Nelf. Abr. 1051.

Profits of Courts. The profits arising from the King's ordinary courts of justice, make a branch of his revenue. And these consist not only in fines imposed upon offenders, forfeitures of recognizances, and amercements levied on defaulters; but also in certain fees due to the crown in a variety of legal matters, as, for setting the Great Seal to charters, original writs, and other forensic proceedings, and for permitting fines to be levied of lands in order to bar entails, or otherwise to insure titles. As none of these can be done without the immediate intervention of the King by himself or his officers, the law allows him certain perquisites and profits, AS A RECOMPENCE FOR THE TROUBLE HE UNDERTAKES FOR THE PUBLIC. These, in process of time, have been almost all granted out to private persons, or else appropriated to certain particular uses: So that, tho' our law proceedings are still loaded with their payment, very little of them is now returned into the King's Exchequer; for a part of whose royal maintenance they were originally intended. All future grants of them, however, by the statute 1 Ann. stat. 2. c. 7. are to endure for no longer time than the life of the prince who grants them. Black. Com. 1 V. 289.

Prohibition, (Prohibitio) Is a writ to forbid any court, to proceed in any cause there depending, on suggestion that the cognizance thereof belongeth not to the court. F. N. B. 39. But it is now most usually taken for that writ which lieth for one who is impleaded in the court christian, for a cause belonging to the temporal jurisdiction, or the consueance of the King's court, whereby as well the party and his counsel, as the judge himself, and the register are forbidden to proceed any further in that cause. Conwell.

As all external jurisdiction, whether ecclesiastical or civil, is derived from the crown, and the administration of justice is committed to variety of courts; hence it hath been the care of the crown, that these courts keep within the limits and bounds of the several jurisdictions prescribed them; for this purpose the writ of prohibition was framed; which issues out of the superior court of Common law to restrain inferior courts, whether such courts be temporal, ecclesiastical, maritime, military, &c. on a suggestion that the cognizance of the matter belongs not to such courts; and in case they exceed their jurisdiction, the officer who executes the sentence, and in some cases the judge who gives it, are in such superior courts punishable, sometimes at the suit of the King, sometimes at the suit of the party, sometimes at the suit of both, according to the variety of the case. 2 Inst. 601. F. N. B. 40. 12 C. 6. 1 And. 279. 2 Jen. 213. Skin. 628.

The reason of prohibitions in general is, that they preserve the right of the King's crown, and courts, and the quiet of the subject; that it is the wisdom and policy of the law, to suppose both best preserved when every thing runs in its right channel, according to the original jurisdiction of every court; that by the same reason that one might be allowed to incroach, another might; which would produce nothing but confusion in the administration of justice. Shew. Par. Ca. 63.

So that prohibitions do not import that the ecclesiastical or other inferior temporal courts are alia than the King's courts, but signify that the cause is drawn ad aliud examen than it ought to be; therefore it is always said in all prohibitions (be the court ecclesiastical or temporal to which it is awarded) that the cause is drawn ad aliud examen contra coronam & dignitatem Regiam. 2 Ink. 602. 1 Roll. Rep. 252. 3 Bull. 120. Palm. 297.

1. What courts may grant a prohibition; and whether the granting it be discretionary, or ex debito iustitiæ.
2. Who have a right to, and may demand, and join in a prohibition.
3. Of the suggestion for, and manner of obtaining a prohibition.
4. At what time a prohibition is to be, and in what cases it may be granted, to inferior temporal courts.
5. In what cases prohibitions are to be granted to the spiritual courts.

1. What courts may grant a prohibition, and whether the granting it be discretionary, or ex debito iustitiæ.

The superior courts of Westminster, having a superintendency over all inferior courts, may in all cases of innovation, &c. award a prohibition; in this the power of the court of B. R. has never been doubted, being the superior Common law court in the kingdom. F. N. B. 53. 4 Inst. 71.

Also the court of Chancery may award a prohibition which may issue as well in vacation as in term time, but such writ is returnable into B. R. or C. B. Bro. Prohibition, pl. 6. 4 Inst. 81. 1 Peer Will. 43.

If one be sued in an inferior court for a matter out of the jurisdiction, defendant may either have a prohibition from one of the Common law courts of Westminster-Hall; or in regard this may happen in vacation, when only the Chancery is open, he may move that court for a prohibition; but then it must appear by oath, that the fact did arise out of the jurisdiction, and that defendant tendered a foreign plea, which was refused; and if a prohibition has been granted out of Chancery improvidè, and without these circumstances attending it, the court will grant a superfedeas thereto. 1 Peer Will. 475.

As the jurisdiction of the court of C. B. is founded on original writs issuing out of Chancery, it hath been doubted, whether this court could without writ or plea depending, award a prohibition; but this point has been determined, viz. that this court may on a suggestion grant prohibitions, to keep as well temporal as ecclesiastical courts within their jurisdictions, and that without any original writ or plea depending; the Common law being, in these cases, a prohibition of itself, and standing instead of an original. Bro. Prohibition, pl. 6. Noy 153. 12 C. 58, 108. Bro. Consultation, pl. 3. 4 Inst. 99. 2 Brownl. 17.

Accordingly it hath been adjudged, That a prohibition ought to be granted by C. B. to the court of delegates, for suing there to avoid the institution of a clerk to a church, after induction, tho' the quære impedit for the church could not be brought in C. B. but only in the county; because the title of the advowson was not questioned by this prohibition, but the intrusion on the Common law, of which this court has special care. Moor 861. 2 Roll. Abr. 317. Hob. 15.

But as to the courts of B. R. and C. B. this difference hath been made, That in the first of those courts a prohibition may be awarded on a bare surmise, without any suggestion on record; and such writ is only in nature of a commission prohibitory, which is discontinued by demise of the King; but that as to a prohibition issuing out of C. B. the suggestion must be on record, therefore is considered as the suit of the party, and in which he may be nonsuited, and is not discontinued by demise of the King. Noy 77. Palm. 422. Latch 114.

If the King's farmer, or copyholder of the King's manor, be sued in the ecclesiastical court for tithes, on a suggestion in the court of Exchequer that he prescribes to pay a certain modus in lieu of tithes, he shall have a prohibition, and such modus shall be tried there. Palm. 525. Lane 39. 1 Roll. Abr. 539.

The grand sessions of North Wales may send a prohibition, and write to the spiritual courts there. 1 Sid. 92. but for this see Cro. Car. 341. 1 Jon. 330. Vaugh. 411.

It is laid down, that tho' a surmise be a matter of fact, and triable by a jury, yet it is in the discretion of the court to deny a prohibition when it appears to them that the surmise is not true. Hob. 67.

But it hath been held, that awarding a prohibition is a matter discretionary, that is, That from the circumstances of the case, the superior courts are at liberty to exercise a legal discretion therein, but not an arbitrary one in refusing prohibitions, where in such like cases they have been granted, or where by law they ought to be granted. Winch 78.

It hath been determined in the house of Lords, That no writ of error will lie on the refusal of a prohibition; but when a consultation is awarded, it is with an ideo consideratum est, and then a writ of error will lie. 1 Lord Raym. 545.

If the master of a ship sues in the Admiralty for his wages, and a prohibition is moved for, on a suggestion that the contract was made on land, and the court is of opinion that a prohibition ought to be granted; in this case they will not compel the party to find special bail to the action in the court above. Salk. 33. Carth. 518. Cum. 74. 1 Lord Raym. 576.

If there is judgment against a simonist, who by the assent of parties is to continue for a certain time on the benefice, and who at the expiration of the time refuses to remove, but commits waste, a prohibition to stay waste may be had by the patron, incumbent or any other person, because that is the King's writ; and any one may pray a prohibition for the King, and it is grantable ex debito iustitie, and not honorary, and in the discretion of the court. Comp. Incumb. 43. 1 Sid. 65. Hob. 247.

2. If he have a right to, and may demand, and join in a prohibition.

The King may sue for a prohibition, tho' the plea in the spiritual court be between two common persons, because the suit is in derogation of his crown and dignity. F. N. B. 40.

So if the ecclesiastical court hold plea of any matter which belongs not to their jurisdiction, on information thereof to the King's courts, a prohibition will issue. 2 Inst. 607.

As if a man libels in the spiritual court for a matter which does not appertain to that court, but to the Common law, as a matter of frank-tenement; yet he himself, against his own suit, may pray a prohibition, and have it. 2 Roll. Abr. 342. 1 Leon. 130. Gould. 149. 12 Co. 56.

So where plaintiff in the spiritual court brought a prohibition to stay his own suit there, for that he suing for tithes by virtue of a lease made by the vicar of A. for three years, defendant claimed to be discharged of tithes by a former lease and composition by deed; and in this case it was held, that the plaintiff himself may have a prohibition to stay the suit; for the ecclesiastical judges are not to meddle with the trial of leases or real contracts, tho' they have jurisdiction of the original cause (viz. the tithes); for the lease is in the reality, and is not merely accidental; and it makes no difference, that the plaintiff brings prohibition to stay his own suit; for if the temporal court has knowledge by any means, that the spiritual court meddles with temporal trials, a prohibition ought to be awarded. Cro. Jac. 351. 2 Bulst. 283. Lit. Rep. 20.

If a vicar sues a parishioner for tithes in the spiritual court, and the parson appropriate appears there pro interesse suo, and prays a prohibition, it shall be granted. 2 Roll. Abr. 312. Cro. Eliz. 251. Kelov. 110.

If lessee for years is sued in the spiritual court for tithes be in reversion may have a prohibition. Moor 915. Cro. Eliz. 55.

But no man is intitled to a prohibition unless he is in danger of being injured by some suit actually depending, therefore on a petition to the archbishop, or other ecclesiastical judge no prohibition lies. March 22, 45. A prohibition quia timet does not lie. Allen 56.

If several libels are exhibited against A. and B. in a matter in which the court hath not consueance, A. and B. cannot join in a prohibition; so if the griefs be several, as some books say. Noy 131. 1 Leon. 286. Cro. Car. 129.

But where the vicar of A. libelled several persons severally for tithes, who joined in a prohibition, suggesting a modus; and tho' the court held in this case, that the prohibition was not regularly brought, being in all their names, when there were several libels; yet inasmuch as this was on a custom, and matter triable at Common law, in which the Ecclesiastical court was properly prohibited, tho' not in exact form, they refused to award a consultation, but directed that the parties should put in several declarations, as if there had been several prohibitions. Yelv. 128—9. Owen 13. L. P. adjudged.

So if A. libels against B. and C. for defamation, and they sue a prohibition, they shall join in attachment on it; and it is no objection to say, that the defamation was several. 1 Ld. Raym. 127. and see 1 Vent. 266. Raym. 425. Comb. 448.

Where two or more are allowed to join in a prohibition, and one dies, the writ shall not abate; because nothing is to be recovered; they are only to be discharged. Owen 13.

3. Of the suggestion for, and manner of obtaining a prohibition.

Where the matter suggested for a prohibition appears on the face of the libel, an affidavit is never insisted on; but if it does not appear on the face of the libel, or if a prohibition is moved for, for more than appears on the face of the libel, to be out of their jurisdiction, there ought to be an affidavit of the truth of the suggestion. 2 Salk. 549. 1 Peer Will. 65. 477.

The suggestion in the temporal courts may be traversed. 2 Inst. 611. 2 Co. 44. Moor 525.

On a rule to shew cause, why a prohibition should not be granted to stay a suit against plaintiff in the court of the archdeacon of Litchfield, for not going to church, nor receiving the sacrament thrice a year, on suggestion of the statute of Eliz. and toleration act, and then qualifying himself within the act, and alledging, that he pleaded it below, and they refused to receive his plea; cause was shewn, that this fact was false, and that the plaintiff was not a dissenter, nor had qualified himself ut supra, therefore hoped the court would not suffer the rule to stand unless there was an affidavit of the fact; for by that means any person might come and suggest a false fact, and oust the spiritual court of their jurisdiction, which the court admitted; therefore for want of such affidavit the rule was discharged. 1 Ld. Raym. 1211.

If a plea to an inferior jurisdiction be properly tendred, which they refuse, tho' this be a good cause for a prohibition, yet an affidavit must be made of the refusal. Skin. 20. Hard. 406. 3 Keb. 217.

A motion was made for a prohibition to the Ecclesiastical court of London, for calling a woman widore, on a suggestion that the words were actionable there by custom.

custom of the place; but the court would not grant a prohibition without oath made, that if any such words were spoken, as it was in London, and not elsewhere. 4 Mod. 367.

On a libel for calling the plaintiff old thief and old whore; defendant suggested for a prohibition, that if any such words were spoken, they were spoken at the same time; but this suggestion was held ill, because the words ought to have been fully confessed. 1 Vent. 10.

By 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 13. it is enacted, "That if any party sue for any prohibition, that then the same party, before any prohibition shall be granted, shall bring and deliver to the hands of some of the judges of the same court, where such party demanded prohibition, the very true copy of the libel depending in the Ecclesiastical court concerning the matter where the party demandeth prohibition, subscribed with the hand of the same party, and under the copy of the libel shall be written the suggestion, wherefore the party demandeth the prohibition; and in case the suggestion, by two witnesses at the least, be not proved true in the court where the prohibition shall be granted, then the party, that is hindered of his suit in the Ecclesiastical court by such prohibition, shall on his request without delay, have a consultation granted in the same case in the court where the prohibition was granted, and shall recover double costs and damages against the party that so pursued the prohibition; the costs and damages to be assessed by the court where the consultation shall be granted; for which costs and damages the party to whom they shall be awarded may have an action of debt by bill, plaint or information, in any court of record. See 27 H. 8. cap. 20. and 32 H. 8. c. 7. to which this act refers.

In the construction of the above-mentioned statute the following opinions have been holden.

That this statute referring to the statutes 27 & 32 H. 8. which extend to tithes and offerings generally, all such tithes and church duties as are mentioned in those statutes are as much within this act, as if particularly enumerated. 2 Inst. 662. Comp. Incumb. 600. Dyer 170, b.

Therefore it extends to prohibitions to suits of small tithes as well as great. Yelv. 102. 2 Ld. Raym. 1172.

So it hath been adjudged, that the suggestion of a modus decimandi ought to be proved within six months, being within the act. Noy 148. Yelv. 104. L. P.

So where one, who was sued for tithe of hay in the spiritual court, suggested for a prohibition, that he was to pay so much on an arbitrament; and it was held, that this suggestion ought to be proved, as well as one made of a modus decimandi: so on a suggestion on the statute 31 H. 8. that lands are tithe free, because the clause requiring the proof of a suggestion is general, and not limited to real composition. 1 Roll. Rep. 55.

So on a suggestion, that the suit in the spiritual court was for tithes of heath and barren ground improved within seven years after the improvement, contrary to the statute; in this case proof of the suggestion within six months was held necessary. 1 Jos. 231. Cro. Car. 208.

But it hath been held, that there needs no proof of the suggestion where the suit is for tithes contrary to common right, or where the contract of the party is suggested. Cumb. 147.

It hath been held, that the suggestion need not be proved strictly, nor with precise certainty as to all its circumstances; but that if it be proved in substance, or in such a manner as to shew that the Ecclesiastical court has not jurisdiction, it is sufficient. Cro. Eliz. 736. Moor 911.

The suggestion must be proved by honest and sufficient witnesses, which is required by the express words of the statute; therefore the testimony of one attainted of felony, excommunicated or convicted of recusancy, is, as in other cases, to be rejected. 2 Bull. 154.

But it hath been held, that persons, such as parishioners, &c. who may not be sufficient and able witnesses at a trial at law, may notwithstanding be sufficient witnesses to prove the suggestion; the chief intent of the statute being to prevent vexatious suggestions; also it hath been held, that after the admitting and recording the proof of the suggestion, nothing is to be objected against the persons of the evidence. Mich. 27 Car. 2. in C. B. Sharp v. Hobart.

If a suggestion consists of two parts, it is said to be sufficient to produce one witness to one, and another to another. 1 Vent. 107.

It hath been held, that the fix months for proof of the surmise shall be accounted according to the calendar; for that this being a computation which concerns the church, it is but reasonable that it should be done according to the computation used in the Ecclesiastical law. Hob. 197. Lit. Rep. 19. 2 Mod. 58.

It is said, that the time of six months given by the statute to prove the suggestion ought to be intended fix months in term time, and that the vacation should be no part of the time; but this hath been since adjudged otherwise, and that the time shall commence from the teste of the writ of prohibition, and not from the time of the rule made for awarding it. Moor 573. Noy 30. 2 Ld. Raymond 1172. 2 Salk. 554.

If the surmise be proved before one of the judges within the six months, altho' it be not recorded till after the six months by the court, it is well enough. Noy 30. It must be entered in the office. 2 Shew. 308.

It hath been held, that proof which is not sufficient, may be supplied by better proof within the six months, but not after. Litt. Rep. 155.

The party on failure of proof of the suggestion, shall not only have double costs and damages, but also his costs and damages in the action he brings for recovery of them. Bendl. 143. See stat. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 11.

But if the prohibition be grounded partly on a modus, which needs no proof, and partly on the contract of the parties, which needs no proof, there ought not to be double costs; for mixing the contract with the manner of tithing privileges the whole. Brownl. 99. Yelv. 119.

So where for a variance between the libel and suggestion, a consultation was awarded, and double costs adjudged defendant; this was held to be error by the very letter of the statute, which gives double costs only for want of proving the suggestion, and for no other cause. Yelv. 79, 80.

So where a prohibition was obtained on a suggestion which was not proved within the six months, in which defendant took issue with the plaintiff, which was found for plaintiff; and in this case it was resolved, that defendant should not have double costs for want of the suggestion's being proved; for the statute is, that he shall have a consultation and double costs; but in this case he could not have a consultation, the matter in issue being found against him; but ought to have prayed a consultation on the suggestion not being proved, and then should have had his double costs. Latch 140.

The surmise or suggestion may be brought in by attorney, and need not be in proper person. 1 Leon. 286.

A prohibition is not to be granted the last day of term, but on motion a rule may be obtained to stay proceedings till the ensuing term. Latch 7. 2 Roll. Rep. 456.

4. At what time a prohibition is to be, and in what cases it may be granted, to inferior temporal courts.

In all cases where it appears on the face of the libel, that the spiritual court, &c. have not a jurisdiction, a prohibition may be awarded, and is grantable as well after as before sentence; for the King's superior courts have a superintendency over all inferior jurisdictions, and are to take care that they keep within their due bounds. 2 Inst. 602. 2 Roll. Abr. 319. Noy 137. 1 Sid. 65. Cro. Eliz. 571. Moor 462, 907. Skin. 299. Carlb. 463. March 153. 2 Roll. Rep. 24. Comb. 356.

But where the court has a natural jurisdiction of the thing, but is restrained by some statute; as by 23 H. 8. for not ciding out of the diocese, there the party must come before sentence; for after pleading and admitting the jurisdiction of the court below, it would be hard and inconvenient to grant a prohibition. See the authorities

On a motion for prohibition the case was, defendant libelled in the spiritual court for tithes of faggots made of loppings of trees; and the suggestion for a prohibition was, that these loppings were cut from the stumps of timber trees above the growth of twenty years; and it was alledged, that sentence was given in the spiritual court, therefore plaintiff comes here too late to have a prohibition: but per Holt, the sentence will not hinder the having a prohibition in any case, but in case of prohibitions grounded on 23 H. 8. c. 9. for citing out of the diocese; but because the plaintiff had not pleaded this matter in the spiritual court, they denied the prohibition, because the spiritual court has a general jurisdiction of tithes; and if any special matter deprives them of their jurisdiction, it must be pleaded there; and if it had been pleaded there, and issue joined on it, and on the trial it had been found not to be silva cadua, it had been well; but if they had refused to admit the plea, a prohibition should have been granted. 2 Ld. Raym. 835.

A prohibition doth lie as well to a temporal court as to the spiritual, court of admiralty or other court, whose proceedings are different from the common law, if such temporal court exceed the bounds of its jurisdiction, or take cognizance of matters not arising within its jurisdiction. F. N. B. 45. 2 Inst. 229, 243, 601. 2 Rel. Rep. 379. 1 Rel. Rep. 252.

As if trespass vi & armis be brought in the county, a prohibition lies to plaintiff. F. N. B. 47.

So if one sueth another in a court baron or other court, which is not a court of record, for charters concerning inheritance or freehold, he shall have a prohibition. F. N. B. 47.

A person having obtained judgment in B. R. for his debt and damages, brought action for recovery of them against the bail in the court of the Tower of London, in which action the party was taken on a capias, and was rescued, after which plaintiff brought his action on the case in the court for the rescue; and all this appearing to the court of B. R. they granted a prohibition. 1 Rel. Rep. 54.

So where an action of debt was brought in the Marsbalsea, on a judgment in B. R. and a prohibition was granted. 2 Salk. 439.

A suit was surmised to be before the Lord president of the marches, for an office, between the grantee of the Lord president and a stranger, wherein the only question would be, whether the grant of that office belonged to the Lord president; and because in this case he would be as it were both judge and party, a prohibition was granted. 1 Keb. 648.

If there be one intire contract above 40 s. and a man sues for it in a court baron, severing it into small sums under 40 s. a prohibition shall be granted, because this is done to defraud the court of the King. 19 H. 6. 54. 2 Rel. Abr. 280. F. N. B. 46.

An action was brought in the hundred court for 40 s. in which action plaintiff confessed that he was satisfied one shilling, which being done with an intent to give that court jurisdiction, and to defraud the superior courts, a prohibition was granted. Palm. 564.

If there be several contracts between A. and B. at several times for divers sums, each under 40 s. but amounting in the whole to a sum sufficient to intitle the superior court to a jurisdiction, they shall be sued for in such superior, and not in an inferior court, which is not of record. 1 Vent. 65.

So in a prohibition to the court of the honour of Eve, where the case was, one contracted with another for divers parcels of malt, the money to be paid for each parcel being under 40 s. he levied divers plaints thereupon in the said court; wherefore the court here granted a prohibition; because tho' there be several contracts, yet as plaintiff might have joined them all in one action, he ought to have so done, and sued here, and not put defendant to unnecessary vexation, any more than he can split one intire debt into divers, to give the inferior court jurisdiction in fraudem legis. 1 Vent. 73. 2 Keb. 617. 1 Show. 11.

It is laid down by Coke, and admitted in a variety of cases, that no inferior court can hold plea of any transitory action, if not made within the jurisdiction, and that the cause of action must be alledged to arise within such jurisdiction. 2 Inst. 231. 1 Sand. 74. 2 Jen. 230. 1 Show. 10. and see tit. Courts.

Therefore, in an action on a promise in an inferior court, not only the promise, but the consideration must be alledged to arise within the inferior jurisdiction, and must be so proved on the trial. 1 Rel. Abr. 545.

But if plaintiff had shewn that the money had been lent infra jurisdictionem curie, or if it had been for goods there sold, the plaintiff would have had no need to say, that the defendant assumed to pay infra jurisdictionem curie; because the law creates the promise on the creation of the debt, which debt being within the jurisdiction, the promise shall be intended there also. Lord Raym. 211.

In all cases where inferior courts assume a jurisdiction, or hold plea of a matter not arising within their limits, the party hath his remedy, and may stay their proceedings by prohibition; but such prohibition can only regularly be obtained by its appearing on oath made, that the fact did arise out of the jurisdiction, and that the defendant tendered a foreign plea, which was refused. 6 Mod. 146. Carth. 402. 1 Salk. 201. 1 Peer Will. 476.

In the case of Mendyk v. Stint it was greatly insisted upon, that tho' the party neglected to plead to the jurisdiction, that yet the matter arising out of the inferior jurisdiction, the superior courts ought to grant a prohibition; for otherwise the parties, their counsel and attorneys, would give a jurisdiction to inferior courts which they were not intitled to by law; but it was otherwise adjudged in this case; and it seems to be now agreed, that after admitting the jurisdiction, or after imparlance, the party cannot apply for a prohibition. 2 Mod. 271.

But these things were agreed by the court.

1. If any matter appears in the declaration, which sheweth that the cause of action did not arise infra jurisdictionem, there a prohibition may be granted at any time.

2. If the subject matter in the declaration be not proper for the judgment and determination of such court, there also a prohibition may be granted at any time.

3. If defendant, who intended to plead to the jurisdiction, is prevented by any artifice, as by giving a shore day, or by the attorney's refusing to plead it, &c. or, if his plea be not accepted, or is over-ruled; in all these cases a prohibition likewise will lie at any time. 2 Mod. 273.

A motion was made for a prohibition to be directed to the sheriff's court in Bristol, on suggestion that causes of action arising out of the jurisdiction of the sheriff's court ought not to be sued there; and this motion was made in behalf of defendant in the action, before he had appeared, to stay the proceedings of the court, who proceeded to attach his goods in the hands of a garnishee; and Sir B. Shower opposed the motion; because defendant could not pray a prohibition on suggestion of a matter which he could not plead; and as here he could not plead this before appearance, so he ought not to make such a motion before appearance. And per Holt, a man shall not plead to the jurisdiction until he appear; but if the original cause of action arose out of the jurisdiction of the court, the garnishee may plead it; and of that opinion was Hale Ch. J. but if it was debt on a simple contract, it is attachable where the person of the debtor is. 1 Lord Raym. 346.

So in the case of Clerk v. Andrews, where Shower moved for a prohibition to the court of the sheriffs of London to stay proceeding, where they attached the debts of the garnishee, because it arose out of the jurisdiction, but it was denied, because the debt was on simple contract, which follows the person of the debtor. Lord Raym. 347.

5. In what cases prohibitions are to be granted to the spiritual courts.

If one sues another in the spiritual court for a chattel or debt, defendant shall have a prohibition. So if he sues for a trespass. F. N. B. 40

If the spiritual courts take on them to try the boundaries of a parish, a prohibition lies. 2 Rel. Abr. 291. 7 Co. 44. 1 Rel. Rep. 332. Cro. Eliz. 228. 3 Leon. 829. 3 Keb. 286. S. P. because the prescription is the ground thereof.

As if a suit be by a parson for tithes, and defendant plead, that the place where, is in another parish, a prohibition lies; because they meddle with that which is out of their jurisdiction, tho' the original thing be of their cognizance, and this comes in obliquely. 2 Rel. Abr. 282. 1 Show. 10. Noy 147. S. P.

So if the vicar of a parish libels against another to avoid his institution to the church of D. which he supposes to be a chapel of ease, appertaining to his vicarage, and defendant suggests, that D. is a parish of itself, and not a chapel of ease; a prohibition will be granted, for they shall not try the bounds of the parish. 2 Rel. Abr. 291.

So if the question be in the court christian, whether a church be a parochial church, or a chapel of ease; a prohibition lies. 2 Rel. Abr. 291.

But if the bounds of two villis lying in the same parish come in question in the spiritual court, no prohibition lies; for such bounds are triable in the ecclesiastical court, tho' those of parishes are not. 1 Lev. 78.

The ecclesiastical courts have cognizance of a way to a church, and for not repairing such way the parties may be proceeded against in the spiritual court. March 45.

So if a parson is prevented from carrying away his tithe by the stopping up the usual way, he may have his remedy in the ecclesiastical court, grounded on the statute 2 Ed. 6. Bulst. 67. 1 Jen. 230.

But if the question be, whether he is to have one way or another, or whether such a way be a highway or not; this cannot be tried in the spiritual court. March 15. 1 Bulst. 67. 2 Rel. Abr. 287. S. P. adjudged.

So if the churchwardens of a church sue for a way to the church, which they claim to appertain to all the parishioners by prescription, a prohibition shall be granted; for this right being grounded on the prescription, is to be tried in the temporal courts. 2 Rel. Rep. 287. 2 Rel. Rep. 41.

If a man be admitted, instituted and inducted, and a suit is commenced in the ecclesiastical court to avoid the institution, supposing it not valid; tho' the thing be of their cognizance, yet because the induction, which is temporal, and gives a lay right, may depend on it, a prohibition lies. Hob. 15. Latib. 205. 1 Bulst. 179. Lit. Rep. 165. Poph. 133. 1 Rel. Abr. 282. 1 Show. Rep. 10.

If there be a suit for tithes in the ecclesiastical court, and the tenant pleads, that the party who sues is not incumbent, but that J. S. is; and this plea, because it goes to the right of the incumbency, is rejected, a prohibition lies; for by denying the tenant this liberty he might be twice charged for tithes. Cro. El. 228. 3 Leon. 265.

There are frequent instances of prohibitions being granted to the ecclesiastical courts, to stay suits for fees by chancellors, registers and proctors in those courts, on this foundation, that demands pro opere & labore are properly determinable at Common law, and fees cannot be settled by the canon law; and that the spiritual court can only give costs and expences of suit, but that no action of debt will lie for such costs at Common law; and that the profits of an office being temporal, the remedy for them ought to be by quantum meruit; or in case it be an office of freehold, by assize; the denial of just fees being a disfranchisement; therefore it seems to be now settled, that neither a proctor nor register can sue for fees in the spiritual court, but that the proper remedy is, in case of a fee certain, by an ind. bitatus assumpsit, or in case of an uncertain fee, by quantum meruit; and in such suits it is not necessary to prove a retainer, that being implied by law. 2 Rel. Rep. 59. 3 Leon. 268. 1 Mod. 176. 2 Keb. 615. 3 Keb. 303, 441, 516. 1 Salk. 333. and 4 Mod. 254.

If a legatee takes a bond from the executor for payment of the legacy, and afterwards sues him in the spiritual court for the legacy, a prohibition will be granted; for by taking the obligation the nature of the demand is changed, and becomes a debt or duty recoverable in the temporal court. Yelv. 38. 2 Vern. 31. but 2 Rel. Rep. 160. S. P. cont.

Matters of freehold, and the rights of inheritances, are only determinable in the temporal courts; so that if the ecclesiastical courts intermeddle with those, a prohibition lies. F. N. B. 40. 2 Rel. Abr. 286. Lit. Rep. 164.

As in a seoffment of tithes and lands, where there is no livery, if they adjudge the tithes to pass, notwithstanding there is no livery, a prohibition will lie. Cro. Jac. 270. 1 Vent. 41. cited.

So if a man devises, that his lands shall be sold for the payment of his debts, and that the overplus shall be paid to such persons in certain shares; the legatees in this case cannot sue in the ecclesiastical court; for the provisions intended them arise originally out of lands, and their proper remedy in this case is in a court of equity. Dyer 151, 264. Hob. 265. 2 Rel. Abr. 284—5. 2 Show. 50. Cro. Car. 16.

But if a rent be devised out of a farm for years, the ecclesiastical courts may hold plea thereof; for the term for years being only a chattel is testamentary, consequently the rent devised thereout. 1 Sid. 279. 2 Keb. 5. 1 Lev. 179.

The rights of offices for life in the ecclesiastical or courts of Admiralty are determinable at Common law; as in the question concerning the validity of two patents, by which the office of register to a bishop was granted; it was held, that this should not be tried in the spiritual court, tho' the subject matter be spiritual; because the office itself being matter of freehold is for that reason of temporal cognizance. 2 Rel. Abr. 285—6. Noy 91. Latib. 228. Palm. 450. Godb. 390. Cro. Car. 65. 2 Rel. Rep. 306. Raym. 88. 1 Lev. 125. 4 Mod. 27. Comb. 305.

Trespass on a glebe being freehold, cannot be determined in the ecclesiastical court. Bro Jurisdiction, pl. 41.

A parson libelled against defendant in the spiritual court of York for having cut elms in the church-yard; and a prohibition was granted, on suggestion that they grew on his freehold. 1 Ld. Raym. 212.

For more learning on this subject, see 4 New Abr. and 17 & 18 Vin. Abr. tit. Prohibition, and Black. Com. 3 V. 112, 113.

A suggestion for prohibition begins, Re it remembered, that on, &c. comes before our Lord the King at Westminster, C. D. in his proper person, and gives this court here to understand and be informed, That whereas A. B. &c. (setting forth the complaint and proceeding in the other court, contrary to the laws and customs of the kingdom) Wherefore the said C. imploring the aid of this honourable court, before the King himself, prayeth to be relieved, and that he may have his Majesty's writ of prohibition, directed to the judge of the said court; &c. to prohibit him and them from taking any further cognizance of the said plea before them, touching or concerning the premises: And it is granted him accordingly, &c.

The common form of a prohibition runs thus: George, &c. To A. B. &c. Greeting: We prohibit you, that you hold not plea in the court, &c. of, &c. whereas C. D. complains, that E. F. draws him into plea before you, &c. And to the party himself; We prohibit or forbid you E. F. that you follow not the plea in the court of, &c. whereas C. D. complains, that you draw him into the court, &c.

Prohibitio de vasis directis wastis, A judicial writ directed to the tenant, prohibiting him from making waste on the land in controversy, during the suit. Rep. Judic. 21.

It hath been adjudged, that a prohibition shall be granted to any one who commits waste, either in the house or buildings of the incumbent of a spiritual living; or who cuts down trees on the glebe, or doth any other waste. Moore 917. 3 Nelf. Abr. 5.

Pro indiviso, For undivided, is taken in law for a possession or occupation of lands or tenements belonging to two or more persons, whereof nemo novus bis feodal partition; as coparceners before partition. Bract. lib. 5.

Proles, (Lat.) In English progeny, are such issue as proceed from a lawful marriage; tho' if the word be used at large, it may denote others.

Prolocutor of the Convocation-House, (Prolocutor domus convocationis) Is an officer chosen by ecclesiastical persons, publickly assembled in convocation by virtue of the King's writ at every parliament: And there are two Prolocutors, one of the higher House of Convocation, the other of the lower House; the latter of which is chose by the lower House; and presented to the Bishops of the higher House as their Prolocutor, that is the person by whom the lower House of Convocation intend to deliver their resolutions to the upper House, and have their own House especially ordered and governed: His office is to cause the clerk to call the names of such as are of that House, when he sees cause; to read all things propounded, gather suffrages, &c.

Promissio, (Promissio) Is when on a valuable consideration, persons bind themselves by words to perform such a thing as is agreed on; upon which action may be brought: And a promise against a promise made at one and the same time, is a sufficient ground for an action. Cro. Eliz. 543. 703. 848.

If promissor are executory on both sides, performance need not be averred; because it is the counter-promise, and not the performance which raises the consideration. 4 Mod. 189.

Where a promise is made to do a thing, and there is no breach, the same may be discharged by parol; but if it be once broken, it cannot be discharged without release in writing, being then a debt. 1 Mod. Rep. 206. 2 Mod. 44. And when an action is grounded on a promise, payment or some other legal discharge must be pleaded. 1 Mod. 210.

If a promise be to pay a sum of money, by several monthly payments, the promise being intire, a breach of payment of the first month, is a breach of the whole promise. 2 Roll. Rep. 47. See Mutual Promise, Assumpsit, and Action on the Case, and Black. Com. 3 P. 157.

Promoters, (Promotores) Are those who in popular and penal actions prosecute offenders, in their name and the King's, as informers do, having part of the fines or penalties for their reward; They belonged chiefly to the Exchequer and King's Bench; and Sir Edward Coke calls them turbidum hominum genus. 3 Inst. 191.

Promulga a Latin, (Promulgare Legem) Is to declare, publish, and proclaim a law to the people; and so Promulgatus, Promulgatus, signifies published or proclaimed. 6 H. 6 c. 4. See Black. Com. 1 P. 45.

Pronotary. See Procurator.

Proof, Is shewing the truth of any matter alleged, or the trial or making out of any thing, by a jury, witnesses, &c.

Bracton says, there is Probatio duplex, viz. Proxima, by witnesses; and Probatio mortua, deeds, writings, &c.

Proof, according to Lilly is either in giving evidence to a jury on a trial, or else an interrogation, or by copies of records, or exemplifications of them. 1 Lilly. 193. Tho' where a man speaks generally of Proof, it shall be intended of Proof by a jury, which in the strict signification is legal Proof. 3 Inst. 56.

Condition of a bond was to pay money as an apprentice should mispend, the Proof made by the confession of the apprentice or otherwise; and it was held, that altho' generally Proof shall be intended to be made at a trial by jury, in this case it being referred to the confession of the party, it is sufficient if he confess it under his hand. 2 Cro. 381. 3 Noy. 24.

It hath been insisted, that the law knows no other Proof but before a jury in a judicial way, and that which is on record; but if the proof is modified by the agreement of the parties, that it shall be in such a manner, or before such a person, that modification which allows another manner of Proof shall be observed and prevail against the legal construction of the word Proof. Ibid. 314. 2 Lilly. 436.

Where in agreements, &c. required to be proved, ad particular form is directed how the Proof shall be made; the plaintiff may bring his action, and aver that the thing was done; and defendant may take issue that it was not done, and then plaintiff must prove the doing it. Brownl. 53, 57. Cro. Eliz. 205. Cro. Jac. 232.

Plaintiff said, that a wager was won by deceit; defendant replied, Give me a shilling, and if you can prove that it was won by me by deceit, I will give you five pounds; and in an action on the case brought against defendant on his promise to pay the five pounds, plaintiff alleged in fact that he had got the wager by deceit; and it was adjudged, that he need not make any other Proof of it but in this action. 3 Balf. 56. Cro. Eliz. 205.

In articles the parties bound themselves in the penalty of 100 l. &c. to be paid on due Proof of a breach; Proof at a trial will maintain the action. Larow. 441. And Proof may be in the action, in several other cases. *Cro. Propriety, (Proprietas) Is the highest right a man can have to any thing; being used for that right which one hath to lands or tenements, goods or chattels, which no way depend on another man's curtesy; and was first introduced, that every man might know his own. Stud. Compan. 159.

Before the flood, there was no such thing as particular Propriety, but an universal right instead of it; every man might then take to his use what he pleased; and what he had so possessed himself of, another could not, without manifest injury, take from him: But on the increase of people, trade and industry, Propriety was gained by purchase, and other lawful means; for the securing whereof, proper laws were ordained. Ben. Meritt. 2.

Propriety in lands and tenements is acquired either by injury, disseisin by law, or conveyance; and in goods and chattels, it may be gained many ways, tho' usually by deed of gift, or bargain and sale. 2 Lill. Abr. 400.

For preserving Propriety the law hath these rules,

1st, No man is to deprive another of his Propriety, or disturb him in enjoying it.

2^{dy}, Every person is bound to take due care of his own Propriety, so as the neglect thereof may not injure his neighbour.

3^{dy}, All persons must so use their right, that they do not, in the manner of doing it, damage their neighbour's Propriety. Mod. Entr. Bt. 1. 219.

There are also three sorts of Proprietas, viz. Propriety absolute; Propriety qualified; and Propriety possessory; And an absolute Proprietor hath an absolute power to dispose of his estate as he pleases, subject to the laws of the land. The husband hath a qualified property in his wife's land, real chattels and debts; but in her chattels personal he hath an absolute property. Pleas. 5.

Every owner of goods, &c. hath a general property in them: Tho' a legatee of goods hath no property in the goods given him by will until actually delivered him by executors, so that he hath the possession. Mish. 23 Car. B. 2.

And tho' by a bare agreement, a bargain and sale of goods may be so far perfected, without delivery or payment of money, that the parties may have an action of the case for non performance, yet no property vests until delivery; therefore in a sale of a house the buyer gets delivery, he has the house. 3 Inst. 61. 62.

But the contract with me, that if I pay him so much money such a day, I shall have his goods in such a place, and deliver him the money: This is a good sale, and by it I have the property of the goods. 27 H. 6. 16.

Propriety of things is possessio or actio.

In possessio, it is generally, when no other can have them from the owner, or with him, without his act or default; or partial, when some other hath an interest with him, or where there is a property also in another, as well as in the owner; as by bailment, delivery of things to a carrier, carrier, or innkeeper, where goods are pawned or pledged; distrained or leased, &c. And property in action, is when one hath an interest to sue at law for the things themselves, or for damages for them; as for debts, wrongs, &c. and all these things, in possession, or action, one may have in his own right, or in the right of another, as executor. Wood's Inst. 312.

A person hath such a special property in goods delivered him to keep, that he may maintain actions against strangers who take them out of his possession: So of things delivered to a carrier, and when goods are pawned, &c. Lill. Abr. 400, 401.

An executor or administrator hath the property of the goods of the deceased: But a servant hath neither a general or special property in his master's goods; therefore to take them from his master may be trespass or felony, as the case is. Goldb. 72.

If a man hires a horse, he hath a special property in the horse during the time against all men, even against the right owner; against whom he may have an action if he disturbs him in the possession. Cro. Eliz. 236. But it hath been adjudged, that if a man deliver goods, &c. to another to keep for a certain time, and then to re-deliver them; if he to whom they were delivered sell them in open market, before the day appointed for the re-delivery, the owner may seize them wherever he finds them, because the general property was always in him, and not altered by the sale. Godb. 160. 3 Nelf. Abr. 18. And if one delivers a horse, or other cattle, or goods, to another to keep, and he kills the horse, or spoils the goods, trespass lies against him; for by the killing or spoiling, the property is destroyed. 5 Rep. 13.

If a swarm of bees light on a tree, they are not the owner's of the tree, ill covered with his bees; no more than hawks that have made their nests there, &c. But their young ones will be his property, and for them he may have trespass. Doct. & Stud. r. 5. Co. Litt. 145.

A man's geese, &c. fly away out of sight, wherever they go, he hath still a property in them: And it is said, that whilst a person's hawk is in flight of a partridge, or his hounds in pursuit of a hare, &c. in these cases he hath a kind of property in the wild creature. Staudf. lib. 1. r. 16. 3 Shep. Abr. 111.

Wild beasts, deer, hares, conies, &c. tho' they belong to a man on account of his game and pleasure, none can have an absolute real property in; but if they are inclosed and made tame, there may be a qualified and possessory property in them.

One may have absolute property in things of a base nature, as mastiff dogs, hounds, spaniels, &c. but not in things feræ naturæ, unless when dead. Dalt. 571. Finch 176. 11 Rep. 50. Raym. 16.

Property in lands, goods and chattels, may be forfeited or lost, by treason, felony, flight, outlawry; also of goods by their becoming dead, waif, estray, &c. Bac. Elem. 77, 78.

Property in Highways, &c. He who hath the land which lies on both sides the highway, hath the property of the soil of the highway in him, notwithstanding the King hath the privilege for his people to pass thro' it at their pleasure; for the law presumes that the way was at first taken out of the lands of the party who owns the lands lying on both sides the way: And divers lords of manors claim the soil as part of their waste. 2 Lill. Abr. 400.

If the sea or a river, by violent inturion carries away the soil or ground in so great a quantity, that he who had the property in the soil, can know where his land is, he shall have his land; but if his soil or land be inturibly wafted by the sea or river, he must lose his property, because he cannot prove which is his land. Regis. 1650.

A tenant hath only a special property in the trees on the lands demised, so long as they remain part of the freehold; for when they are severed, his property is gone. 11 Rep. 82.

Property altered. A man borrows, or finds my goods, or takes them from me; neither of these acts will alter the property. Bro. Propert. 27.

If one having taken away corn, make it into malt; turn plate into money, or timber into a house, &c. the property of them is altered. Doddridge Law 132, 133.

And where goods are generally sold in a market, where, for a valuable consideration, and without fraud, it alters the property thereof. 5 Rep. 83.

To alter or transfer property, is lawful; but to violate property is never lawful, property being a sacred thing which ought not to be violated. And every man (if he hath not forfeited it) hath a property and a right allowed him, to defend his life, liberty, and estate; and if either be violated, it gives an action to redress the injury, and punish the wrong. 2 Lill. Abr. 400.

Prophecies, (Prophetia) Is foretelling of things to come, in hidden mysterious speeches; whereby commotions have been often caused in the kingdom, and attempts made by those to whom such speeches promised good success, tho' the words were mystically framed, and pointed only to the cognizance, arms or some other quality of the parties: But these, for distinction sake, are called false or phantastical prophecies. 3 Ed. 6. c. 15.

False prophecies, (where persons pretend extraordinary commissions from God) to raise jealousies in the people, or terrify them with impending judgments, &c. are punishable at Common law, as impostures: And by 5 Eliz. c. 15. None shall publish or set forth any false prophecy, with an intent to raise sedition, on pain of 10*l.* for the first offence, and a year's imprisonment; and for the second offence to forfeit all his goods and chattels, and imprisonment during life: The prosecution to be within six months. 3 Inst. 128, 129.

Prologue, (Prologus) Signifies to prolong, or put off to another day. 6 Inst. 145.

Prorogation of parliament, and adjournment were anciently used as synonyms; but of late there hath been a distinction, a prorogation making a session, and an adjournment only a continuance. Vide Parliament, and Black. Com. 1 V. 186.

Protection, (Protectio) Is generally taken for that benefit and safety which every subject hath by the King's laws; every man who is a loyal subject is, in the King's protection; and in this sense to be out of the King's protection, is to be excluded the benefit of the law. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2.

In a special signification, a protection of the King is an act of grace, by writ issued out of Chancery, which lies where a man will pass over the sea in the King's service; and by this writ (when allowed in court) he shall be quit of all manner of suits between him and any other person, except except assises of novel disseisin, assise of darrein presentment, attainder, &c. until his return. 2 Lill. Abr. 398.

Protection is an immunity granted by the King to a certain person, to be free from suits at law for a certain time, and for some reasonable cause; and 'tis a branch of the King's prerogative so to do: There are two sorts of these protections; one is cum clausula volumus; and of that protection there are three particulars; one is called quia profecturus, and is for him who is going beyond sea in the King's service; another is quia moraturus, which is for him who is already abroad in the King's service, as an ambassador, &c. and another is for the King's debtor; that he be not sued till the King's debt is satisfied: And the other sort of protection is cum clausula volumus, &c. which is granted to a spiritual corporation, that their goods or chattels be not taken by the officer of the King; for the King's service; it may likewise be granted to a spiritual person single, or to a temporal person. Reg. Orig. 23. 3 Nelfi Abr. 20.

On a person's going over sea, in the service of the King, writ of protection shall issue, to be quit of suits till he return; and then a return may be had against him: But one may proceed against defendants having such protection, until he comes and shews his protection in court, and hath it allowed; when his plea or suit shall go per illos, tho' if after it appears that the party who hath the protection, goes not about the business for which the protection was granted, the plaintiff may have a repeal, 24. Terms de Ley 2 Lill. Abr. 398.

A protection is to be made for one year, and may be renewed from year to year; but if it be made for two or three years, the justices will not allow it: And if the King grant a protection to his debtor, that he be not sued till his debt is paid; on these protections none shall be doctored; the party is to answer and go to judgment, and execution shall be stayed. 1 Inst. 130. 25 Ed. 3.

The King granted a protection to one of his debtors; and on demurrer it was alledged, that by 23 Ed. 3. c. 19 protections of this kind are expressly, that none shall be delayed on them; but the party shall answer and proceed to judgment, and execution shall stay: And the court ordered, that when it came to execution they would advise; to a respondens oster was awarded. Cro. Jac. 477.

In all protections there ought to be a causa shews for granting them: If obtained pending the suit, they are nought, and a person giving bail to an action on arrest; it is said may not plead his protection; one may not be discharged out of prison to which he is committed in execution, by protection to serve the King, &c. Not will a protection be allowed where a person is taken on a capias utlagatum, after judgment; for tho' the capias utlagatum is at the King's suit in the first place, it is in the second degree for the subject. Lamb. 197. 1 Leon. 183. Dyer 162. Hob. 115.

But in action on assumpsit a protection under the Great Seal was brought into court, for that defendant was in the wars in Flanders, &c. and it was allowed tho' after an exigent. 3 Lev. 332.

Plaintiff in an action cannot call for protection for the protection is for defendants, and shall be always for him, and it be not in special case, where plaintiff becomes defendant. New Nat. Br. 6. And no protection shall be allowed against the King. 1 Inst. 131.

A protection to live a default, is not good for any time within the kingdom of England: And required is the only where the defendant or tenant is demanded; for the protection is to protect his default, which cannot be made when he is not demanded. Term. Ann. 66. 94.

There are many kinds of protections; but they are rarely used, being often abused by act of parliament. Madox. 157. 1. See Black. Com. 3 V. 389.

When the King grants a protection, the writ thereon in some cases has been as follows:

Writ of Protection by the King.

GEORGE the Third, &c. To all and singular Sheriff, &c. and others, who shall hereafter have our present letters, greeting. Know you, that we have taken into our special protection A. B. and all his servants, lands and tenements, goods and chattels in, &c. in the county of S. and in, &c. and also all his writings whatsoever: Therefore we command you that you protect and defend the said A. B. and his servants, &c. aforesaid, not doing to him or them, or any of them, or permitting to be done to them, any injury, damage or violence, on pain of grievous forfeiture, &c. In testimony of which, &c. for one year to endure. In witness, &c.

Protection of Ambassadors. See Ambassadors and Privileges.

Protection of Children, is a natural duty, rather permitted than enjoined by any municipal law; nature, in this respect, working so strongly as to need rather a check than a spur. A parent may, by our laws, maintain and uphold his children in their law suits, without being guilty of the legal crime of maintaining quarrels: A parent may also justify an assault and battery in defence of the persons of his children: Nay, whose a man's son was beaten by another boy, and the father went near a mile to find him, and there revenged the son's quarrel by beating the other boy, of which beating he afterwards unfortunately died; it was not held to be murder, but manslaughter merely. Cro. Jac. 296. 1 Harr. P. C. 83.

Such indulgence does the law shew to the frailty of human nature, and the workings of parental affection! Black. Com. 1 V. 450.

Protection of Parliament. Peers, and members of parliaments, by their privilege, may protect their mutual servants, and those actually employed by them in service; but by a late order, this extends not to others, on written protections.

One Commons gentleman to the Earl of Suffolk, was by order of the House of Lords committed to Newgate, on proof of his being guilty of procuring and selling written protections, from and in the name of that peer, to several persons, to the great damage of their creditors, and in breach of the orders of that house; and being charged with other crimes, respecting on the House of Peers, he was sentenced to pay a fine, and to stand in the pillory, &c. Mod. Caf. in L. & E. 341. See Privileges.

Protection of the Courts at Westminster. The protection of the court of B. R. is allowed for any person who attends his own business in this court, or by virtue of any subpoena; but this is more properly privilege.

Protestations. The Statute allowing a challenge to be answered against a protestation, see. 33 Edw. 1.

Protest, (Protestatio) Hath two applications; one by way of denunciation, to call witnesses (as it were) or openly affirm, that he doth either not at all, or but conditionally yield his consent to any act, or unto the proceeding of a judge in a court, wherein his jurisdiction is doubtful, as to answer on his oath further than by law he is bound. See Plowden 676. and Reg. Orig. 306. The other is by way of complaint, as to protest a man's bill. For example, If I give money to a merchant in France, taking his bill of exchange to be repaid in England, by one whom he assigneth; if at my coming I find not myself satisfied, but either delayed or denied, then I go to the Exchange, or open discourse of merchants, and protest, that I am not paid; and thereupon, if he hath any goods remaining in any man's hands within the realm, the law of merchants is, that it be paid out of them to my full satisfaction. Cowell. See Bills of Exchange, and Black. Com. 2 V. 468; 3.

Each peer has a right, by leave of the house, when a vote passes contrary to his sentiments, to enter his dissent on the journals of the house, with the reasons for such dissent; which is usually called his protest. Har. 1 V. 168.

Protestation, (Protestatio) is a defence or safeguard to the party who makes it, from being concluded by the other party, that he is guilty of some crime, which cannot be joined by it. Black. Com. 1 V. 326.

The protestation of standing when one does not directly affirm or deny any thing alledged by another, or which he himself alledged. Cowell. As protestants that he made no testament pro testante because if he made no testament he could make no executor. Harr. Man. 26. cites 1^{l.} 1 178.

Protestation is of two kinds. 1st, When a man pleads any thing which he dare not directly affirm, or cannot plead, for fear of making his plea double; as if in conveying to himself by his plea a title, he ought to plead diverse descents by diverse persons, and he dare not affirm that they were all seized at the time of their death, or altho' he could do it, yet it will be double to plead two descents, of both which every one by himself may be a good bar, then defendant ought to plead and alledge the matter, interlacing the word protestando; as to say (by protestation) that such a one died seized, &c. and that the adverse party cannot traverse. 2dly, When one is to answer two matters, and yet by law he ought to plead but to one, then in the beginning of his plea he may say protestando & non cognoscendo such part of the matter to be true, (and then making his plea further) sed pro placito in hac parte, &c. and so he may take issue on the other part of the matter; and then he is not concluded by any of the rest of the matter which he hath by protestation so denied, but may afterwards take issue on it. Reg. Plac. 70, 71. See 18 Vin. Abr. tit. Protestation.

Prothonotary, (Protonotarius, vel Primus Notarius) is a chief officer or clerk of the Common Pleas and King's Bench; and for the first court there are three Prothonotaries, and the other hath but one: He of the King's Bench records all civil actions; as the Clerk of the Crown Office doth all criminal causes in that court: Those of the Common Pleas, since the order 14 Jac. 1. on agreement entered into between the Prothonotaries and Filers of that court, enter and enrol all manner of declarations, pleadings, assises, judgments, and actions: They make out all judicial writs, except writs of habeas corpus and distringas jurator, (for which there is a particular office erected, called the habeas corpora office.) Also writs of execution, and of seisin, of privilege for removing causes from inferior courts, writs of procedendo, scire facias, in all cases, and writs to enquire of damages; and all process upon prohibitions, on writs of audita querela, false judgment, &c. They likewise enter recognizances acknowledged in that court; and all common recoveries; and make exemplifications of records, &c. 5 H. 4. c. 14.

Proctor, Probator, mentioned in Stat. 28 Ed. 1. and 5 H. 4. c. 2.) See Approver, and 3 Inst. 129. A man became an approver, and appealed five, and every of them joined battle with him: Et duellum percussum fuit cum omnibus, & probator devixit annis quinque in duello, quorum quatuor suspendebantur, & quintus clamabat esse clericum & allocatur. & probator pardonatur. Mich. 39 E. 3. coram Rege. Rot. 97. Suff.

Province, (Provincia) signifies an out country, governed by a deputy or lieutenant. Litt. Dist.

It was used among the Romans for a country, without the limits of Italy, gained to their subjection by the sword; whereupon that part of France next the Alps was so called by them, and still retains the name.

But with us a province is most usually taken for the circuit of an archbishop's jurisdiction; as the province of Canterbury, and that of York: Yet it is mentioned in some of our statutes, for several parts of the realm; and sometimes for a county. 32 H. 8. c. 23.

Provincial, (provincialis) Of or belonging to a province; also a chief governor of a religious order; as of friars, &c. Stat. 4 H. 4. c. 17.

Provision, (provisio) Is used with us as in the Canon law for providing a bishop, or any other person, an ecclesiastical living, by the Pope, before the incumbent be dead: It is also called gratia expectativa, or mandatum de providendo: The great abuse whereof may be read not only in Duarenus de sacris Ecclesie Ministeriis & Beneficiis, lib. 3. cap. 2. but also in many statutes, viz. 35 E. 3. 22 stat. 4 & 5. commonly called the statute De provisionibus, & 27 E. 3. c. 1. & 38 E. 3. 2.

c. 1; 2; 3; 4. & 2 Ric. 2. c. 7. 3 Ric. 2. c. 3. 2. 12. 12 Ric. 2. 2. c. 2; 3; 4. & 3 H. 5. c. 4. See Præsumptio, and Black. Com. 1 V. 60. 4 V. 107.

Provisions. The acts to restrain the exorbitant abuse of arbitrary power made in the parliament at Oxford 1258, were called provisions by Rishanger, who continued Mat. Paris. anno 1260. Rex autem quia juraverat cum Edwardo primogenito suo & Baronibus, provisiones Quondam se inviolabiliter servaturum, &c. being to provide against the King's absolute will and pleasure. See Mat. Paris. sub annis 1244 & 1258. Provisions signified also providentia, or provisions of victual. Cowell

Provisions (selling unwholesome) Is an offence against publick health. To prevent which the statute 51 Hen. 3. 6. and the ordinance for bakers, c. 7. prohibit the sale of corrupted wine, contagious or unwholesome flesh, or flesh that is bought of a Jew; under pain of amercement for the first offence, pillory for the second, fine and imprisonment for the third, and abjuration of the town for the fourth. And by 12 Car. 2. c. 25. s. 11. Any brewing or adulteration of wine is punished with the forfeiture of 100 l. if done by the wholesale merchant; and 40 l. if done by the vintner or retail trader.

Proviso, Is a condition inserted in any deed, on the performance whereof the validity of the deed depends; and sometimes it is only a covenant, secundum subjunctam materiam. 2 Rep. 70. 2 Lill. Abr. 399.

The word proviso is generally taken for a condition; but it differs from it in several respects; for a condition is usually created by the grantor or lessor, but a proviso by the grantee or lessee; there is likewise a difference in placing the proviso, as if immediately after the habendum, the next covenant is that the lessee shall repair, provided always that the lessor shall find timber, this is no condition; nor is it a condition, if it comes among other covenants after the habendum, and is created by the words of the lessee; as if the lessor covenants to scour the ditches, proviso that the lessee carry away the soil, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 21.

It hath been held, that the law hath not appointed any proper place in a deed to insert a proviso; but that when it doth not depend on any other sentence, but stands originally by itself, and when it is created by the words of the grantor, &c. and is restrictive or compulsory, to enforce the grantee to do some act, in such case the word proviso makes a condition, tho' 'tis intermixed with other covenants, and doth not immediately follow the habendum. 2 Rep. 70.

A proviso always implies a condition, if there be no words subsequent which may change it into a covenant: Also it is a rule in provisions, that where the proviso is, that the lessee, &c. shall do, or not do a thing, and no penalty is added to it; this is a condition; or it is void; but if a penalty be annexed, it is otherwise. Cro. Eliz. 242. 1 Lev. 155. And where a proviso is a condition, it ought to do the office of a condition, i. e. make the estate conditional, and shall have reference to the estate, and be annexed to it; but shall not make it void without entry, as a limitation will.

A lease was made for years, rendering rent at such a day, proviso if the rent be not paid for one month after, the lease to be void; the condition was, Whether this was a condition of limitation; for if it was a condition, then the lease is not determined without entry; adjudged, that it was a limitation, tho' the words were conditional, because it appeared by the lease itself, that it was the express agreement of the parties that the lease shall be void on non-payment of the rent; and it shall be void without entry. Moor. 291. 1 Nels. Abr. 22, 26.

If a proviso be the mutual words of both parties to the deed, it amounts to a covenant: And a proviso by way of agreement to pay, is a covenant, and an action well lies upon it. 2 Rep. 72.

Plaintiff conveyed an office to defendant, proviso that out of the first profits he pay plaintiff 500 l. And it was resolved, that an action of covenant lay on this proviso; for it is not by way of condition or determination, but is nature of a covenant to pay the money. 1 Lev. 155. But defendant in consideration of 400 l. granted his lands to plaintiff for ninety-nine years, proviso if he pay so much yearly yearly during the life of S. T. &c. or 400^l. within two years after his death, then the grant to be void, and there was a bond for performance of covenants; in action of debt brought on this bond, it was adjudged, that there being no express covenant to pay the money, there could be no breach assigned on this proviso. 2 Mod. 36.

In articles of agreement to make a lease, proviso that the lessee should pay so much rent, &c. altho' there be no special words of reservation of rent, the proviso is a good reservation. Cro. Eliz. 486. And proviso with words of grant added to it, may make a grant and not a condition. Moor 174. Yet in the case of a lease for life, proviso if the lessee died before the end of sixty years, that his executors should enjoy it for so many years as would make up the sixty; it was held, that by this proviso the lessee had no estate for years, nor his executors any remainder of a term, because nothing was limited thereby to the lessee for life as a remainder, to him and his executors. 1 And. 19.

When uses are raised by covenant, in consideration of paternal love to children, &c. and after in the same indenture, there is a proviso to make leases, without any particular consideration, it is void; tho' such a proviso might be good, if the uses were created by fine, recovery, &c. because of the transmutation of the estate; and for that in this case, uses arise without consideration. 1 Rep. 176. Moor 144. 1 Lev. 30. 2 Lill. Abr. 402.

In a deed, a proviso, that if the son disturb the other uses, &c. that then a term granted to him, and the uses to the heirs of his body, shall be void; this proviso is sufficient to cease the other uses, on disturbance. 8 Rep. 90, 91. But a proviso to make an estate, limited to one and the heirs male of his body, to cease as if he was naturally dead, on his attempting any act by which the limitation of the land, or any the estate in tail, should be undone, barred, &c. hath been adjudged not good; because the estate-tail is not determined by the death of tenant in tail, but by his dying without issue male. Dyer 351. 1 Rep. 83.

A testator devised lands to one and the heirs male of his body, proviso that if he attempt to alien, then his estate to cease, and remain to another; the proviso is void. 1 Vent. 521.

A proviso that would take away the whole effect of a grant, as not to receive the profits of lands granted, &c. is void; and so is a proviso which is repugnant to the express words of the grant: In a will, testator made another his executor, provided he did not administer his estate, adjudged this proviso is void for repugnancy. Cro. Eliz. 107. Dyer 3.

And if a proviso is good at first, and afterwards it happens, that there is no other remedy but that which was restrained; the remedy shall be had notwithstanding the restraint. Wood's Inst. 431. Where a proviso is parcel of, or abridgeth a covenant, it makes an exception; when 'tis annexed to an exception in a deed, 'tis an explanation; and where added at the end of any covenant, there it extends only to defeat that covenant. 2 Leon. 72, 73. Moor 105, 471. See Deeds.

Proviso, (concerning judicial matters). Is where the plaintiff in an action desires in prosecuting his suit, and doth not bring it to trial in convenient time; the defendant in such case may take out the venire facias to the sheriff, which hath in it these words, proviso quod, &c. To the end, that if plaintiff take out any writ to that purpose, the sheriff shall summon but one jury on them both; and this is called going to trial by proviso. Old Nat. Br. 159.

By the standing rules of the court of B. R. if plaintiff will not enter his issue, defendant may by rule compel him to enter it; and if he entered, and he will not carry down the cause to trial, defendant may carry it down by proviso. 3 Salk. 361. See 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 32.

Process may be taken out by defendant in criminal cases by proviso on appeal, in the same manner as in other actions, on default of the appellant; but not in indictments, nor in actions where the King is sole party; and it hath been questioned, whether there can be any such process in informations Qui tam. 2 Hawk. 407, 408.

Provisor, is he who sues to the court of Rome, for a provision, which is called gratia expectativa according to Spelman. See also Old Nat. Brew. 243. they were prohibited by proclamation 42 Hen. 3. anno 1258. Hill. pag. 259. It is sometimes also taken for him who hath the care of providing things necessary, a purveyor. Cowell. See Provision. As to the statutes against provisors, see Black. Com. 4 V. 110.

Provost monasterii, The treasurer or steward of a religious house, who had the custody of goods and money, and supervised all accounts. Cowell.

Provost vicualium, The King's purveyor, who provided for the accommodation of his court, is so called in our historians. Cowell.

Proportion, To make killing a person man-slaughter, &c. See Murder.

Provost Marshal, Is an officer of the King's navy, who hath the charge of prisoners taken at sea: And is sometimes used for like purpose at land. 13 Car. 2. c. 9.

Proxies, Are persons appointed instead of others, to represent them.

Every peer of the realm called to parliament, hath the privilege of constituting a proxy to vote for him in his absence, on a lawful occasion; but such proxies are to be entered in person, and sometimes proxies have been denied by the King; particularly Anno 6, 27 & 39 Edw. 3. Marriage contracts have been often made by proxy, &c. See Black. Com. 1 V. 168.

Proxies, Also are annual payments made by parochial clergy to the bishop, &c. on visitations. See Procurations.

Pricks, Is a kind of service or tenure; and according to Blount, signifies an old fashioned spur, with one point only, which the tenant holding land by this tenure, was to find for the King.—Per servitium inveniendi unum equum unum saccum & unum pryk in Guerra Wallia. 1 R. 2.

And in the time of Hen. 8. Light horsemen in war were called prickers; because they used such spurs or pryks, to make their horses go with speed.

Puberty, (Pubertas) The ripe age of fourteen in men and twelve in women, when they are fit for marriage: But as to crimes and punishment, it is the age of 14 years, in both the male and female sex, and not before. 1 Hals' Hist. P. C. 18. See Black. Com. 4 V. 22.

Publication, Is used of depositions of witnesses in a cause in Chancery, in order to the hearing, and rules may be given to pass publication; which is a power to shew the depositions openly, and to give out copies of them, &c. There is also a publication of a will, which is a solemnity requisite to the making thereof, by declaring it to be the last will of the testator, in the presence of such a number of witnesses; and a will which hath been made many years, may be now published with additions, and that makes it equivalent to a new will. 3 Nels. Abr. 27. Publication of libels. Vide Libels. And Black. Com. 3 V. 450.

Public Accounts. Commissioners are to enquire of the accounts of sheriffs, customers, and other the King's officers; after passed in the Exchequer, and if detected of fraud, they shall pay treble damages, by stat. 6 H. 8. c. 3. And all the lands, tenements and hereditaments, which any person hath, shall for the payment of debts to the crown, be liable and put in execution in like manner as if he had stood bound by writing obligatory, having the effect of a statute staple, &c. Stat. 13 Eliz. c. 4.

And there have been several statutes for taking the public revenue of the kingdom, and examining and determining the debts due to the army and navy; Also corporations in the management of the King's transfers, &c. empowering commissioners for that purpose, who were to give an account of their proceedings to the King and parliament. Stat. 2 W. & M. 1 Ann. 2 Geo. 1, &c.

Public Act of parliament. A general or public act is an universal rule, that regards the whole community:

And of this the courts of law are bound to take notice judicially and ex officio, without the statute being particularly pleaded, or formerly set forth by the party who claims an advantage under it. Black. Com. 1 V. 86.

Publick Faith, (Fides publica) In the reign of Charles 1. was a pretence or cheat, to raise money of the seduced people, upon what was termed the publick faith of the nation, to make war against the King about the year 1642. Stat. 17 Car. 1. c. 18.

Public worship. See Nonconformists, Recusants, Service and Sacraments.

Pueritia, see Puberty.

Quis darrein continuance. Is a plea of new matter, pending an action, post ultimam continuationem. See Plea.

Puifne (Fr. Puifne) Younger, puny, born after. See Mulier.

Pulsator, The plaintiff or actor; and pulsare signifies to accuse any one. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 26.

Punishment, (Pœna) Is the penalty for transgressing the law: And as debts are discharged to private persons by payment; so obligations to the publick, for disturbing society, are discharged when the offender undergoes the punishment inflicted for his offence.

Kings, and such as have equal power with them, have a right to require punishment for injuries committed against themselves or their subjects, on the violation of national law; tho' the right of inflicting punishments to provide for the safety of society, was originally (before Commonwealths were erected and courts of justice ordained) in the hand of every man being equal to, and independent of others; but since, it has resided in the hands of the highest powers, as subjection to others hath taken away that primitive right: However, this power and natural right of punishing an equal, still remains in those places where the people are not subject to some form of government. Grot. de Jure Belli, lib. 2. c. 21.

The punishment of offences are many and various, adapted to the several degrees of crimes, and the countries wherein committed; and in England are beheading, hanging, imprisonment, fine, amercement, &c.

Sur auter vie, Is where lands, &c. are held for another's life. See Occupant. And Black. Com. 2 V. 120.

Purchase, (Acquisitum, perquisitum, purchaseum) Signifies the buying or acquisition of lands, or tenements with money, or by deed or agreement; and not obtaining it by descent, or hereditary right, and conjunctum perquisitum is where two or more persons join in the purchase. Litt. 12. Reg. Orig. 143.

One cometh in by purchase when he comes to lands by legal conveyance, and he hath a lawful estate: And a purchase is always intended by title, either from some consideration, or by gift; (for a gift is in law a purchase) whereas descent from an ancestor cometh of course by act of law; also all contracts are comprehended under this word purchase. 1 Inst. 18. Doct. and Stud. c. 24.

Purchase in opposition to descent is taken largely; if an estate comes to a man from his ancestors without writing, that is a descent: But where a person takes any thing from an ancestor, or others, by deed, will or gift, and not as heir at law; that is a purchase. 2 Litt. Abr. 403.

When an estate doth originally vest in the heir, and never was nor could be in the ancestor, such heir shall take by way of purchase: But when the thing might have vested in his ancestor, tho' it be first in the heir, and not in him at all; the heir shall have it in nature of descent. 1 Rep. 95, 106.

An heir takes an estate by will in another manner than the Common law would have given it; there he takes by purchase, and not by descent; but then he must be the right heir. 2 Lev. 79.

1. Who shall be deemed purchasers.

A. enters into partnership in 5ths, with three others, for 21 years, for digging mines in A.'s lands, A. to have two 5ths, and also in consideration of his ownership of the land, to have a tenth more out of the share of the other partners. Pursuant to the articles, they searched for the mines, and after two years time, and the expence of about 120*l.* they discovered a valuable mine, and worked for about three months, and then A. dies, and his widow sets up a voluntary settlement, made after marriage. The court inclined that the partners were as purchasers, and that the voluntary settlement should not stand against them. 2 Vern. 326.

The wife joins with the husband in letting in an incumbrance on her jointure, and barring the estate-tail, and then limits the uses to the husband for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder to their daughter. Per Lord Keeper Wright, The daughters are not purchasers so as to shut out a judgment creditor of the husband's, antecedent to barring the estate-tail; it might have been a good consideration for both, but it was not expressed in the deed, to be any consideration for settling the estate on the daughters, but was a voluntary gift of the wife to her husband, therefore the daughter's estate must be taken to be voluntary; and so a judgment-creditor ought to have the assistance of this court before them. Cant. Prec. 114.

A. seised in fee, settled his estate in 1712. to the use of himself for life, remainder to B. in tail, but with power of revocation, by any writing signed, &c. and attested by three, &c. credible witnesses. In 1715, A. by deed, attested by two witnesses only, reciting, that he was indebted, as in a schedule annexed, conveyed his estate to W. R. and W. S. and their heirs, in trust to pay his said debts by profits, mortgage or sale; and after payment thereof, to pay the overplus, and reconvey such part as should be unfold, to A. or such other person, &c. and for such uses, &c. as he, by any writing signed and sealed, and attested, &c. should direct. A. died without issue, but left the said B. and C. the daughters of two sisters, his heirs at law. The deed of 1715 was kept private till after the death of W. S. the surviving trustee in 1724. and was then laid before counsel, who directed, that the heir W. S. should assign the legal estate to the trustees in the deed of 1712. which was done. Afterwards, in 1726. on a treaty of marriage between Lord Fauconbridge and B. a marriage settlement was prepared by the same counsel, as counsel for Lord Fauconbridge, who made a settlement on B. in consideration of the great estate in land which he was to have with her. The surviving trustee in the deed of 1712, joined in this marriage settlement. C. brought a bill claiming a moiety of the estate of A. as coheirs with B. for that the deed in 1715, was a revocation of the deed in 1712. Lord F. pleaded, that he was a purchaser under the deed of 1712, without notice of that in 1715, and that the settlement made by him on B. was in contemplation of that settlement in 1712, and that the surviving trustee in that settlement was party to the marriage settlement; and that tho' the purchase was not of the legal estate, but the trust only, that it will make no difference, according to Wilker and Redington's case, 1 Vern. 501. and that neither will it differ the case, tho' there was no actual conveyance; for as the trustee in the deed of 1712, always acted under that deed for B. that trust shall subsist as to himself, who is a fair purchaser; and that he shall not be affected by constructive notice to his counsel, as having been advised with on these two deeds in 1724; for it must be intended, that at the time of the counsel's being concerned for him, which was in 1726, he had forgot that he had ever seen this deed of 1715, there being an interval of two years between his first seeing it, and his being counsel for defendant. And for these reasons, the court held, that this could not be notice to his lordship. Id. Ch. B. Reynolds who assisted the Lord Chancellor, held, that the Lord F. could be a purchaser of no more than B. had, as no actual conveyance was made to him. The Master of the Rolls said, that to be a purchaser in the notion of equity, there must be an actual contract, and a consideration paid; therefore, if at the time of the marriage the deed of 1712 stood revoked, the trustees could be seised only of a moiety for the use of B. consequently Lord F. can be a purchaser purchaser of no more. Lord Chancellor decreed a moiety of the estate, and an account of the rents and profits to C. since the death of A. See Gibb. 277. and L. P. Case. 391 to 402.

2. Of purchasers for a valuable consideration.

A purchaser who comes in without notice of a rent-charge shall not be chargeable therewith, altho' given to a charitable use. Tosh. 258.

A bill was, to be relieved on a trust, and charged defendant with notice; defendant pleaded his being a purchaser for a valuable consideration; this was objected to as not good, because he did not say what the valuable consideration was; for 5s. is a valuable consideration, but yet it is not an equitable one; but the court declared that in this case the plea was good enough.

Notice of an incumbrance before the conveyance is executed, shall charge the purchaser. Chan. Cases 34.

Purchaser shall not be affected by a judgment in equity, without express notice of it before the purchase, otherwise it is atlaw. Chan. Cases 37.

A purchaser of lands from A. which B. makes title to, getting the deeds which make out B.'s title, is not bound to discover them. Chan. Cases 69.

Plea of his being a purchaser for a valuable consideration was over-ruled, because he did not plead the purchase made from one of the plaintiff's ancestors; for a purchase from a stranger, who might have no good title, was held no good plea. N. Cb. R. 135.

A. having a long lease of a house, in which his wife had some interest, by her consent renews it for eighty-one years, and in consideration of 400*l.* assigns it to B. who assigns it to C. his son, who married M. and died, leaving M. his executrix; M. on a second marriage, conveys it to trustees, &c. A. by bill sets forth this assignment, and that it was a mortgage, and that B. agreed to execute a reconveyance thereof, &c. and prayed a redemption. The executrix pleads she was a purchaser without notice of such agreement; and in consideration of a marriage with J. S. and of his undertaking to pay her debts, she assigned the original lease, &c. such a day to trustees, to the use of her intended husband, not having any notice of the agreement prior to the executing the said deed on marriage. It was decreed, that defendants were in nature of purchasers; and the plea was allowed. Finch R. 9.

A. indebted by bond, devised a debt to be paid out of his personal estate; but if it was not sufficient, then to sell his real estate, and pay it: The estate was sold, and by several mesne conveyances came to defendant, who was sued for the debt as charged on the lands which he had bought. Defendant pleaded, that he had no notice of the demand, and was a purchaser for a valuable consideration, and that the personal estate was first liable, and that the purchase money which was paid to two other of the defendants was liable in the next place; and that there were other lands, which descended to one of them on the death of A. which ought to come in aid of him, and decreed accordingly. Fin. R. 37.

A purchaser for a valuable consideration, without notice was decreed to pay arrears of annuity charged on the lands purchased, tho' the same were due thirty years before, and no demand in all that time. Finch R. 252.

A voluntary conveyance decreed against a (jointress) purchaser for a valuable consideration; (but it seems, that the not having notice was the fault of the jointress, &c.) See Chan. Cases 291, 292.

A purchaser from J. S. who has a decree against him in Chancery for land, shall be bound by the decree, tho' he has no notice of it. Chan. Cases 43.

But by a dowress to remove a fruit term, defendant pleads himself a purchaser, but does not deny notice, and so was ordered to answer. Fern. 179.

Bill was brought to prove a will, and perpetuate the testimony of witnesses; defendant pleaded himself a purchaser without notice of such will, and insisted there had been a verdict in affirmance of such will, (nothing hindering the plaintiff, but that if he had a title he might renew it at law) the plaintiff ought not to be admitted to examine his witnesses, thereby to hang a cloud over the purchaser's estate; and on debate the court allowed the plea. Fern. 354.

A. mortgaged land to B. and afterwards by his will (having sons C. and D.) devised the equity of redemption to D.—B. and C. join in an assignment of the mortgage to E. tho' E. pleaded want of notice of the will, and that C. was the visible heir; yet decreed, that D. should have the equity of redemption on the foot of the first mortgage. N. Cb. R. 153.

A. purchases, having notice of a settlement whereby B. the vendor was but tenant for life, remainder to his first, &c. son in tail. Afterwards A. sells to C. who had no notice; B. dies, leaving a son; the bill was dismissed as to C. but decreed A. to account for the consideration money, for which he sold the estate, with interest from the decease of B. thereout discounting what was due on a mortgage prior to the settlement which he had bought in. 2 Fern. 384.

Cowper C. said, He took it to be a rule in equity, that where a man is a purchaser without notice, he shall not be annoyed in equity; not only where he has a prior legal estate, but where he has a better title or right to call for the legal estate than the other; therefore dismissed the bill. The case was; A. purchases of B. who had done an act of bankruptcy, but without notice of it; afterwards a commission is taken out, and there being a term standing out in trustees, assignee brings a bill against them, and the purchaser to have the term assigned to him. 2 Fern. 599.

A bill was to redeem lands mortgaged in 1694. to defendant's grandfather by plaintiff's father for 500 years, to be void on payment of 126*l.* and interest. Defendant pleads, that he is a devisee of those lands under his grandfather's will, who in 1692. purchased them for a 200 years term without condition of redemption, and had enjoyed 15 years quiet possession. But the court over-ruled the plea for defendant's not answering sufficiently as to the mortgage, and the plea of the purchase may be true, for it may be only a term for years to attend the inheritance. G. Equ. R. 185.

Purchase and value of Land. Lands are purchased at diverse rates in this kingdom; according to their situation, &c.

An estate of fee-simple in lands, is usually valued in the country at twenty years purchase. Lands near London yield about twenty-five years purchase; and in Wales, not above eighteen or nineteen.

The fee of tithes of perpetual advowsons is worth about twenty-two years purchase: And fee-farm rents issuing out of lands, and the fee of ground-rents, are rated at twenty-four or twenty-five years purchase.

The fee of houses in London sells for seventeen or eighteen years purchase, if in good repair, and the ground rents are not high; otherwise for less: Houses not in London, but well situated, without any lands to them, are sold for fifteen or sixteen years purchase: For a lease of a house for thirty years, about eight years purchase is given in London; and for one and twenty years about six years value.

A freehold lease for three lives absolute, or a copyhold estate for the like term, where the quit-rents and heriots selected are not higher than usual, is rated at fourteen years purchase; for the first life eight, for the second four, and two for the third life; or seven, five and two. A chattel lease for three lives, thirteen years purchase.

The exchanging one life for another is generally one year's purchase; but if a fee-simple be exchanged for a lease for one, two or three years purchase. A widowhood in a copyhold, after death of the husband a third life, is valued at one year's purchase. The fee in reversion after three lives, is worth nine, seven, and five years purchase, after one, two or three lives; and more where there is timber, or the estate improveable. Land. Purch. Comp. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c.

Purgation, (Purgatio) Is the clearing a man's name of a crime, whereof he is publicly suspected, and accused before a judge: Of which there was formerly great use in England.

Purgation is either canonica, or vulgaris.

Canonical purgation is, that which is prescribed by the Canon law, the form whereof used in the Spiritual court, is that the person suspected take his oath, that he is clear of the fact objected against him, and bringing his honest neighbours with him to make oath, that they believe he swears truly.

The vulgar purgation, according to the ancient manner, was by fire or water ordal, or by combat, abolished by canon. Staudf. P. C. lib. 2. cap. 48. Stat. Westm. 1. cap. 2.

Purgation is one of the punishments of the Ecclesiastical courts; but the Stat. 13 Car. 2. c. 12. having taken away the oath ex officio, of persons accusing or purging themselves, &c. some maintain that all the proceedings of purgation on common fame fall too; others say, there is still a legal purgation left, but not canonical. Wood's Inst. 506, 507. Vide Clergy, &c. And Black. Com. 3 V. 100, 342, 447. 4 V. 361.

Purificatio Beate Mariæ Virginis, Mentioned in the Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 21. See Candlemas.

Purlicu-Men, Are those who have ground within the purlieu, and being able to dispend forty shillings a year freehold; who, on these two points, are licensed to hunt in their own purlieus, observing what is required. Manw. For. Laws 151, 157, 180, 186. See the next word.

Purlue, or Purlieu, (from the Fr. pur, i. e. purus, & lieu, locus) Is all that ground near a forest, which being added to the ancient forests by King Hen. 2. Ric. 1. and King John, was afterwards disafforested and severed by the Charta de Foresta, and the perambulations and grants thereon, by Hen. 3. so that it become purlue, viz. pure and free from the laws and ordinances of the forest. Manwood's For. Laws. par. 2. c. 20.

Our ancestors called this ground purlieu, purum locum, because it was exempted from that servitude which was formerly laid on it: As Manwood and Crompton call it pourallee, we may derive it from pur, purus, & allee, ambulatorio, because he who walketh or courseth within that circuit, is not liable to the laws or penalties incurred by them who hunt within the forest precincts; but pourallee is said to be properly the perambulation whereby the purlieu is disafforested. Stat. 33 Edw. 1. 4 Inst. 304.

Owners of grounds within the purlieu by disafforestation, may fell timber, convert pastures into arable, &c. inclose them with any kind of inclosure; erect edifices, and dispose of the same as if they had never been afforested; and a purlieu-man may as lawfully hunt to all intents within the purlieu, as any man may in his own grounds which were never afforested: He may keep his dogs within the purlieu unexpeditated; and the wild beasts belong to the purlieu-man ratione soli, so long as they remain in his grounds, and he may kill them. 4 Inst. 303.

If the purlieu-man chase the beast with grey hounds, and they fly towards the forest for safety, he may pursue them to the bounds of the forest, and if he then do his endeavour to call back and take off his dogs from the pursuit, altho' the dogs follow the chase in the forest, and kill the King's deer there; this is no offence, so as he enter not into the forest, nor meddle with the deer so killed: And if the dogs fasten on the deer before he recover the forest, and the deer drag the dogs into the forest, in such case the purlieu-man may follow his dogs and take the deer. 4 Inst. 303, 304.

But in the case of Sir Richard Wyss, it was said, that there was no purlieu in law to hunt; that it cannot be by prescription, and there is nothing in statutes as to hunting; therefore purlieu-men may only keep out the deer, but cannot kill them, tho' they be in their ground. 1 Jones Rep. 278. See Moor 706, 987.

And notwithstanding purlieus are absolutely disafforested, it hath been permitted, that the ranger of the forest shall, as often as the wild beasts of the forest range into the purlieu, with his hounds recatch them back to the forest. 4 Inst. See 33 Ed. 1. Stat. 5.

Purparty, (Fr. four part, i. e. pro parte) Is that part or share of an estate, first held in common by parceners, which is by partition allotted to any of them: To make purparty is to divide and sever the lands which fall to parceners, which till partition they held jointly, and pro indiviso. Old Nat. Br. 11.

Purpresture, (Purprestura, from the Fr. pourpreist, an inclosure) Is when any thing is done to the nuisance of the King's demesnes, or the highways, &c. by inclosure, or buildings; endeavouring to make that private which ought to be publick. Glanvil. lib. 9. c. 11. 1 Inst. 38, 272. And when a man takes to himself, or incroaches any thing which he ought not, it is a purpresture. Kit. b. 10. 2 Inst. 38. See Pourpresture.

Purse, A certain quantity of money, containing 500 dollars, or 125 l. in Turkey. Merch. Dist.

Pursuivant, (from the Fr. poursuivre, i. e. agere, persequi) Signifies the King's messenger attending on him to be sent on any business or message. See Pursuivant.

Purbepance. See Purbepance. As well before as after the conquest, the King, on his ancient demesnes of the crown of England, had houses of husbandry, and stocks for the furnishing necessary provisions for his household, and the tenants of those manors did by their tenures manure, till, &c. and reap the corn on the King's demesnes, mowed his meadows, &c. repaired the fences, and performed all necessary things belonging to husbandry on the King's demesnes: In respect of which services, and to the end they might apply the same the better, they had many liberties and privileges, as that they should not be sued out of the court of that manor, nor impanelled of any jury or inquest, nor appear at any other court, but only at the court of the manor, nor be contributory to the expences of the knights of the shire which served at parliament, nor pay any toll, &c. which liberties and immunities continue to this day, altho' the original cause is ceased. 2 Inst. 542, 543. c. 2.

Hawkins (Pl. C. 114. c. 47. f. 1.) says, that this method being troublesome and inconvenient, was by degrees disused, and afterwards the King used to appoint certain officers to buy in provision for his household, who were called purveyors, and claimed many privileges by the prerogative of the crown, and seem to have had the pre-emption of all such victuals as were bought by any to sell again.

Purview, (Fr. pourveu, a patent or grant) Is the body, or that part of an Act of Parliament which begins with Be it enacted, &c. The statute 3 Hen. 7. stands upon a preamble and purview. 2 Inst. 403. 12 Rep. 20.

Putage, (Putagium, Fornicatio ex parte faminæ, quod vox nulla Latina exprimit, quasi putam agere: From the French putain, or the Italian putta, i. e. meretrix) fornication.

This crime was so odious, that if any heir-female under guardianship were guilty thereof, they forfeited their part to their coheirs, or if she were an only heiress, the lord of the fee took it by escheat. Spelman. Corwell.

Putative, Putative, reputed, or commonly esteemed, in opposition to notorious and unquestionable.—Pater putativus the reputed father of the child. Jr. Brompton 963.

Putting in test, See Black. Com. 4 V. 242.

Putna, (q. Putna) Is a custom claimed by lorders in forest, and sometimes by baillifs of hundreds, to take man's meat, horse meat, and dog's meat, of the tenants and inhabitants within the perambulation of the forest, hundred, &c. and in the liberty of Knareburgh it was long since entered into the payment of 4 d. in money by each tenant. M. de Temp. Ed. 3. 4 Inst. 207. The land subject to this custom is called Terra Putnarum. Plac. apud C. 31 Ed. 3.

Pyper, or Pyet, A small ship or herring boat. 31 Ed. 3. c. 2.

Quadragesima, The fortieth part; also the time of Lent, from our Saviour's Ferry Day to Asc. Litt. Dist. and Quadragesima Sunday, is the first Sunday day in Lent; so called, because about the fortieth day before Easter. Blount.

Quadragesimalia. In former days it was the custom for people to visit their mother church on Midlent-Sunday, and to make their offerings at the High Altar; as the like devotion was again observed in Whitsun-Week: but as the processions and oblations at Whitsuntide were sometimes commuted into a rated payment of Pentecostals; so the Lent or Easter offerings were changed into a customary rate called Quadragesimalia, and Denarii Quadragesimales, also Lature Jerusalem.

Quadrans, a fourth part of a penny: and before the reign of Ed. 1. the smallest coin was a sterling or penny, marked with a cross, by the guidance whereof a penny might be cut into halves for a half-penny, or into quarters or four parts for farthings; till to avoid the fraud of unequal cutting, that King coined half-pence and farthings in round distinct pieces. Matt. Westm. Anno 1279.

Quadrantata Terra, The fourth part of an acre. See Fardingdeul, or Quadrarium.

Quadrivium, The center of four ways, where four roads meet and cross each other. By statute, posts with inscriptions are to be set up at such cross ways, as a direction to travellers, &c. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 16.

Quæ est eadem, In pleading is used to supply the want of a traverse. 2 Lill. Abr. 405.

In a clausum fregit such a day, defendant pleads plaintiff's licence to him to enter on the same day, and that virtute inde he entered; he need not say Quæ est eadem transgressio: so in trespass for taking goods; if defendant justifies the same day and place: And in trespass and battery, if defendant justifies that the same day and place the plaintiff assaulted him, and that what damages happened to him was of his own wrong; this is good without Quæ est eadem transgressio, &c. tho' he doth not directly answer the assault laid by plaintiff; but whilse he justifies at another day, or at other place, then he ought to say, Quæ est eadem. 21 Hen. 7. pl. 2.

A fact laid Nov. 1. and a justification Nov. 2. Quæ est eadem, is well enough without a traverse, the day not being material; but it had been naught, if the day had been material. 1 Lev. 241.

If a trespass is alledged 10 Nov. and justification the 11 Nov. and there be an averment of Quæ est eadem, it is here held good without making any traverse. Lattw. 1457.

Where defendant justifies dicto tempore in the plaintiff's declaration, he hath no occasion to say Quæ est eadem transgressio; because he agrees with plaintiff in the time and place mentioned in his declaration, and gives an answer to it. Mich. 5 W. & M. B. R.

Quæ plura, Was a writ which lay where an inquisition had been taken by an escheator of lands, &c. that a man died seised of, and all the land was supposed not to be found by the office or inquisition; this writ was therefore to enquire of what other lands or tenements the party died seised: But it is now useless, since the taking away the court of wards and offices post mortem. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. Quakers, (From Tremulus.) Are such who pretend to tremble or quake, in the exercise of their religion. The 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 27. enacts, That Quakers making and subscribing the declaration of fidelity mentioned in 1 W. & M. and owning King William to be rightful and lawful King, shall not be liable to the penalties against others reverting to take the oath, or for subscribing the declaration of fidelity, &c. they are disabled to vote at election of members of parliament.

Quakers, where an oath is required, are permitted to make a solemn affirmation or declaration, declaring in the presence of God the witness of the truth, &c. But they are not capable of being witnesses in a criminal cause. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. Unless they are sworn like other Protestants.

On the affirmation of a Quaker, the court will not grant an attachment for non-performance of an award. 1 Strange 441. Nor security for the peace. Ibid. 527. Nor a rule for an information. 2 Strange 856, 872, 946. But a rule, to shew cause why an appointment of overseers should not be quashed being served by a Quaker, was made absolute on his affirmation; this not being looked on as a criminal prosecution, tho' on the crown side, and the rule in the King's name. 2 Strange 1219.

The Quakers affirmation is ordained to be in force for ever, and the form of it appointed by 1 Geo. 1. cap. 6. And the 8 Geo. 1. cap. 6. authorizes the affirmation of Quakers with the words, I do promise and sincerely declare in the presence of you, &c. without saying in the presence of God; but false and corrupt affirming, incurs the penalties of wilful perjury.

And by 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. an affirmation shall be allowed in all cases where by any act of parliament an oath is required, tho' no provision therein for admitting a Quaker to make his affirmation. Quakers refusing to pay tithes, or church rates, justices of peace are to determine them, and order costs, &c. 7 & 8 W. 3. 1 Geo. 1. And Quakers may be committed to prison for non-payment of tithes, on 27 H. 8. c. 20. which is not repealed by 7 & 8 W. 3. which gives another remedy. Ld. Raym. 323. In all cases, except criminal, where by any act of parliament an oath shall be required, the affirmation of a Quaker shall be allowed, tho' no provision for that purpose in the act.

Quale jus, A judicial writ which was brought where a man of religion had judgment to recover land, before execution was made of the judgment; it went forth to the escheator between judgment and execution, to inquire whether the religious person had right to recover, or the judgment were obtained by collusion between the parties, to the intent that the lord might not be defrauded. Reg. Jucis 8, 16, 46. Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 32.

Qualified, signifies enabled to hold two benefices. See Plurality.

Qualified (or base) Fee, is such a one as hath a qualification subjoined thereto, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it, is at an end. As, in the case of a grant to A. and his heirs, TENANTS OF THE MANOR OF DALE; in this instance, whenever the heirs of A. cease to be tenants of that manor, the grant is entirely defeated. So when Hen. 6. granted to John Talbot, lord of the manor of Kingston-Lishe in Berks, that he and his heirs, LORDS OF THE SAID MANOR, should be peers of the realm, by the title of Barons of Lishe; here John Talbot had a base or qualified fee in that dignity; and the instant he or his heirs quitted the lordship of this manor, the dignity was at an end. Co. Lit. 27.

This estate is a fee, because by possibility it may endure for ever in a man and his heirs; yet as that duration depends on the concurrence of collateral circumstances, which QUALIFY and DEBEAT the purity of the donation, it is therefore a qualified or base fee. Black. Com. 2 V. 109.

Qualified property. See Possession, Property, and Black. Com. 2 V. 393.

Quædam se bene gesserit, Is a clause often inserted in letters patent, the grant of offices, as in those to the Bishops of the Exchequer, &c. which must be intended in matters concerning their offices; and is nothing but what the law would have implied, if the office had been granted for life. 4 Inst. 179.

Quædam mactis, i. e. How much he has destroyed, is an action on the case, so called, grounded on a promise to any plaintiff for doing any thing so much as he should deserve or merit.

If a man retains any person to do work or other thing for him; as a taylor to make a garment, a carrier to carry goods, &c. without any certain agreement; in such case, the law implies that he shall pay for the same, as much as they are worth, and shall be reasonably demanded; for which quantum meruit may be brought: And if one sue another on a promise to satisfy him for work done, &c. he must shew and aver in his declaration how much he deserved for his work. See Black. Com. 3 V. 161.

Quantum valebat, Is where goods and wares sold are delivered by a tradesmen at no certain price, or to be paid for them as much as they are worth in general; then quantum valebat lies, and plaintiff is to aver them to be worth so much: so where the law obliges one to furnish another with goods or provisions; as an innkeeper his guests, &c. *Practif. Quare cum, Are general words used in original writs, &c. See Original.

Quare eiecit infra Terminum, Is a writ which lies for lessee, where he is cast out of his farm before his term is expired, against a feoffee of the lands, or the lessor who ejected him; and the effect of it is to recover his term again, and damages. Reg. Orig. 227. F. N. B. 197. New Nat. Br. 439.

This writ was devised for the following cause:

If a man make a lease of land for years, and after oust his lessee, and then makes a feoffment of the land to a stranger in fee; now the lessee cannot have a writ of ejectione firme against the feoffee, because he did not put him out, and in that case the lessee hath no other remedy but to enter again into the land; and if the feoffees then put him out, the lessee may bring ejectione firme vi & armis; but before entry made by lessee, he had no remedy against the feoffee: therefore, by the equity of the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 24. which enacts, "That where it shall happen in one case, a writ is found, and in the like case falling under the same law; and wanting the same remedy, &c. it is not so, the clerks of the Chancery are to agree upon a proper writ," &c. By reason of that statute, this writ was devised. New Nat. Br. 439.

And if a person lease lands for years, and the lessor suffer a recovery to be had against him on a feigned title, and the recoverer entereth; the lessee shall have his writ of quare eiecit infra terminum, &c. And the words of the writ are, Occasione cujus venditionis; and yet the same is not properly a sale, but those words are only of form. Ibid.

It is in the election of lessee, or if he grants over his term, the second lessee, to sue a writ of ejectione firme, or a quare eiecit infra terminum, against the lessor, or his heir, or against the lord by escheat, &c. if they put the termor out of his term. 19 Hen. 6. See Black. Com. 3 V. 206.

Quare impedit, Is a writ lying for him who hath purchased an advowson, against a person who disturbs him in his right of advowson by presenting a clerk thereto, when the church is void. F. N. B. 32. Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 5.

It differs from assise of darrein presentment (or ultime presentmentis) because that lies where a man or his ancestors, under whom he claims, have formerly presented to the church; and this is for him who is purchaser himself; but in both plaintiff recovers the presentation and damages; tho' in the writ of darrein presentment, &c. he recovers only the presentation, not the title to the advowson, as he doth in a quare impedit; for which reason that assise is seldom brought, and for that the proceedings in it are very tedious; where a man may have assise of darrein presentment, he may have quare impedit. 2 Inst. 356. 3 Nels. Abr. 31.

The writ quare impedit is to be brought in six months after the avoidance; and by it a patron may be relieved, not only on his presentation to a church, but to a chapel, prebend, vicarage, &c. And this writ lies of a donative, and the special matter is to be set forth in the declaration: It also lieth for a deanery by the King, altho' it be elective; and for an archdeaconry, but not for a mere office of the church. 1 Inst. 344. 1 Lion. 205. And the chapter may have a quare impedit against the dean, of their several possessions. 40 Ed. 3. 48.

If the quare impedit be for a donative; the writ shall be quare impedit to present to the donative; if of a parsonage, then quare impedit presentare ad ecclesiam; if to a vicarage, ad vicariam; if to a prebend, ad prebendam, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 35.

If a bishop be disturbed to collate, where he ought to make collation, he may have a writ quare impedit, and the writ shall be quod permittat ipsum presentare, &c. and he shall count on the collation: and if the King be disturbed in his collation by letters patent, he shall have quare impedit, &c. New Nat. Br. 73.

Grantee of a next avoidance may bring this writ against the patron who granted the avoidance. 39 Hen. 6.

It may be brought by executors, for a disturbance in vita testatoris; and executors being disturbed in their presentation, may bring quare impedit as well as their testator might. Owen 99. Lutw. 1.

Husband and wife jointly, or the husband alone without his wife may have the writ quare impedit; and if a man who hath an advowson in right of his wife be disturbed in his presentation, and dies, the wife shall bring it on that disturbance. 14 Hen. 4. 5 Rep. 97.

The heir shall not have quare impedit, for a disturbance tempore patris; nor can he have execution on a recovery by the ancestor. Br. 2. Imp. pl. 7, 9. But by 13 Ed. 1. c. 5. Usurpation of churches during wardship, particular estates or vacancy, &c. shall not bar an heir at full age, reversioner in possession, or a spiritual person in succession, from having a writ possessory of quare impedit, &c. as the ancestor or predecessor might have had, if such usurpation had been in their time: And the same form of pleading shall be had in darrein presentment, and quare impedit.

Where partition is made on record, to present by turns, the coparcener who is disturbed shall not be put to a quare impedit; but may have remedy on the roll, by seire facias: it is otherwise on an agreement to present. Stat. ibid. 22 Ed. 4. 8.

If tenant in tail suffer an usurpation, and die, and six months pass, the issue in tail cannot bring quare impedit; but at the next avoidance he may have it within the six months. 46 Assise 4.

This writ is all in the possession; and the presentment of grantee of the next avoidance is a good title for the grantor and patron in fee to bring it; and likewise for his heir, and other grantees. 9 Hen. 7. 23. 5 Rep. 97.

Presentment alledged in lessee for life, or years, or it is said, in tenant at will, is sufficient in quare impedit: so of tenant in dower, or by the curtesy; also of tenants by statute merchant, staple or elegit, &c. 21 Ed. 4. 2, 5. Rep. 97. Mallory's Q. Imped. 155.

It supposes both a possession and a right; and plaintiff must alledge a presentation in himself, or in those under whom he claims; unless it be in case of lapse, &c.

In the declaration of plaintiff, it is not sufficient for him to alledge, that he, or such a person from whom he claims, were seised of the advowson of the church; but he must alledge a presentation made by one of them; for if he doth not, defendant may demur to the declaration: and the reason is, that defendant, by joining the last presentation to his own title, makes it appear, that he hath a right to present now as well as then. Cro. Eliz. 518. 5 Rep. 57. Vaugh. 57. The writ must be brought in that county where the church is; the patron and incumbent are to be named in it, the one as he may be disposed of his patronage, the other of his presentation; and it is usual to make the bishop a defendant, to prevent a lapse, where the church is void. Prudentia 12.

Quare impedit will not lie against the ordinary and incumbent, without naming the patron; because a Common law the incumbent could not plead any thing which concerned the right of patronage, therefore it is unreasonable that he alone should be named in the writ who could not defend the patronage; but 25 Ed. 3. c. 7. enables him to plead against the King, and to defend his incumbency, altho' he claims nothing in the patronage; and by that statute he shall plead against any common person; son; tho' with this difference, that when the inheritance of the patron is to be divested by judgment in a quare impedit, there he must be named in the writ; but where the next presentation only is to be recovered, he need not be named: yet where the King presents without a title, and his clerk is inducted, the quare impedit is to be against the ordinary and incumbent; for it will not lie against the King; but if he is plaintiff, the writ may be brought against the patron alone, without naming the incumbent. 7 Rep. 25. 2 Cro. 650. Palm. 306.

If the church be full of a presentation, so that there is no danger of lapse, the bishop need not be named in a quare impedit; but it is otherwise where it stands on a disturbance only: And tho' this writ will lie against a patron alone; yet in a common case, where any clerk is presented and inducted, the incumbent shall not be removed, without naming him also. Hob. 320. Giff. & Giff. 235. Jenk. Cent. 200.

The only plea the bishop hath by the Common law on a quare impedit is, that he claimed nothing but as ordinary; he could not counterplead the patron's title, or any thing to the right of patronage, nor could the incumbent counterplead such title, till the 25 Ed. 3. by which both the bishop and incumbent may counterplead the title of the patron; the one, when he collates by lapse, or makes title himself to the patronage; the other being persona impersonata, may plead his father's title, and counterplead the title of plaintiff: And it has been adjudged, that incumbents cannot plead to the title of the patronage, without shewing that he is persona impersonata of the presentation of the patron. W. Jones 4. March 159. 3 Nels. Abr. 38.

In a quare impedit, though it was found that the church was full of another, who was a stranger to the writ, and it did not appear whether he came in by a better title than that which was found for plaintiff; it was held, that plaintiff might have a general writ to the bishop, which he is bound by law to execute, or shall be amerced, &c. and he cannot return that the church is full of another; for no issue can be joined between the bishop and plaintiff, because he has no day in court. 6 Rep. 51. 3 Leon. 136.

But where plaintiff recovered an advowson in ejectment, and thereupon had a writ to the bishop, there being another incumbent in the church, who was not a party to the action; adjudged that this writ would not lie without a seire facias to the incumbent. Id.

If it appears in quare impedit, either in pleading, or by confession of the parties, that neither of them have a title, but that it is in the King; the court may award a writ to the bishop for the King, to remove the incumbent, and admit idoneam personam ad presentationem regis; but this must be when his title is very plain. Hob. 126, 163. 1 Leon. 323.

In quare impedit, plaintiff and defendant are both actors, so that defendant may have a writ to the bishop, as well as plaintiff; but not without a title appearing in the court; wherefore if defendant never appears, plaintiff must make out a title for form sake, and so must defendant if plaintiff be non-suited. Hob. 189.

If plaintiff, after appearance, in a quare impedit be non-suited, it is peremptory; because defendant on title made, whereby he becomes actor, shall have a writ to the bishop; and it is the same in case of a discontinuance. 7 Rep. 27.

It is the nature of a quare impedit to be final, either on a discontinuance or nonsuit; and a man cannot have two suits for the same thing in this case against one person, tho' he may have several *quare impedit*s against several persons. 7 Rep. 27. Hob. 137.

The patron, patron, and ordinary are sued; the ordinary disclaiming, and the patron loses by default; plaintiff shall have judgment to recover his presentation, and a writ issue to the bishop, &c. with a cessat executio, until the plea is determined between the plaintiff and patron. Vaughan 6.

Several were plaintiffs in a quare impedit, defendant pleaded the release of one of them pending the writ; and it was resolved, that this release shall only bar him who made it, and that the writ shall stand good for the rest. 5 Rep. 97.

There are *quare impedit*s against the archbishop, the bishop, and three defendants; the archbishop pleaded that he claimed nothing but as metropolitan; and the bishop pleaded that he claimed nothing but as ordinary; and the defendants made title; but there was a verdict against them: It was a question, Whether the writ of execution should be awarded to the archbishop, or the bishop; and it was held, that where neither of them are parties in interest, it may be directed to either; but if the bishop is party in interest, it must be directed to the archbishop. 6 Rep. 48. 3 Bull. 274. And if the Bishop of Canterbury be plaintiff in a quare impedit, the writ must be directed to the archbishop of York, &c. Show. 329.

If defendant pleads no disturbance, which is in effect the general issue in a quare impedit, this will be only a defence of the wrong with which he stands charged, and is so far from controverting the plaintiff's title, that it, as it were confesses it; and plaintiff may presently pray a writ to the bishop, or maintain the disturbance in order to recover damages. Hob. 163.

There must be a disturbance to maintain this action; in a quare impedit, the patron declared on a disturbance of him to present 1 November; the incumbent pleaded, that 1 May next after, the presentation devolved on the Queen by lapse, and she presented him to the church, &c. And on demurrer the plea was held ill; because defendant had not confessed and avoided, nor traversed the disturbance, as forth in the declaration: And tho' by the demurrer the Queen's title was confessed, it appearing that it was already executed, and defendant having lost his incumbency by ill pleading, the writ shall not be awarded to the bishop for the Queen to present again, but for the patron. 1 Leon. 294.

In all *quare impedit*s, defendant may traverse the presentation alleged by plaintiff, if the matter of fact will bear it; but defendant must not deny the presentation alleged, where there was a presentation. Vaugh. 16, 17. And if a presentment is alleged in the grantor and grantee, the presentment in the grantor is only traversable; for that is the principal. Cro. Elix. 518.

The courts at Westminster are very cautious not to abate the writ of quare impedit, for any want of form, &c. yet if the bishop against whom the writ is brought, or any of the defendants are misnamed, it is good cause of abatement: if the patron be not named in the writ, it may be pleaded in abatement; tho' death of the patron pending the writ doth not abate it, if the quare impedit is brought against the bishop, patron, and incumbent: And if the incumbent dies, pending the writ, and a disturber present again, and die, quare impedit would lie on the first disturbance by journal account; but the first writ is abated by plaintiff's death; also if plaintiff bring a new writ within fifteen days after the abatement, that shall be a continuance of the first writ, and prevent defendant taking any advantage; but if the writ abate for any fault in the declaration, defendant shall have a writ to the bishop to admit his clerk; so if judgment is given on demurrer, &c. Cro. Elix. 324. Cro. Car. 651. 7 Rep. 57. Dyer 240.

In a plea of quare impedit, days are given from 15 to 16, or from three weeks to three weeks, according to the distance of place: And if the disturber come not in on the great distress, a writ is to be sent to the bishop, that he claim not to the prejudice of plaintiff for that time; and on recovery, judgment is to be given to the party to recover the presentation and advowson. Stat. 52 H. 3. c. 13. 2 Roll. Abr. 377. And damages are given by Westm. 2. 2. 5. that damages shall not be had against the bishop, where he claims nothing but as ordinary, and is no disturber. 4 Lev. 59.

Before this statute no damages were allowed on a quare impedit; and the King hath none at this day, for altho' he declares ad damnum, &c. he is not within that statute, because by his prerogative he cannot lose his presentation. 6 Rep. 52. If plaintiff hath a verdict, and the church is vacant, the patron may have the fruits of the presentation, and so not be intitled to damages; in which case, a restitutio ad damnum is entered. 3 Lev. 99.

There

There are two judgments in a quare impedit, viz.

That plaintiff shall have a writ to the bishop; and this is the final judgment, that goes to the right between the parties, and is the judgment at Common law: And Judgment for damages, since the Stat. of Westm. 2. after the points of the writ are inquired into; which judgment is not to be given but at the instance of the party. 1 Mod. 354, 355.

The points to be inquired of, where the jury find for plaintiff, &c. are; of whom, and on whose presentment the church is full; how long since it was void; the yearly value of the church, &c. which being found, damages are to be given accordingly. 6 Rep. 51.

No costs are recoverable in quare impedit, because of the great damages given by the statute of Westm. 2. c. 5. which ordains, that when six months pass hanging a quare impedit, &c. so that the bishop presents by lapse, the patron shall recover damages to TWO YEARS VALUE of the church; otherwise to have only half a year's value. See 10 Rep. 36.

Where judgment is given to have a writ to the bishop in quare impedit; it shall not be reversed on writ of error brought on the whole judgment, tho' the judgment by the statute for damages be erroneous and reversed. 5 Rep. 58, 59.

Quare impedit was brought against two, one of them cast an essoin, and idem dies datur to the other, &c. Then an attachment issued against them for not appearing at the day, and process continued to the Grand Cape; which being returned, and the parties not appearing, it was ruled that final judgment should be entered according to the stat. 32 H. 3. But on motion to discharge this rule, because defendants were not summoned either on the attachment or grand distress, the summoners being only the feigned names of John Doe and Richard Roe, the judgment was set aside; for the design of the statute was to have process duly executed, and that must be with notice, &c. And where the right is for ever concluded, this being so fatal, the process must never be suffered to be a thing of course. 1 Mod. 248.

A writ of quare impedit is had against two; one doth not appear at the grand distress; the other pleads in bar; there shall be a writ to the bishop for plaintiff, without making any title, by stat. Marl. cap. 12. And if the bar pleaded by the other defendant be found for him, he shall also have a writ to the bishop; and these two persons being admitted, instituted and inducted on the two writs, shall try their right in an assize, or trespass. Jenk. Cent. 95.

Tho' where two defendants in a quare impedit plead several bars, and one of them is found against plaintiff, and the other with him; he shall not have his writ to the bishop.

If there are many defendants, pleading several pleas; plaintiff shall not have judgment before all the pleas are tried; for tho' some be for plaintiff, others may be found against him, and he cannot have judgment without good title. F. N. B. 30. Hob. 70.

When one recovers in a quare impedit against an incumbent, the incumbent is so removed by judgment, that the recoverer may present without any thing farther; but the incumbent continues incumbent de facto; till such presentation is made: And if plaintiff in this suit be instituted on a writ to the bishop, defendant cannot appeal; if he doth, a prohibition lies; because in this case, the bishop acts as the King's minister, not as a judge. 2 Roll. Abr. 365. 1 Roll. Rep. 62.

If one brings a quare impedit against the patron and incumbent of a church within six months, and recovers after the six months, he shall remove the incumbent, if named in the writ. 2 Roll. Abr. 373. And the King cannot remove an incumbent, presented, instituted and inducted altho' on a usurpation, but by quare impedit in a judicial way. 2 Cro. 385.

If a man, by the King's licence, creates a church which shall be presentable, if he be disturbed to present to it, he may have a quare impedit without alleging a presentation in any person; but anciently it was held he might not, because he could not alledge a presentment. 20 Ed. 4. 14. Mallory's 2. Imped. 153.

It is generally necessary to alledge a presentation in a quare impedit, but the want thereof may be cured by verdict. 2 Strange 1006. See Presentation, &c. and Black. Com. 3 V. 246.

Quare incumbat, A writ which lieth against the bishop, who within six months after the vacation of a benefice, confers it on his clerk, whilst two other are contending at law for the right of presentation. Reg. Orig. 32.

Or it is a writ brought after a recovery in quare impedit, or assize of darein presentment, against the bishop who thus admits a clerk, notwithstanding the writ Ne admittas served on him: for if the bishop incumber the church before a ne admittas issued, then the party shall have a quare impedit; as the ordinary can have no notice till the ne admittas. F. N. B. 32, 33. Wood's Inst. 571.

And if a man hath a right of advowson depending between him and another, and the church is void pendant the writ, the plaintiff shall not have a quare incumb. or ne admittas, altho' the bishop incumber the church; because plaintiff shall not recover the presentment on this writ, but the advowson: And where he hath title to present he may do it; and have quare impedit, if he be disturbed. New Nat. Br. 108, 109.

If the bishop delay the true patron in his presentation, and the patron sue quare impedit, he may thereupon have a ne admittas; and if the bishop after receipt of such writ, admit the clerk of any other person without a verdict in a juris patronatus, the true patron shall have quare incumbravit against the bishop, and thereby recover the presentment with damages.

Also a writ is to be directed to the bishop to disincumber the church. F. N. B. 37.

This writ may be brought after the six months; and if plaintiff be nonsuit in a quare incumbravit, he may have another writ, and vary from his first declaration, &c. Ibid. 48.

After ne admittas delivered, if the six months pass, the bishop may present his clerk for lapse, and shall not be charged by the writ of quare incumbravit for the presentation; but he cannot admit the clerk of the other man, for that would be against the writ ne admittas delivered to him. F. N. B. 48.

If the bishop incumber the church, where there is no dispute about it, yet this writ quare incumbravit lies; but according to the best opinions there ought to be a suit depending, tho' there is no actual recovery. 18 E. 3. 17. Fitz. 2. Imped. 3. See Black. Com. 3 V. 248.

The writ is to summon the bishop, to be before the justices, &c. to show cause why he hath incumbered the church to the great damage and injury of plaintiff contrary to the laws and customs of the kingdom, &c.

Quare non admittit, is a writ which lies against a bishop where a man hath recovered his advowson, or presentation in a writ of right of advowson, or in quare impedit, or other action, and the bishop refuse to admit his clerk, on pretence of lapse, &c. It is requisite in the writ to mention the recovery; and it is to be brought in the county where the refusal was. F. N. B. 47. 7 Rep. Dyer 40.

In a quare non admittit the plaintiff shall recover damages: And if plaintiff have judgment in quare impedit, and a writ is awarded to the bishop; if on this writ the bishop makes a false return, plaintiff may have quare non admittit against him, and have his damages. Dyer 250.

King Edw. 1. presented his clerk to a benefice in York-shire and the archbishop of that province refused to admit him; on which the King brought a quare non admittit, and the Archbishop pleaded that he had a long time before provided for that church, as one having full power authority in that case, therefore he could not admit the King's clerk. It was adjudged, that for his contempt to execute the King's writ, the Archbishopric should be seised. &c. 5 Rep. 12.

If the bishop refuse the King's presentment, and afterwards admit him, yet the King shall have quare non admittit for the refusal; and so it is presumed may a common person. New Nat. Br. 106. See Black. Com. 3 V. 250.

Quare

Quare non permittit. Is mentioned as an ancient writ which lieth for one who hath a right to present to a church for a turn, against the proprietary. Fleta, lib. 5. cap. 6.

Quarentine or Quarentaine, (Quarentena) Is a benefit allowed by law to the widow of a man dying seized of lands, whereby she may challenge to continue in his capital messuage, or chief mansion-house, (not being a castle) by the space of forty days after his decease, in order to the assignment of her dower, &c. And if the heir, or any other eject her, she may bring the writ de quarentena habenda; but the widow shall not have meat, drink, &c. tho' if there be no provision in the house, according to Fitzherbert, she may kill things for her provision. Magn. Charta, cap. 7. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 40. F. N. B. 161. See Black. Com. 2 V. 135.

Quarentine. Is also the term of forty days wherein any persons coming from foreign parts infected with the plague, are not permitted to land or come on shore, until so many days are expired. See Ann. cap. 2. 7 Geo. 1. cap. 3. 1 Geo. 2. c. 17. See Plague and Black. Com. 4 V. 162.

Quarentine. Likewise signifies a quantity of ground, containing forty perches. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 16.

Quare obstructit. Is a writ which lies for him, who having a liberty to pass thro' his neighbour's ground, cannot enjoy his right, because the owner has so obstructed it. Fleta, lib. 4. c. 26.

Quarel, (Querela, a querendo.) Extends not only to actions personal, but also to mixt, and the plaintiff in them is called querens, and in most of the writs it is said queritur; so that if a man release all quarrels, (a man's deed being taken most strongly against himself) yet it is as beneficial as all actions, for by it all actions real and personal are released. Co. lib. 8. 153. and Co. Litt. lib. 3. c. 8. f. 511.

Quarrelling in church or church-yard. All affrays in a church or church-yard, are esteemed very heinous offences, as being indignities to him to whose service those places are consecrated, therefore mere quarrelsome words, which are neither an affray nor an offence in any other place, are penal here. For it is enacted by 5 & 6 Edw. 6. c. 4. That if any person shall, by words only, quarrel, chide, or brawl, in a church or church-yard, the ordinary shall suspend him, if a layman, ab ingressu ecclesiæ; and, if a clerk in orders, from the ministrations of his office during pleasure. And, if any person in such church or church-yard proceed to smite or lay violent hands on another, he shall be excommunicated ipso facto; or if he strikes him with a weapon, or draws any weapon with intent to strike, he shall besides excommunication (being convicted by a jury) have one of his ears cut off; or, having no ears, be branded with the letter F. in his cheek. Black. Com. 4 V. 145.

Quarterisari. To be quartered, or cut into four quarters in execution. — Eccit decollari & membratim dividi, & quarterisari, & corpus ejus quarterias ad regni certas civitates transmitti jussit. Artic. Richardi Scrope Archiep. Ebor. apud Angl. Sacr. par. 2. 266.

Quarterisatio. Is part of the punishment and execution of a traitor, by dividing his body into four quarters. See Quarterisari.

Quarter Sessions. Is a general court held by the justices of peace in every county, once every quarter of a year; originally erected only for matters touching the breach of the peace, but now its power is greatly increased, and extends much farther by many statutes.

The holding these sessions quarterly was first ordained by the 25 Ed. 3. Stat. 1. cap. 8. and the particular times are appointed by 36 Ed. 3. c. 12. See Justices of Peace.

By 2 Ed. 3. c. 1. they are appointed to be in the first week after Michaelmas, day 1 the first week after the Epiphany; the first week after the close of Easter; and in the week after the translation of Saint Thomas a Becket, or the seventh of July. See Black. Com. 4 V. 268.

Quarto die post. See Black. Com. 3 V. 278.

Quash, Quassare. (from the French word quasser, id est, causum facere.) To overthrow or annul. Bracton, lib. 5.

tract. 2. c. 3. nu. 4. As if the balliff of a liberty return any out of the franchise, the array shall be quashed. And Co. Litt. 120. An array returned by one who hath no franchise shall be quashed.

The court of B. R. hath power to quash orders of sessions, presentments, indictments, &c. Tho' this quashing is by favour of the court, and the court may leave the party to take advantage of the insufficiency by pleading; as they generally do where an indictment is for an offence very prejudicial to the Commonwealth, as for perjury, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 410. 2 Hawk. P. C. 258.

The court will not quash an information; but there must be a demurrer to it, if it be insufficient. 2 Lill. 411. Vide Stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. See Indictment, Plea, and Black. Com. 3 V. 303. 4 V. 315.

Queen, (Lat. Regina, Sax. Cwen, i. e. Uxor, a wife, sed propter excellentiam, the wife of the King) In our law is, either she who holds the crown of this realm by right of blood, or who is married to the King; the first of which is called Queen Regnant, the last Queen Consort: She who holdeth by blood is, in construction of law, the same with the King, and hath the like regal power in all respects; but the Queen Consort is inferior to the King, and his subject. Staudf. Prærog. 10. 3 Inst. 7. 1 Marl. Parl. 2. cap. 1.

To compass the death of, or violate the Queen's person, &c. is treason; and if she consents to the adulterer, it shall be treason in her. 25 Ed. 3. 3 Inst. 9.

The Queen, as the King's wife, partakes of several prerogatives above other women, viz.

She is a publick person, exempt from the King; and is capable of lands or tenements of the gift of the King, which no other feme covert is; she is of ability, without the King, to purchase, grant, and make leases; and may sue and be sued alone, in her own name only, by præcipe, not by petition: She may have in herself the possession of personal things during her life, &c. But both real and personal estate goes to the King after her death; if she doth not in her life-time dispose of them, or devise them by will. 1 Inst. 3, 31, 133. Finch 86. 1 Roll. Abr. 912.

Acts of parliament relating to her, need not be pleaded; for the court must take notice of them, because she is a publick person. 8 Rep. 28.

If a tenant of the Queen aliens a part of his tenancy to one, and another part to another; the Queen may distrain in any one part for the whole, as the King may do. Wood's Inst. 22. And in a quare impedit brought by the Queen, some say that plenary is no plea; but see 2 Inst. 361. The Queen shall pay no toll, &c. 1 Inst. 133.

By statute, the late King might grant to his Queen out of the crown revenues, an annuity of 100,000*l.* per annum, to commence after his death, and continue during the Queen's natural life, for supporting her royal dignity, &c. Stat. 1 Geo. 2. cap. 3.

And his Majesty constituted the Queen Regent of the kingdom, during his absence abroad; to be capable of the office, without taking the oaths, or doing any act required by law to qualify any other. 2 Geo. 2. c. 27.

Queen Dowager. No man may marry the Queen Dowager without licence from the King, on pain to forfeit his lands and goods: But if she marry any of the nobility, or under that degree, she loseth not her dignity; but by the name of Queen may maintain an action. 1 Inst. 18, 50.

The statute 25 Ed. 3. making it treason to violate the Queen, extends not to a Queen Dowager, but the King's wife and companion: And a Queen Consort and Queen Dowager shall be tried, in case of treason, by the peers. 2 Inst. 50.

Queen's Gold, (Aurum Reginae) Is a Royal duty or revenue belonging to every Queen of England, during her marriage to the King, payable by persons in this kingdom and Ireland, on divers grants of the King, by way of fine or oblation, &c. being one full tenth part above the entire fines, on pardons, contracts, or agreements, which becomes a real debt to the Queen, by the name of Aurum Reginae, upon the party's bare agreement with the King, King for his fine, and recording the same. Lib. Nig. Stat. pag. 43. 12 Co. Rep. 21, 22.

Que Estate, Signifies which estate; and is a plea, where a man intilling another to land, &c. saith that the same estate such other had, he has from him: As for example, in a quare impedit, plaintiff alledges that two persons were seised of lands, whereunto the advowson in question was appendant in fee, and did present to the church, and afterwards the church was void: Which estate of the two persons he hath now, by virtue whereof he presented, &c. Broke 175. Co. Litt. 121.

A man cannot plead a que estate in an estate-tail, nor can it be pleaded in estates for life, or for years; a que estate of a term may not be pleaded, by reason a term cannot be gained by disseisin, as a fee may; but one may plead a que estate in a term in another person, under whom he doth not claim, and be good; for he is not privy to the estate of the stranger, to know his title. 1 Rep. 46. 3 Lev. 19. 1 Lev. 190. Lutw. 81.

A thing which lies in grant, cannot be claimed by a que estate, directly by itself; yet it may be claimed as appurtenant to a manor, by que estate in the manor. 1 Mod. 232.

A man may not prescribe by a que estate of a rent, advowson or toll; but he may of a manor, &c. to which these are appendant. 2 Mod. 144. 3 Mod. 52.

A person cannot plead a que estate, without shewing the deed how he came by it. Cro. Jac. 673. This is in case of a rent in gross or lands which cannot pass from one man to another without deed. Jenk. Cent. 26. See 18 Vin. Abr. fo. 133, 140. Black. Com. 2 V. 264.

Que est eadem. See Quæ est eadem, &c.

Que est mesme, (signifying verbatim, the same thing) Is a word of art, in actions of trespass, &c. for a direct justification of the very act complained of by plaintiff as a wrong: And if where tenants at will bringing an action against their lord, plaintiffs say, that he threatened them so, that he forced them to give up their lands; to which the lord pleads, that he said unto them, if they would not depart he would sue them at law; this being the same threatening that he used, or to speak artificially que est le mesme, the defence is good. Kitch. 236.

Quem redditum reddat, Is a judicial writ which lies for him, to whom a rent-seck or rent-charge is granted, by fine levied in the King's court against the tenant of the land who refuseth to attorn to him, thereby to cause to attorn. Old Nat. Brev. 126. West. Symbol. par. 2. tit. Fines, fol. 156.

Querela, An action preferred in any court of justice, in which the plaintiff was querens or complainant, and his brief, complaint or declaration, was querela, whence our quarrel against any person.

Quietus esse a querelis was to be exempted from the customary fees paid to the King or lord of a court, for the purchase of liberty to prefer such an action. But more usually to be exempted from fines and amercements, imposed for common trespasses and faults. So King Henry II. to Bernard de S. Walery.—Terræ suæ sint quietæ de omnibus placitis & querelis, exceptis murthero & latrocinio. Paroch. Antiquit. pag. 123. See Kennet's Glossary.

Querela coram Rege & concilio discutienda & terminanda, Is a writ whereby one is called to justify a complaint of a trespass made to the King himself, before the King and his council. Reg. Orig. 124.

Querela fustiae fortiae. See Fresh Force.

Quest, (Questia) A quest or inquest, inquisition or inquiry on the oaths of an impanelled jury. Cowell.

Question, or Torture. See Black. Com. 4 V. 320.

Questus. See Quæstus.

Questus est nobis, Is the form of a writ of nusance, which by the statute 13 Edw. 1. c. 24. lies against him to whom the house or other thing which occasions the nusance, is alienated, whereas before the statute, this action lay only against him who first levied the thing to the annoyance of his neighbour. Cowell.

Quia emptores, statute of, see ib. 2 V. 91. 4 V. 419.

Quia impossibile, Seems to be a superedeas granted in behalf of a clerk of the Chancery sued against the privilege of that court in the Common Pleas, and pursued to the exigent, or in many other cases where a writ is erroneously sued. See Dyer 33. n. 18.

Quick with Child. See Pregnancy.

Quick-sets, Damage sustained by destroying, burning or defacing them, how recompensed, 6 Geo. 1. c. 16. See Wood.

Quid juris clamat, Is a judicial writ issuing out of the record of the fine, which remaineth with the Custos Brevium of the Common Pleas, before it be engrossed; and it lies for the grantee of a reversion or remainder, when the particular tenant will not attorn. West. Symbol. par. 2. tit. Fines, fol. 118. Reg. Judic. 36, 57. See 18 Vin. Abr. 143.

After the fine is ingrossed, the cognisee shall not have a quid juris clamat against tenant for life: But the course is, when he in reversion on the writ of covenant sued against him, maketh recognisance of the reversion by fine, &c. then on that the cognisee may have this writ against tenant for life; and if he be sick or not able to travel, a dedimus potestatem shall be granted to take his cognisance, and to certify the same into C. B. When after plea pleaded, the tenant may make attorney; and if he be adjudged to attorn, a distringas ad attornandum shall be awarded against him, &c. New Nat. Br. 328. This writ seems to be obsolete and disused, since the Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. See Attornment.

Quid pro quo, Signifieth what for what; and is used in the law, for the giving one thing of value, for another thing, being the mutual consideration and performance of both parties to a contract. Kitch. 184. And as this is the consideration of a good and binding contract or bargain: So that which is contrary to it, is what the law calleth nudum pactum. 5 Rep. 83. Dyer 98.

Quictantia, (Acquittance). See Acquittance.

Quictare, To quit, acquit or discharge, or save harmless. The common form in old deeds of donation or other conveyance.—De prædictis nos & hæredes nostri quietabimus dictos, &c.

Quiete clamare, Is to quit claim or renounce all pretensions of right and title.—De una virgata terræ in M. Richardus & Aldreda remiserunt & quiete clamaverunt de se & hæredibus, &c. prædictis. Nos & hæred. suis, & pro hac remissione quietæ clamatione idem A. dicit, &c. Bract. lib. 5.

Quietus, (freed or acquitted) Is a word made use of by the Clerk of the Pipe and Auditors in the Exchequer, in their discharges given to Accountants; usually concluding with abinde recessit quietus, which is called a quietus est: A quietus est granted to the sheriff, will discharge him of all accounts due to the King. Stat. 21 Jac. 1. cap. 5. And these quietus's are mentioned in the acts of general pardon. 12 Car. 2. c. 11. and 14 Car. 2. c. 21.

Quietus Redditus. See Quit-Rent.

Quinquagesima Sunday, Is that we call Shrove-Sunday, and was so named, because it is about the fiftieth day before Easter.

Quinque Portus, The Cinque ports, which are, 1. Hastings, 2. Romney, 3. Hythe, 4. Dover, and 5. Sandwich. To the first, Winchelsea and Rye belong, which are reckoned as part, or members of the Cinque ports. Cowell. See Cinque Ports.

Quinzime, or Quinzime, (Decima Quinta) Is a French word, signifying a fifteenth; with us it is a tax, so called, because it is raised after the fifteenth part of men's lands or goods. Anno 10 Rich. 2. cap. 1. and 7 H. 7. c. 5.

It is well known by the Exchequer roll, what every town throughout England is to pay for a fifteenth. See Fifteenth.

Sometimes this word Quinzime or Quinzime, is used for the fifteenth day after any feast, as the Quinzime of St. John Baptist. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. in the preamble.

It is a mistake that this was a tax of the fifteenth part of all lands, for it was of the goods only, and it was first granted by the parliament 18 Ed. 1. viz. Compositus quinta decima Regi, anno 18. per archiepiscopos, episcopos, abbates, priores, prioris, comites, barones, & omnes alios de Regno. de omnibus bonis suis mobilibus concessit: The city of London paid this year for the fifteenth, 2860 l. 13 s. 8 d. and the abbot of St. Edmunds 666 l. 13 s. 4 d. which was by compositions, and thereupon had all his temporal goods, and the goods of his convent discharged of the fifteenth.

The way of collecting it was, by two assessors appointed in every county by the King; and they appointed twelve in every hundred, who made a true valuation of every man's personal estate, and then caused the fifteenth part to be levied. Cowell.

Quintal, (Quintallus) A weight of lead, iron and common metals, usually one hundred pounds, at six score per cent. Cowell.

Quintane, (Quintena) Was a Roman military sport or exercise, by men on horseback, formerly practised in this kingdom to try the agility of the country youth: It was tilting at a mark made in the shape of a man to the navel, in his left hand having a shield, in his right a wooden sword; the whole made to turn round, so that if it was struck with the lance in any other part but full in the breast, it turned with the force of the stroke, and struck the horseman with the sword which it held in its right hand: This sport is recorded by Matt. Paris. anno 1253.

Quinto crast (Quinto exactus, mentioned in stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 3.) Is the last call of defendant, who is sued to outlawry, where, if he appear not, he is by the judgment of the courtiers returned outlawed; if a woman, waived. See Exigent, Outlawry.

Qui tam, I. when an information is exhibited against any person on a penal statute; at suit of the King and the party who is informer, where the penalty for breach of the statute is to be divided between them; and the party informer prosecutes for the King and himself. Finch 340.

If the whole sum is given by statute to any person who will sue for the same, the prosecutor may bring action Qui tam, or sue in his own name. 2 Lill. Abr. 59. See Information, and Black. Com. 3 V. 160. 4 V. 303.

Quit-claim, (Quita clamantia) Is a release or acquitting of a man, for any action which he hath, might, or may have against him. Also a quitting of one's claim or title. Bracton, lib. 5. tract. 5. c. 9. num. 6. lib. 4. tract. 6. c. 13. num. 1.

Quit-rent, (Quietus Redditus, quasi quit-rent) Is a certain small rent, payable by the tenants of manors, in token of subjection, and by which the tenant goes quiet and free: In antient records, it is called whites rent; because paid in silver money, to distinguish it from rent-corn, &c. 2 Inst. 19. See Chief-Rents, and Black. Com. 2 V. 42.

Quod hoc, Is often used in law pleadings and arguments, to signify, as to the thing named the law is so, &c.

Quod clerici beneficiarii de cancellaria, Is a writ to exempt a clerk of the Chancery from the contribution towards the proctors of the clergy in parliament. Reg. Orig. 261.

Quod clerici non eligantur in officio ballivi, &c. Is a writ which lies for a clerk, who, by reason of some land he hath, is made, or about to be made bailiff, beadle, reeve, or some such officer. See Clérico infra sacros, &c. Reg. Orig. 187. and F. N. B. 261.

Quod cum, In indictments, &c. As A. B. was indicted Quod cum C. D. he had done such a thing: And this being by way of recital, and not positively, is not good. 2 Hawk. P. C. 227. 3 Salk. 188.

In forgery, a Quod cum has been held well enough, where it was but an inducement to the fact; and when the inducement came to charge the offence, it did it in a particular manner; but it is otherwise in action of trespass, &c. for there it is only recital. Trin. 2 Annz.

Quod ei deforceat, A writ for tenant in tail, tenant in dower, by the curtesy, or for term of life, having lost their lands by default, against him who recovers, or his heir. Reg. Orig. 171. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 4.

And Quod ei deforceat may be brought against a stranger to the recovery; as if a man recover by default, and maketh a feoffment, this writ may be had against the feoffee.

If a woman lose by default, and taketh husband, she and her husband shall have the Quod ei deforceat, but where tenant in tail loseth by default, and dieth, his heirs shall not have a writ of Quod ei deforceat, but a formedon: And if husband and wife lose by default the land of the wife, which she holdeth for term of life, and the husband dieth, she may not have this writ, for cui in vita is her remedy; and when one bringeth Quod ei deforceat, he counts that he was seised of the land in his demesne, as of freehold, or in tail, &c. without shewing of whose gift he was seised; also he ought to alledge eplees in himself, and then defendant is to deny the right of plaintiff, &c. and shew how that at another time he recovered the land against plaintiff, by formedon, or other action; and shall say in the end of his plea, Quod ipse paratus est ad manutenendum jus & titulum suum prædictum per donum, &c. unde peris judic. &c. New Nat. Br. 347, 349.

If tenant in tail, or such other tenant, who hath a particular estate, lose by default, where he is not summoned, &c. he may have have either a Writ of disseit, or Quod ei deforceat. Ibid. See 16 Vin. Abr. 145, 148. and Black. Com. 3 V. 193.

Quod permittat, Is a writ which lieth against any person who erects a building, tho' on his own ground, so near to the house of another, that it hangs over, or becomes a nusance to it. 2 Lill. Abr. 413.

Formerly, where a man built a wall, a house, or any thing which was a nusance to the freehold of his neighbour, and afterwards died; in such case, he who received any damage thereby, sued a Quod permittat against the heir of him who did the nusance; and the form of it was Quod permittat prosterne murum, &c. 3 Nelf. Abr. 44. The writ was given by the Stat. West. 2.

And at the Common law an assise of nusan did not lie against the alienee of a wrong doer, for the purchaser was to take the land in the same condition it was conveyed to him; but by the Statute of West. 2. c. 24. Damages may be recovered against the person who sold the land, if the nusance be not abated on request made to him, or against the person to whom he sold it; tho' this doth not extend to the alienee of the alienee. 3 Nelf. 45. Lutw. 1588. This writ is seldom brought, being turned into action on the case. Vide Nusance.

Quod permittat lies also for the heir of him who is disseised of his common of pasture, against the heir of the disseisor, being dead. Terms de Ley.

And according to Broke, this writ may be brought by him whose ancestor died seised of common of pasture, or other like thing annexed to his inheritance, against the disseisor: If a man is disturbed by any person in his common of pasture, so that he cannot use it, he shall have a Quod permittat; so of a turbary, piscary, fair, market, &c. New Nat. Br. 272, 273, 275, 276. And a person may have a Quod permittat against a disseisor, &c. in the time of his predecessor. 13 Ed. 1. c. 24.

The writ Quod permittat, on a disseisin of common of pasture, directed to the sheriff; Commands A. that justly, &c. he permit B. to have common of pasture in, &c. which he ought to have, as it is said; and unless he shall do it, &c. then summon, &c.

See Bro. hoc tit. Reg. Orig. fol. 155. See 18 Vin. Abr. 150. and Black. Com. 3 V. 240. And as to the writ of Quod permittat prosterne, see ib. 221.

Quod persona nec prebendarii, &c. Is a writ which lies for spiritual persons who are distrained in their spiritual possessions, for payment of a fifteenth with the rest of the parish. F. N. B. 176.

Quod iure, Is a writ which lies for him who has land, wherein another challengeth common of pasture time out of mind: And is to compel him to shew by what title he challenges it. F. N. B. 128. and Britton more largely, c. 59. Reg. Orig. 156.

Quod minus, Is a writ which lies for him who hath a grant of burg-bote, and bay-bote in another man's woods, against the grantor, making such waste as the grantee cannot enjoy his grant. Old Nat. Br. 148. and Kitchen 178.

This writ also lies for the King's farmer in the Exchequer, against him to whom he selleth any thing by way of bargain touching his farm, or against whom he hath any cause of personal action. Perkins, Grants, 5. For he supposeth supposeth by the vendee's detaining any due from him, he is made less liable to pay the King's rent.

Formerly it was allowed only to such persons, as were tenants or debtors to the King; at this day the practice is become general for the plaintiff to surmise that for the wrong which defendant doth him, he is less able to satisfy his debt to his Majesty; which surmise gives jurisdiction to the court of Exchequer, to hear and determine the cause. Pract. Excheg. 225.

In this case a debtor hath a kind of prerogative remedy granted to him, supposing that he is disabled to pay the King: And in this suit, plaintiff hath many privileges above other men in their ordinary suits. Old Nat. Br. 148. Kitch. 178 Finch 66.

If a privileged person of the Exchequer court sue out a Quo minus in any action in which the King is party, the sheriff in execution thereof may, after request to open doors, break them open, &c. Pract. Solic. 194. See Black. Com. 3 V. 45, 286. xix.

Quorum, (Lat.) Often occurs in our statutes, and commissions both of the peace and others, but particularly in commissions to justices of the peace; and a justice of the quorum is so called, from the words in the commission, quorum A. B. unum esse volumus: As where a commission is directed to five persons, whereof A. B. and C. D. to be two: In this case A. B. and C. D. are said to be of the quorum, and the rest cannot proceed without them. They are usually persons of greater quality or estates than the common commissioners. 3 Hen. 7. c. 3. 32 Hen. 8. c. 43. See Black. Com. 1 V. 351.

Quorum nomina. In the reign of Hen. 6. the King's collectors, and other accountants, were much perplexed in passing their accounts, by new extorted fees, and forced to procure a then late invented writ of quorum nomina, for allowing and suing out their quietus at their own charge, without allowance of the King. Cron. Angl.

Quota, A tax to be levied in an equal manner. Chart. Ric. 2.

Quo Warranto, Is a writ which lies against any person or corporation, that usurps any franchise or liberty against the King, without good title; and is brought against the usurpers to shew by what right and title they hold or claim such franchise or liberty: It also lies for mis-user, or non-user of privileges granted; and by Bracton it may be brought against one who intrudes himself as heir into land, &c. Old Nat. Br. 149. Finch 322. 2 Inst. 279.

The statute of Quo Warranto is the 18 Ed. 1. §. 2. which is commented on 2 Inst. 494, 495, &c.

The Attorney General may exhibit a Quo Warranto in the Crown-Office against any particular person, body politick or corporate, who claim or use any franchises, privileges or liberties, not having a legal grant or prescription for the same; and compel them by process to appear in the Crown-Office; and shew cause or set forth by way of pleading what title they have to the privileges claimed, and the issue shall be joined and tried thereon by nisi prius, or the plea be determined by the judges on demurrer, as in other cases: But tho' on demurrer, &c. the question be determined for defendant, yet he has no costs allowed; if against him, he must be fined for the usurpation, and pay large costs to the prosecutor. Instit. Legal. 147, 148, 157.

But this is altered by statute 9 Ann. c. 20. It has been adjudged, that the stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 18. by which informations in the Crown-Office are not to be filed without express orders in open court, &c. being a remedial law, extends to informations in the nature of a Quo Warranto, which always suppose a usurpation of some franchise; and it is the general practice not to make such an order for an information, without first making a rule on the person complained of to shew cause to the contrary; and this rule is grounded on an affidavit of the offence, &c. and if the person on whom the rule is made and personally served, do not at the day given satisfy the court by affidavit, that there is no reasonable cause for the prosecution, the court generally grants the information; and on special circumstances, will grant it against those who cannot be personally served with such rule; as if they purposely absent themselves, &c. but if the party on whom such a rule is made, shew to the court a reasonable cause against such prosecution; as against a Quo Warranto information, that his right in the franchise in question hath been already determined on a mandamus; or been acquiesced in many years; or that it depends on the right of others which hath not been tried; or that the franchise no way concerns the publick, but is wholly of private nature, &c. the court will not generally grant the information. 2 Hawk. P. C. 262, 263.

A Quo Warranto was brought for vexation, on forty-eight points; and the court on motion, ordered the prosecutor should waive that Quo Warranto, and bring a new one, and therein insist only on three points; but that he might proceed to trial on his new Quo Warranto, in such time as he might have done upon the old. 2 Lill. Abr. 414.

A Quo Warranto requires to know of defendant by what authority he claims the liberties, and charges him with the wrongful usurpation of them: In a Quo Warranto to shew by what authority a person claimed to have a Court Leet, and alledging farther quod usurpavit libertatem sine aliqua concessione, &c. defendant pleaded Non usurpavit; and it was objected that this was no good plea, for the answer to a Quo Warranto is either to claim or disclaim; but the better opinion was, that by this plea defendant had answered the usurpation, tho' it did not shew by what title he claimed. Godb. 91.

In Quo Warranto for using a fair and market, and taking toll, issue was taken, whether they had toll by prescription, or not; and it was found they had; it was moved in arrest of judgment, that here was a discontinuance, because there was no issue as to the other liberties claimed: but it was held, they were too soon to make this objection, and that there can be no discontinuance against the King before judgment; for by virtue of his prerogative, the Attorney General may proceed to take issue on the rest, or may enter a nolle prosequi; but if he will not proceed, the court may make a rule on him ad replicandum, and then there may be a special entry made of it. Hardres 504. 3 Nels. Abr. 43.

A motion was made for an information in nature of a Quo Warranto, against a mayor and aldermen, to shew by what authority they admitted persons to be freemen of the corporation, who did not inhabit in the borough. The motion was said to be in behalf of the freemen, who by this means were encroached on; and an information was granted, there being no other way to try it, nor to redress the parties concerned. 1 Salk. 374.

Quo Warranto Information may be brought against a person voting in the election of a mayor, or other chief magistrate of a corporation, who hath no right to do it, on affidavit made that defendant voted in such an election, and that the deponent (the prosecutor) believes he had no right to do it, &c.

And by stat. 9 Ann. c. 20. If any person usurp, intrude into, or unlawfully hold or execute the office of a mayor, bailiff, or other office, the proper officer of the court of King's Bench, &c. may exhibit informations in the nature of a Quo Warranto, at the relation of any person desiring to prosecute, who shall be mentioned therein to be the relator against such usurper, and proceed as usual; and if the right of divers persons may properly be determined in one information, one information shall serve, and defendants shall appear and plead as of the same term, the information is filed, unless the court give further time; and the prosecutor shall proceed with all convenient speed: And if defendants be found guilty of an usurpation, &c. the courts may as well give judgment of ouster, as fine defendants; and also give judgment that the relator recover costs: If judgment be given against relator, defendants shall have costs to be levied by Ca. Sa. Ri. &c. &c.

In a Quo Warranto, judgment is final, because that is a writ of right; but judgment on information, in nature of a Quo Warranto, is not conclusive; the proceedings in one are summons, and judgment that the liberties be seized, if defendant doth not appear; but in the other the process is a venire facias and disfringas. Sid. 86. Kelv. 159, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 43.

Upon Quo Warranto, when liberties are seized quousque, &c. and they do not replevy them, the course is, that judgment final be given, nisi they plead within such a time. Comberbach 18, 19.

Wherever judgment is given for the King on a Quo Warranto, for liberties usurped, the judgment is Quod extinguatur, and that the usurpers libertates, &c. nullatenus intromittant; and in such case the writ must be brought against particular persons: But where the Quo Warranto is for a liberty claimed by a corporation, there it is to be brought against the body politic; and the liberties may be seized, but the corporation still subsists, and is not dissolved without cause of forfeiture. 4 Mod. 52, 58.

A judgment of seizure cannot be proper where a thing is dissolved: And by the judgment in the Quo Warranto against the city of London, which was quod libertates & franchisæ capiuntur & seiscanter in manus Regis, the corporation was not dissolved; for it implied that they were not extinguished. Ibid.

It has been observed, that frequent and violent prosecutions on Quo Warranto's, in behalf of the crown, have been fatal to both King and people.

An information, in the nature of a Quo Warranto, lies for acting as a trustee, under an act of parliament, without due appointment. 1 Strange 299. Against one for usurping the office of steward of a court-leet. Ibid. 621. For creating a new office. 2 Strange 836. For the office of constable. Ibid. 1213. For a ferry. Ibid. 1161. But not for creating a warren. 1 Strange 637. Nor for the office of churchwarden. Ibid. 1196.

R.

Rachetum, (from the Fr. racheter, i. e. redimere) The compensation or redemption of a thief. — Nihil capiat rachetum de latrocinio. 1 Stat. Rob. K. Scot. c. 9.

Rack, An engine to extort confession from delinquents. See Black. Com. 4 V. 329.

Rack-rent, Is the full yearly value of the land let by by lease, payable by tenant for life or years, &c. Wood's Inst. 185.

Rack-vintage, A second vintage, or voyage made by our merchants for Racked Wines, i. e. Wines drawn from the lees. Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 14.

Ragman, Is a statute of justices assigned by Ed. 1. and his counsel, to hear and determine all complaints of injuries done throughout the realm, within the five years next before Michaelmas, in the fourth year of his reign.

Raglespis, A word mentioned in the charter of Edward III. whereby he made his eldest son Edward Prince of Wales, in parliament at Westminster the seventeenth year of his reign, recited by Selden in his Titles of Honour, 597. — Cum forestis, parcis, chaseis, boscis, waremis, hundredis, comotis, ragloriis, ringeldiis, wodwardis, constabulariis, lullivis, &c. Davis in his Dictionary says, that raglaw among the Welsh signifies seneſchallus, surrogate, praepositus.

Raglorius, A steward. Selden, tit. of Honour, 597. Cum hundredis, comotis, ragloriis, ringeldis, &c.

Ragman's Roll, Rollius Ragimund's Roll, so called from one Ragimund a legate in Scotland; who calling before him all the beneficed clergymen in that kingdom, caused them on oath to give in the true value of their benefices; according to which they were afterwards taxed by the court of Rome: And this roll among other records, being taken from the Scots by Ed. 1. was redelivered to them in the beginning of the reign of Ed. 3.

Sir Richard Baker, saith, That Ed. 3. surrendered by charter, all his right of sovereignty to the kingdom of Scotland, and restored divers instruments of their former homages and fealties, with the famous evidence called Ragman's Roll. Bak. Chron. 127.

Ran, (a Saxon word,) Signifies aperta rapina, open or publick theft. Lamb. Archæi. 125. defines it thus, Rap dicitur aperta rapina, quæ negari non potest.

In the Saxon laws of Canute, cap. 58. Si in professione militari ran commiseris, pro facti ratione emendato, Hoveden in the latter part of Henry II. speaking of some things, which William the Conqueror amended in the laws of England, saith. Decretum est etiam ibi, ut si Francigena appellaverit Anglicum de perjurio aut murthero, furto, homicidio, ran quod dicunt apertam rapinam quæ negari non potest, Anglicus se defendat, per quod melius voluerit, aut judicio ferri aut duello. We still say, when a man takes away the goods of another by violence, he hath taken all he could rap and ran. Rap. from rapio, to snatch. Cowell.

Range, From the French ranger, to order, dispose of. It is used in the Forest Laws, both as a verb, as to range, and a substantive as to make range. Charta de Foresta, cap. 6. To range also, signifies to wander and stray about.

Ranger, Is a sworn officer of the forest; of which there are twelve. Id. c. 7. whose authority is in part described by his oath set down by Manwood, part 1. 50. but more particularly part 2. cap. 20. num. 15, 16, 17. His office chiefly consists in three points, To walk daily thro' his charge, to see, hear and inquire, of trespasses in his bailiwick; To drive the beasts of the forest both of venary and chase out of the deafforested into the forested lands: And to prevent all trespasses of the forest at the next court holden for the forest.

This ranger is made by the King's letters patent, and hath a fee of twenty or thirty pounds paid yearly out of the Exchequer, and certain fee-deer. Rangator Forestæ de Whittlewood. Pat. 14 R. 2. m. 3.

Ransome, (Fr. Rancon, i. e. Redemptio) Is properly the sum paid for redeeming a captive or prisoner of war; and sometimes taken in our law for a sum of money paid for pardoning some great offence, and setting the offender at liberty who was under imprisonment. Stat. 1 H. 4. c. 7. 11 Hen. 6. c. 11.

Fine and Ransom go together, and some writers tell us, that they are the same; but others say, that the offender ought to be first imprisoned, and then delivered or ransomed in consideration of a fine. 1 Inst. 127. Dalt. 203.

Ransom differs from Amerciament, being a redemption of a corporal punishment due to any crime. Lamb. Eiren. 556.

A ship was taken by the French; the master (having a share in her) ransomed her for 1800 l. and was taken to France as an hostage for this money. The ransom money must be raised out of the profits, notwithstanding any former mortgage of the ship; for if there was a precedent mortgage, what would become of that security, if the ship had not been redeemed? After the ship was redeemed, she performed her intended voyage, and the freight money received after redemption was the first profits arising, and out of them the ransom money is to be satisfied; the insurers always pay a part of the ransom money. 2 Eq. Abr. 690.

Rape, (Rapus vel Rapa) Is part of a county, signifying as much as a hundred, and oftentimes contains in it more hundreds than one.

Suffex is divided into six Rapes only, viz. The Rape of Chichester, Arundel, Bramber, Lewis, Pawsey and Hastings; every of which, besides hundreds, hath a castle, river, and forest belonging to it. Camb. Britann. 225, 229. These Rapes are incident to the county of Suffex; as Lathes are to Kent; and Wapentakes to Yorkshire, &c.

Rape of the Forest, (Rapius Forestæ) Trespass committed in the forest by violence; and is reckoned among those crimes, whose cognisance belonged only to the King. — Infra quibus numeratur, quarum cognitio ad unicum regem pertinet. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 10.

Rape of Women, Is an unlawful and carnal knowledge of a woman, by force and against her will: A ravishment of the body, and violent deflowering her; which is felony by the Common and Statute law. Co. Litt. 190. The word Rapuit is so appropriated by law to this offence, that it cannot be expressed by any other; even the words Carnaliter Cognovit, &c. without it, will not be sufficient. 1 Inst. 124. 2 Inst. 180.

There must be penetration and emission, to make this crime; and it is said emission may be evidence prima facie of penetration, tho' not full evidence: If there be no penetration and emission, an attempt to ravish a woman, tho' it be never so outrageous, will be an assault only. 1 Hawk. P. C. 108.

It was a question before 18 Eliz. c. 7. whether a rape could be committed on the body of a child of the age of six or seven years; and a person being indicted for the rape of a girl of seven years old, altho' he was found guilty, the court doubted, whether a child of that age could be ravished; if she had been nine years old she might, for at that age she may be endowed. Dyer 304.

By the stat. 18 Eliz. whoever shall carnally know and abuse any woman child under the age of ten years, he shall suffer as a felon, without benefit of clergy: And on an indictment for this offence, it is no way material whether such child consented or were forced; but it must be proved that the offender entered her body, &c. 3 Cro. 332. Dalt. 393.

It is no excuse or mitigation of the crime, that the woman at last yielded to the violence, and consented either after the fact or before, if such consent was forced by fear of death or duress; or that she was a common strumpet, for she is still under the protection of the law, and may be forced: But it was anciently held to be no rape to force a man's own concubine; and 'tis said by some to be evidence of a woman's consent, that she was a common whore. 1 Hawk. 108. 1 Inst. 123.

Also formerly it was adjudged not to be a rape to force a woman, who conceived at the time; because if she had not consented, she could not have conceived: Tho' this opinion hath been since questioned, by reason the previous violence is no way extenuated by such a subsequent consent; and if it were necessary to shew the woman did not conceive, to make the crime, the offender could not be tried till such time as it might appear whether she did or not. 2 Inst. 190.

The sooner complaint is made of a rape, the better: In Scotland it ought to be complained of the same day or night it is committed; and our law mentions forty days: It is a strong presumption against a woman, that she made no complaint in a reasonable time after the fact. 1 Inst. 123. 7 Inst. 59. H. P. C. 117.

On a bill of conspiracy, &c. where defendant did not indict plaintiff for a rape, in a short time after the injury supposed to be done, but concealed it for half a year, and then would have preferred an indictment against him; this was refused to be malicious, and that there not being Retens prosecutio argued a consent. 3 Nels. Abr. 45.

A woman ravished may prosecute and be a witness in her own cause. 3 Rep. 37. Yet a woman's positive oath of a rape, without concurring circumstances, is seldom credited: If a man can prove himself to be in another place, or in other company, at the time she charges him with the fact, this will overthrow her oath; so if she is wrong in the description of the place, or swears the fact to be committed in a place where it was impossible the man could have access at that time; as if the room was locked up, and the key in the custody of another person, &c.

Aiders and abettors in committing a rape, may be indicted as principal felons, whether men or women; and Lord Audley was indicted and executed as a principal, for assisting his servant to ravish his own wife, who was admitted a witness against him. Dalt. 107. State Trials, Vol. 1. p. 265.

By Hale Ch. J. A party ravished may give evidence on oath; but the credibility of her testimony, and how far she is to be believed, must be left to the jury, being more or less credible according to the circumstances of fact, and signs of the injury, which are many; and tho' a rape is a most detestable crime, it is an accusation easily made, and hard to be proved, but harder to be defended by the man accused, altho' ever so innocent: And there are several instances of rapes fully proved, but have after been discovered to be malicious contrivances. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 636, 635.

Of old time, rape was felony, and punished with death; especially if the party ravished were a virgin, unless such virgin would accept of the offender for her husband, in which case she might save his life; by marrying him; for if she demanded him for her husband before judgment passed, he escaped punishment; but by the stat. Westm. 2. her election is taken away: Afterwards it was looked on as a great misdemeanor only, and not felony, but punished, by loss of eyes and privy members; and by the statute of Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. c. 13. it was reduced to trespass, subjecting the offender to two years imprisonment, and a fine at the King's will: But the stat. Westm. 2. c. 34. made it felony again; and it is excluded from the benefit of the clergy, by 18 Eliz. c. 7. Rape was excepted out of the general pardon. 2 W. & M. c. 10, &c. See Appeal of Rape. And Black. Com. 4 V. 210. And see 1 Hale's P. C. 633, 635, 636.

All who are present, and actually assist a man to commit a rape, may be indicted as principal offenders, whether men or women. 1 Hawk. 108.

Rapine, (Rapina.) To take a thing in private against the owner's will, is properly theft; but to take it openly, or by violence, is rapine. 14 Car. 2. c. 22. and 18 Car. 2. c. 3. See Black. Com. 4 V. 241.

Raptu heredis, Is a writ for taking away an heir holding in feage; of which there are two sorts, one when the heir is married, the other when he is not; see Reg. Orig. 163.

Rase, (Rasuria) Seems to have been a measure of corn now disused. Tell shall be taken by the rase, and not by the heap or cantel. Ordinance for bakers, brewers, &c. c. 4.

Rasure of a deed, so as to alter it in a material part, without consent of the party bound by it, &c. will make the same void, and if it be rased in the date, after delivery, it is said it goes thro' the whole. 5 Rep. 23, 119.

Rasure, &c. is most suspicious, when it is in a deed poll, that there is but one part of the deed, and it makes to the advantage of him to whom made. And where a deed by rasure, addition or alteration becomes no deed, the defendant may plead non est. Ibid. See Black. Com. 2 V. 308.

Rate, A valuation of every man's estate; or the appointing and setting down how much every one shall pay, or be charged with to any tax. Stat. 43 Ed. 2.

Rate-tithe, Is where any sheep or other cattle are kept in a parish for less time than a year, the owner must pay tithe for them pro Rata, according to the custom of the place. F. N. B. 51.

Ratification, (Ratificatio) A ratifying or confirming: It is particularly used for the confirmation of a clerk in a prebend, &c. formerly conferred on him by the bishop, where the right of patronage is doubted or supposed to be in the King. Reg. Orig. 304.

Ratihabitio, Confirmation, agreement, consent. See 18 Vin. Abr. 156.

Ratio, Properly signifies reason; but we take it mostly for an account, as reddere rationem, to give an account, and so it is frequently used. According to some it is a cause, or judgment given therein; and ponere ad rationem, is to cite one to appear in judgment. Walsing. 88.

Rationabilibus diisio, Is a writ which lies where two lords, in divers towns, have seignories joining together, for him who findeth his waste by little and little to have been encroached on, against the other who hath encroached, thereby to rectify their bounds; in which respect Fitzherbert calls it in its own nature a writ of right. The Old Nat. Brev. says, That this is a kind of Justicies, and may be removed by a pone out of the county to the Common Bench. See the form and use in F. N. B. 128. and Reg. Orig. 157. The Civilians call this Judicium finium regendorum.

Rationabile Estoverium, Was alimony heretofore so called. Ros. 7 H. 3.

Rationabili parte, A writ of right for lands, &c. See Reple de Rationabili parte. And Black. Com. 3 V. 194.

Rationabili parte Bonorum, Is a writ which lies for wife, after the death of her husband, against the executors of the husband denying her the third part of his goods after debts and funeral charges paid. F. N. B. 222.

It appears by Glanville, that by the Common law of England, the goods of the deceased (his debts first paid) shall be divided into three parts; one for the wife, another for his children, and the third to the executors: And this writ may be brought by the children, as well as the wife. Reg. Orig. 142.

But it seems to be used only where the custom of the country serves for it; and the writs in the register rehearse the customs of the counties, &c. New Nat. Br. 270, 271.

As to children bringing this writ, their marriage is no advancement, if the father's goods be not given in his life-time; but where a child is advanced by the father, this writ will not lie. Ibid. See 18 Vin. Abr. 158. and Black. Com. 2 V. 492.

Rationale, Was the same with pallium: It was worn by the high priest of the old law, as a sign of the greatest perfection, and by the pope and bishops as a token of the highest virtue, quæ gratia & ratione perficitur, hence 'tis called rationale.

Ravishment, (Fr. Ravissement, i. e. Direptio, captio) Signifies an unlawful taking away either a woman, or an heir in ward; sometimes it is used in the same sense with rape.

Ravishment de gard, A writ which lay for the guardian by knight's service, or in socage, against a person who took from him the body of his ward. F. N. B. 140.

By 12 Car. 2. c. 24. this writ is taken away, as to lands, held by knights-service, &c. but not where there is guardian in socage, or appointed by will.

The Mayor and Aldermen and Chamberlain of London, who have the custody of orphans, if they commit any orphan to another, he shall have a writ of ravishment of ward against him who taketh the ward out of his possession. New Nat. Br. 317.

Ray, A word appropriated to cloth never coloured or dyed. Stat. 17 R. 2. cap. 3. 11 H. 4. cap. 6. and 1 R. 3. cap. 8.

Reafforested, Is where a forest which had been disafforested is again made forest; as the forest of Dean is by Stat. 2. c. 3.

Realty, Is an abstract of real, as distinguished from personalty.

Reason, Is the very life of law; and what is contrary to it is unlawful.

When the reason of the law once ceases, the law itself generally ceases; because reason is the foundation of all our laws. Co. Lit. 97, 183.

If maxims of law admit of any difference, those are to be preferred which carry with them the more perfect and excellent reason. Ibid. See Black. Com. 1 V. 70.

Reasonable assu, Was a duty claimed by the lord of the fee of his tenants holding by knights service, to marry his daughter, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 24. See the Stat. 2. c. 24.

Reasonable part. See Black. Com. 2 V. 492; 516. 4 V. 461, 417.

Reattachment, (Reattachiamentum) Is a second attachment of him who was formerly attached and dismissed the court without day, by the not coming of the justices, or some such casualty. Broke Reg. Orig. 35.

A cause discontinued, or put without day, cannot be revived without reattachment or resummons; which if they are special, may revive the whole proceedings; but if general, the original record only. 2 Hawk. 300. And on reattachment, the defendant is to plead de novo, &c. See Day.

Rebate, Is an abating what the interest of money comes to, in consideration of prompt payment. Merch. Dia.

Rebellion, (Rebellio) Among the Romans, was where those who had been formerly overcome in battle, and yielded to their subjection, made a second resistance: But with us it is generally used for the taking up of arms traitorously against the King, whether by natural subjects, or others when once subdued; and the word rebel is sometimes applied to him who wilfully breaks a law; so to a villein disobeying his lord. Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 6. 1 R. 2. c. 6.

There is a difference between enemies and rebels; enemies are those who are out of the King's allegiance; therefore subjects of the King, either in open war, or rebellion, are not the King's enemies, but traitors. And David Prince of Wales, who levied war against Ed. 1. because he was within the allegiance of the King, had sentence pronounced against him as a traitor and rebel. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 16. Private persons may arm themselves to suppress rebels, enemies, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 136.

Rebellious assembly, Is a gathering together of troublesome persons, or more, intending or going about to practise or put in use unlawfully, of their own authority, any thing to change the laws or statutes of the realm; or to destroy the inclosures of any ground, or banks of any fish-pound, pool or conduit, to the intent the same shall lie waste and void; or to destroy the deer in any park; or any warren of conies, dove-houses, or fish in ponds; or any house, barns, mills or bays; or to burn stacks of corn; or abate rents, or prices of victuals, &c. Stat. 1 Mar. cap. 12. 1 Ed. 6. See Assembly unlawful.

Rebutter, (from the Fr. bouster, i. e. repeller, to put back or bar) Is the answer of defendant to plaintiff's surrejoinder: And plaintiff's answer to the rebutter is called a surrebutter; but it is very rare the parties go so far in pleading. Pract. Attorn. edit. 1. 86.

Rebutter is also where a man by deed or fine grants to warranty any land or hereditament to another; and the person making the warranty or his heir, sues him to whom the warranty is made, or his heir or assignee, for the same thing; if he who is so sued, plead the deed or fine with warranty, and pray judgment if the plaintiff shall be received to demand the thing which he ought to warrant to the party, against the warranty in the deed, &c. this is called a rebutter. Terms de Ley. And if I grant to a tenant to hold without impeachment of waste, and afterwards implead him for waste done, he may debar me of this action by shewing my grant; which is rebutter. Co. Entr. 284. 1 Inst. 365. See Black. Com. 3 V. 310.

Recaption, (Recaptio) Signifies the taking a second distress of one formerly distrained, during the plea grounded on the former distress; and it is a writ to recover damages for him whose goods being distrained for rent, or service, &c. are distrained again for the same cause, hanging the plea in the county-court, or before the justices. F. N. B. 71, 72. Stat. 47 Ed. 3. c. 7.

And a recaption lies where the lord distrains other cattle of the tenant than he first distrained, as well as if he had distrained the same cattle again, if it be for one and the same cause; but 19 Ed. 3. issue was taken whether the cattle were other cattle of the plaintiff, &c. New Nat. Br. 161.

If the lord distrain the cattle of a stranger for the same rent, and not his cattle who was first distrained; neither the stranger, nor the party first distrained, shall have the writ of recaption: And if the lord distrain for rent or service, and afterwards the lord's bailiff takes a distress on the same tenant for the same rent or service, pending the plea; the tenant shall not have a recaption against the lord, or against the bailiff, altho' the bailiff maketh cognizance in right of the lord, &c. for it may be the lord had no notice of that distress, or the bailiff had no notice of the distress taken by the lord; tho' in such case action of trespass lies; and if the lord agree to the distress taken by his servant or bailiff, the tenant may have this writ against the lord. Ibid. 159.

A man is distrained within a liberty, and sues a replevin there by plaint or writ, and pendant that plaint in the liberty he is distrained again for the same cause, by the person who distrained before; he shall not on that distress bring a writ of recaption, because the plaint is not pendant in the county-court before the sheriff, nor in C. B. before the justices: But if the plaint be removed by pone or recordare out of the liberty before the justices, then the party distrained may have a recaption, &c. And if a person be convicted before the sheriff in a writ of recaption, he shall not only render damages to the party, but be amerced for the contempt; and be fined. 39 Ed. 3.

For damage feasant beasts may be distrained as often as they be found on the land; because every time is for a new trespass and a new wrong, and no recaption lies.

Recaption is also a species of remedy by the mere act of the party injured. This happens, when any one hath deprived another of his property in goods or chattels personal, or wrongfully detains one's wife, child, or servant; in which case the owner of the goods, and the husband, parent, or master, may lawfully claim and retake them, wherever he happens to find them; so it be not be in a riotous manner, or attended with a breach of the peace. 3 Inst. 134. Hal. Anal. f. 46.

The reason for this is obvious; since it may frequently happen that the owner may have this only opportunity of doing himself justice: His goods may be afterwards conveyed away or destroyed; and his wife, children, or servants, concealed or carried out of his reach; if he had no speedier remedy than the ordinary process of law. If therefore he can so contrive it as to gain possession of his property again, without force or terror, the law favours and will justify his proceeding. But, as the publick peace is a superior consideration to any one man's private property; and as, if individuals were once allowed to use private force as a remedy for private injuries, all social justice must cease, the strong would give law to the weak, and every man would revert to a state of nature; for these reasons it is provided, that this natural right of recaption shall never be exerted, where such exertion must occasion strife and bodily contention, or endanger the peace of society. If, for instance, my horse is taken away, and I find him in a common, a fair, or a publick place, I may lawfully seize him to my own use: But I cannot justify breaking open a private stable, or entering on the grounds of a third person, to take him, except he be feloniously stolen; but must have recourse to an action at law. 2 Roll. Rep. 55, 56, 208. 2 Roll. Abr. 565, 566. Black. Com. 3 V. 4, 5. and 4 V. 356.

Receipt, or Receit. See Receipt.

Receiver, (Receptor) Is by us, as with the Civilians, commonly used in the evil part, for such as receive stolen goods, &c. And receiving a felon, and concealing him and his offence, makes a person accessory to the felony. 2 Inst. 183. But the receiver of a felon, &c. must have notice of the felony either express or implied, which is to be expressly charged in the indictment; and the felony must be compleat at the time of the receipt, and not become so afterwards by matter subsequent: If a person knowing one to have been guilty of felony, barely receive him and permit him to escape, without giving him any advice, assistance or encouragement, it is a high misdemeanor, but no capital offence; and a wife, in regard to the duty and love she owes her husband, may receive him when he hath committed felony; but no other relation will exempt the receiver of a felon from punishment. S. P. C. 41. H. P. C. 218, 219. 2 Hawk. P. C. 122, 319, 320.

By statute, if any person receive or buy knowingly any stolen goods, or conceal felons knowing of the felony, he shall be accessory to the felony, and suffer death as a felon. Stat. 5. Ann. c. 31. Such receivers, &c. may be transported, by 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. See Black. Com. 4 V. 132.

Receiver, Annexed to other words, as receiver of rents, signifies an officer belonging to the King or other personage. Comp. Jurisd. 18. See Account.

Receiver of the fines, An officer who receives the money of all such as compound with the King on original writs sued out of Chancery. West. Symb. par. 2. sect. 106. Stat. 1 Ed. 4. c. 1.

Receiver General of the Duchy of Lancaster, An officer of the duchy court, who collects all the revenues, fines, forfeitures and assessments, within the duchy, or what is there to be received arising from the profits of the duchy lands, &c. 39 Elix. cap. 7.

Recital, (Recitatio) Is the rehearsal or making mention in a deed or writing of something which has been done before. 2 Lill. Abr. 416.

A recital is not conclusive, because it is no direct affirmation; and by feigned recitals in a true deed, men might make what titles they pleased, since false recitals are not punishable. 1 Inst. 352. 2 Lev. 108. Wood's Inst. 225.

If a person by deed of assignment recite that he is possessed of an interest in certain lands, and assign it over by the deed, and become bound by bond to perform all the agreements in the deed; if he is not possessed of such interest, the condition is broken; and tho' a recital of itself is nothing, yet being joined and considered with the rest of the deed, it is material. 1 Leon. 112. And where it is but a recital, that before the indenture the parties were agreed to do such a thing, it is a covenant; and the deed itself confirms it. 3 Reb. 466.

The recital of one lease in another, is not a sufficient proof that there was such a lease as is recited. Vaugh. 74. But the recital of a lease in a deed of release, is good evidence of a lease against the lessor and those who claim under him. Mod. Ca. 44.

A new reversionary lease shall commence from the delivery, where an old lease is recited, and there is none, &c. Dyer 93. 6 Rep. 36.

A recites that he hath nothing in such lands, and in truth he hath an estate there, and makes a lease to B. for years: The recital is void, and the lease good. Jenk. Cent. 255. In this case if the recital were true, the lease would not bind. Ibid. See Black. Com. 2 V. 298. iv.

Recognition, (Recognitio) Signifies an acknowledgment, and is the title of the first chapter of the Stat. 1. Jac. 1. whereby the parliament acknowledged the crown of England, on the death of Queen Elizabeth, RIGHTFULLY to have descended to King James.

Recognitio aduandanda per Wm. & Darnley facta, Is a writ to the justices of C. B. for sending a record touching a recognizance, which the recognizer suggests was acknowledged by force and duress; that if it so appear, the recognizance may be disannulled. Reg. Orig. 183.

Recognitors, (Recognitores) Are the jury impanelled on an assize, so called, because they acknowledge a disseisin by their verdict. Bract. lib. 5.

Recognizance, (Fr. Reconnaissance, I. e. Recognitio Obligatio) Is a bond or obligation of record, acknowledged to the King, &c. And some are for debt, some for bail; others to appear at the sessions or assizes to prosecute felons, and to be of good behaviour, &c.

For debt, or bail, they are taken or acknowledged before the Judges, a Master in Chancery, &c. And to appear at the assizes, or sessions, they may be taken by justices of peace; which recognizances are to be returned by the justices to the sessions, or an information lies against them, 2 Lill. Abr. 417.

When a recognizance of the peace is made, the condition is to be read to the parties bound, calling them by their names thus: You A. B. do acknowledge to come unto our sovereign Lord King George, &c. And then it is to be ingrossed on parchment, and the justice is to subscribe it. Dalt. 479, 480. In these recognizances, the principal is bound in double the sum of the sureties; and the usual numbers of sureties are two, and the usual penalty 40 l. at least; tho' if the party be a very dangerous person, a justice may insist on a recognizance of 1000 l. penalty. Style 322.

Recognizances in general are of several sorts; one is founded on 23 H. 8. c. 6. By which statute, the Chief Justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas in term-time, or in their absence out of term, the Mayor of the Staple at Westminster, and the Recorder of London jointly, have power to take recognizances for the payment of debts, in this form, Notum universis per preces nos A. B. & C. D. teneri & firmiter obligari E. F. in centum libris, &c. They are to be sealed with the seal of the recognizer, and of the King appointed for that purpose, and the seal of one of the Chief Justices, &c. And the recognizances, their executors and administrators, have the like process and execution against the recognizer, as on obligations of statute staple. 2 Lill. 678.

The execution on a recognizance, or statute, pursuant to 23 Hen. 8. is called an extent; and the body of the recognizer, (if a layman) and all his lands, &c. into whose hands soever they come, are liable to the extent; goods (not

(not of other persons in his possession) and chattels, as leases for years, cattle, &c. which are in his own hands, and not sold bona fide and for valuable consideration, are also subject to the extent. 3 Rep. 13. But the land is not the debtor, but the body; and land is liable only in respect that it was in the hands of the cognisor at the time of the acknowledgment of the recognizance, or after; and the person is charged, but the lands chargeable only. Plowd. 72.

Lands held in tail are chargeable only during life, and not effect the issue in tail; unless a recovery be passed, when it is as fee-simple land: Cophold lands are subject to the extent, only during the life of the cognisor: The lands a man hath in right of his wife, shall be chargeable but during the lives of husband and wife together; and lands which the cognisor hath in jointenancy with another, are liable to execution during the life of cognisor and no longer; for after his death, if no execution was sued in his life, the surviving jointenant shall have all; but if the cognisor survive, all is liable. 2 Inst. 673.

If two or more join in the recognizance, &c. the lands of all ought equally to be charged: And where a cognisor, after he hath entered into a recognizance or statute, conveys his lands to divers persons, and the cognisee sues execution on the lands of some of them, and not all: In this case he or they whose lands are taken in execution, may by audita querela or scire facias have contribution from the rest, and have all the lands equally and proportionably extended. 3 Rep. 14. Plowd. 72. But the cognisor or his heirs, when he sells part of his lands, and leaves the remainder, shall not have any contribution from a purchaser, if his land only is put in execution.

If there be a recognizance, and after a statute entered in to by one man to two others; his lands may be extended pro rata, and so taken in execution. Telv. 12.

This kind of recognizance may be used for payment of debts; or to strengthen other assurance. Wood 288. If a recognizance is to pay 100*l.* at five several days, viz. 20*l.* on each day, immediately after the first failure of payment, the cognisee may have execution by elegit on the recognizance for the 20*l.* and shall not stay till the last day of payment is past, for this is in the nature of several judgments. 1 Inst. 292. 2 Inst. 395, 471. When no time is limited in statute or recognizance for payment of the money, it is due presently; as in case of a bond. Law Secur. 61.

A recognizance for money lent, tho' it is not a perfect record till entered on the roll; yet when entered, it is a recognizance from the first acknowledgment, and binds persons and lands from that time. Hob. 196. But by 29 Car. 2. c. 3. No recognizances shall bind lands in the hands of purchasers for valuable consideration, but from the time of inrollment, which is to be set down in the margin of the roll: and recognizances, &c. in the counties of York and Middlesex, shall not bind lands unless registered, 2, 5, 6 & 7 Ann. Also the clerk of the recognizances is to keep three several rolls for the entering recognizances taken by the Chief Justices, &c. and the persons before whom the recognizances are taken, and the parties acknowledging are to sign their names to the roll, as well as to the recognizance. 8 Geo. 1. cap. 25.

To make a good recognizance or obligation of record, the form prescribed must be pursued; therefore they may not be acknowledged before any others, besides the persons appointed by the statutes; and the substantial forms of the statute are to be observed herein. But a recognizance may be taken by the judges in any part of England. Dyer 21. Hob. 195.

Recognizances and statutes are like judgments; and the cognisee shall have the same things in execution, as after judgments. The body of the cognisor himself, but not of his heir, or executor, &c. may be taken, tho' there be lands, goods, and chattels to satisfy the debt: And if a cognisor is taken by the sheriff, and he let him go; yet his lands and goods are liable. 12 Rep. 1, 2. Plowd. 62. 1 And. 273.

By recognizances of debt, and bail, the body and lands are bound; tho' some opinions are, that the lands of bail are bound from the time of the recognizance entered into; and some, that they are not bound but from the recovery of the judgment against the principal. 2 Leon. 24. Cro. Jac. 272, 449.

In B. R. all recognizances are entered as taken in court; but in C. B. they enter them specially where taken, and their recognizances bind from the caption, but those in B. R. from the time of entry: In C. B. a scire facias may be brought on their recognizances either in London or Middlesex; on those in B. R. in the county of Middlesex only. 2 Salk. 659. 3 Nels. Abr. 46.

A recognizance of bail in C. B. is entered specially; the bail are bound to pay a certain sum of money, if the party condemned doth not pay the condemnation, or render his body to prison; and in B. R. recognizances are entered generally; that if the party be condemned in the suit or action, he shall render his body to prison, or pay the condemnation money, or the bail shall do it for him. 2 Lill. Abr. 417.

It was formerly a question whether a ca. sa. would lie on a recognizance taken in Chancery; but adjudged, that immediately after the recognizance is acknowledged, it is a judgment on record; and then by 25 Ed. 3. cap. 17. a ca. sa. will lie, it being a debt on record. 2 Bull. 62.

If a recognizance be made before a Master in Chancery, for a debt; or to perform an order or decree of the court; if the condition be not performed, an extent shall issue; or a scire facias is the proper process, for the recognisor to shew what he can say why execution should not be had against him; upon which and a scire fac. or two nibils returned, and judgment thereupon, the proper execution is to be had. Cro. Jac. 3.

Where a man is bound by recognizance in Chancery; and the cognisor hath certain indentures of defeasance; if the recognisee will sue execution on the recognizance, the recognisor may come into Chancery, and shew the indentures of defeasance, and that he is ready to perform them, and thereon he shall have a scire facias against the recognisee, returnable at a certain day; and in the same writ, he shall have a superfideas to the sheriff not to make execution in the mean time. New Nat. Br. 589.

If a person is bound in a recognizance in Chancery, or other court of record, and afterwards the recognisee dieth; his executors may sue forth an elegit, to have execution of the lands of the recognisor; and if the sheriff return that the recognisor is dead, then a special scire facias shall go against the heir of the recognisor, and those who are tenants of the lands which he had at the day of the recognizance entered into. Ibid. 590.

One of the best securities we have for a debt is the recognizance in Chancery, acknowledged before a Master of that court; which is to be signed by such Master, and afterwards inrolled: And the King may by his commission, give authority to one to receive a recognizance of another man, and to return the same into Chancery; and and on such a recognizance, if the recognisor do not pay the debt at the day, the recognisee shall have an elegit on the consufance so taken, as it it were taken in the Chancery. Praes. Solic. 131. New Nat. Br. 589.

In case lands are mortgaged, without giving notice of a recognizance formerly had, if the recognizance be not paid off and vacated in six months, the mortgagor shall forfeit his equity of redemption, &c. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 16.

Recognizances may be discharged by defeasance on condition, on performance of such condition; by release; payment of the money; delivery up of the recognizance, &c.

See Peace, Statute-merchant, Statute-staple, and 18 Vin. Abr. 163—170.

Recognizant, He to whom one is bound in a recognizance, mentioned in stat. 11 H. 6. c. 10.

Recognitor, He who enters into the recognizance.

Record, (Recordum, from the Lat. Recordari, to remember) Signifies a memorial or remembrance, or an authentic testimony in writing, contained in rolls of parchment, and preserved in a court of Record. Britton. c. 27. It is a writing in parchment, wherein are inrolled pleas of land, or common pleas, and criminal proceedings in courts of record; and records are retained to such courts only, and do not extend to the rolls of inferior courts, the registers of proceedings whereof are not properly called records. 1 Inst. 260. 2 Lill. Abr. 418. There are three kinds of records, viz. A judicial record, as an attainer, &c. a ministerial record on oath, being an office or inquisition found; and a record made by conveyance and consent, as a fine, or a deed inrolled. 4 Rep. 54. But it has been held, that a deed inrolled, or a decree in Chancery inrolled, are not records, but a deed and a decree recorded; and there is a difference between a record and a thing recorded. 2 Lill. 421.

Records being the rolls or memorials of the judges, import in themselves such incontrovable verity, that they admit of no proof or averment to the contrary, inasmuch that THEY ARE TO BE TRIED ONLY BY THEMSELVES; for otherwise there would be no end of controversies; but during the term wherein any judicial act is done, the roll is alterable in that term, as the judges shall direct; when the term is past, then the record admitteth of no alteration, or proof that it is false in any instance. 1 Inst. 260. 4 Rep. 52.

Matter of record is to be proved by the record itself, and not by evidence, because no issue can be joined on it to be tried by a jury like matters of fact; and the credit of a record is greater than the testimony of witnesses. 21 Car. B. R. Tho' where matter of record is mixed with matter of fact, it shall be tried by a jury. Hob. 124.

A man cannot regularly aver against a Record; yet a jury shall not be elopped by a Record to find the truth of the fact: And it was adjudged that on evidence, it is at the discretion of the court to permit any matter to be shewn to prove a Record. 1 Vent. 362. Allen 18. 3 Nelf. Abr. 48, 49.

A Record may be contradictory in appearance, and yet be good: And tho' it hath apparent falshood in it, it is not to be denied; but a Record may in some cases be avoided by matter in fact. Style's Reg. 281. Co. Litt. 3 Cro. 329. Hutt. 20.

The judges cannot judge of a Record given in evidence, if the Record be not exemplified under seal: But a jury may find a Record altho' it be not so, if they have a copy proved to them, or other matter given in evidence sufficient to induce them to believe that there was such a record. 2 Lill. Abr. 421. By statute, judges may reform defects in any record, or process, or variance between Records, &c. And a Record exemplified or inrolled may be amended for variation from the exemplification. Stat. 8 H. 6.

A Record of an issue made up ready for trial of a cause, on motion and leave of court, may be amended so as not to deface the Record; and notwithstanding it be entered for trial, on paying costs to defendant: But the court will not give leave to amend it, if it may not be done without defacing or much altering the Record. 2 Lill. 420. B. R. will amend a Record removed thither out of C. B. and also Records removed out of inferior courts, as to faults and misprisions of clerks, which are adjudged amendable by the statutes of jeofails; tho' formerly B. R. would not amend Records out of inferior courts, but the law in this case is now altered by the Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. 2 Lill. Abr. 421, 422.

If the transcript of a Record be false, the court of B. R. will, on motion, order a certiorari to an inferior court, to certify how the Record is below; and if it be on a writ of error on a judgment of the Common Pleas, they will grant a rule to bring the record out of C. B. into this court, and then order the transcript to be amended in court, according to the roll in C. B. And a Record cannot be amended without a rule of the court, grounded on motion. Ibid.

Where a Record is so drawn, that the words may receive a double construction, one to make the record good, and another to make it erroneous, the court will interpret the words that way which will make the record good, as being most for the advancement of justice: So if a letter of a word in a Record be doubtful, that it may be taken for one letter or another, the court will construe it to be that letter which is for upholding the Record. See 1 Cro. 161. 2 Cro. 119, 153, 244, &c.

A Record that is rased, if legible, remains a good Record notwithstanding the rasure; but he who rased it is not to go unpunished for his offence. Mich. 1649. And in case of a rasure in a judgment, done by practice to hinder execution, the Record hath been ordered to be amended, and a special entry thereof to be made; but tho' the Record by this means be made perfect, the offender may be indicted for felony, for not only such an alteration whereby a judgment is actually reversed, but also such whereby it is revertable, whether it be or be not afterwards amended by the court, is within the act 8 H. 6. c. 12. making it felony to take away, or avoid any Record, &c. 2 Pall. Rep. 81. 1 Hawk. P. C. 113.

The court will not supply a blank left in a Record, to make it perfect, when before it was defective; as this would be to make a Record, which is not the office of the court to do, but to judge of them. 2 Lill. Abr. 420. If a subsequent Record hath any relation to one that is precedent; in such case it must appear in pleading, &c. to be the same without any variation. 3 Lutw. 905.

Where Records are pleaded, they must be shewn; and one may not plead any Record, if it be not in the same court where it remaineth, unless he shew it under the Great Seal of England, if denied: Acts of Record must be specially pleaded. Bro. ca. 20. 2 Cro. 560. 10 Rep. 92. 5 Rep. 218. Style 22. And Records are to be pleaded intire, and not part of them, with an inter alia referring to the Record; and so should a special verdict find a Record, unless a judgment be pleaded, or you declare on a judgment in a superior court, when the plaintiff may say recuperavit generally; but not in an inferior court, for there all the proceedings must be set forth particularly. Mich. 21 Car. B. R.

When a Record is pleaded, it is to conclude propter prius per Recordum, or the other side may answer Antidictum Record; but this being only matter of form, may be sometimes helped by a general demurrer; and writs are matter of Record, but they need not be so pleaded. 1 Saik. 1. 1 Lou. 211. 3 Nelf. Abr. 49. If a record is to be read in court, the counsel at the bar must open the effect of it, after read by the clerk of the court, by custom and practice; altho' the court may suffer it to be read afterwards if they please; and after reading, &c. it is then by rule of court ordered to be read down for a confilum. 2 Lill. Abr. 421.

Records certified out of inferior courts, on writs of error, and the judgments on such Records are to be entered in B. R. for until then the Records are not perfected: And if a Record once comes into B. R. by writ of error, it never goes out again; but a transcript of it may go to the House of Lords, on a writ of error there. 2 Lill. 422. Writ of error removes the Record; but the original is no part of it. Jenk. Cent. 164. A Record cannot be removed by writ of error, until the judgment in that Record is entered: And when and how a Record may be removed; and where and how demanded, see 2 Cro. 206. 2 Brownl. 145.

Attornies are to enter the whole Record on the roll, after a cause is tried, before the next term after the trial, on pain of 20 s. That the Record may be spoken to the next term, if there be cause, and the client be not delayed. Hill. 1649. Justices of assize, gaol-delivery, &c. are to send all their Records and processes determined to the Exchequer at Michaelmas in every year; and the Treasurer and Chamberlains, on sight of the commissions of such justices, are to receive the same Records, &c. under their seals, and keep them in the Treasury. Stat. 9 Ed. 3. c. 5. Record of a Cause made up for trial, see Trial.

Recordare facias Loqueliam, Is a writ directed to the sheriff to remove a cause depending in an inferior court, to the King's Bench or Common Pleas, and it is called a Recordare, because it commands the sheriff to make a Record of the proceedings in the county-court, and then to send up the cause. F. N. B. 71. 2 Inst. 339.

This writ is in the nature of a certiorari; on which plaintiff may remove the plaint, in the county-court, without cause; but defendant cannot receive it without cause shewn in the writ, as on a plea of freehold, &c. If the plaint is in another court, neither plaintiff or defendant can remove it without cause. Wed's Inst. 164.

If a plea is discontinued in the county, plaintiff or defendant may remove the plaint into the Common Pleas or King's Bench by Recordare, and it shall be good, and plaintiff may declare on the same, and the court hold plea thereof. New Nat. Br. 158.

The form of this writ in the Register is, Es Recordum illud habeas, &c. But in a Recordare to remove a Record out of the court of antient demesne, the writ shall say, Loqueliam &c. proffum, &c. And there is a writ to call a Record, &c. to an higher court at Westminster, called Recordo &c. processu mittendis. Tab. Reg. Orig. By the usual writ recordare, the sheriff is commanded in his full court, to cause to be recorded the plea which is in the said court.

court between A. and B. of, &c. And have that record before the justices at Westminster the day, &c. under the seals, &c. And to the said parties appoint the same day, that they be then there to proceed in that plea, as shall be just, &c. See Black. Com. 3 N. 34. 195.

Recorder, (Recordator) is a person whom the mayor and other magistrates of any city or town corporate, having jurisdiction, and a court of record within their precincts by the King's grant, associate unto them for their better direction in matters of justice, and proceedings according to law: therefore he is generally a counsellor or other person experienced in the law.

The Recorder of London, is one of the justices of eye and terminer; and a justice of peace of the quorum, for putting the laws in execution for preservation of the peace and government of the city: And being the mouth of the city, he learnedly delivers the sentences and judgments of the courts therein; and also certifies and records the city-customs, &c. Chart. K. Charles 2. 1 Inst. 288. He is chosen by the Lord Mayor and Aldermen; and attends the business of the city, on any warning by the Lord Mayor, &c.

Recovery, (Recuperatio, from the Fr. recouverer, recuperare.) Signifies (in a legal acceptance,) obtaining any thing by judgment or trial of law, as evictio doth among the Civilians. There is a true recovery and a feigned one. A true recovery is an actual or real recovery, of any thing, or the value thereof, by judgment; as if a man sue for any land, or other thing moveable or immoveable, and have a verdict or judgment for him. A feigned recovery is (as the Civilians call it) Quodammodo fictiojuris, a certain form or course set down by law to be observed, FOR THE BETTER ASSURING LANDS OR TENEMENTS: And the effect thereof is (according to West. Sym. par. 2. tit. Recoveries, f. 1.) to discontinue and destroy estate-tail, remainders and reversions, and to bar the entails thereof. And in this formality are required three persons, viz. the demandant, tenant and vouchee. The demandant is he who brings the writ of entry, and may be termed the recoverer. The tenant is he against whom the writ is brought, and may be termed the recoveree. The vouchee is he whom the tenant voucheth, and calls to warranty for the land in demand. A recovery with double voucher is, where the tenant voucheth one, and another voucheth another, or the common vouches. And a recovery with treble voucher is, where three are vouched.

But to explain this point a little more: A man who is desirous to cut off an estate-tail, to the end to sell, give, or devise it, causeth a feigned writ of entry sur dissein en le poss, to be brought for the lands the intail which of he intends to cut off, and in a feigned count or declaration thereon made, pretends he was disseised by him, who by a feigned fine or deed of bargain and sale is named and supposed to be tenant of the land. This feigned tenant, if it be a single recovery, is made to appear and vouch the bastard of writs for the custos brevium, or the crier in the Common Pleas (for there only can such recoveries be suffered) who makes default. Whereupon the land is recovered by him who brought the writ, and judgment is by such fictio of law entered, that demandant shall recover, and have a writ of seisin for the possession of the lands demanded, and that the tenant shall recover the value of the lands against the lands of the vouches. This feigned recovery is also called a common recovery, because it is a barren and common path to the end for which it is appointed, viz. to cut off the estates above specified. But a true recovery is as well of the value as of the thing: For example, If I buy land of another with warranty, which land a third person afterwards by suit of law recovereth against me, I have my remedy against him who sold it me, to recover in value, that is, to recover so much in money as the land is worth, or other lands of equal value by way of exchange. F. N. B. 134. Cowell.

A recovery in a large sense is a restitution to a former right by solemn judgment; and judgments, whether obtained after a real defense made by the tenant to the writ, or whether pronounced on his default or feint plea, had the same efficacy to bind the right of the land in question; this was the notion of the Common law, and from hence men took an opportunity of making use of the decisions of the court to their own advantage, and to the prejudice of others, who tho' in some cases strangers to the action, yet were interested in the land for which it was brought. 2 Inst. 75. 429.

For whilst these recoveries were governed by the strict rules of the Common law, particular tenants, as tenant in dower, courtesy, in tail after possibility of issue extinct, and for life only; all those who had made leases for years, and those whose wives were intitled to dower, often took advantage of them, and by selling the lands, and suffering their purchasers to recover them, thereby defeated the right of those in remainder or reversion, &c. which were inconveniencies so great, that it was thought necessary to provide against them by positive laws; as stat. West. 2. c. 3. which makes provision for him in reversion, against the recoveries suffered either by the tenant in dower, by the courtesy, or in tail after possibility of issue extinct, or for life; and by the 4th chapter of this statute, the wife is secured as to her dower; and the statute of Gloucester, c. 11. and stat. 7 & 21 Hen. 8. have established the right of termors, and enabled them to falsify such recoveries. See Co. Lit. 104. Kel. 109. F. N. B. 468. Plow. 57. Dr. & Stud. 45.

But there is no express provision made by any statute to preserve the interest of the issue in tail, or of him in reversion, against a recovery suffered by the donee, yet it seems to have been for two hundred years after the making the statute de donis, that they were protected by that statute; therefore we find no express resolution, where such recovery was allowed to bar the issue in tail, or those in remainder or reversion, till the reigns of Ed. 4. and H. 7. tho' in some cases the donee in tail was allowed to charge the intail, and even to bar it. See 1 Rel. Ab. 342. Co. Lit. 343. 10 Co. 37. Plow. 436. 2 Inst. 335. Co. Lit. 374. 4 Leon. 132. 133. See Estate-tail.

When these recoveries were established as a common conveyance, and the best way of barring the issue in tail, and those in reversion or remainder, the tenant for life began to apply them once more to the prejudice of those who had the inheritance; and tho' the former statutes gave those who had the inheritance a remedy, yet the provision made by them being tedious and expensive, it was thought proper to make the 32 H. 8. c. 31. which declares all such conveyances recoveries against the particular tenants to be void in respect to him in reversion or remainder; and tho' the judges very reasonably determined recoveries against that act to be not only void, but a forfeiture of the particular estate, because it was a manner of conveyance as much known at that time as a fine or feoffment, therefore by parity of reason ought to have the same operation; yet that statute did not fully answer the end for which it was made. Co. Lit. 356. a. 1 Co. 15. Vaugb. 51.

For if A. had been tenant for life, and made a lease for years to B. and B. had made a feoffment in fee, if the feoffee had suffered a recovery, and vouched the tenant for life, this was no void recovery within the statute; because A. the tenant for life was not seised at the time of the recovery, for the feoffment of the termor was a disseisin to A. and him in reversion; and the statute makes recoveries of tenants for life in possession only void against them to whom the reversion then belongs. 10 Co. 45. a. Co. Lit. 362.

Yet where tenant for life bargained and sold his land in fee by indenture inrolled, and the bargainee suffered a recovery, and vouched the bargainor, this was a void recovery, and a forfeiture within the 32 H. 8. for tho' the bargain and sale was of the inheritance, yet it pass only an estate for life of the bargainor, which was the greatest estate he could lawfully pass; consequently the reversioner was not defeated; therefore the bargainee being a legal tenant for life in possession, the recovery against him, tho' with a voucher of the bargainor, was void within that act against him in reversion, whose reversion was not turned to a right as in the former case of a disseisin. 1 Co. 15. 1 Leon. 123.

But the former defect was cured by 14 Eliz. which declares all recoveries (had by agreement of the parties, or by comp.) against tenant for life, of any lands whereof he is seised, or against any other with voucher over of him, to be void, as against the reversioners and their heirs.

These statutes made no provision for reversions or remainders expectant on estates-tail; therefore if there be tenant for life, remainder in tail, remainder in fee, and tenant for life suffers a recovery, and vouches the remainder-man in tail, who vouches the common vouchee; this is so far from being a void recovery within those statutes, that the reversion in fee is actually barred by it; for the intended recompence, which the remainder-man in tail is to have against the common vouchee, is to go in succession, as the estate-tail would have done; and it can't be a covinous recovery within the act, because the remainder in tail joined in it, who may at any time suffer such a recovery to destroy the remainder in fee. 10 Co. 39. b. 45. These common recoveries were no sooner allowed by the judges to bar estates-tail, but men began to improve them into a common way of conveyance, and to declare uses on them, as on fines and feoffments. Hence it is, that the statutes, which provide against any alienations or discontinuances of particular tenants, provide at the same time against their recoveries; thus 11 H. 7. c. 20. declares all recoveries, as well as other discontinuances by fine or feoffment of women tenants in tail, of the gift of their husbands, or their ancestors, to be void; so a recovery against husband and wife of the inheritance of the wife, without any voucher, is declared to be void within 32 H. 8. c. 28. tho' the statute says, "suffered or done by the husband;" for this, like a feoffment by baron and feme in substance, is the act of the baron only; and so within the statute, but a common recovery suffered by a feme covert, where her husband joins with her, is good to bar her and her heirs. 1. Who may suffer a recovery; of what things a recovery may be suffered, and by what names.

When recoveries were improved into a common way of conveyance, it was thought reasonable that those, whom the law had judged incapable to act for their own interest, should not be bound by the judgment given in recoveries, tho' it was the solemn act of the court; for where defendant gives way to the judgment, 'tis as much his voluntary act and conveyance, as if he had transferred the land by livery, or any other act in pais; therefore if an infant suffers a recovery, he may reverse it, as he may a writ of error, during his minority; and this was formerly taken for law, as well where the infant appeared by guardian, as by attorney, or in person; but now the distinction turns on this point, that if an infant suffers a recovery in person, 'tis erroneous, and he may reverse it by writ of error; but even in this case the writ of error must be brought during his minority, that his infancy may be tried by the inspection of the court, for at his full age it becomes obligatory and unavoidable; yet in cases of necessity, the court has admitted the infant to appear by guardian, and to suffer a recovery, or come in as vouchee; but this too is seldom allowed by the court; and on emergencies, when it tends to the improvement of the infant's affairs, or when lands of equal value have been settled on him, and these recoveries have been allowed and supported by the judges, the infant could not set them aside or shake them; besides, if such recoveries be to the prejudice of the infant, he has remedy for it against his guardian, and may reimburse himself out of his pocket, to whom the law hath committed the care of him. 1 Bull. 235. 2 Rol. If an infant suffers a recovery, and appears by attorney, it seems he may reverse it AFTER his full age; because here it may be discovered, whether he was within age when the recovery was suffered, because it may be tried per pais, whether the warrant of attorney was made by him when an infant. Sid. 321. 1 Lev. 142. 2.

A recovery, as well as a fine by a feme covert, is good to bar her; because the præcipe in the recovery answers the writ of covenant in the fine to bring her into court, where the examination of the judges destroys the presumption of law, that this is done by the coercion of her husband, for then 'tis presumed they would have refused her. 10 Co. 43. a. 2 Rol. Recoveries, being now settled as common assurances to establish men in their purchases, are very much favoured by the judges, and not compared to judgments in other real actions or adversary suits. 2 Inst. 353. Popb. 22, 23. 2 Vent. 32.

So if a man be seised of a reputed manor, which really is no manor, and he suffers a common recovery of this by the name of a manor, this is a good recovery of the lands which constituted the reputed manor; tho' strictly speaking there is no manor recovered, because the law supports this, as all other conveyances, according to the intention of the parties; for it would be severe to vacate this conveyance, when the purchaser recovered them by the assent of the vendor under such a denomination. 2 Rol. So if a recovery be suffered of a manor with its appurtenances, lands which have been reputed parcel of the manor shall pass; for 'tis but equitable, quod voluntas Domini volentis rem suam in alium transferre rata habeatur; and tho' the recovery does not mention the lands reputed parcel of the manor, but only the manor itself, yet this was supplied by the indenture which was of the manor, and all lands reputed parcel thereof, and tho' occupied together but two years. 1 Sid. 190. 1 Lev. 27. 1 Keb. 591, 691. 2 Mod. 235. C. between Thynn and Thynn; and note, that in all the books which report this case, 'tis said, that as to Sir Myles Finch's case, (which see 6 Co. 33.) all the judges of England, gave their opinions under their hands, that the lands in reputation, belonging to that manor, should not pass; but that Coke, after he was made Chief Justice, set it adjudged otherwise, and so it hath been held ever since; and well it was that it was so adjudged, because many settlements depended thereon.

If a man having a third part of a manor suffers a recovery of a moiety, this is good to pass his interest in the third part; for where the words of a conveyance (which a recovery is agreed to be,) contain more than the grantor can convey, it would be an unreasonable interpretation to make this void and entirely useless, when they are sufficient to convey so much as he might lawfully pass; so if the recovery had been in this case, of the third part of the manor, by the name of the moiety, part and purparty of the manor, this had been good for the whole third part, and not only for a moiety of the third part. In ejectment a special verdict found, that there was a parish of Ribton, and the vill of Ribton, but the latter not of equal extent with the former; and that J. S. was seised of land in tail in the parish, but not in the vill; and bargained, and sold the land in the parish of Ribton, with covenant to levy a fine, and suffer a recovery to the uses in the deed; but the fine and recovery were only of the lands in Ribton; the question was, Whether this recovery would serve for the land in the parish of Ribton; the court, in favour of common recoveries, extended the recovery to the lands in the parish of Ribton; because the verdict found, that he who suffered the recovery, had no lands in the vill, consequently that the recovery must be void, if not extended to the parish; and the parish is not so ancient as vill, and therefore till lately were never inserted in writs, yet now they are, and the law takes notice of them. 2 Vern. 31, 32. 1 Mod. 250. and 2 Mod. 233. 2. What estates and interests may be barred by a common recovery; and of single and double voucher.

In respect to estates-tail, and barring them by recovery, what is principally to be regarded is, that there must be a legal tenant to the præcipe at the time of the writ purchased, or at the return; for since estates-tail are only barred on account of the intended recompence which is to follow the descent of the tail, where there happens to be no tenant to the præcipe, the demandant can really recover nothing; consequently the supposed tenant can have no recompence in value against the vouchee, for that is only given against the vouchee in consideration of what the tenant lost. Hob. 262.

As if there be tenant for life, remainder in tail, remainder in fee, and tenant for life with the remainder in tail suffer a recovery, with voucher over, this shall not bar the remainder in tail, nor the remainder in fee, because the remainder-man in tail was not tenant to the præcipe, consequently could not have the intended recompence, because that was given in lieu of the estate recovered, which was no greater than the estate for life, he only, being legal tenant to the præcipe. 1 Roll. Abr. 395. Dyer 352. Cro. Eliz. 670. Moor 255; 256.

In a writ of error to reverse a common recovery, the tenant to the præcipe was made by a fine, the recovery was suffered, and the fine reversed; yet it was held a good recovery, for there was a good tenant to the præcipe at the time. 2 Salk. 568.

If a manor be given to a man and a woman, and the heirs of the body of the man begotten on the woman, and they intermarry, and then the husband suffers a recovery of the whole manor; this is good for a moiety, because the gift being made before marriage, they had each an undivided moiety, which they may transfer, but the recovery can operate but for a moiety, because the husband only was tenant to the præcipe, consequently the demandant only could recover his interest in the manor, which was but a moiety. Moor 95.

If lands are given to a man and his wife, and the heirs of the body of the husband, and a recovery is had against him only, this recovery will neither bar the reversion nor the tail; for the recompence being to go in succession, as the estate which the tenant lost would have done, the husband could not lose all the land, because he was not a legal tenant to the whole, his wife being jointenant with him who was no party to the writ; nor could the recovery be good for a moiety, because there are no moieties between baron and feme, but both are considered as one person in law. If the husband had levied a fine, and the wife suffered a recovery, and vouched the husband, who touched the common vouchee; this had been a good bar of the intail, for there the husband came in to defend the estate-tail, which the wife was a stranger to, and the assets which he recovered over is a recompence for the estate-tail, which he only had a right to without the feme, and which the law gives him a power to dispose of. Moor 210. Co. 5. 2 Roll. Abr. 395. 4 Leon. 93. 1 And. 162. 2 Salk. 568.

In a settlement, on special verdict the case was, B. seised in fee of the lands in question hath issue B. his eldest son, C. his second, and D. his third son; on a marriage entered between D. his youngest son and one E. before marriage covenants to stand seised to the use of himself for life, remainder to D. and E. and the heirs male of their two bodies, remainder to D. and the heirs male of his body, remainder to E. and the heirs male of his body, remainder to B. and the heirs male of his body, the remainder to his own right heirs. A. dies, a præcipe is brought against one Upton as tenant of the freehold, and after, before the return of the writ, D. by bargain and sale conveys the land to Upton and his heirs, and the deed was inrolled after the return of the writ, and within six months; Upton vouches B. only without his wife, and a common recovery was suffered to the use of D. and his heirs; then E. dies, and after D. dies without issue male, having issue four daughters, and between them and C. in remainder was the question, what was barred by this recovery. 1st, It was agreed on both sides, that here was a good tenant to the præcipe, the bargain and sale being made to Upton before the return, yet it being inrolled in due time, the freehold was in Upton ab initio. 2dly, That this settlement being made before marriage, when the husband and wife took by moieties and not by intiercies, the husband had absolute power over his own moiety, therefore for that the recovery was an absolute bar, wherein this differs from the case of Owen and Morgan, 3 Co. 5. where they took by intiercies. 3dly, That this recovery was no bar to the other moiety of E. because she was not party, but her estate-tail in that continued untouched, tho' it was urged also to be a bar for her moiety, she dying first, and so her husband in as sole tenant of the whole ab initio, and that during the coverture the husband had power to make a good tenant of the whole; but the court held otherwise. 4thly, It was held, that the estate-tail to D. and E. being determined, the remainder to D. in tail male general, and all the other remainders depending thereon were barred absolutely by this recovery; for D. coming in as vouchee, comes in privily and representation of all the estates he hath or had, consequently he comes in representation of the remainder to himself in tail male general, and then the recompence in value goes to that, and also to all the other remainders depending thereupon, and by consequence all are barred by the recovery. 3 Lev. 107.

Tenant in tail, in consideration of his son's marriage, covenants to stand seised to the use of himself and his heirs till the marriage, and then to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of his son and to the heirs of his body, and suffers a common recovery with single voucher to this purpose, and then dies without issue; this recovery did not bar the remainder expectant on the estate-tail, for the covenant had changed the estate-tail into a fee, consequently the recompence could not be in lieu of the intail, since the tenant to the præcipe was not seised of the estate-tail at the time of the recovery suffered. Yelv. 51. sec 2 Salk. 619. which seems contrary.

A. tenant for life, remainder to B. in tail, the remainder to C. in fee, A. and B. join in a fine come coo, &c. to a stranger, who renders it to A. for life, remainder to B. and his heirs; afterwards A. and B. suffer a recovery with single voucher to the use of B. and his heirs; this recovery did not bar the remainder in fee, because by the render they were seised of a new estate, and B. was not either tenant in possession, or seised in right of the intail; consequently the recompence being given in lieu of the estate recovered, the tail could not be docked, nor the remainder man barred by this recovery, because the tenants to the præcipe were not seised of it at the time of the recovery suffered. Cro. Eliz. 807. Moor 634.

As to the use of the single and double voucher, it is to be observed, that the tenant who loses the land has, on his vouching over, a recompence in value adjudged against his vouchee, which is to go in the same succession as the land recovered would have done: Now a recovery with single voucher is sufficient to bar an estate tail where the tenant in tail is tenant to the præcipe, and seised of the lands in tail at the time of the præcipe brought against him, for the recompence in value must follow the descent of the land which he loses, and when that proves to be the estate-tail, then the issue is supposed to have an equivalent for it, consequently not prejudiced by the recovery; but because a single voucher can bar only the estate which the tenant is seised of at the time of the præcipe brought, and not any right which he hath, it was found necessary to admit the use of a double voucher; for if such tenant in tail discontinue the tail, and take back an estate or discontinue the discontinuee, a recovery against him with a voucher over could not bar the estate-tail; for the recompence comes in lieu of the land recovered, which was the defeasible estate, consequently the issue has nothing in value for the estate tail, without which he cannot be barred. Bro. tit. Recovery. Yelv. 51. 3 Co. 5. Moor 256.

But if in this case tenant in tail after disseisin had either by fine, or release, made a tenant to the præcipe, and came in himself as vouchee, and then vouched over the common vouchee; this double voucher had been sufficient to bar the tenant in tail and his heirs of every estate which he was at any time seised; for when the tenant in tail comes in as vouchee, 'tis presumed he will, and he has an opportunity to set up every title he had, to defeat the demandant; and since what he offered was not sufficient to bar demandant, the court takes it for granted, he had no other title than what he set up, therefore will give him but one recompence for all. 3 Co. 6. b. Plow. 8. Cro. Eliz. 562. Popb. 100. Moor 365. Hob. 263.

Thus if A. be tenant for life, remainder to B. in tail, and a stranger disseises A. and enfeoffs B. if a præcipe be brought against B. and a recovery suffered as usual; this shall not affect the estate-tail, because B. had only a right to that, and was not seised of it, and the recompence was not given in lieu of the tail, because the estate-tail was not in question on the recovery, for B. could not lose the estate he had not; but if in this case B. had made another tenant to the præcipe, and came in himself as voucher, this had barred the intail. 3 Co. 58. b. 2 Roll. Abr. 395.

If A. be tenant for life, remainder to B. in tail, and B. disseises A. and suffers a common recovery, himself being tenant to the præcipe; this recovery with a single voucher is sufficient to bar the estate-tail in B. because he was actually seised of that, at the time of the præcipe brought against him; for his disseisin did not devert his own estate, but only gave him a defeasible estate for life, which was immediately merged in his remainder, because the estate for life, and his inheritance, could not subsist together at the same time in him. 2 Roll. Abr. 395.

Thus we see how estates-tail are barred by recoveries, and the uses of the single and double voucher; and in this respect the operation of a recovery is correspondent to that of a fine, for they are but different ways of transferring estates-tail for security of purchasers; but the operation of a fine differs from a recovery in respect to strangers who have reversions or remainders expectant on estates-tail; for a fine does not bar them, unless they omit to make their claim within five years after their reversion or remainder is to execute; but a recovery reaches them immediately, and at the same time bars the estate-tail and all reversions and remainders on account of this supposed and imaginary recompence. Co. Litt. 372. a. 2 Roll. Abr. 396. Moor 156. Bro. tit. Recovery 28, 55.

And as a common recovery suffered by tenant in tail bars all reversions and remainders expectant, so it avoids all charges, leases and incumbrances made by those in reversion or remainder, and the recoveror shall enjoy the land free from any charge, for ever; as where he in remainder on an estate-tail, granted a rent-charge, and the tenant in tail suffered a recovery; it was adjudged, that the grantee could not distrain the recoveror; for since the rent was only at the first good, because of the possibility of the grantor's remainder coming in possession, when that possibility ceases by the recovery of tenant in tail, such grant must then become void. 3. Of erroneous and void recoveries, who may avoid them, and by what method.

It is already observed, that a recovery suffered by an infant in person shall not bind him; but tho' he may avoid it, yet it cannot be done by any entry in pais, but by writ of error, and this too during his minority; for the judgment of the court being on record must be set aside by an act of equal notoriety; but an infant may avoid a recovery by writ of error, as well where he comes in as vouchee, as where he is tenant to the præcipe; for tho' strictly speaking the recovery is not against him where he is not tenant to the præcipe, yet for the greater security of the purchaser, and to strengthen the recovery by the use of the double voucher, the person, who really has the right to the land in demand, comes in as vouchee, and then by vouching over the common vouchee, has one recompence for all his titles; consequently if he be the person who really loses the land, he ought in reason to reverse the recovery, as well where he comes in as vouchee, as where he is seised of the land, and tenant to the præcipe. 1 Roll. Abr. 742. 1 Lev. 142.

If tenant in tail within age comes in as vouchee by attorney in a common recovery, but in remainder may assign this for error, for he is party in interest to the recovery; and where a man's interest is bound by another's act, 'tis but reasonable he should be allowed to free himself from the mischief by taking advantage of any error in it. 1 Roll. Abr. 755, 796.

If A. be tenant in tail, remainder to B. and A. suffers an erroneous recovery, and the common voucher releases to the recoveror; yet if A. dies without issue, B. may, notwithstanding the release, reverse it by writ of error, for the common voucher is only called in for form; and as he has really no interest in or title to the land; so really neither does he make any recompence to the person who loses the land; therefore 'twere unreasonable to carry the notion of the imaginary recompence so far as to suppose him a real sufferer, and thereby give him the privilege of setting aside a conveyance, which he is no way affected by. Cro. Eliz. 2, 3.

In a writ of error to reverse a recovery suffered by an infant who appeared by guardian, the error assigned was in the entry of his admission by guardian, viz. Concessit per curiam hic quod A. B. sequatur pro J. S. Armig. qui infra ætas existit ut guardianus prædicti J. S. whereas it was objected, that since the infant was tenant to the writ, it ought to have been entered, that the guardian was admitted to defend for the infant; but this exception was disallowed, because the words ad sequend. for the infant signify the same with ad defendend. for the infant; for ad sequend. is to follow and attend the business and suit of the infant; and the guardian being assigned to do that must likewise have been assigned to take care of, or take upon him the defence of the infant's suit. 2 Saund. 94, 95. 1 Mod. 48.

In a common recovery the writ of error bears date 1 Martii 7 Eliz. ret. die Lunæ in quarta septimana quadragesimæ proximæ futuræ, the first day of March being that year the first day in Lent, the recovery pait in the usual form that lent; and in a writ of error to reverse it, the error assigned was, that the words proximæ futuræ should be referred to Quadragesimæ, and then the writ of entry was not returned till Monday in the fourth week of Lent, 8 Eliz. which was the time the tenant was to appear; consequently this recovery must be void, because here was judgment on a voucher, and a recovery in value, before the writ was returned, before which the court has no power to proceed. But it was answered and resolved, that since proximæ futuræ were not written at large, they may be indifferently applied either to die Lunæ, by supposing them to stand for proximo futuro, or to quarta septimana, by supposing them to stand for proxima futura; and where words abbreviated may be indifferently referred, 'tis but reasonable to give them such a relation, as will best support the recovery, which is but a voluntary conveyance, ut res magis valeat quam pereat; but if the words had been at large proxima futura, then they must necessarily be referred to quadragesimæ, and then the objection had been good, and the recovery for that reason must have been void.

In error to reverse a recovery, the errors assigned were, 1. That the writ of entry was brought of an advowson of a rectory, and of a rent issuing out of the rectory, which was a bis petitum, therefore the writ vicious; but this was disallowed, because the advowson and rectory are different things; for he who has the advowson has only the right of presentation, but he who has the rectory has the profits of the church, out of which the rent issues; consequently there can be no bis petitum in this case, because by the demand of the advowson of the rectory, and of the rent issuing out of the rectory, the demandant recovers more than by a demand of the rectory only: another error assigned was in the demand of a rent or pension of four marks issuing out of the rectory, which is so uncertain a demand, a pension being a different thing from a rent, and recoverable in the Spiritual court; but this was disallowed; because because it is plain there is but one sum of four marks demanded, and the pension or rent must be synonymous here, because they are demanded as issuing out of the rectory; therefore the pension cannot be in nature of an annuity, which charges the person only, because it is expressly to issue out of the rectory. Popb. 23. § Co. 41. a.

In a writ of error to reverse a common recovery, the error insisted on was, that the warrant of attorney of the vouchee bore date before the summonas ad warrantizandum issued, yet the judgment was affirmed, because the vouchee may come in, if he will, before the summonas ad warrantizandum, and make his attorney; therefore to support the common recovery, it shall be presumed the vouchee was present in court and appointed his attorney; and so the dedimus for the warrant and the summonas ad warrantizandum void. *1 Sid. 213. 1 Lev. 130. Recoupe, (from the Fr. recouper) Signifies the keeping back or stopping something which is due, and in our law, we use it for; to defalk or discount; as if a person hath a rent of ten pounds out of certain lands, and he disseises the tenant of the land; in an assise brought by the disseisee, if he recover the land and damages, the disseisor shall recoupe the rent due in the damages: So of a rent charge issuing out of land, paid by the tenant to another, &c. he may recoupe the same. Terms de Ley. Hen. 1. c. 6.

Recto, Is used for a writ of right, which is of so high a nature, that as other writs in real actions are only to recover the possession of the lands, &c. in question; this aims to recover the seisin, and the property, and thereby both the rights of possession and property are tried together. 1 Inst. 158.

It hath two species; writ of right patent, and writ of right close: The first is so called, because it is ſent or ſan, and is the highest writ of all others, lying for him who hath fee-simple in the lands or tenements sued for, against tenant of the freehold at least, and in no other case. F. N. B. 1, 2, &c. But this writ of right patent seems to be extended farther than originally intended; for a writ of right of dower, which lies for tenant in dower, is patent, as appears by F. N. B. 7. And the like may be said in some other cases. Table Reg. Orig. Also there is a special writ of right patent in London, otherwise termed a writ of right according to the custom, which lieth of lands or tenements within the city, &c. And the writ of right patent is likewise called breve magnum de recto. Reg. Orig. 9. Fleta, lib. 5. c. 32.

A writ of right close is brought where one holds lands and tenements by charter in ancient demesne, in fee-simple, see tail, or for term of life, or in dower, and is disseised; and is directed to the bailiff of the King's manors, or to the lord of ancient demesne, if the manor is in the hands of a subject, commanding him to do right in his court: This writ is also called breve parvum de recto. F. N. B. 11. Reg. Orig. 9. Britton, c. 120. And he who holds lands in ancient demesne by court-roll, if he be ousted, shall not have the writ of right close, but is to sue by bill in the lord's court, &c.

If a person seised in fee-simple dies seised of such estate, and a stranger doth abate and enter into the land, and deforce the heir; the heir may sue a writ of Right patent against the tenant of the freehold of the same land, or an assise of Mortd'anceſſor. 11 Aff. 17.

In a writ of right patent, the demandant is to count of his own seisin, or of the seisin of his ancestor; if one bring the writ as heir to an ancestor, he may lay the seisin and esplees as in parcenary of the profits of the lands in his ancestors; and where it is brought by a bishop or body politick, seisin of the esplees is to be laid in themselves, or in their predecessors. New Nat. Br. 10.

Where a writ of right close is directed to the lord of whom the lands are holden, and he will not hold his court to proceed on it; a writ shall issue requiring him to hold his court, &c. And if the lord hold his court, but will not do the demandant right, or delay it, the plea may be removed by the writ called Tuit into the county-court of the sheriff; and from thence by recordare into the Common Pleas. Ibid. 6, 7.

Glanvil seems to make every writ, whereby a man sues for any thing due unto him, a writ of right. Glanvil. 10, 11, 12.

Writ of right may be had after an assise, writ of entry sur disseisin, &c. or other real action, where demandant is barred by action tried; so if he lose by default in a writ of right, before the mise is joined, &c. But if a person once loſeth his cause on a writ of right by trial and judgment, &c. he is without remedy, and shall be finally concluded. New Nat. Br. 2.

Recto de Advocatione Ecclesie, Is a writ lying where a man hath right of advowson, and the parson of the church dying, a stranger presents his clerk to the church, the party who hath right not having brought his action of quare impedit nor darreign presentment, but suffered the stranger to usurp on him: And it lieth only where an advowson is claimed in fee to him and his heirs. F. N. B. 30. 4 Ed. 3. c. 18.

Recto de custonia terrae & hæreditis, Was a writ which lay for him whose tenant holding of him in chivalry, died in nonage, against a stranger who entered on the land, and took the body of the heir; but by the statute of 12 Car. 2. c. 24. it is become useless as to lands holden in capite, or by knights service, but not where there is guardian in socage, or appointed by the last will and testament of the ancestor. The form of it, see in F. N. B. 139. and Reg. Orig. 161.

Recto de Dote, A writ of right of dower, which lies for a woman who has received part of her dower, and demands the residue against the heir of the husband, or his guardian. F. N. B. 7, 8, 147. 1 Inst. 32, 38.

Recto de dote unde nihil habet, Is a writ of right, which lies in case where the husband having divers lands or tenements, hath assured no dower to his wife, and she thereby is driven to sue for her thirds against the heir, or his guardian. Old Nat. Br. 6. Reg. Orig. 170.

Recto quando Dominus remittit, Is a writ which lieth where lands or tenements in the seigniorship of any lord, are in demand by a writ of right: If the lord in such case holdeth no court at the prayer of demandant or tenant, but sends to the King's court his writ to put the cause thither for that time, (saying to him at other times the right of his seigniorship) then this writ shall issue out for the other party, and hath its name from the words therein contained. F. N. B. 16.

Recto de Rationabili parte, A writ lying between privies in blood, as brothers in Germain, sisters, and other coparsons, for land in fee-simple. If there be two sisters, and the ancestor dieth seised of land in fee, and one of the sisters enters into the whole, and deforces the other, she who is deforced shall have the writ of right de rationabili parte: And if, where there are two sisters, after the death of the ancestor they enter and occupy in common as coparceners, and then one of them deforce the other to occupy that which is appendant or appurtenant to the messuage, &c. which they have in coparcenary; she who is deforced shall have this writ. Also if the ancestor were disseised of lands, and dieth, and one sister entereth into the whole land, and deforce her sister, she shall have the writ against her other sister: For it lieth as well on a dying seised of the ancestor, if one sister enter on all, as where the ancestor doth not die seised; and it is a writ of right patent, &c. F. N. B. 9. New Nat. Br. 19, 20.

In this writ the demand shall be of a certain portion of land, to hold in feoffment; and voucher and view do not lie in it, because of the privity of blood; but in a rationabili parte the view was granted. 15 H. 5. for that the ancestor did not die seised, &c. The process in the writ, after removing into C. B. is Summons, Grand Cape, and Petit Cape, &c. Ibid. See Booth.

Recto sur Disclaimers, Is a writ which lies where the lord, in the court of Common Pleas, avows on his tenant, and the tenant disclaims to hold of him; on which disclaimer the lord shall have this writ; and if he avers and proves that the land is holden of him, he shall recover the land for ever: This writ is grounded on the statute of Westm. 2. c. 2. Old Nat. Br. 150.

Rector, (Lat.) A governor; and rector ecclesie parochialis, Is he who hath the charge and cure of a parish church. It has been held, that rector ecclesie is one who hath a parsonage where there is a vicarage endowed. And when dioceses were divided into parishes, the clergy who had the charge in those places were called rectors; afterwards when their rectories were appropriated to monasteries, &c. the Monks kept the great tithes; but the bishops were to take care that the rector's place should be supplied by another, to whom he was to allow the small tithes for his maintenance, and this was the vicar. Comm. Parj. Comp. 75.—Rector tantum jus in ecclesia parochiali habet, quantum praelatus in ecclesia collegiata. Black. Com. 1 V. 384.

Rectorial tithes, see Black. Com. 1 V. 388.

Rectory, (Rectoria) Is taken pro integra ecclesia parochiali, cum omnibus suis juribus, prædictis, decimis aliisque proventibus speciebus. Spelm. Also the word rectoria hath been often applied to the rector's mansion or parsonage house. Paroch. Antiq. 549. See Parsonage.

Rectum, Right; and anciently it was used for a trial or accusation. Bract. lib. 3.

Rectum, Esse, ad rectum in curia domini, is the same with stare ad rectum. Leg. H. 1. c. 43. See infra.

Rectum Rogare, Is to petition the judge to do right. Leg. Inæ. c. 9.

Rectum, Stare ad rectum, To stand trial at law, or abide the justice of the court. Hoved. 655.

Rectus in Curia, i. e. Right in court, is he who stands at the bar, and no man objects any offence against him. Smith de Repub. Angl. lib. 2. c. 3. And when a person outlawed hath reversed the outlawry, so that he can participate of the benefit of the law, he is said to be rectus in curia.

Recusants, Are such as adhere to the Pope as supreme head of the church, and who refuse or deny supremacy to the King.

At the reformation, those were deemed recusants who disputed the authority of the crown in causes ecclesiastical, and denied the King's supremacy; but the acts of parliament made against recusants, particularly the 35 Eliz. describe a recusant to be one who does not repair to some church or chapel, or usual place of common prayer, to hear divine service: Afterwards, receiving the sacrament of the church was made a farther test of conformity: And by the 25 & 30 Car. 2. a declaration against transubstantiation was required, to distinguish papists and popish recusants from protestants.

All persons are judged popish recusants convicted, who refuse the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, or abjuration; and are liable to suffer and forfeit accordingly, viz. they incur a præmunire, whereupon they forfeit all their goods

Recusants convicted, above the age of sixteen years, are to go to their place of abode or settlement, and not travel above five miles from thence, without licence from the King, three of the privy council, or four justices of the peace, with the assent of the bishop of the diocese or the lieutenant, or deputy lieutenant of the county, on pain of forfeiting their goods, &c. And not having lands worth twenty marks per ann. or goods to the value of 40 l. if they do not make the submission of conformity mentioned in 35 Eliz. c. 2. being required by a justice of peace, they may be compelled to abjure the realm; which abjuration must be certified to the next assizes; and it is felony if they do not depart within the time limited by the justices, or departing and returning again without the King's licence: But if any person offending, before conviction, come to some parish church on a Sunday, and make a publick declaration of his conformity, he shall be discharged from all penalties, &c. tho' if such offender afterwards relapse, and become a recusant again, he shall lose the benefit he might otherwise have had on his submission: And recusants required by process to make their appearance, shall not incur any forfeiture for travelling on such occasions. 35 Eliz. c. 2. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5.

As to licensing a recusant to travel, the bishop, lieutenant, or deputy lieutenant, who gives his assent to it, must be a distinct person from the justices of peace who gave the licence; therefore if one and the same person be a justice of peace, and deputy lieutenant, he cannot act in both capacities, but if he sign and seal the licence as a justice of peace, the assent of some other deputy lieutenant, &c. must be had: And it is a good exception to a licence by four justices, that no particular cause of the recusant's travelling is expressed in it. Cro. Jac. 352. Cawley 210.

A person was indicted for recusancy, but conformed before conviction: And so again the second time, and was indicted a third time for a relapse; and on motion, that it might be certified into the Exchequer, because by the stat. 35 El. c. 2. he is to lose all the benefit which he was to have by his former conformity, the relapse was certified accordingly. 1 Bulst. 133.

Justices in their sessions are to cause proclamation to be made, that popish recusants shall render themselves to the sheriff or bailiff of the liberty where they are, before the next assizes or sessions, &c. And if they do not, the default being recorded, shall be taken as a sufficient conviction. 3 Jac. 1. c. 5. And constables and churchwardens of every parish, or one of them, or if none such, the constables of the hundred there, are to present once a year at the quarter-sessions such recusants as shall absent from the church for a month together; the forfeiture of which is 20 l. per month, &c. Stat. Ibid. If a recusant conform, and not receive the sacrament once a year at least; he shall forfeit for the first year 20 l. for the second 40 l. and for every default after 60 l. And if a person hath once received it, he make default therein in the space of one year, he shall forfeit 60 l. to be recovered at the quarter-sessions by indictment, and divided between the King and prosecutor: But the husband is not chargeable with the offence of the wife; nor the wife for the husband after his death. Ibid.

It hath been adjudged, that a writ of error will not lie on a conviction of a recusant, for not rendering himself to the sheriff, &c. because the conviction is no judgment, but the statute gives process on it for the forfeiture: So that if there be any faults in it, the same is to be quashed in the Exchequer, the party first conforming. Raym. 433.

An information tam quam was brought against defendant, setting forth, that before and on such a day he was a recusant convicted, and that afterwards he conformed, &c. and for three years after had not received the sacrament, and so demanded 60 l. for every year: On Not guilty pleaded, plaintiff had verdict; and thereupon it was moved that the information was uncertain, because neither the time was alledged, nor how, or in what court, nor before whom the conviction was; and the informer demands the penalty penalty for three years, when by statute no informer can demand a penalty upon the penal law, but by an information exhibited within a year after the offence: But it was resolved, that the first exception had been good on demurrer; but defendant having pleaded Not guilty, all the circumstances of his conviction were admitted, and nothing remained to be tried but the fact: And as for the second exception, it was good against the informer for his part, but should not prejudice the King. 2 Cro. 365. 3 Nels. Abr. 52.

The Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1. gives several remedies against Recusants; one for the King alone, and there the prosecution must be by indictment in B. R. The other for a common person, and that is to be by action of debt, bill, plaint or information. And the 28 Eliz. c. 6. was made for the benefit of the crown on indictments, and doth not extend to informations; therefore such informations may be brought in any court of record. Hob. 204.

Where the defendant is indicted on the statute of Recusancy, CONFORMITY is a good plea; but not if an action of debt be brought. 1 Mod. 213. But vide 2 Show. 332.

A Recusant certified into the court of King's Bench, according to the 23 Eliz. c. 1. shall give security for his good behaviour, &c. 2 Bull. 155. The judgment in Recusancy is quod convictus est. 2 Strange 1048. See Papists, and Black. Com. 4 V. 55, 124.

Red, (Sax. raed) Is an old word signifying advice; and redhana is one who advised the death of another. See Dedhana.

Red Book of the Exchequer, (Liber Rubens Scaccarii) Is an antient record, wherein are registred the names of those who held lands per Barroniam in King Henry the Second's time. Ryley 667. It is a manuscript volume of several miscellany treatises in the keeping of the King's remembrancer in his office in the Exchequer; and hath some things (as the number of the hides of lands in many of our counties, &c.) relating to the times before the Conquest. There is likewise an exact collection of the escuages under King Hen. 1. Rich. 2. and King John; and the ceremonies used at the coronation of Queen Eleanor, wife to King Henry the Third, &c. See Privilege.

Reddendum, Is used substantively for the clause in a lease, whereby the rent is reserved to the lessor; and antiently corn, flesh, fish, and other victuals, were for the most part reserved on leases. 2 Rep. 72. Wood's Inst. 226.

In debt for rent, plaintiff declared on a lease made 25 August 11 W. 3. of a messuage, &c. for seven years, to commence from the 24th day of June before; reddendum quarterly at Michaelmas, St. Thomas's day, Lady day, and Midsummer, three pounds ten shillings, the first payment to be made at Michaelmas then next; and assigned for breach that fourteen pounds of the rent was in arrear for one year, ending 24 December anno 13 Will. And on demurrer to this declaration, it was objected that on this lease there was no year could be ended on the 24th of December, but on St. Thomas's day, according to the reddendum; which was held to be true, because where special days are limited in the reddendum, the rent must be computed from those days, not according to the habendum; and that the rent is never computed from the habendum, but when the reddendum is general, i. e. paying quarterly so much; so plaintiff had leave to discontinue, &c. 1 Salt. 141. See Deci, Lease and Reservation, and Black. Com. 2 V. 299. i. iii.

Reddit se, Is where a man procures bail for himself to an action in any court at law; if the party bailed at any time before the return of the second scire facias against the bail, renders himself in discharge of his bail, they are thereby discharged. 2 Lill. Abr. 430.

A ca. sa. was returned non est inventus against the principal, and one scire fac. and a nihil; and on the second scire fac. he rendered himself, and was received; But if there had been a scire faci and judgment thereon, he had come too late. Cro. Jac. 109.

If defendant renders himself to the Marshal of B. R. on any action in that court, in discharge of his bail, the defendant's attorney is forthwith to give notice of such render to plaintiff's attorney, and shall make oath of the notice, &c.

And a reddidit se will not discharge the bail, unless the attorney who is concerned for defendant or his bail, enters it in the Marshal's book; and having given notice thereof to the attorney for plaintiff, brings the bail-piece to the Secondary, who on producing a note from the Marshal or his clerk, that defendant is in custody, will discharge it; and until this is done, plaintiff may notwithstanding proceed to judgment and execution against the bail; for until the bail-piece is discharged, there is a record still remaining in court against them. 2 Lill. 431.

A reddidit se of the principal, in discharge of the bail, is no plea in a writ of error; for the recognizance is not to render the body, but to pay the debt; adjudged, 3 Jac. 1. c. 8. Vide Bail.

Redditarius, A renter; and redditarium hath been used for a rental of a manor, or other estate. Cartular. Abbat. Glasen. MS. 92.

Reddition, (Redditio) A surrendering or restoring; being also a judicial acknowledgment that the thing in demand belongs to the demandant, and not to the person so surrendering. Stat. 34 & 35 H. 8. c. 24.

Redditus Missus, Is set or standing rent. Vide Affisus.

Re-delivery, Is a yielding and delivery back of a thing; If a person has committed a robbery, and stolen the goods of another, he cannot afterwards purge the offence by any re-delivery, &c. 1 Inst. 69. H. P. C. 72.

Redemise, Is a regranting of lands demised or leased. See Demise and Redemise.

Redemption, (Redemptio) A ransom or commutation; and by the old Saxon laws, a man convicted of a crime paid such a fine, according to the estimation of his head, pro redemptione sua.

Redisseisin, (Redisseisina) Is a disseisin made by him, who once before was found and adjudged to have disseised the same man of his lands or tenements, for which there lies a special writ called a writ of redisseisin. Old Nat. Br. 106. F. N. B. 188.

The writ of redisseisin lieth where a person recovers by assise of novel disseisin any lands, &c. and is put in possession by verdict and judgment, and afterwards is disseised of the same by him by whom he was disseised before. Statute of Merton, c. 3. New Nat. Br. 417. Also this writ lies against him who committed the redisseisin, and another who was not disseisor, if he be tenant of the land; and if a man recover by redisseisin, and after he is disseised again by the person who made the first redisseisin, he shall have a new writ of redisseisin; and so one redisseisin after another, every time he is redisseised. Ibid. 418, 420. And the redisseisin being found on the sheriff's inquisition, the party who did it is to be committed to prison, and the lands re-seised; and he who recovereth in redisseisin, shall have double damages, &c. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 26. The punishment for redisseisin see in the statute 52 H. 3. c. 8.

If plaintiff be redisseised of parcel of the tenement formerly recovered, he shall have a redisseisin: And when coparceners are disseised, and recover in an assise, if after they make partition and are severally disseised, they may bring several writs of redisseisin. &c. Co. Lit. 154.

A recovery in assise of novel disseisin is against two disseisors, and one of them disseises the plaintiff again, he may have a redisseisin against him: But where the recovery is against a woman in assise, and she taketh husband, and both of them disseise the plaintiff, he shall not have this writ; because the husband is alius, and not the same first disseisor. Ibid. And if in a writ of right, &c. the demandant makes his protestation to sue in the nature of an assise, and after is redisseised; he shall not have a writ of redisseisin, the first recovery not being by writ of assise of novel disseisin. See 2 Inst. Com. on West. 2. c. 26. See Post-Disseisin, and Black. Com. 3 V. 188.

Revers of Injuries. See Black. Com. 3 V. 2.

Reubbers, Are those that buy stolen cloth, and turn it into some other colour or fashion, that it may not be known again. Britton, c. 29. 3 Inst. 134.

Re-entry, (from the Fr. re-entrer i. e. reursus intrare) Is the returning or retaking a possession lately had, as if a man makes a lease of lands, &c. to another, he thereby quits the possession; and if he covenants with the lessee, that for non-payment of rent at the day, it shall be lawful for him to re-enter; this is as much as if he conditioned tioned to take again the land into his own hands, and to recover the possession by his own act, without assistance of the law. But words in a deed give no re-entry, if a clause of re-entry be not added. Wood's Inst. 140.

One may reserve a rent on condition in a feoffment, lease, &c. That if the rent is behind he shall re-enter, and hold the lands till he is satisfied, or paid the rent in arrears; and in this case if the rent is behind, he may re-enter; tho' when the feoffee, &c. pays or tenders on the land all the arrears, he may enter again. Litt. 327. 1 Inst. 203. And the feoffor, &c. hath only an interest, not the freehold, to take the profits in the nature of a distress: Here the profits shall not go in part of satisfaction of the rent; but it is otherwise if the feoffor was to hold the land till he was paid by the profits thereof. Ibid.

All persons who would re-enter on their tenants for non-payment of rent, are to make a demand of the rent; and to prevent the re-entry, tenants are to tender their rent, &c. 1 Inst. 201. If there is a lease for years, rendering rent with condition, that if the lessee assigns his term, the lessor may re-enter; and the lessee assigneth, and the lessor receiveth the rent of the assignee, not knowing or hearing of the assignment, he may re-enter notwithstanding the acceptance of the rent. 3 Rep. 65. 1 Cro. 553.

A feoffment may be made upon condition, That if the feoffor pay to the feoffee, &c. a certain sum of money at a day to come, then the feoffor to re-enter, &c. Litt. 322.

Re-exchange, Is the like sum of money payable by the drawer of a bill of exchange which is returned protested, for the exchange of the sum mentioned in the bill back again to the place whence it was drawn. Lex Mercat. 98.

Re-extent, Is a second extent on lands or tenements, on complaint that the former was partially made, &c. Broke 313.

Refare, (from the Sax. reaf, or rafan) To bereave, take away, or rob. Leg. H. 1. c. 83.

Reference, In acceptance of law is, where a matter is referred by the court of Chancery to a Master, and by the courts at law to a Prothonotary or Secondary, to examine and report to the court. 2 Lill. Abr. 432.

In Chancery, by order of court, irregularities, exceptions, matters of account, &c. are referred to the examination of a Master of that court. In the court of B. R. matters concerning the proceedings in a cause, by either of the parties, are proper matters of reference under the Secondary, and for him in some ordinary cases to compose the differences betwixt them; and in others to make his report how the matters stand, that the court may settle the differences according to their rules and orders. Palsb. 1650.

If a matter in difference between plaintiff and defendant be referred to the Secondary, and one of the parties will not attend at the time appointed, after notice thereof given, to hear the business referred; the other party may proceed in the reference alone, and get the Secondary to make his report without hearing of the party not attending. 2 Lill. 342. See Report, and Black. Com. 3 V. 453.

Reference to words. The King granted to A. and D. and their heirs all those messuages, &c. late in the tenure of J. S. situated, &c. in the city of W. and in the suburbs thereof, and out of the city within the jurisdiction and liberties thereof belonging to the late priory of, &c. which messuage, &c. in the city and suburbs belonging to the late priory, were of the clear yearly value of 40 l. Resolved, that the words (all those messuages, &c.) make a necessary reference by reason of the word (those) as well to the villas to the tenure of J. S. so if the one or the other fails, the general grant is void; for (those) is not satisfied till the sentence be ended. Doddington's case. See 18 Vin. Abr. 272.

Referendary, (Referendarius) An officer abroad, of the same nature as Masters of Request were to the King among us: The Referendaries being those who exhibit the petitions of the people to the King, and acquaint the judges with his commands. And there was such an officer in the time of the English Saxons here, — Ego Augemundus Referendarius approbavi, &c. And we read of a Referendarius Angliae. Spelm.

Reformation of Religion. See Black. Com. 4 V. 423.

Refunding. A. an attorney being ill, takes B. for his clerk, and receives 120 l. and by articles agrees with the father of B. to return 60 l. of the money if he died within a year. A. died within three weeks. The executor of A. was decreed to pay back 100 guineas. Ver. 466.

A. was indebted to B. by mortgage in 400 l. principal monies and died. B. died leaving J. S. executor. On a bill in Chancery, for payment of debts of A. out of lands charged with the same, the master reported 700 l. due on the mortgage, and the executor received the whole 700 l. but afterwards it appeared that 353 l. 13 s. 1 d. had been paid to B. the testator by A. in his life-time; whereupon the trustees and cestui que trust, an infant, brought a bill to be relieved against this over-payment; the executor (defendant) pleaded all the former proceedings, and also that he, before any notice of the over-payment, as executor of B. had paid away the 700 l. in the debts of B. The Master of the Rolls decreed the executor to repay the surplus, and he to be at liberty to sue such creditors, as thro' mistake he had paid, TO REFUND; and this decree was affirmed by Lord Chancellor Cowper, who compared it to the case of a judgment obtained by executor, and after reversed in error, and to that of a decree which is afterwards reversed by appeal; tho' he said that in the last case of an appeal if defendant had delayed the appeal, and willingly stood by whilst the executor paid away the money to the testator's creditors, it would be otherwise; for this would be drawing the executor into a snare. 1 Wm's Rep. 355.

A. for 600 l. purchases B.'s interest and possibility in such an estate to him and his heirs; the land is evicted. A. is not intitled to have his 600 l. back, but his bill was dismissed. Fin. Rep. 288.

Cross bill was brought for creditors to take their proportionable share, but the debts having been paid to and releases given by them, it was dismissed. 2 Chan. R. 173.

Refusal, Is where one hath by law a right and power of having or doing something of advantage to him, and he refuseth it. An executor may refuse an executorship; but the refusal ought to be before the ordinary: if an executor be summoned to accept or refuse the executorship, and he doth not appear on the summons and prove the will, the court may grant administration, &c. which shall be good in law till such executor hath proved the will; but no man can be compelled to take on him the executorship, unless he hath intermeddled with the estate. 1 Leon 154. Cro. Eliz. 858. Where there are several executors, and they all refuse, none of them shall administer afterwards; but if there is a refusal by one, and the other proves the will, the refusing executor may administer when he will, during the life of his co-executor. 1 Rep. 28. 1 Nels. Abr. 63. There is a difference where there is one executor, and where there are more executors than one, as to refusal of an executorship; for if there is but one, and in such case he administers, he cannot refuse afterwards; and if once he refuse, he cannot administer afterwards: As for instance; the testator being possessed of lands, &c. for a term of years, devised the same to the Chief Justice Carlisle, and made him executor, and died; afterwards the executor wrote a letter to the judge of the prerogative court, intimating that he could not attend the executorship, and desiring him to grant administration to the next of kin to the deceased, which was done accordingly; and after this the executor entered on the lands, and granted the term to another; but it was adjudged void, because the letter which he wrote was a sufficient refusal; and he may not once refuse, and afterwards take upon him the executorship. Moor 272.

An executor, after a caveat entered against the will, took the usual oath of an executor, and afterwards refused to prove the will; and it was held, that having taken the oath of executor, the court could not admit him to refuse afterwards, but ought to grant probate to him notwithstanding standing the caveat, on another's contesting for the administration, &c. 1 Vent. 335.

There is a refusal of a clerk presented to a church, for illiterature, &c. And if a bishop once refuses a clerk for insufficiency, he cannot accept of him afterwards, if a new clerk is presented. 5 Rep. 58. 1 Cro. 27.

In trover, a demand of the goods and refusal to deliver them, MUST BE PROVED, &c. 10 Rep. 56. 1 Danv. Abr. 20.

Refutantia, A discharge; or renouncing of all future claim.—Visis libris, instrumentis, registris, refutationibus, aliisque evidentiis, &c. Thorn. anno 1389.

Regale Episcoporum, The temporal rights and privileges of a bishop. Mandatum est Roberto de B. quod faciat habere Episcopo Norwicensi totum Regale quod ad Episcopatum suum pertinet. Brady's Append. to the History of England, pag. 108.

Regales, The King's servants or officers. Walsingham, anno 1291.

Regal fishes, (mentioned in 1 Eliz. cap. 5.) Are whales and surgeons, some add porpoises.

The King by his prerogative ought to have every whale cast on shore, or wrecked, in all places within this realm, (unless granted to subjects by special words) as a royal fish. The King himself shall have the head and body to make oil and other things, and the Queen, the tail, to make whalebones for her royal vestments. Pat. Ed. 1. m. 25. Dors. See Tract. de auro Reginae, p. 127.

Regalia, (dicuntur jura omnia ad fiscum spectantia, saith Spelman) The royal rights of a King, which the Civilians reckon to be six.

1. Power of judicature.
2. Power of life and death.
3. Power of war and peace.
4. Masterless goods, as waifs, estrays, &c.
5. Assessments. And
6. Minting of money. See Royalities.

Also the crown, scepter with the cross, scepter with the dove, St. Edward's staff, four several swords, the globe, the orb with the cross, and other such like things used at the coronation of our Kings, are called regalia. See the relation of the coronation of King Charles the Second in Baker's Chronicle.

Regalia is sometimes taken for the dignity and prerogative of the King. Regalia is also taken for those rights and privileges which the church enjoys by the grants and other concessions of Kings. And sometimes for the patrimony of the church; as regalia Sancti Petri, &c. It signifies also those lands and hereditaments which have been given by Kings to the church, viz. Cepimus in manum nostram baroniam & regalia quæ archiepiscopus Eborum de nobis tenet. Pryn. lib. Angl. 2 tom. p. 231. These, whilst in the possession of the church, were subject to the same services as all other temporal inheritances; and after the death of the bishop they of right returned to the King, until he invested another with them; which in the reign of William the Conqueror, and some of his immediate successors, was often neglected or delayed; and as often the bishops complained thereof. This appears in Ordericus Vitalis, lib. 10. and other writers in those days. Neubrigenfis, lib. 3. cap. 26. tells us, they complained against Henry 2. for that Episcopatus vocantes & provenientia perciperet commoda, diu vacare voluit, & ecclesiasticis potius usibus applicanda in fiscum redegit. So in Malmibury, lib. 11. de Gest. Pontificum, pag. 285. See Black. Com. 1 V. 241.

Regalia facere, Is to do homage or fealty when he is invested with the regalia, viz. Regalia pro more istius temporis faciens principi 7 Calend. Octobris Cantuariæ affedit. Malmibury, de Gestis Pontificum, pag. 219. de Anselmo.

Regard, (regardum and rewardum, Fr. regard, i. e. aspectus, respectus) Signifies generally any care or diligent respect, yet it hath also a special acceptation, wherein it is only used in matters of the forest; and there two ways, one for the office of regarder, the other for the compass of the ground belonging to that office. Crom. Jur. 175, 199. Touching the former, see Manwood, part 1. 194, & 198. And touching the second signification, the compass of the regarder's charge is the whole forest, that is, all the ground which is parcel of the forest; for there may be woods within the limits of the forest, that are no parcel thereof, and those are without the regard. Manwood, part 2. c. 7. num. 4. anno 20 Car. 2. c. 3. As to the court of regard, see tit. Forest, and Black. Com. 3 V. 72.

Regardant, (Fr. seeing, marking, vigilant) As a villain regardant was called regardant to the manor, because he had the charge to do all base services within the same, and to see the same freed of all things that might annoy it. Co. Litt. 120. This word is only applied to a villain or nief, yet in old books it was sometimes attributed to services. Ibid. See Black. Com. 2 V. 93.

Regarder, regardator, (Fr. regardeur, spectator) Is the officer of the King's forest, who is sworn to make the regard of it, and has been used in antient time; and to view and enquire of all offences of the forest as well of vert as of venison; and of concealment of any offences or defaults of the foresters, and all other officers of the King's forest, relating to the execution of their offices, &c. Cromp. Jurisd. 153. Manwood.

This officer was ordained in the beginning of the reign of Hen. 2. And the regarders of the forest must make their regard, before any general sessions of the forest, or justice seat can be holden; when the regarder is to go thro' the forest, and every bailiwick, to see and inquire of the trespasses therein; ad videndum, ad inquirendum, ad imbreuiandum, ad certificandum, &c. Manw. part 1. pag. 194. A regarder may be made either by the King's letters patent; or by any of the justices of the forest, at the general eyre, or such times as the regard is to be made, &c. Manw. See Forest.

Rege inconsulto, Is a writ issued from the King to the judges not to proceed in a cause which may prejudice the King, until he is advised.

James I. granted the office of superseदार in C. B. to one Mitchel, and thereupon Brownlow, chief prothonotary, brought an assise against him; and defendant Mitchel obtained the King's writ to the judges, reciting the grant of this office, commanding them not to proceed rege inconsulto: And it was argued against the writ, that the court might proceed, because the writ doth not mention that the King had a title to the thing in demand, nor any prejudice which might happen to the King, if they should proceed: The cause was compromised. Moor 844.

A rege inconsulto may be awarded, not only for the party to the plea, but on suggestion of a stranger, on cause shewn that the King may be prejudiced by the proceeding, &c. Jenk. Cent. 97.

Rege assensu, A writ whereby the King gives his royal assent to the election of a bishop. Reg. Orig. 294.

Register, (registrarius) An officer who writes and keeps a registry.

Register is the name of a book, wherein are entered most of the forms of writs original and judicial, used at Common law, called the Register of Writs: Sir Edward Coke affirms, that this Register is one of the most antient books of the Common law. Co. Litt. 159.

The learned Blackstone says, it is "the most antient and highly venerable collection of legal forms, upon which Fitzherbert's Natura Brevium is a comment, and "and in which every man who is injured will be sure to find a method of relief, exactly adapted to his own case, "described in the compass of a few lines, and yet without the omission of any material circumstance." Com. 3 V. 183.

Register of the Parish Church, (registrum ecclesiæ parochialis) Is that wherein baptisms, marriages, and burials are registered in each parish every year; which was instituted by Lord Cromwell, anno 13 Hen. 8. while he was vicar general to that King.

These parish registers are to be subscribed by the minister and churchwardens; and the names of the persons shall be transmitted yearly to the bishop, &c.

Registry, (registrum, from the old Fr. gister, i. e. in lecto repōnere) Is properly the same with repository, and the office books, and rolls wherein the proceedings of the Chancery, or any spiritual court, are recorded, &c. are called by this name.

Registry of Deeds. The registering of deeds and incumbrances is a great security of titles to purchasers of lands and mortgages; and some laws have been made requiring the same. By the 2 Ann. c. 4. A registry is to be kept of all deeds and conveyances affecting lands executed in the West-Riding of Yorkshire; and a publick office erected for that purpose; and the register is to be chosen by freeholders having 100*l.* per annum, &c. The 6 Ann. c. 35. ordains, that a memorial and registry of all deeds, conveyances, wills, &c. which affect any lands or tenements, shall be made in the East-Riding of the county of York; and the register is to be sworn by the justices in quarter-sessions, and every leaf of his book signed by two justices. By 7 Ann. c. 20. A memorial and registry is to be made of all deeds and conveyances, and of all wills whereby lands are affected, &c. in the county of Middlesex, in the like manner as in the West and East Ridings of Yorkshire. And by these statutes, deeds, conveyances and wills, shall be void against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees, unless registered before the conveyances under which they claim: Also no judgment, statute, or recognizance, shall bind any lands in those counties, but from the time a memorial thereof shall be entered at the register's office; but the acts do not extend to copyhold estates, leases at a rack-rent, or to any leases, not exceeding 21 years, where the possession goes with the lease; nor to any chambers in the inns of court. By the 8 Geo. 2. c. 6. A registry shall be of all deeds made in the North Riding of the county of York: The deeds and conveyances registered to be in parchment, under the hand and seal of some of the grantors, or grantees, &c. attested by two witnesses, who shall on oath prove the signing and sealing of the memorial and execution of the deeds. Memorials of wills must be registered within six months after the death of the testator; the Register neglecting his duty, or guilty of fraudulent practices, shall forfeit his office, and pay treble damages; and persons counterfeiting any memorial, &c. be liable to the common penalties of forgery.

An annuity was granted out of lands lying in Middlesex; A. B. who had notice of the grant, purchases the lands; the grantee shall have the annuity against A. B. tho' the grant of the annuity was not registered, for the statute was intended to give notice of incumbrances to purchasers, that they might not be defrauded; but if a man knows of an incumbrance, and will notwithstanding purchase, he is bound, tho' the incumbrance was not registered. 1 Strange 664.

A mortgage of a lease was registered, but not the lease itself; this will not bar a subsequent purchaser. 2 Strange 1064. Deputy of the chief clerk of the King's Bench, appointed a Register for Middlesex, instead of the chief clerk. 25 Geo. 2. c. 4.

Registry of Papists Estates. Papists are to register their estates, or on default forfeit them. 1 Geo. 1. c. 55. And all persons refusing to take the oaths, are obliged to register their estates as papists, &c. 9 Geo. 1. c. 24. See Papists.

Regius Professor. A reader of lectures in the universities, founded by the King: King Hen. 8. was the founder of five lectures in each university of Oxford and Cambridge, viz. of Divinity, Greek, Hebrew, Law and Physick, the readers of which are called in the university statutes regii professores.

Regni Populi. A name given to the people of Surrey and Sussex, and on the sea coasts of Hampshire. Blount.

Regnum Ecclesiasticum. In some countries formerly, the clergy held there was a double supreme power, or two kingdoms in every kingdom; the one a regnum ecclesiasticum, absolute and independent of any but the Pope, over ecclesiastical men and causes, exempt from the secular magistrature; the other a regnum seculare, of the King or civil magistrate, which had subordination and subjection to the ecclesiastical kingdom. But these usurpations and absurdities were exterminated here by H. 8. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 324.

Regrator. (Regratarius, Fr. Regrateur) Signifies him who buys and sells any wares or victuals in the same market or fair: And regrators are particularly described to be those who buy oxen into their hands in fairs or markets, any grain, fish, butter, cheese, sheep, lambs, calves, swine, pigs, geese, capons, hens, chickens, pigeons, conies, or other dead animals whatsoever, brought to fair or market to be sold there, and do sell the same again in the same fair, market, or place, or in some other within four miles thereof. Stat. 5 & 6 Ed. 6, cap. 14. 13 Eliz. cap. 25.

Regrating is a kind of huckstry, by which victuals are made dearer; for every seller will gain something, which must of consequence enhance the price. 3 Inst. 195. And in ancient time, both the inregressor and regrator were comprehended under the word foresaller. Ibid. Regrators are punishable by loss and forfeiture of goods, and imprisonment, in proportion to the first, second, or third offence, &c. Vide Foresaller, and Black. Com. 4 V. 158.

Regulars. (regulares) Are such as profess to live under some certain rule; such as monks or canon regulars, who ought always to be under some rule of obedience.

Regulus. Subregulus, Are words often mentioned in the councils of the English Saxons: The first signifies comes, the other vicecomes. But in many places they signify the same dignity; as in the old book in the archives of Worcester cathedral. Cowell. See Subregulus.

Rehabere facias scilicet, (Quando vicecomes literavit seisinam de majore parte, quam deberet) Is a writ judicial; of which there is another of the same name and nature. Reg. Judic. 13, 51, 54.

Rehabilitation. (rehabilitatio) A restoring to former ability; and is one of those exactions claimed by the Pope heretofore in England, by his bull or brief, for re-enabling a spiritual person to exercise his function who had been disabled. Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 21.

Reif. (Sax. reifian, i. e. spoliare) In our old laws signifies robbery. Cowell.

Rejoinder. (rejunctio) Is where defendant in any action makes answer to plaintiff's relication: It is an exception or answer thereto, and it ought to be a sufficient answer to the replication, and follow and enforce the matter of the bar pleaded. 2 Lill. Abr. 433.

Defendant is not to rejoin on such words as are not contained in the declaration, or replication: and if defendant do in his rejoinder depart from his plea pleaded in bar, the rejoinder is not good, because this is uncertain, and to say and unsay, which the law doth not allow. Mich. 22 Car. B. R.

It is observed that in many cases, if plaintiff in his replication alleges any new matter, defendant may there make a new answer in the rejoinder; tho' if defendant pleads a general plea, he shall not commonly make that good afterwards, by a particular thing in his rejoinder. 5 Hen. 7. 19. Raym. 22.

Where a replication is pleaded, which is issuable, the clerk of the papers when he makes up the paper-book, doth of course make up the rejoinder, and joins the issue in it; and if the Rejoinder be issuable, he hath the making up of the Surrejoinder to it, and the issue thereupon. 2 Lill. 433. See Departure, and Black. Com. 3 V. 310.

Relation. (relatio) Is where, in consideration of law, two different times or other things are accounted as one; and by some act done, the thing subsequent is said to take effect by relation from the time preceding: As if one deliver a writing to another, to be delivered to a third person, as the deed of him who made it, when such third person hath paid a sum of money; now when the money is paid, and the writing delivered, this shall be taken as the deed of him who made and delivered it, at the time of its first delivery, to which it has relation; and so things relating to a time long before, shall be as if they were done at that time. Terms de Ley. Shep. Epit. 837.

This device is most commonly to help acts in law, and make a thing take effect: and shall relate to the same thing, the same intent, and between the same parties only; and it shall never do a wrong, or lay a charge upon a person that is no party, 1 Inst. 190. 2 Rep. 99. Plot. 188.

And when the execution of a thing is done, it hath relation to the thing executory, and makes all but one act or record, altho' performed at several times. 1 Rep. 199. A judgment had in full term shall have relation to the

the first day of the term, which is the Esse day; but this is not understood of a judgment given after appearance; but if be on default, then the quarta dies post is the day. Cri. Car. 73. 1 Bull. 33. Judgment shall have relation to the first day of the term, as if given on that very day, unless there is a memorandum to the contrary; as where there is a continuance till another day in the same term. 3 Salk. 212. A verdict was given in a cause for plaintiff, and there was a motion in arrest of judgment within four days; the court took time to advise, and in four days afterwards plaintiff died; it was adjudged, that the favour of the court shall not prejudice the party, for the judgment ought to have been given after the first four days; and tho' it is given after the death of the party, it shall have relation to the time when it ought to have been given. 1 Leon. 187.

Rule was had for judgment, and two days after plaintiff died; yet the judgment was entered, because it shall have relation to the day, when the rule was given, which was when the plaintiff was alive. Poph. 132. Judgment against an heir on the obligation of his ancestor, shall have relation to the time of the writ first purchased; and from that time it will avoid all alienations made by the heir. 3 Cro. 102. And if one be bail for defendant, and before judgment he leases his lands; they shall be liable to the bail, and judgment by relation. Poph. 112, 132.

Defendant in a suit after the teste of the seri facias, but before the sheriff had executed it, sold the goods, and delivered them to the buyer; and it was resolved, that the sheriff might take them in execution in the hands of the buyer; for when such execution is made, it shall have relation to the teste of the Fi. Fa. 1 Leon. 304.

Sale of goods of a bankrupt, by commissioners, shall have relation to the first act of bankruptcy; and be good, notwithstanding the bankrupt sells them afterwards. 1 Jac. 1. c. 15. Wood's Inst. 311. And if a man buys cattle in a market which are stolen, and selleth them out of the market, tho' the cattle are afterwards brought into the market, and the second bargain confirmed, and money paid, &c. this bargain will not be good; for it shall have relation to the beginning, which was unlawful. Dyer 99.

Fines being but common assurances, shall be guided by the indentures precedent; and the execution thereof have relation to the original act. 2 Cro. 110. A bargain and sale was made to A. B. and before it was inrolled, the same bargainor levied a fine to the bargainee, and afterwards and within the six months the deed was inrolled, adjudged that the bargain was in by the fine, and not by the deed inrolled, because tho' the inrollment shall have relation to the delivery of the deed, that is only to protect the lands from all incumbrances to be made by the bargainor to others after the deed, and before the inrollment, but not to defeat any lawful estate made by him before. 4 Rep. 70. After an indenture of bargain and sale is inrolled, according to the statute, it relates to the delivery; nothing passes till inrollment, but then it relates. 3 Nels. Abr. 68.

One made a lease for years, rendering rent at certain feasts, he in reversion bargained and sold the land to a stranger, who gave notice to the lessee; and the day of payment coming, he paid the rent to the bargainor, and then the deed was inrolled: It was held, that the bargainee should not have this rent by relation. Hugh's Abr. 1644.

If an infant or feme covert disavows to a feoffment to them made, when they are of age, or discover it, it shall relate as to this purpose, to discharge them of damages from the time. 3 Rep. 29. Co. Litt. 310. But generally in cases at Common law, there is no relation; as between the feoffment of lands and livery and seisin; or between the grant of a reversion and the attornment, which is only the assent of the particular tenant, and shall not relate to the grant. Ibid. Tho' if one distrains for rent as bailiff, when in truth he is not; if he in whose name he took the distress will afterwards assent to it, he shall not be a trespasser, for the assent shall have relation to the time of the distress taken. 1 Leon. 196.

Letters of administration relate to the death of the intestate, and not to the time when they were granted. Style 341. And when the wife is endowed of lands by the heir, she shall be in immediately from the husband by relation. 36 H. 6. 7.

It is a rule in pleadings, grants, &c. Ad proximum antecedens fiat relatio; but that rule has an exception, (vinc.) nisi impediatur sententia: And it hath been held, that this rule hath many restrictions, i. e. Fiat relatio, so as there is no absurdity or incongruity; therefore it is always secundum subjectum materiam. Hard. 77. 3 Salk. 199.

A person granted totam illam portionem decimarum in B. with all other his tithes in B. then or late in occupation of J. C. here the words in occupation of J. C. have relation to the whole sentence, and not only to the precedent words, with all other his tithes, because the pronoun illam relates as well to the tenure of the tithes, as to the place where they arise. 4 Rep. 34.

In debt upon bond conditioned that if J. M. died before Midsummer day, without issue male of her body then living, that in such case the bond should be void: Defendant pleaded that before Midsummer day, she did die without issue male THEN living; and the question was, whether the adverb then should relate to Midsummer day, or to the death of J. M. And it was agreed, that it might relate to either; but because it happened in fact that she had a son living at her death, which son died before Midsummer day, therefore the words then living shall relate to that day, and not her death; because it is most beneficial to the obligor, that it should be so. Dyer 17. 3 Nels. Abr. 65.

'Tis a general rule, that relation shall not do wrong to strangers. Per Ventris, J. 2 Vent. 200. Trin. 2 W. & M. C. B. in the case of Thompson v. Learb. See 18 Vin. Abr. 285—294.

As to private relations, see Black. Com. 1 V. 422: Public Rights, ib. 146. And as to relative rights and duties, see ib. 1 V. 123, 146.

Relator, (Lat.) A rehearser, or teller; also applied to an informer. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 20. See Quo Warrants. And Black. Com. 3 V. 264, 427. 4 V. 304.

Release, (Relaxatio) Is an instrument whereby estates, or other things, are extinguished, transferred, abridged, or enlarged. West. Symbol. part 1. lib. 2. sect. 509.

1. Of releases, generally.
2. Of the words and ceremony required in a release; and how far a covenant, agreement, or a disposition by will, may operate as a release.
3. What shall be released, by a release of ALL CLAIMS AND DEMANDS.
4. What shall be released, by a release of ALL ACTIONS AND SUITS.
5. How far a possibility, or contingent interest, may be released.

1. Of releases, generally.

There is a release in fact, and a release in law. Perkin's Grants 71. A release in fact, is that which the very words expressly declare. A release in law, is that which doth acquit by way of consequence or intendment of law; an example whereof you have in Perkins, ubi supra. How these are available and how not, see Littleton at large, lib. 3. c. 8. Couell.

A release is the giving or discharging of a right of action which a man hath or may claim against another, or that which is his; or it is the conveyance of a man's interest or right which he hath to a thing, to another who hath possession thereof, or some estate therein. 4 New. Abr. 265.

Releases are distinguished into express releases in deed, and those arising by operation of law; and are made of lands and tenements, goods and chattels, or of actions real, personal and mixt. Co. Litt. 264. a.

They are to be adapted to the nature of the case, and the purposes for which the release is intended; so that if a man be dispossessed of lands, or dispossessed of goods, and release all actions, he may notwithstanding enter into his lands, or retake his goods, the right and property being still kill in him, who' he has devised himself of his remedy. Hob. 163. 4 Co. 63.

So where a man has divers means to come to his right, he may release one, and yet take advantage of the other; but if a man has not any means to come to his right but by way of action, there by a release of all actions, his right by judgment of law is gone, because by his own act he has barred himself of all means to come at it. 8 Co. 152. Co. Litt. 286.

Heterofore releases were construed with much nicety and great strictness, and being considered as the deed or grant of the party, were according to the rule of law taken strongest against the releasor; they now receive such interpretation as these grants and agreements do, and are favoured by the judges as tending to repose and quietness. Dyer 56. Plowd. 289. Heil. 15. 8 Co. 148.

Hence it hath been established as a general rule in the construction of releases, that where there are general words only in a release, they shall be taken most strongly against the releasor; but where there is a particular recital in a deed, and then general words follow, the general words shall be qualified by the special words. 1 Mod. 99. 1 Ld. Raym. 235.

2. Of the words and ceremony required in a release; and how for a covenant, agreement, or a disposition by will may operate as a release.

Littleton tells us, that the proper words of a release are remisisse, relaxasse & quietum clamasse, which have all the same signification. Lord Coke adds, Renunciare, acquiescere; and says, that there are other words which will amount to a release; as if the lessor grants to the lessee for life, that he shall be discharged of the rent; this is a good release. Litt. s. 445. Co. Litt. 264. Plow. 140.

So a pardon by act of parliament of all debts and judgments amounts to a release of the debt, the word pardon including a release. 1 Sid. 261.

An express release must regularly be in writing and by deed, according to the common rule, eadem modo oritur, eodem modo dissolvitur; so that a duty arising by record must be discharged by matter of as high a nature; so of a bond or other deed. Co. Litt. 264. b. 1 Roll. Rep. 43. 2 Leon. 76, 213. 2 Roll. Abr. 408. 2 Sand. 48. Moor 573. pl. 787.

But a promise by words may before breach be discharged or released. 1 Sid. 177. 2 Sid. 78. Cro. Jac. 483, 620. Vide Cro. Car. 383. 1 Mod. 262. 2 Mod. 259. 1 Sid. 293.

A release of a right in chattels cannot be without deed. 1 Leon. 283.

A covenant perpetual, as that the covenantor will not sue without limitation of time, is a defeasance or absolute release; and this construction has been made to avoid circuitry of action; for if in such case the party should contrary to his covenant sue, the other party would recover precisely the same damages which he sustained by the other's suing; but if the covenant be, that he will not sue till such a time, this does not amount to a release, nor is it pleadable in bar as such, but the party hath remedy only on his covenant. Moor 23. pl. 80, 811. 1 Roll. Abr. 939. Bridg. 118. 2 Bulf. 95, 290. Hard. 113. 3 Lev. 41. 2 Salk. 573, 5. Carth. 210. 1 Ld. Raym. 419, 691. See Cro. Eliz. 352. 1 And. 307. 1 Roll. Abr. 939. Carth. 63. Salk. 373. 1 Show. 46.

If two are jointly and severally bound in an obligation, and the obligee by deed covenants and agrees not to sue one of them; this is no release, and he may notwithstanding sue the other. Cro. Car. 551. March 95. 2 Salk. 575.

But if two are jointly and severally bound, a release to one discharges the other. 1 Ld. Raym. 420. See 2 Vent. 217. 1 Ld. Raym. 691. 1 Lev. 152.

It seems agreed, that a will, tho' sealed and delivered, cannot amount to a release, because it is ambulatory and revocable during the testator's life; and by reason of the executor's consent requisite to every disposition of a personal thing by will, and the injury that might accrue to the testator's creditors, were a will allowed to operate as a release. Stil. 286. 1 Vent. 39.

Therefore where in debt on an obligation, by the representative of a testator, defendant pleaded, that the testator by his last will in writing released to defendant; this was adjudged ill, and that no advantage could be taken by plea. 1 Sid. 421.

But it hath been held in equity, that tho' a will cannot enure as a release, yet provided it were expressed to be the intention of the testator that the debt should be discharged, the will would operate accordingly; and that in such case it would be plainly an absolute discharge of the debt tho' the testator had survived the legatee. 1 Peer Will. 85. 2 Vern. 521.

So in another case it was held, that a release by will can only operate as a legacy, and must be assets to pay the testator's debts; and if a debt so released by will be afterwards received by the testator himself in his life-time, the legacy is extinct, and such release by will intimates no more than that the executors should not after the testator's death trouble or molest the debtor. 2 Peer Will. 332.

If a debt is mentioned to be devised to the debtor without words of release or discharge of the debt, and the debtor die before the testator; this will be a lapsed legacy, and the debt will subsist. 2 Vern. 522. admitted.

3. What shall be released, by a release of ALL CLAIMS and DEMANDS.

Littleton says, that a release of all demands is the best release to him to whom it is made; and Cote says, that the word demand is the largest word in law except claim; and that a release of demands, discharges all sorts of actions, rights and titles, conditions before or after breach, executions, appeals, rents of all kinds, covenants, annuities, contracts, recognizances, statutes, commons, &c. Litt. sect. 508. Co. Litt. 291.

But notwithstanding the large import of the word demands, yet there are several instances (which vide infra) where the generality of the words hath been restrained to the particular occasion for which the release was made.

By a release of all demands, all actions real, personal and mixed, and all actions of appeal, are extinct. Litt. sect. 509. 8 Co. 154.

So a release of all demands extends to inheritances, and takes away rights of entry, seizures, &c. Co. Litt. 291. But if the King releaseth all demands, yet as to him the inheritance shall not be included. Bro. Prerogative, pl. 62. Bridg. 124.

By a release of all demands made to the tenant of the land, a common of pasture shall be extinct. Co. Litt. 291.

A release of all demands will bar a demand of a relief, because the relief is by reason of the feignory to which it belongs. Cro. Jac. 170.

If A. being possessed of goods loses them, and they come to the hands of B. who being in possession, &c. by deed releases to B. all actions and demands personal which at any time before habuit vel habere putuit against B. for any cause, matter or thing whatsoever; this shall bar A. of the property of the goods, so that B. has the absolute right in him by this release. 2 Roll. Abr. 407.

By a release of all demands, all manner of executions are gone, for the recoverer cannot sue out a fi. faciat, capias or elegit, without a demand. Litt. sect. 508. 2 Roll. Abr. 407.

By a release of all demands to the consuror of a statute merchant before the day of payment, the consuror shall be barred of his action, because the duty is always in demand; yet if he releases all his right in the land, it is no bar. Co. Litt. 291. Bridgm. 124.

So a bond conditioned to pay money at a day to come, is a debt and duty presently, and may be discharged by a release of all actions and demands before the day of payment. Cro. Jac. 400.

But in an action of debt for non-performance of an award made for payment of money at a day to come, there is no present debt, nor any duty before the day of payment.

is come, therefore it cannot be discharged before by a release of all actions and demands. Yelv. 211. Cro. Jac. 300.

So if a man devises a legacy of 20 l. to J. S. at the age of 23, tho' the legatee, after he attains the age of 21, and before the day of payment, may release it, yet by the word demands it is not released, but there must be special words for the purpose. 10 Co. 51.

A release of all demands does not discharge a covenant not broken at the time; but a release of all covenants will release the covenant. Cro. Jac. 173. 2 Roll. Abr. 407. Noy 123. For the difference when broken or not, see Dyer 217. Litt. Rep. 86. 3 Leon. 69. 5 Co. 71. Hor's case. 10 Co. 51. Co. Litt. 292. 8 Co. 153. 1 And. 8. 64.

If a lessee for life grants over his estate by indenture reserving rent during the continuance of the estate, and afterwards releases to the assignee all demands; this shall discharge the rent, for he had the freehold of the rent in him at the time. 2 Roll. Abr. 408. Cro. Jac. 486. Bridgm. 123. 2 Roll. Rep. 20. Poph. 136.

So if lessee for years grants over by indenture all his estate, reserving a rent during the term, and afterwards releases to the assignee all demands; this shall release the rent, for tho' he cannot have an action to demand all the estate, yet this is an estate in him of the rent, and assignable over; and in an action of debt for any arrears after, he shall claim it as a duty accrued from the estate; and it shall not be said that the duty arises annually on taking the profits, but this had its commencement and creation by the reservation and contract, which was before. 2 Roll. Abr. 408.

If there be lessee for years rendering rent, and the lessor grants over the reversion, and the lessee attorns, and after lessee assigns over his estate, and after the assignee of the reversion releases all demands to the first lessee, yet this shall not release the rent, for there is neither privity of the estate or contract between them after the assignment; but if the release had been made to the assignee, it had extinguished the rent. 2 Roll. Abr. 408. Moor 544. Cro. Eliz. 606.

If he who has a rent-charge in fee releases to the tenant of the land all demands from the beginning of the world till the making of the deed of release; this shall discharge all the rent, as well that to come as what is past. 20 Aff. pl. 5. 2 Roll. Abr. 408.

It is said by Littleton and Coke, that by a release of all demands a rent-service shall be released; but this it is said is to be intended of a rent-service in gross, as a seigniority. Litt. sect. 510. Co. Litt. 291. Therefore in the case of Hen v. Hanson, where in covenant brought on a covenant in a lease for years to pay the rent reserved, defendant pleaded release by the plaintiff of all demands at a day before the rent in question became due; plaintiff replied that the release was in performance of an award of all matters in controversy between the plaintiff and defendant; and on demurrer it was adjudged, that the rent was not discharged by this release, as it became due by the perception of the profits, and was not like to a rent-charge, or a rent parcel of a seigniority; and that this rent being incident to the reversion, and part thereof, was no more released than the reversion itself; and this construction should the rather prevail, as it was not the intention of the party to release this rent: But Twistleton said, that in releases and deeds when words are heaped up, the party who is to take advantage may take the strongest word and the strongest sense, and that is the reason they are put in; and as to the intent, that must be gathered from the words; and men must take care what words they use, oportet politum obediare legibus, non leges politum; and he said, he could see no difference between this rent and a rent in fee, both are rent-services, and neither demandable before they become due, otherwise than as in 40 Ed. 3. 47. it is said, there is a continual demand betwixt lord and tenant; and in this case there is a tenure between the lessee and him in reversion; and the reason why the reversion is not touched by this release is, because it can work only by way of extinguishment, and not by way of passing an interest; but it was adjudged as supra. 1 Lev. 99. 100. 1 Sid. 141. 1 Keb. 499. 510. See 2 Salk. 578.

4. What shall be released, by a release of ALL ACTIONS and SUITS.

A release of all actions discharges a bond to pay money on a day to come; for it is Debitum in presenti, quamvis sit solvendum in futuro; and it is a thing merely in action, and the right of action in him who releases, tho' no action will lie when the release is made. Co. Litt. 292.

But a release of actions does not discharge a rent before the day of payment, for it is neither debitum nor solvendum at the time of the release; nor is it merely a thing in action, for it is grantable over. Co. Litt. 292.

So if a man has an annuity for a term of years, for life or in fee, and he before it be behind releases all actions; this shall not release the annuity, for it is not merely in action, because it may be granted over. Co. Litt. 292. 1 Bull. 178. Cro. Eliz. 897. Moor 113. But such release shall release the arrears incurred before. 39 H. 6. 43. 2 Roll. Abr. 404.

If one release omnes querelas aut loquelas, this is as large as a release of all actions, and releases all causes of action, tho' no action be then depending. Co. Litt. 292.

By a release of all manner of actions, all actions as well criminal as real, personal and mixed, are released. Co. Litt. 287.

A release of actions real is a good bar in actions mixed; as assise of novel disseisin, waste, quare impedit, annuity; and so is a release of actions personal. Co. Litt. 284. But not after the grantee has made his election. Jones 215.

In an appeal of robbery or felony, a release of all actions personal will not bar, because an appeal, in which the appellee is to have judgment of death, is higher than a personal action; but a release of all manner of actions, or of all actions criminal, or of all actions mortal, or of all actions concerning the pleas of the crown, or of all appeals, or of all demands, will be a good bar of any such appeal. Co. Litt. 287. 2 Hawk. P. C. 196.

And in an appeal of maihem a release of all actions personal may be pleaded, because damages, only, are recovered. Co. Litt. 288.

A release of all actions is regularly no bar to an execution, for execution is no action, but begins when the action ends. Co. Litt. 289. 8 Co. 153.

Also a release of all actions does not regularly release a writ of error, for it is no action, but a commission to the justices to examine the record; but if therein the plaintiff may recover, or be restored to any thing, it may be released by the name of action. 2 Inst. 40. Telp. 209. Co. Litt. 288.

But a release of all actions is a good bar to a scire facias, tho' it be a judicial writ, for defendant may plead to it, and and it is in nature of a new original given by the statute. Co. Litt. 290. Comb. 255.

So in replevin a release of all actions is a good bar, for the avowant is defendant, tho' in some respects he is plaintiff. 2 Roll. Rep. 75.

By a release of all suits a man is barred of a writ of error. Latch 110.

So by a release of all suits a man is barred of execution, because it cannot be had without application to the court, and prayer of the party, which is his suit. Co. Litt. 291. 8 Co. 153.

If a disseisor releases to the disseisor all actions; this is no release of his right of entry, for when a man has several means to come at his right, he may release one and yet take benefit of the other. Co. Litt. 2S. b. 8 Co. 142.

So if a man by wrong takes away my goods; if I release to him all actions personal, yet by law I may take the goods out of his possession. Co. Litt. 286. Salk. 57.

If a man releases all actions, by this he shall release as well actions which he has as executor, as those in his own right. 39 Ed. 3. 26. 2 Roll. Abr. 404. 2 Ld. Raym. 1307. S. C. cited by Powell, and said by him to be clearly so, unless there was an action of his own for the release to work upon.

If a man releases all quarrels; a man's deed being taken most strongly against himself, it is as beneficial as all actions, for by it all actions real, personal and mixed, are released. Co. Litt. 292.

5. How far a possibility or contingent interest may be released.

It is a general rule in our books that a mere possibility cannot be released, and the reason hereof is, that a release supposeth a right in being, and it was thought to countenance maintenance to transfer choses in action, possibilities and contingent interests. Co. Litt. 48. a. Cro. Eliz. 552.

Hence it is held, that an heir at law cannot release to his father's disfeisor in the life-time of the father, for the heirship of the heir is a contingent thing, for he may die in the life-time of the father, or the father may alien the lands. Litt. 368. 446. Co. Litt. 265. a. 10 Co. 51. Bridgm. 76. S. P.

So if the donee of a statute releases to the donor all his right to the land, yet he may afterwards sue execution, for he has no right to the land, but only a possibility. 1 And. 133. Co. Litt. 265. 2 Roll. Abr. 405. Cro. Eliz. 552.

So if a creditor releases to his debtor all the right and title which he hath to his lands, and afterwards gets judgment against him, he may extend a moiety of the same land, for he had no right to the land at the time of the release, and the land is not bound but in respect to the person. 2 Mod. 281. 2 Lev. 215.

So if plaintiff releases all demands to the bail in the King's Bench, and afterwards judgment be given against the principal, execution may be sued against the bail, for that at the time of the release there was only a possibility of the bail becoming chargeable. 5 Co. 70. Co. Litt. 265. Moor 469. Cro. Eliz. 579. Hut. 17. and see Moor 852.

So if A. recovers in trespass against B. in B. R. and B. brings a writ of error, pending which A. releases to B. all executions, and after the judgment is affirmed, and new damages given to A. for the delay, on the statute of 3 H. 7. this release shall not bar A. to have execution of those damages, because he had not any right to have execution, nor to any duty when the release was made. 2 Roll. Abr. 404. Cro. Jac. 337. 1 Roll. Rep. 11.

A lease to the husband and wife for life, remainder to the survivor of them for twenty-one years; the husband grants it over, and tho' he survived, yet the grant was held void because it was contingent. Poph. 5. 10 Co. 51. Hut. 17. Raym. 146.

If the next presentation to a church be granted to A. and B. and living the incumbent, A. releases all his estate, title and interest to B. this release is void, it being of a chose in action; scilicet had the release been made after the avoidance, at which time the interest would have been vested in A. Cro. Eliz. 173. 600. Owen 85. 1 Leon. 167. 3 Leon. 256. and Dyer 244. 10 Co. 48. like point.

From the reasons herein it was held, that if at Common law a woman before marriage had accepted of a jointure in bar and satisfaction of dower, that this would not have bound her, because at the time she had no right to dower. 4 Co. 1.

A city orphan cannot at law release her orphanage part to her father, for she hath no right in her during the life of her father; but it hath been held in equity, that such release being for a valuable consideration, as on the marriage of a daughter, and a portion given her by the father, such release may operate as an agreement to waive the orphanage, and hath accordingly been so decreed in equity. 1 Peer Will. 638. 2 Peer Will. 527. Broad. Chan. 545.

If there be a devise of a term for years to A. for life, remainder to B. — B. may release his right to A. and such release shall extinguish his interest, tho' it were, that B. had only a possibility at the time the release made. 10 Co. 47.

But it was held, that B. could not assign over his interest to a stranger in the life-time of A. the same being only a chose in action, and a mere possibility, inasmuch as an estate for life is in supposition of law a larger estate than for any number of years. 10 Co. 47. 4 Co. 66. 1 Sid. 185. Raym. 146.

But later resolutions, especially those which have been in courts of equity, have made a great alteration in this doctrine. 2 Vern. 563.

As where one possessed of a term devised it to A. for life, remainder to B. and made A. executor; B. devised this remainder to C. and died in the life-time of A. and in order to defeat C. of his interest, A. assigned his term to a third person: And it was decreed by Lord Chancellor Ellesmere, that A. the executor and devisee, for life was a trustee for B. and should not be at liberty to destroy this remainder, but that the executor should preserve the lease, so as it might go according to the will, with the performance whereof the executor was intrusted. Moor 806.

So where the trust of a term was devised to A. for life, remainder to B. It was agreed by all, that B. might assign over this trust, which shews that a trust of a term in remainder may be transferred over by deed. 1 Chan. Co. 4.

One possessed of a term for years devised it to A. for life, remainder to B. — B. in the life-time of A. devised his remainder to J. S. who devised it over; and the question was, Whether A. (the devisee for life) being dead, the devisee of J. S. should have the term, or whether it should go to the administrator de bonis non; and it was decreed for the devisee of J. S. and the administrator de bonis non of B. was directed to assign over the term to him. 1 Peer Will. 572.

And in the case of Theobald v. Duffay in the house of Lords, March 1729-30; it was (inter alia) determined that a possibility of a term, is assignable for a good consideration.

A duty uncertain at first, which on a condition precedent is to be made certain afterwards, is but a possibility, which cannot be released. 5 Co. 703. 2 Mod. 281.

As a nomine parvo waiting on a rent which cannot be released till the rent is behind, as the non-payment of the rent makes the nomine parvo a duty. Yelv. 215. Brownl. 116.

So if a man covenants to pay 10*l.* on the birth of a child, the covenantor cannot be released of the 10*l.* it resting merely in contingency whether such child will ever be born or not. Yelv. 192.

So if an award be, that on plaintiff's delivering defendant by a certain day, a load of hay, defendant shall pay him 10*l.* in this case the 10*l.* cannot be released before the day, for it rests merely in possibility and contingency, whether the money shall ever be paid, for it becomes a duty on delivery of the hay only, and not before. Yelv. 215.

In debt on bond against defendant as administrator, &c. defendant pleaded a release, whereby the plaintiff, reciting there were several controversies between defendant and him about a legacy and the right of administration, releases to defendant all his right, title, interest and demand of, in and to the personal estate of the intestate; and on demurrer this was held to be no plea; and a difference was taken by Hale, between a release of all demands to the person of the obligor or administrator, and a release of all demands to the personal estate of the obligor or administrator; that the last will not discharge the bond as the other may, because the bond does not give any right or demand upon the personal estate, &c. until judgment and execution sued. Salt. 575. 2 Ld. Raym. 786.

If A. promises B. in consideration that he will sell to his son, certain merchandises at such a price, that if his son does not pay it at the feast of St. Michael next ensuing, he himself will pay it; and before Michaelmas A. releases all actions and demands to him who made the promise.

imise, this shall not release the assumpsit, for till Michaelmas it cannot be known whether his son will have paid it, and till default by him, the other is not bound to pay, so it is a mere contingency till Michaelmas, which is not to be released. 2 Rel. Abr. 407-8.

Relegation, (Relegatio). A banishing, or sending away; as abjuratio is forswearing the realm for ever, so relegation is banishment for a time only. Co. Litt. 133.

Relief, (Relevamen, but in Domestick, Relevatio, relevium.) Signifies a certain sum of money which the tenant, holding by knights service, grand serjeanty, or other tenure, (for which homage or legal service is due) and being at full age at the death of his ancestor paid unto his lord at his entrance. Mag. Chart. cap. 2. and 34 Elix. 1. Stat. 1.

Bracton, lib. 2. c. 36. affirms, That it is called a relief, Quia hereditas que jacens fuit per antecessoris decessum relevatur in manus hereditum, et propter factum relevationem, facienda erit ad heredes quedam prestatio que dicitur relevium; and Britton, c. 69. Of this also speaks the Grand Customary of Normandy, c. 34. Skene de verbor. signif. verb. Relevium, saith, Relief, is a French word, from the Latin relevare, which is to relieve or take up that which is fallen; for it is given by the tenant or vassal who is of perfect age, after the expiring of the wardship to his superior lord, of whom he held his lands by knight-service, that is, by ward and relief: For by payment thereof he relieves, and, as it were, raiseth up again his lands after they were fallen down into his superior's hands, by reason of wardship, &c. See stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

Relief is otherwise thus explained, viz. A feudatory or beneficiary estate in lands was at first granted only for life; and after death of the vassal it returned to the chief lord, for which reason it was called feudum caducum, viz. fallen to the lord by the death of the tenant; afterwards these feudatory estates being turned into an inheritance by the connivance and assent of the chief lord, when the possessor of such an estate died, it was called hereditas caduca, i. e. it was fallen to the chief lord, to whom the heir having paid a certain sum of money, he did then relevum hereditatem caducam out of his hands; and the money thus paid was called a relief. This must be understood after the conquest; for, in the time of the Saxons, there were no reliefs, but heriot paid to the lord at the death of his tenant, which in those days were horses, arms, &c. and such tributes could not be exacted of the English immediately after the conquest, for they were deprived of both by the Normans; and instead thereof in many places, the payment of certain sums of money was substituted, which they called arraria, and which continues to this day. Relief reasonable: It is likewise sometimes called lawful and ancient relief, which is enjoined by some law, or becomes due by custom, and doth not depend on the will of the Lord, viz. In a chapter of King John, mentioned by Matt. Paris. 178. Si quis comitum vel baronum natorum, five aliorum tenentium de nobis in capite, per servitium militare, mortuus fuerit, et cum decesserit heres suus plenam etatis fuerit, et relevium debeat, habeat hereditatem suam per antiquum relevium: What that was we may read in the laws of William the Conqueror, c. 22. and of Henry I. c. 14. and before that time in the laws of Canutus, c. 97. Ans. The relief of an earl was eight war-horses with their bridles and saddles, four lorians, four helmets, four shields, four pikes, four swords, four hunting-houses and a palfrey, with their bridles and saddles; the relief of a baron or thane was four horses, two with furniture, and two without, two brodes, four lances, four shields, and a helmet, two lorians, and fifty marks in gold. The relief of a knight was his father's horse, his helmet, shield, lance and sword, which he had at his death. The relief of a villan or a cottager was his best head, &c. Cowell. See Black. Com. 2. P. 36, 65, 87. c. 4. P. 411, 413, 414.

Religion, (Religio) is a stress, as founded on reverence of God, and expectation of future rewards and punishments; a system of duties, faith and worship as opposite to others. John. This notion of reverence towards the Divine nature, where by we are enabled and inclined to serve and worship him after such a manner as we conceive most acceptable to him, is called religion. Watkins.

All blasphemies against God, as denying his being or providence, all profane scoffing at the Holy Scripture, or exposing any part to contempt or ridicule, all impurities in religion, as falsely pretending to extraordinary commissions from God, and terrifying or abusing the people with false denunciations of judgments, &c. All open lewdness grossly scandalous, such as was that of those persons who exposed themselves naked to the people in a balcony in Covent-garden, with most abominable circumstances;—offences of this nature, because they tend to subvert all religion or morality, which are the foundation of government, are punishable by the temporal judges with fine and imprisonment, and also such corporal infamous punishment as to the court in discretion shall seem meet according to the heinousness of the crime. 1 *Howk. Religious houses, (Religiose domus.) Are houses set apart for pious uses, such as monasteries, churches, hospitals and all other places where charity is extended to the relief of the poor and orphans, or for the use or exercise of religion. See Notitia Monastica, or A short History of the Religious Houses in England and Wales, by Thomas Tanner, Octavo, who in an alphabetical order of counties, has accurately given a full account of the founders, the time of foundation, the titular saints, the order, the value and the dissolution, with reference to printed authors, and manuscripts which preserve any memoirs relating to each house; with a learned and judicious Preface of the institution of religious orders, &c. Cowell. See Monasteries.

Religious men, (Religiosi) Such as enter into some monastery or convent, there to live devoutly: And in ancient deeds of sale of land, the purchasers were often restrained by covenant from giving or alienating it, viris religiosi, to the end the land might not fall into mortmain. Cowell.

Religious Orders. For the qualification of clergy: See Ordination.

Relinquishment, (Relinquitment) Is forsaking, abandoning, or giving over. It hath been adjudged, that a person may relinquish an ill demand in a declaration, &c. and have judgment for that which is well demanded. Style 175. In assise the count was of a messuage, and four acres of land in B. and the jury having a view only of the land, the demandant relinquished his plaint to the house. Dym 66. But on assise where the plaint was for fifty three shillings and four pence rent, no part of that rent could be relinquished, because a rent is an incorporeal thing. Ibid. 61. In a writ of annuity, where the jury found the arrears, but did not assess damages or costs, which could now be supplied by a writ of enquiry, a plaintiff was admitted to relinquish and release the damages, and had judgment for the arrears. 21 Rep. 99.

Reliques, (Reliquia) Are some remainders, such as the bones, &c. of saints who are dead, preserved by persons living with great veneration, as sacred memorials of saints. They are forbidden to be used or brought into England, by several statutes; and justices of peace are empowered at church houses for popish books and reliques, which when found are to be defaced and burnt, &c. 3 James 1. c. 5.

Remainder,

Remainder, (Remanentia) Is an estate limited in lands, tenements or rents, to be enjoyed after the expiration of another particular estate. For example, A man may let to one for term of his life, and remainder to another for term of his life. Lit. cap. Attornment. And this remainder may be either for a certain term, or in fee-simple, or fee-tail, as appears by Brooke, tit. Donee and Remainder, 245. and Glanville, lib. 7. cap. 1. The difference between a remainder and reversion, according to Spelman, is this, That by a reversion after the appointed term, the estate returns to the donor, or his heirs, as the proper fountain; whereas by remainder it goes to some third person, or a stranger. Cowell.

Remainder is described to be a remnant of an estate in lands or tenements, expectant on a particular estate created together with the same, and at the same time, and is so expectant on the particular estate, that unless it can take effect when the particular estate determines, it is void. Co. Lit. 49; 143. 2 Co. 51. Moor 344. Vaugh. 269.

1. Of the several kinds of remainders, as distinguished into remainders vested, or in contingency and abeyance.
2. Of cross remainders, or those arising by implication and construction of law.
3. Of what things a remainder may be made, or limited.
4. What words are sufficient to create a remainder.
5. Of the continuance of the particular estate, and when the remainder is to commence.

1. Of the several kinds of remainders, as distinguished into remainders vested, or in contingency and abeyance.

If an estate be limited, either at Common law, or by way of use, to one for life, or in tail, remainder to the right heirs of J. S. who is then dead, this is a good remainder, and vests presently in the person who is heir at law to J. S. by purchase; and tho' a daughter be then heir at law, and after a son is born, yet shall the daughter retain the land against him; for she being heir, and coming within the description at the time when the remainder was limited, it then vests and settles in her immediately as a remainder by purchase, and shall not by any accident after be defeated. 2 Rol. Abr. 415. 1 Co. 95, 103. Plow. 56.

But contingent remainders are of three sorts; First, When it is a limitation to one not in esse, for in that case, if the remainder-man never does come in esse, it is a void remainder. Secondly, When the particular estate may determine before the remainder can commence; as an estate to A. for life; and from and after the determination of his estate, then to C. during the life of A. this is good by contingency, that is, if A. forfeit his estate by alienation, or otherwise, in his life-time. Thirdly, When there is a limitation precedent, or something to happen before the remainder can take effect, which may happen; as a remainder to commence when J. S. shall return to England from Rome. In the case of Dormer v. Fortescue, Mich. 14 Geo. 2. Per Lee Chief Justice.

But if J. S. in the case above, be living at the time of the remainder limited to his right heirs, this puts such remainder in abeyance or contingency, that is, it is in no person but in nubibus till the contingency happens, for it is not in the feoffor or donor, because he has limited it out of him, and all remainders must pass out of him at the time of the limitation. tho' they do not presently vest in the person intended; and in the right heirs of J. S. it cannot be, because he cannot have heirs during life; so there is no person in rerum natura within the description, to take it; therefore it is in the mean time in abeyance or expectancy, to vest or not vest, as the case happens; for if J. S. dies during the particular estate, then the remainder presently takes place in his heirs; but if the particular estate determines by death or otherwise in the life of J. S. then such remainder is become totally void, and can never vest, but the estate settles again in the feoffor or donor, as if no such limitation in remainder had been; and he becomes tenant to the præcipe, and is obliged to do the services; and tho' J. S. die soon after, yet his heir can have no benefit by it, not being capable of taking the remainder when it fell. 1 Co. 135. Co. Lit. 378. a. 2 Co. 51. 2 Rol. Abr. 415. Plow. 28, 56. Popb. 74. Moor 720. 3 Co. 20. 10 Co. 50. 145. Pollex. 56.

But if there be no such J. S. at the time of the limitation, tho' he be after born, and dies, during the particular estate; yet his heirs shall never have the remainder. So if a remainder be limited to A. son of B. in tail, &c. or to E. wife of D. where in truth there is no such A. or E. tho' B. has a son called A. or D. marries one E. yet they can never take the remainder; because if there be such persons as the words of the gift import, there the remainder ought to vest in them presently, and they will never after be made capable of taking it; but if there be no such person then in esse, none who come within that description after can lay claim to it, because the limitation was present to such persons; but a remainder limited primogenito filio, or proximo hæredi masculino of A. or propinquioribus hæredibus de sanguine puerorum, or seniori puero of A. or to the right heirs of A. there being then such A. in esse, or to the wife A. shall marry; these are good remainders, and vest when such persons come in esse as are within the description; because here appears no present regard for any person in particular, therefore if they answer the description at any time before the particular estate determines, it is time enough; and so there is a diversity between a remainder limited to one by name in particular, and such remainder limited by description or circumlocution, or between a general name and a special name. Co. Lit. 3. 1 Co. 66. 2 Co. 51. Hob. 33. Moor 104. Dyer 337. 2 Leon. 210. 1 Rol. Rep. 254.

A. makes a lease to B. for life of B. and after the death of A. to remain to B. and his heirs; this remainder is contingent, and cannot vest presently, for if A. survives B. it is void; and because otherwise the operation of livery would be interrupted during the life of A. for he cannot give himself any estate, his livery operating to pass estates from him, not to give any to him who had the whole before; therefore during his life the operation of the livery must cease, and by consequence no remainder can take effect in virtue of that livery, which pro tempore being at an end, all that depended thereon ceases too, and can never after be revived; for the livery must carry out all the estates at once from the feoffor, and if he comes again into the possession before they can all take effect, this breaks the force of the livery, and brings back again to him all that such livery had taken out from him, and then they can never take effect but by a new livery; this is the reason of the common case, that one cannot give lands to another to begin after his death, because being to make livery presently, if that cannot operate presently, it can never operate at all, for it is a contradiction to give lands to one by a solemn livery, which is an act executed and works presently, and yet by words to restrain that operation to a future time; but in the principal case, where A. dies first, there no interruption is of the livery, for B. had an estate for life by virtue thereof, and before that determines, the same livery, which carried the remainder in abeyance, for the uncertainty of its taking effect, does on A.'s death direct and settle, or bring down the remainder to B. and his heirs. 10 Co. 85.

If a lease be made to A. B. and C. for their lives, and if B. survives C. then to remain to B. and his heirs, this remainder is in abeyance, because tho' the person be certain, yet since it depends on C.'s dying before him, till that be known the remainder cannot vest. So if a lease be made to A. for life, and after the death of B. who is a stranger, to remain to C. in fee, or to A. in fee, these remainders are in abeyance or contingency, and depend on B.'s dying before C. or A. for if he survives them, the remainder cannot take effect. 3 Co. 20. 10 Co. 85. Co. Lit. 378.

If a lease be made to A. for life, remainder to the abbot of D. and his successors, tho' the abbot be then dead, so as there is then no abbot at all, yet the remainder shall be good if an abbot be made before the death of A. So of a remainder to a mayor and commonalty, dean and chapter, prior and convent, &c. tho' there be mayor, dean or prior. So of a remainder to the son of D. parson of D. or other sole corporation and his successors; these remainders not being limited to them specially, but to them generally, and so as to come within the description before the determination of the particular estate, as capable of taking by virtue thereof, are good remainders in abeyance, &c. But if there be no such corporations at the time of the limitation, then the remainders are totally void; and none created after, tho' by the same name, can take these remainders, not even if a patent be then patied to make such corporation. Co. Litt. 264. Hb. 33. 2 Cr. 51. 10 Co. 30. Moor. 104. 1 Rol. Rep. 254. 2 Bulst. 275.

2. Of cross remainders, or those arising by implication and construction of law.

A. having issue five sons, his wife being enfeint, devised two thirds of his lands to his four younger sons, and the child in ventre sa mere if he were a son, and their heirs; and if they all die without issue male of their bodies or any of them, that the lands revert to the right heirs of the devisor; by this devise the younger sons were tenants in tail in possession, with cross remainders in tail to each other, and no part shall revert to the heir of the devisor till all the younger sons be dead without issue male of their bodies. Dyer 303.

But where one having issue three sons, A. B. and C. devises one house to A. and his heirs, another to B. and his heirs, and a third to C. and his heirs, provided that if all his said children die without issue, that then the messuages remain and be to his wife and her heirs; it was held by three judges, that on the death of one of the sons without issue the wife might enter, and that here there were no cross remainders from one son to another, because being devised to them severally by express limitation, there shall be no greater estate to them by implication; but Lee Ch. J. doubted; and Doderidge said, that tho' perhaps cross remainders may be by implication where there is a devise to two several persons, yet not so if to more; for when one dies there cannot be several estates by moieties to several persons, and when another dies, remainder again to another, because of the uncertainty and inconvenience; and that it was never seen in any book, where an estate is limited to divers, that there could be cross remainders. Cro. Jac. 655. 2 Roll. Rep. 281. Cart. 173. cited, and admitted to be law. As in 4 Leon. 14.

One seised of lands in fee, by will devises Black Acre to A. his daughter, and heirs, and White Acre to his daughter B. and her heirs; and if she die before the age of sixteen years living A. then A. to have White Acre to her and her heirs; and if A. die, having no issue, living B. then B. to have the part of A. to her and her heirs; and if both die, having no issue, then to J. S. and his heirs, and dies; B. attains her age of sixteen years; and then dies without issue in the life of A. and first it was held by three justices against Dyer, that the daughters had an estate-tail on the whole will, and not a fee determinable on a contingency subsequent; secondly, that by the words "if both die without issue," no cross remainders in tail were created by implication, but that on B.'s death without issue, after sixteen, J. S. should have her part presently without staying till the death of A. without issue. Dyer 330. 1 Benl. 212. 1 Rol. Abr. 839. Vaugh. 267.

A. seised of lands in fee, by will devises all his lands in the county of, &c. to his two daughters B. and C. and their heirs, equally to be divided between them; and in case they happen to die without issue, then to his nephew J. S. and the heirs male of his body, and dies; and it was adjudged, that on the death of B. one of the daughters of the other sister took her moiety as a cross remainder. Raym. 452. Skin. 17. 2 Jon. 172. 2 Show. 136. Pollex. 434. And see 1 Vern. 545. 3 Mod. 109.

Cross remainders can never arise between more than two, from the great confusion it would otherwise create. Cro. Jac. 655. 1 Vent. 224. Raym. 455. Plow. 97. 2 Jon. 82.

It is clearly agreed, that cross remainders can only arise in last wills, and are not to be allowed of in any deed or conveyance. Co. Litt. 25. 1 Roll. Abr. 837. 3 Show. 136.

Richard Holden seised in fee, and having issue a son and three grandchildren, by his will devised part of his estate to his wife for her life, and the reversion of such part expectant on her death, and all other his freehold tenements, &c. he gave to his son Richard Holden for life, and after his death to his first and other sons successively in tail male; and for default of such issue, and after the determination of the said estates, he gave the premises to his grandson Richard Holden, and his granddaughter Elizabeth Holden, so be equally divided between them, and to the heirs of their respective bodies issuing; and for default of such issue he gave the premises to his grand-daughter Anne in fee: the testator died seised, Richard the son died without issue male, whereupon Elizabeth and the grandson entered, and Elizabeth died without issue generally; Anne Holden married John Jarvis; and the question was, whether there were cross remainders between Elizabeth and Richard the grandson, or whether the moiety of Elizabeth should go to Anne or to Richard? And it was resolved, that there were no cross remainders between them, because here are no express words, nor is there a necessary implication, without either of which cross remainders cannot be raised; that the words, and for default of such issue, being relative to what goes before, mean only, and for default of heirs of their respective bodies, and there it is no more than as if it had been a devise of one moiety to Richard and the heirs of his body, and of the other moiety to Elizabeth and the heirs of her body, and for default of heirs of their respective bodies remainder over; in which case there could be no doubt; and it was held that this case differed from the case supra, the word respective being in that case, and the first devisees were the testator's daughters, and the remainder-man only a nephew; whereas in the present case, Anne was as near to the testator as Richard. Comber v. Hill, Pasch. 7 Geo. 2. in B. R. and Mich. 8 Geo. 2. a like case in B. R. between Browns v. Williams.

3. Of what things a remainder may be made, or limited.

As to estates of inheritance, there can be no doubt but that the grantor, having a perpetual and durable interest in the estate, may share and divide it, or grant as many remainders over as he thinks proper. 4 New Abr. 492.

But as to personal goods and chattels, it was formerly held, that they in their own nature were incapable of any limitation over, being things transitory, and by many accidents subject to be lost, destroyed or otherwise impaired, and the exigencies of trade requiring a frequent circulation thereof, in which they differ from lands and tenements which are permanent, therefore what is called an estate in lands is termed property in personal chattels; hence it was held, that a grantor's devise of a personal thing to one, tho' but for an hour or minute, was a gift for ever; and an absolute disposition of the intire property. Bro. Devise 13. Plow. 321. Dyer 74. 8 Co. 94.

Hence it was a long time before the courts of justice could be prevailed upon to have any regard for a devise over even of a chattel real, or a term for years after an estate for life limited thereon, because the estate for life being in the eye of the law of greater regard and consideration than an estate for years, they thought he, who had it devised to him for life, had therein included all that the devisor had a power to dispose of; but now such remainders over are allowed under the name of executory devises, and are established both in courts of law and equity, provided they tend not to a perpetuity, so as to make estates unalienable. 2 New Abr. 294.

Also a distinction was formerly taken between a devise of a personal chattel to one for life, with a remainder over, and of the use only; thus in the first case the devise for life had the absolute property, but not so in the second; for that the first devise had not the property of the goods, but only a special interest in them, so that there still remained a property which might be limited over; over; but this distinction is now exploded in conformity to the Civil law, and the devisee in remainder is allowed in equity the like remedy in both cases. Plow. 521. Cro. Car. 346. 1 Rel. Abr. 610. March 106. Owen 33. 1 Ch. Ca. 129. 2 Vern. 245. 1 P. Will. 1. 502, 651.

But a devise of a term for years, or personal chattel to one for a day or an hour, is a devise of the whole term or interest, if the limitation over is void, and it appears at the same time that the whole was intended to be disposed of from the executors. 1 P. Will. 666.

A. being possessed of a term for ninety-nine years, devised it to B. for life, and after to six others successively, for their lives, if the term so long continue; and all the seven persons being dead, and the term continuing, it was adjudged, that it should revert to the executors of the testator, and that it did not vest in the survivor of the devisees so as to transmit it to his representatives. 1 Salk. 231. 1 Ld. Raym. 325.

A farmer devised his stock (which consisted of corn, hay, cattle, &c.) to his wife for life, and after her death to plaintiff. It was objected, that no remainder can be limited over of such chattels as these, because the use of them is to spend and consume them; but the Master of the rolls said the devise over was good, but added, if any of the cattle were worn out in using, defendant was not to be answerable for them; and if any were sold as useless, defendant was only to answer the value of them at the time of the sale; and an account was decreed to be taken accordingly. Abr. Eq. 361.

A. gives his sister, by will, 10 l. and directs that such part of his personal estate, as his wife should leave of her substance, should go to the sister; whatever the wife has not employed in that way, shall go over and be accounted for. 1 P. Will. 651.

But if a chattel real, money, goods or other personal things, are devised to one, and the heirs of his body, or to one, and if he dies without heirs of his body, remainder over; this remainder is totally void, and the courts of equity will not allow of a bill by the remainder-man to compel security, &c. or to have the money, &c. after the death of the first devisee, but it shall go to his executors or administrators; for the first devise gives the absolute property of a personal estate, as the like devise of a real estate before the statute de donis gave the absolute fee, upon which no limitation could be made further, and as the heirs are the representatives to take the real estate, so are the executors to take the personal estate; and this is not within the statute de donis, but remains as at Common law. 2 Vent. 349. 2 Vern. 600. 1 Salk. 156. Abr. Eq. tit. Devise.

If A. devise that his goods and furniture shall remain in his house to be enjoyed according to the limitations of his will, by those intitled to the house, the first who would be tenant in tail of the house becomes absolute owner of the goods. Saunders v. Saunders admitted.

Not only lands and tenements, but also rents, commons, estovers, or any other interest or profits in esse, wherein the grantor hath the absolute property to him and his heirs, may be granted with remainder over. Plow. 379. 9 Co. 48, 97.

So if one hath the office of park-keeper, forester, gaoler, sheriff, &c. to him and his heirs, he may grant those offices to one for life, remainder to another for life, &c. for omne majus continet in se minus, and as they are grantable over in fee, so may they be granted in succession to one for life, with remainders over, &c. 9 Co. 48. 1 And. pl. 201.

It was formerly doubted whether there could be a remainder of a rent de novo, that is, whether a man seized of lands in fee, could thereout grant a rent-charge to one for life or years, remainder to another in fee, or in tail; and this doubt arose from the rent not having any existence before it was created, consequently no reversion could be left to the grantor, out of which the remainder was to arise; but it hath been adjudged, and is now settled, that such grant in remainder is good, the grantor having the absolute interest in the estate out of which it is to arise, and his intention gives it being for the whole, out of which the lesser estates are carved.

But if he grant such rent for life or years, to one without going further, he cannot after grant the reversion thereof to another, because he has no reversion. 2 Rel. Abr. 415. 2 Co. 70, 76. 2 Vent. 245. 144. 1 Sid. 285. 2 Salk. 577. 2 Lutw. 172. Mo. pl. 100.

The King may grant an estate in an office to commence in futuro, or on a contingency, for he hath no inheritance in the office, or to the execution of it, but in point of interest only to grant. And there is a diversity between offices in fee existing, and such as are granted only for life, which being as a new thing created, may, as a rent de novo, be granted to commence in futuro. 4 Mod. 275. 1 Ld. Raym. 52. Carth. 350. Salk. 465. Comb. 334.

If one be created Baron, Viscount, Earl, &c. by patent, and after, in the same patent, the same honour is granted to another in remainder, yet this operates as a new grant, and not as a remainder, for the King had no reversion of that honour in him, tho' he had still the same power of appointing one in succession to take it, as he had of granting it to the first. Show. Par. Ca. 5, 11.

A licence to sell wine may be granted to one for life, remainder to another for life; because by such licence not only an authority passeth, but an interest by way of restitution, to that which was the subjects right before it was prohibited by statute. 1 Lev. 220. Bridg. Rep. 113.

4. What words are sufficient to create a remainder.

The word remainder is no term of art, nor is it necessary to create a remainder. So that any words, sufficient to shew the intent of the party, will create a remainder; because such estates take their denomination of remainders more from the nature and manner of their existence, after they are limited, than from any previous quality inherent in the word REMAINDER. To make them such therefore, if a man gives lands to A. for life, and that after his death the land shall revert, or descend to B. for life, &c. this is a good remainder, and may be pleaded as such. 1 Roll. Abr. 416. Plow. 29. 1 Roll. Rep. 319. Dyer 125.

So if lands are given to one and the heirs male of his body, and to him and the heirs female of his body, this limitation to the heirs female is a remainder; because it is not to take place till the estate to the heirs male is spent. Co. Litt. 377. a.

So if lands are given to a widow, and to the heirs of the body of her late husband, on her begotten. This is a remainder to the heirs of the body of the husband; because it cannot take effect till after the widow's death, who has an estate for life. Co. Litt. 26, 200. 2 Mod. 210.

So an estate limited to A. for life, or in tail, & post decessum ejus, or pro defectu talis exitus, to B. and the heirs of his body, is good, tho' there be not the word remainder. So if a lease be made to A. for life, and that after his death B. shall have the profit, this is a good remainder to B. Plow. 159. Moor. pl. 54. Dyer 125. 1 Roll. Rep. 319. Cro. Elix. 10, 742.

So a lease to A. for life, and that after his death his children shall have it, is a good remainder. 6 Co. 17. b. Raym. 83.

Nay, tho' an estate be limited expressly as a remainder, yet if it be not so in construction of law, the word remainder will have no force to make it such. As if A. seized of lands in fee, he and B. levy a fine to C. in fee, who grants and renders to B. in tail, rendering rent to A. and if B. died without issue, tenementa pred' integre remaneant to A. and his heirs; B. suffers a common recovery; A. distrains for his rent; and this was adjudged a reversion, and as such the rent passed with it to A. and was chargeable on the land in whose hands it ever came, by virtue of the contract which cannot be destroyed by the recovery, tho' the reversion is thereby barred. Cro. Elix. 727, 768, 792. Moor. pl. 795. Co. Litt. 299. Raym. 142.

But here it may be proper to take notice of a set of words sometimes used in leases for years, which are so far a part of the limitation and description of the first interest, that they cannot again be made use of to pass any further interest in the same land. As if one make a lease lease to A. for eighty years, if he so long live; and if he happen to die within the term; then the lands for the residue of the term, or for so many years as shall then remaining of the term, to go over to another, this limitation over is void; because the time, or term of eighty years was not absolute to A. but was determinable after his death, and by his death the whole term is at an end; as if a lease had been made to him barely for his life, and then to finish the residue of a term, when nothing thereof remains, is repugnant and void; but some opinions incline, that a devise in such a manner would be good, by reason of the intent of the party, and the equivocal signification of the word terminus, which may, tho' not strictly, signify also the time or space of eighty years, as well as the estate or interest for eighty years determinable as aforesaid. But now if a lease be made to A. for eighty years, if he so long live, and if he die within the term, then the land to go over to another for the residue of the eighty years, this is a good remainder, because tho' the term or interest be determined, yet the land, and part of the years, still remain; these years may be made the measure of the succeeding interest, as any other number of years may be. Cro. El. 216. 1 Leon. 218. 1 Co. 153. 3 Leon. 195. 2 Roll. Abr. 415. Flow. 198. Moor 247, 520. pl. 441. 1 And. 259.

J. S. leased of lands in fee by indenture demises them to A. for life, habendum to A. B. C. and D. his three sons for their lives, and the life of the survivor of them successively; after the death of the latter it was adjudged in this case, First, That if the sons could take, it must be by way of remainder, they not being parties to the deed, and then it must be as joint-tenants, which could not be by reason of the word "successive." Secondly, That they could not take in succession, for the uncertainty whose estate or interest was to commence first. Hob. 313. Hutt. 87.

A. by indenture makes a lease to B. for 40 years, if A. so long live, and after his death to C. (who was no party to the deed) for one thousand years, and then A. levies a fine and dies, and five years pass after his death, and then plaintiff claiming under C. enters, &c. this is no remainder at all to C. for first, presently it cannot vest by reason of the lessor's life interposing, therefore no remainder is vested. Secondly, As a contingent remainder it cannot be good; because then it ought to have a particular estate to support it, and ought to be in abeyance, or contingency, to vest or not vest when that determines; but here the first lease is no such particular estate; because that reaches not to the commencement of the remainder, nor is the remainder limited with any regard to the particular estate; because it is not to commence on the determination of that, but at a future time, viz. on death of the lessor, and there is no contingency in the case, for it is to take effect at all events, on the death of the lessor, be it before or after the end of the term, therefore it can be no other than a future interest termini to begin after the death of the party who grants it, which being but for years it may well do; because it occurs by way of contract, and tho' the grantee there was no party to the deed, and therefore, as objected, could take nothing, yet it appears, that judgment was given for plaintiff, which proves, First, That the grantee had an interest; Secondly, That this interest was not barred by the fine, and five years non-claim after the death of the grantor, not being touched, devested or turned to a right; Thirdly, That tho' the grantee was no party to the indenture, yet he might well take by virtue thereof, if he gets the indenture to make out his title, for the grantor can't derogate from his own grant, or avoid his own acts. Raym. 340.

5. Of the continuance of the particular estate, and when the remainder is to commence.

If a man makes a lease to A. for life, and that after the death of A. and one day after, the land shall remain to B. for life, &c. this is a contingent remainder, because not to take effect immediately on the determination of the first estate, and so lasting that time there would be an interruption of the livery, and no tenant of the freehold, either to do the services, or answer to strangers' principis: Plow. 25. Raym. 144. that the law is nice to an instant. 1 Id. Raym. 316.

A. seised in fee, devises his lands to B. eldest son of his brother C. for life, remainder to the first son of B. in tail, and so to all his other sons in the same manner successively, remainder to D. second son of C. for life, remainder to his first and other sons in tail successively, and dies; B. enters and dies, leaving his wife enfeint with a son, then D. enters as in his remainder, and six months after the son is born; and all this matter being found specially, 'twas adjudged in C. B. for D. against the son; First, Because this being a contingent remainder to the son, and he not being born at the time when the particular estate determined, became void; Secondly, D. being the next in remainder, and having entered before the birth of the son, was in by purchase, therefore shall not lose his estate by a son born after; and this judgment was affirmed in B. R. for they held it plainly to be a contingent remainder, and not an executory devise, or a springing remainder, for that would introduce a perpetuity not to be barred by a common recovery, because 'twould be the same to all the other sons; but here it being a contingent remainder, and not happening in time, 'tis gone for ever; they relied on Archer's case, but on a writ of error brought in parliament, the judgment was reversed; because being in a will, they thought that by the meaning and equity thereof they ought not to disinherit the heir for such a nicety, and a will was otherwise to be expounded than a deed; therefore they construed it an executory devise, or springing remainder to the first and other sons, and that the freehold should vest in D. till the son was born; but all the judges were much dissatisfied with it, and did not change their opinions, but blamed the judge who permitted it to be found specially where the law was so certain and clear. 4 Mod. 259. 3 Lev. 408. 1 Salk. 227. Carib. 309.

Now by the 10 U. 11 W. 3. cap. 16. Provision is made that after-born sons and daughters, to whom remainders are limited in contingency, shall take in the same manner as if they had been born in the father's life-time, tho' no estate be limited to trustees to preserve and support such contingent remainders, which act was made by reason of this case, and of the strictness of the law herein.

Remanentes, (remansi) Are words used to signify belonging to ——— As de hominibus sive tenentibus qui hanc manerio remansi sunt. Domestday.

Remanet in Custodia, Entry of an action in the Marshal's book, by reman. custod. where a man is actually in custody, is a good commencement of an action in B. R. 3 Salk. 150.

Remedy, (Remedium) Is the action or means given by law for recovery of a right; and whenever the law giveth any thing, it giveth a remedy for the same. There is a maxim, Lex semper dabit remedium. Stud. Compan. 177. 179.

Remedies are favourably extended, and sometimes to be had without action or applying to the courts of justice, viz. by accord and agreement of the parties, by arbitration; retaking goods wrongfully taken away; taking distresses for rent; entry on lands, to regain possession, &c. Wood's Inst. 528, 529, 530.

Remembrances, (Reminiscere) Formerly called Clerks of the Remembrance, are officers of the Exchequer, of which there are three, distinguished by the names of the King's Remembrancer, the Lord Treasurer's Remembrancer, and the Remembrancer of Fleet Prison: Upon whose charge it lies, to put the Lord Treasurer and the justices of that court in remembrance of such things as are to be called on and done by the King's Exchequer.

The King's Remembrancer, when in his office all requests are made before the Barons for any of the King's debts, for arrears, &c. and he takes all bonds for such debts, and makes the parties for breach of them; also he orders, directs, and calls the Collectors of Customs, Subsidies, Excise, and other public payments for their accounts:

All informations on penal statutes are entered and sued in his office; and he makes the bills of composition on penal laws, and takes the stallment of debts: And all matters on English bills in the Exchequer-Chamber remain in the office of this Remembrancer. He has delivered into his office the indentures, fines, and other evidences, which concern the passing any lands to or from the King. In Crasino animarum yearly he reads in the court the oath of all the officers of the court, when they are admitted Writs of prerogative or privilege, for officers and ministers of the court are made out by him, and so commissions of Nisi prius, by the King's warrant, on trial of any matters within his office at the assizes in the country; he hath the entering of judgments, of pleas, &c. And all differences touching irregularities in proceedings shall be determined by the King's Remembrancer; who is to settle the same if he can, and give costs where he finds the fault; but if not, the court is to determine it, &c.

By order of court, his Majesty's Remembrancer, or his deputy, are diligently to attend in court, and to give an account touching any proceedings as they shall be required; and they enter the rules and orders of the court.

The Treasurer's Remembrancer issues out process of feri facias and extents, for debts to the King; and against sheriffs, escheators, &c. not accounting, he takes the accounts of all sheriffs, and makes the record, whereby it appears whether sheriffs and other accountants pay their proffers due at Easter and Michaelmas; and he makes another record, whether sheriffs and other accountants keep their days prefixed: There are also brought into his office all the accounts of customers, controllers, and accountants, to make entry thereof on record. All estreats of fines, issues and amerciaments, set in any of the courts at Westminster, or at the assizes or sessions, are certified into his office; and by him delivered to the clerk of the estreats to make out process on them; and he may issue process for discovery of tenures; and all such revenue as is due to the crown by reason thereof, &c.

The Remembrancer of the First Fruit's office is to take all compositions, and bonds for payment of first fruits and tenths; he makes process against all such persons as do not pay the same. Stat. 35 Eliz. cap. 5. 5 R. 2. c. 14. 37 Ed. 3. c. 4.

Remitter, (from the Lat. remittere, to restore or send back) is where a man hath two rights or titles to land, and he comes to land by the last title, but that proving defective, he is restored to and judged in by force of his elder or surer title, by operation of law. Litt. 659. 1 Inst. 347.

The reason of this invention of the law, is IN FAVOUR OF RIGHT; and that title which is first and most antient, is always preferred. Dyer 68. Finch's Law 119.

In Remitters to restore rights, the first interest which works such Remitter, must be a right, and not a title of entry; and there can be no Remitter before an entry. 1 Inst. 348. 2 Bulst. 29.

It is a rule, that Remitter shall not be, where there is not both an action and a right, with a descent of the possession of the estate to the same party that is to be remitted: Nor may it be, when the party comes to his last title by his own wrong, or any folly of his own; or on a void estate. 1 Inst. 347. 353.

If land descend to him who has right to it before, he shall be remitted to his better and more antient title, if he will: And a remitter must be to a precedent right; for regularly to every remitter there are two incidents, viz. AN ANCIENT RIGHT, AND A DEFENSIBLE ESTATE OF FREEHOLD COMING TOGETHER. Doll. & Stud. cap. 9. Wood's Inst. 528.

Tenant in tail makes a feoffment in fee on condition, and dieth, and his issue being within age enters for the condition broken by virtue of the feoffment; he shall be first in as tenant in fee-simple, and be remitted as heir to his father: But if the heir be of age, he shall not be remitted; but is to bring this writ of formedon against the feoffee. 1 Inst. 252, 349. And if tenant in tail infeoff his son or heir apparent, who is within age, and after dies, that is a remitter to the heir: Tho' if he were at full age at the time of such feoffment, it is no remitter, because it was his folly, that being of full age would take such a feoffment. Litt. 655.

If a husband alien lands which he hath in right of his wife, and after take an estate again to him and his wife for their lives, this is a remitter to the wife, for the alienation is the act of the husband, and not of the woman; yet if the alienation be by fine in a court of record, such a taking again afterwards to the husband and wife shall not make the wife to be in her remitter, she being excluded by the fine for ever. Terms de Ley.

Lands are given to a man and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies; and after the husband aliens the land in fee, and then takes back an estate to him, and his wife for their lives; here they will be both remitted: But if he take an estate again to himself for life, remitter will not be allowed against his own alienation. 1 Inst. 354.

When the entry of a person is lawful, and he takes an estate in the land for life; or in fee, &c. (except it be by matter of record, or otherwise to conclude or estop him) he shall be remitted. 1 Inst. 363. And a remitter to one in possession, may be a remitter to another in remainder; if the remainder be not bound, which estops it. Cro. Car. 145.

If there be tenant in tail, remainder in fee to A. B. and the tenant in tail discontinueth, and takes back an estate in fee; and then devises the lands to his wife for life, with remainder to W. R. for years, remainder to the same A. B. in fee, and dies, and his wife enters and dies: It has been held, that he in remainder in fee may enter and avoid the term for years to W. R. because he is remitted to his first remainder in fee; and a remitter avoids a lease for years, without entry. Noy 48.

A father was tenant for life, remainder to his son for life, remainder to the right heirs of the body of the father; he and his son conveyed the lands to the uncle in fee, who died without issue, so that the son who was heir in tail to the father, was now heir at law to the uncle, and the fee descended on him; the wife of the uncle brought dower, but the son being remitted to his former estate, no dower accrued to the wife, for the estate of which she claims dower is gone. 1 Leon. 37. 9 Rep. 136.

Lands were purchased by a man, and settled on himself and his wife in tail, and they had issue two sons; then he made a feoffment to the use of himself for life, remainder to the wife for life, remainder in fee to his second son: The wife after his death entered, and made a feoffment to the issue of the second son; and then the eldest son entered for a forfeiture, on the Stat. 11 H. 7. cap. 20. and it was adjudged a forfeiture, by reason the wife having two titles, one as tenant in tail, the other as tenant for life, by her entry she is remitted to her estate for life, so that the feoffment made by her is a forfeiture of her estate. Sid. 63. 3 Nelf. Abr. 100.

If land be given to a woman in tail, the remainder to another and a third in tail, remainder to a fourth in fee; the feme takes husband, and he discontinues the lands in fee, and after an estate is made to the husband and wife for their lives, or other estate: This is a remitter to all in remainder, and if she die without issue, they may enter; and so it is of them who have the reversion after such entails. Lit. Sect. 673.

Where a person lets land for term of life to another, who granteth it away in fee; if the alienee make an estate to the lessor, it will be a remitter to him, because his entry is lawful. Ibid. 694.

If one be disseised, and the disseisor makes a feoffment to the disseisee; in this case the disseisee may be remitted to his elder title, or he may choose to take by the feoffment; and if it be with warranty, he may if he will make use of the warranty. 1 H. 7. 29. 3 Shep. Abr. 237.

Tenant in tail, hath two sons, and leases the land in tail to his elder son for life, remainder to his youngest son; it is no remitter to the eldest: But if he die without issue of his body, the youngest son shall be remitted. Litt. 682.

If tenant in tail make a feoffment to the use of himself and his heirs, he shall not be remitted; but his issue shall. 3 Nelf. 100. On remitter of issue in tail, leases and other charges on the lands are avoided. Litt. 659, 660.

Renant, Or rather reniant, i. e. negant, from the Fr. renier, negare, to deny or refuse. 32 H. 8. cap. 2.

Rendre, (Fr. rendre viz. reddere) Signifies to yield, give again, or return.

This word is used in levying a fine, which is either single, where nothing is rendered back by the cognisee; or double, when it contains a grant and render back again of the land, &c. to the cognisor. West's Symb.

And there are certain things in a manor which lie in prender, that is, which may be taken by the lord or his officers when they happen, without any offer made by the tenant, such as escheats, &c. and certain which lie in render, i. e. must be rendered or answered by the tenant, as rents, heriots, and other services: Also some services consist in seisance; and some in render. West. Symb. par. 2. Perkin's Reserva. 696.

Renovant, (from renovo) To renew or make again: The parson tued one for tithes, to be paid of things renovant, &c. 2 Cro. 430.

Rent, (redditus in Latin, from reddendo, because, as Fleta tells us, Retroit et quotannis reddit. Lib. 3. c. 14.) Signifies with us a sum of money, or other consideration ISSUING YEARLY out of lands or tenements. Plowden, 132, 138, 141.

1. Of the several sorts of rent.
2. Statutes concerning rent.
3. Of recovering and demanding rent, and in what cases a demand is necessary.
4. Of the time of demanding rent, and the place where the demand is to be made.

1. Of the several sorts of rent.

There are three several sorts, viz. rent-service, rent-charge and rent-seck.

Rent-service is, where a man holds his lands of his lord by fealty and certain rent, or by fealty-service, and certain rent. Litt. lib. 2. cap. 12. Or that which a man making a lease to another for term of years, reserveth yearly to be paid him for them. In the terms of the law, this reason is given for it, because it is at his pleasure either to distrain, or bring an action of debt.

Rent-charge is, where a man makes over his estate to another, by deed indented, either in fee, or fee-tail, or for term of life, yet reserves to himself, by the same indenture, a sum of money yearly to be paid to him, with clause of distress for non-payment. See Littleton ubi supra.

Rent-seck, otherwise a dry rent, is that, which a man making over his estate by deed indented, reserveth yearly to be paid him, without clause of distress mentioned in the indenture. Litt. ibid. See the difference between a rent and an annuity in Doer and Student, pag. 30. Dial. primo. Cowell.

Littleton describes a rent-service to be where the tenant holdeth land of his lord by fealty and certain rent, or by other services and certain rent. Litt. ibid. 213.

The services are of two sorts, either expressed in the lease or contract, or raised by implication of law. When the services are expressed in the contract, the quantum must be either certainly mentioned, or be such as to a reference to something else may be reduced to a certainty; for if the lessor's demands be uncertain, it is impossible to give him an adequate satisfaction or compensation for them, as the jury cannot determine what injury he has sustained. Co. Lit. 96. a. Bril. 397. 2 Ld. Raym. 1160.

The services implied are such as the law obliges the tenant to perform when there are none contracted for in the grant; and these are more or less according to the duration of the gift; as at Common law, before the statute Quia emptores terrarum, if the tenant made a feoffment in fee without any reservation of services, the feoffee held by the same services by which the feoffor held over; because the services being an incumbrance on the land, which the tenant could not discharge without his lord's consent, must follow the land into whose hands soever it comes. Co. Lit. 22, 23.

Where a man seised of lands grants by deed poll or indenture a yearly rent, to be issuing out of the same land, to another in fee, in tail, for life or years, with a clause of distress; this is a rent-charge, because the lands are charged with a distress by the express grant or provision of the parties, which otherwise it would not be. See Annuity.

So if a man make a feoffment in fee, reserving rent, and if the rent be behind, that it shall be lawful for him to distrain, this is a rent-charge, the word reserving amounting to a grant from the feoffee. Litt. ibid. 217. Co. Lit. 170. a. Plow. 134.

A rent granted for equality of partition by coparceners to another is a rent-charge, and distrainable of common right without clause of distress; and altho' there be no tenure of the sister who grants it; for as the law for the conveyancy of coparceners allows of such grants, it must consequently give a remedy to the grantee for recovery of it. Litt. ibid. 252.

A rent-seck is so called, because it is unprofitable to the grantee, as before seisin had he can have no remedy for recovery of it; as where a man seised in fee grants a rent in fee for life or years, or where a man makes a feoffment in fee or for life, remainder in fee, reserving rent without any clause of distress, these are rents-seck; for which, by the policy of the ancient law, there was no remedy, as there was no tenure between the grantor and grantee, or feoffor and feoffee, consequently no fealty could be due. Litt. ibid. 215, 218. Cro. Car. 520. Kekw. 104. Cro. Eliz. 656.

And it hath been ruled in equity, that where an annuity was devised by will to A. and the land subject to the annuity to B. that B. should give seisin of the rent-seck to A. that he might have remedy for recovery of it at Common law, it being the original intention of the gift, that the devisee should have some benefit from it. Moor 626. 3 Chan. Ca. 92.

So when a bill was brought for 3 l. for a rent of 5 s. arrear for twelve years, the equity of the bill being that the deeds by which the rent was created were lost, consequently no remedy for the rent at law; and the court, on plaintiff's proving constant payment till the last twelve years, decreed defendant to pay the arrears and growing rent; for since by payment it was evident plaintiff had a right to the rent, and that he could not without his deeds make a title at law, therefore the court decreed defendant to pay the rent, and so subjected his person, which possibly might not have been liable by the deed which created the rent. 1 Chan. Ca. 120. But see Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. in the next division of this title.

2. Statutes concerning rent.

Stat. 32 Hen. 8. c. 37. stat. 1. The executors or administrators of tenants in fee-simple, tenants in fee-tail, and tenants for term of life, of rent-services, rent-charges, rent-secks, and fee-farms, unto whom any such rent or fee-farm be due, shall have an action of debt for such arrears against the tenants who ought to have paid in the life-time of their testator, or against their executors and administrators, and distrain for the arrears on the land charged with the payment, so long as the lands continue in the seisin or possession of the tenant in demean, who ought to have paid the rent or fee-farm, or in the seisin or possession of any other person claiming only from the tenant by purchase, gift or descent, in like manner as they might have done.

stat. 2. This act shall not extend to any manor in Wales, whereof the inhabitants have used to pay to every lord at his first entry, any sum of money for discharge of all duties and penalties wherewith the inhabitants were chargeable to any of the lord's ancestors.

Stat. 3. If any man have in right of his wife, any estate in rents or fee-farms, and the same be unpaid in the wife's life; the husband, after death of his wife, his executors and administrators, shall have action of debt for the arrears, or may distrain.

Stat. 4. If any have any rents or fee-farms for term of life of any other person, and the rent, &c. be unpaid in the life of such person, and after the said person doth die, he to whom the rent or fee-farm is due, his executors and administrators, shall have an action of debt, or distrain for the same.

Stat. 8 Ann. cap. 14. sect. 1. On any execution, arrears of rent, not exceeding one year to be paid, which the sheriff is to levy and pay to plaintiff, as well as the execution money, the plaintiff paying the landlord.

Landlord dead, and after execution executed, administration is granted to A. he is not intitled to a year's rent. 1 Strange 97.

The administrator of the landlord may have an action against the officer for taking the goods in execution, and removing them from the premises before the landlord was paid a year's rent. 1 Strange 212.

On motion on behalf of the landlord, the sheriff was ordered to pay him his year's rent without deducting poundage. 1 Strange 643.

This statute extends to the immediate landlord, and not to the ground landlord. 2 Strange 787. After the landlord had been paid a year's rent on one execution, another execution came in, and he moved to be paid another year's rent on the last execution, but was denied, for the intent of the act was only to continue a lien as to one year, and to punish him for his laches, if he lets more run in arrear. 2 Strange 1024.

Stat. 4. It shall be lawful for any person, having rent due on any lease for life, to bring an action for such arrears, as on a lease for years.

Stat. 5. All distresses hereby impowered to be made, shall be liable to such sales, and in such manner, as by Will. & Mar. stat. 1. cap. 5.

Stat. 6. It shall be lawful for any person having rent due on any lease for life, years, or at will, determined, to distrain such arrears, after determination of the leases.

Stat. 7. Provided, That such distress be made within six calendar months after the determination of such lease, and during the continuance of such landlord's title, and during the possession of the tenant from whom such arrear became due.

Stat. 4 Geo. 2. cap. 28. sect. 1. In case any tenant for life or years, or other person who shall come into possession of any lands, &c. under or by collusion of such tenant, wilfully hold over after the determination of such term, and after demand made in writing, for delivering possession, such person holding over shall pay double the yearly value of the lands, &c. so detained.

Stat. 2. In all cases between landlord and tenant, on half a year's rent in arrear, the landlord having a right by law to re-enter for non-payment, may, without any formal demand or re-entry, serve a declaration in ejectment; and in case of judgment, or nonsuit for not confessing lease, entry and ouster, it shall appear that half a year's rent was due before declaration served, and no sufficient distress to be found, and that the lessor in ejectment had power to re-enter; the lessor in ejectment shall recover judgment and execution, not to bar the right of any mortgagee of such lease, who shall not be in possession, so as such mortgagee, within six calendar months after execution executed, pay all rent in arrear, and costs and damages, and perform all covenants and agreements on the part of the first lessee. Vide the act as to bills in equity.

Stat. 4. If tenant at any time before trial tender or pay into court all arrears with costs, proceedings on ejectment shall cease.

Stat. 5. All persons have like remedy by distress, and impounding and selling the same, in cases of rents-ferm, rents of assize, and chief rents, as in case of rent reserved on lease.

Stat. 10. It shall be lawful for any person lawfully taking any distress for rent to impound or secure the distress on such part of the premises chargeable with the rent as shall be most convenient, and to appraise, sell and dispose of the same on the premises, as any person may now do of the premises, by virtue of 2 Will. & Mar. stat. 1. cap. 5. or of 4 Geo. 2. cap. 28.

Stat. 14. It shall be lawful for the landlord, where the agreement is not by deed, to recover a reasonable satisfaction for the tenements occupied by defendants, in an action on the case for the use and occupation of what was held; and if in evidence on the trial any parol demise, or agreement not by deed, whereon a certain rent was reserved, shall appear, plaintiff may make use thereof as an evidence of the quantum of the damages.

Stat. 15. Where any tenant for life dies before or on the day, on which any rent was reserved on any demise which determined on the death of such tenant for life, the executors or administrators of such tenant for life may in an action on the case recover of the under-tenants, if such tenant for life die on the day on which the same was made payable, the whole; or if before such a day, then a proportion, of such rent, according to the time such tenant for life lived of the last year or quarter, or other time, in which the rent was growing due, making all just allowances.

Stat. 16. If any tenant holding tenements at a rack-rent, or where the rent reserved be full three fourths of the yearly value of the premises, who shall be in arrear for one year's rent, desert the premises, and leave the same uncultivated or unoccupied, so as no sufficient distress can be had to countervail the arrears; it shall be lawful for two justices of peace (having no interest in the premises) to go up and view the same, and to affix on the most notorious part notice in writing, what day (at the distance of fourteen days at least) they will return to take a second view; and if on such second view the tenant, or some person on his behalf, shall not appear and pay the rent in arrear, or there shall not be sufficient distress on the premises, the justices may put the landlord in possession, and the lease to such tenants, as to any demise therein contained only, shall become void.

Stat. 18. In case any tenant give notice of his intention to quit, and shall not accordingly deliver up the possession at the time in such notice contained, the tenant, his executors or administrators, shall pay to the landlord double the rent which he should otherwise have paid.

Stat. 21. In actions of trespass, or on the case, brought against persons intitled to rents or services, their bailiffs or receivers, or other persons, relating to an entry on the premises chargeable with such rents or services, or to any distress or seizure, sale or disposal, of any goods thereupon, it shall be lawful for defendants to plead the general issue; and in case plaintiffs become nonsuit, &c. defendant shall recover double costs.

By Stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. sect. 10. Tenants shall not be prejudiced by payment of rent to a grantor before notice of the grant. And by stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 52. sect. 42. Arrears of rent due from farmers of revenue are excepted out of the general pardon.

3. Of recovering and demanding rent, and in what cases a demand is necessary.

Here the material difference is between a remedy by re-entry, and a remedy by distress, for non-payment of the rent; for where the remedy is by way of re-entry for non-payment, there must be an actual demand made previous to the entry, otherwise it is tortious; because such condition of re-entry is in derogation of the grant, and the estate at law being once defeated is not to be restored by any subsequent payment; and it is presumed that the tenant is there residing on the premises in order to pay the rent for preservation of his estate, unless the contrary appears by the lessor's being there to demand it; therefore unless there be a demand made, and the tenant thereby, contrary to the presumption, appears not to be on the land ready to pay the rent, the law will not give the lessor the benefit of re-entry, to defeat the tenant's estate, without a wilful default in him; which cannot appear without a demand hath been actually made on the land. Co. Lit. 201. 3. Hob. 207, 331. 5 Co. 56. Dy. 51. Flow. 70. 7 Co. 15. Fench. 32.

So if there had been a written lease given to lessor for non-payment, the lessor must demand the rent before he can be intitled to the penalty; or if the lease had been,

been, that if the rent were behind, that the estate of the lessee should cease, and be voided; in these cases there must be an actual demand made, because the presumption is, that the lessee is attendant on the land to save his penalty and preserve his estate, therefore shall not be punished without a wilful default; and that cannot be made appear without a demand be proved, and that it was not answered; and the demand in these cases must be made at the day prefixed for payment, and alleged expressly to have been made in the pleading. Hutt. 114, Hob. 207, 331. 7 Co. 56.

But where the remedy for recovery of rent is by distress, there needs no demand previous to the distress; tho' the deed says, that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded, that the lessor may distress, but the lessor, notwithstanding such clause may distress when the rent becomes due. So it is, if a rent-charge be granted to A. and if it be behind, being lawfully demanded, that then A. shall distress; he may distress without any previous demand, because this remedy is not in destruction of the estate, for the distress is only a pledge for payment of it, and taking of distress is a legal demand of the tenant to pay the rent, which was all that was required by the deed; and the tenant is not injured by the taking of the distress, because on tender of the rent the pledges are immediately to be restored, or a writ of detinue lies after the quantum of the rent has been settled in a replevin; whereas in the case of re-entry or of the penalty, the tenant is really injured either by loss of his estate, or the payment of a greater sum than the rent, which cannot be restored on payment of the rent; therefore he shall not be punished in such cases without a wilful default in him, which cannot otherwise appear than by the proof of a demand, which was not answered by the tenant. Hob. 207. Hutt. 13, 23. Moor 883. 2 Rol. Abr. 426.

But this general distinction must be understood with these restrictions.

That if the King makes a lease, reserving rent with a clause of re-entry for non-payment, he is not obliged to make any demand previous to his re-entry, but the tenant is obliged to pay his rent for the preservation of his estate, because it is beneath the King to attend his subject to demand his rent. 5 Co. 56. 4 Co. 73. Latch 28. Moor 152. Dyer 87, 88.

But this exception is not to be extended to the dutchy lands tho' they be in the hands of the King, for the King must make a demand before he can re-enter into such lands; but this is by the H. 4. which provides, that, when the dutchy lands come to the King, they shall not be under such government and regulations as the demesnes and possessions belonging to the crown. Moor 149, 160.

So if a prebend make a lease, reserving rent, and if the rent be arrear and demanded, that it should be lawful for the prebend to re-enter; if the reversion in this case comes to the King the King must in this case demand the rent, tho' he shall be by his prerogative excused of an implied demand; for the implied demand is the act of the law, the other, the express agreement of the parties, which the King's prerogative shall not defeat; therefore in case of the King, if he makes a lease, reserving rent, with a proviso, that if the rent be in arrear for such a time (being lawfully demanded, or demanded in due form), that then the lease shall be void; it seems that not only the patentee of the reversion in this case, but also the King himself, whilst he continues the reversion in his own hands, is obliged to make an actual demand by reason of the express agreement for that purpose. Dyer 87, 280.

But if the King, in cases where he need not make a demand, assigns over the reversion, the patentee cannot enter for non-payment, without a previous demand, because the privilege is specially annexed to the person of the King. 4 Co. 73. Moor 404. Cro. Eliz. 452. Dyer 87.

Another exception is, where the rent is payable at a place off the land, with a clause that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded, the lessor may distress, or where the clause is, that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded of the person who is to pay it, that then he may distress; in these cases, tho' the remedy be by dis-trass only, yet the grantee cannot distress without a previous demand: because here the distress and demand being not complicate, but different acts, to be performed at different places and times, the demand must be previous to the distress; for distress is an act of grace, not of common right, and therefore must be used in the manner that it is given. Hob. 208. 2 Rol. Abr. 426, Moor 883. Brownl. 171. and vid. Hutt. 23. com'.

But where the clause is no more than that if the rent be behind, being lawfully demanded, (without saying at any place off the land, or of the person of the grantor) that then the grantee may distress, there needs no actual demand, because here the distress and demand is but one complicate act, the one included in the other, and all done at one time and place, viz. on the land; for the distress is in itself a lawful demand, therefore needs no actual demand previous to it; because all that was required by the deed was a lawful demand, which the distress in its own nature is. 2 Rol. Abr. 426. Hob. 208. and see Dyer 348.

And there seems to have been formerly another exception admitted, that where the remedy was by way of entry for non-payment, that yet there needed no demand, if the rent were made payable at any place off the land; because they looked on the money payable off the land to be in nature of a sum in gross, which the tenant had at his own peril undertaken to pay; but this opinion has been intirely exploded, for the place of payment does not change the nature of the service, but it remains in its nature a rent, as much as if it had been made payable on the land; therefore the presumption is, that the tenant was there to pay it, unless it be overthrown by the proof of a demand, and without such demand, and a neglect or refusal, there is no injury to the lessor, consequently the estate of the lessee ought not to be defeated. Plow. 70. 4 Co. 73. Moor 408, 598. Cro. Eliz. 415, 435, 536.

But when the power of re-entry is given to the lessor for non-payment, without any further demand, there it seems that the lessor has undertaken to pay it, whether it be demanded or not; and there can be no presumption in his favour in this case; because, by dispensing with the demand, he has put himself under the necessity of making an actual proof that he was ready to tender and pay the rent. Dyer 68.

There is another exception when the remedy is by distress, and that is, when the tenant was ready on the land to pay the rent at the day, and made a tender of it; there it seems there must be a demand previous to the distress, because where the tenant has shewn himself ready on the day by the tender, he has done all that in reason can be required of him; for it would put the tenant to endless trouble to oblige him every day to make a tender; it being altogether uncertain when the lessor will come for his rent, when he has omitted to receive it the day he appointed by the lease for payment and receipt; wherefore as the lessee must expect the lessor, and be ready to pay it at the day appointed, or else the lessor may distress for it without any demand; so where the lessor has lapsed the day of payment, and was not on the land to receive it, he must give the tenant notice to pay it before he can distress; for the tenant shall be put to no trouble where it appears that he has omitted nothing on his part. Hob. 207. 2 Rol. Abr. 427.

And where the tender was made by tenant on the land at the day, there a demand on the land is sufficient to justify a distress after the day; because the demand in such case is of equal authority with the tender, and by parity of reason the tenant ought to give notice of such demand, as well as the lessor of the tender on the land. Hob. 207.

But if the tenant had tendered the rent on the day to the person of the lessor, and he refused it, it seems by the better opinion, that the lessor cannot distress for that rent, without a demand of the person of the tenant; because the demand ought to be equally notorious to the tenant, as the tender was to the lessor. Hob. 207. 2 Rol. Abr. 427.

So if the services by which the tenant holds be personal, as homage, fealty, &c. the demand must be of the PERSON

PERSON of the tenant, because this service is only performable by the very person of the tenant; therefore a demand, where he is not, would be improper. Hob. 13. Hob. 207.

Again, if the rent be seek, and the tenant be ready at the last instant of the day of payment to pay the rent, and the grantor is not there to receive it, he must afterwards demand it of the person of the tenant on the lands before he can have his assise; because the tenant, by the tender at the day, has done all that was required on his part; and if the grantee might have his assise, after such tender on the day, without a demand of the person, the tenant might be made a disseisor, and damages for the disseisin laid on him, without any wilful default in him; but in the case of a rent-charge, after such tender of the tenant on the land, the grantee may afterwards demand the rent on the land, because he has his remedy by distress, which is no more than a pledge for the rent; and this being to be found and taken of the land, the grantee, need only demand his rent where he can find his remedy, which is on the land; but in this case if the grantee cannot find the tenant on the land to demand the rent, he may, on the next feast on which the rent is payable, demand all the arrears on the land; and if the tenant is not there to pay it, he has failed of his duty, and is guilty of a wilful default, which amounts to a denial; and that denial being a disseisin of the rent, the grantee may have his assise, and by that shall recover the arrears. Cro. Car. 508. 7 Co. 57. Hob. 207. 2 Rol. Abr. 427.

But if there has been neither a tender of the rent, nor a demand of the grantee on the day, there the grantee may afterwards demand the rent on the land; because the tenant having omitted to do his duty by a tender on the day, he is still obliged to answer the legal demands of the grantee, which is well made on the land, because the rent issues thereout; for where there is no tender on the day of payment, the rent is due and payable every day afterwards; therefore a demand in the same manner as the law requires is sufficient; consequently the non-payment, after a demand on the land, is a denial and disseisin, for which the grantee may have his assise. Lit. sect. 233. 7 Co. 57. 2 Rol. Abr. 427.

If a lease be made reserving rent, and a bond given for performance of covenants and payment of the rent, the lessor may sue the bond without demanding the rent. Cro. Eliz. 332. Cro. Car. 76. Hob. 8.

If there be several things demised in one lease, with several reservations, with a clause, that, if the several yearly rents reserved be behind or unpaid in part, or in all, by the space of one month after any of the days on which the same ought to be paid, that then it shall be lawful for the lessor, into such of the premises, whereupon such rents being behind is or are reserved, to re-enter; these are in the nature of distinct demises, and several reservations; consequently there must be distinct demands on each demise to defeat the whole estate demised. Vaugh. 71, 72.

Also as to the necessity of a demand of the rent, there is a difference between a condition and a limitation; for instance, if tenant for life (as the case was by marriage settlement with power to make leases for twenty-one years, so long as the lessee, his executors or assigns shall duly pay the rent reserved) makes a lease pursuant to the power; the tenant is at his peril obliged to pay the rent without any demand of the lessor; because the estate is limited to continue only so long as the rent is paid; therefore for non-performance according to the limitation, the estate must determine; as if an estate be made to a woman dom sola fuerit, this is a word of limitation which determines her estate on marriage. Vaugh. 31, 32.

Note; It seems the better way for the lessor to have a clause of re-entry for non-payment of the rent, than a clause that the lease shall be void for non-payment; because, in the case of a re-entry, a demand by the lessor, and non-payment by the lessee does not avoid the lease; for there must be an actual entry to determine it, to which, as it is said, there must be an actual demand precedent; so that in this case an actual demand does not determine the lease, but only puts it in the power of the lessor to avoid it; and this being discretionary in the lessor, he may either recover the rent by action of debt, and suffer the lease to continue; or after such actual demand he may by entry defeat it. But if the clause be, that for non-payment the lease shall be void, then if the lessor unadvisedly make an actual demand of the rent, and the lessee be not able at that time to pay it, he has thereby actually determined the lease; because there is no re-entry previous to determine an estate already void in itself: Yet even in this case, if the lessor forbears to make an actual demand when the rent is in arrear, he may recover it by action of debt or distress, and so continue the lease, because these remedies, being not in defeasance of the grant, the lessor may pursue without an actual demand; but this observation is to be intended only of a lease for years; for in case of a lease for life, no demand can determine it without actual entry, tho' the clause be, that for non-payment of the rent the lease shall cease, and be void. Hob. 331. 2 Rol. Abr. 429. 2 Mod. 264. 3 Co. 64. See Dyer 87, 88. Noy 145.

4. Of the time of demanding rent, and the place where the demand is to be made.

The time for payment of rent, and consequently for a demand, is such a convenient time before the sun-setting of the last day, as will be sufficient to have the money counted; but if the tenant meet the lessor on the land at any time of the last day of payment, and tender the rent, that is sufficient tender, because the money is to be paid indefinitely on that day, therefore a tender on the day is sufficient. Co. Lit. 202. a. Dalt. 44. Sav. 253. 4 Leon. 171. 1 Saund. 287.

If a lease is made, rendering rent at Michaelmas between the hours of one and five in the afternoon, with a clause of re-entry, and the lessor comes at the day about two in the afternoon, and continues to five, this is sufficient. Cro. Eliz. 15. The demand may be by attorney. 4 Leon. 479. But the power must be special, for such land and of such tenant. Yelv. 37. 1 Brownl. 138. Demand must be proved by witnesses. Dyer 68. Must be made of the precise sum due. 1 Leon. 305. Sav. 121. Mo. 207.

If a lease be made, reserving rent, on condition that if the rent be behind at the day, and ten days after, (being in the mean time demanded) and no distress to be found upon the land, that the lessor may re-enter; if the rent be behind at the day, and ten days after, and a sufficient distress be on the land till the afternoon of the tenth day, and then the lessee takes away his cattle, and the lessor demands the rent at the last hour of the day, and the lessee does not pay it, and there is not any distress on the land; yet the lessor cannot enter, because he made no demand in the mean time between the day of payment and the ten days, which by the clause he was obliged to do. Cro. Eliz. 63.

As to the place of demanding rent, we must observe the difference between a remedy by re-entry and distress; for when the rent is reserved, on condition that if it be behind, that the lessor may re-enter, in such case the demand must be upon THE MOST NOTORIOUS PLACE on the land; therefore if there be a house on the land, the demand must be at the fore-door thereof, because the tenant is presumed to be there residing, and the demand being required to give notice to the tenant that he may not be turned out of possession without a wilful default, such demand ought to be in the place where the end and intention will be best answered. Co. Lit. 153, 201. 2 Rol. Abr. 428.

And it seems the better opinion, that it is not necessary to enter the house, tho' the doors be open, because that is a place appropriated for the peculiar use of the inhabitant, into which no person is permitted to enter without his permission, and it is reasonable that the lessor shall go no further to demand his rent, than the tenant shall be obliged to go, when he is bound to tender it; and a tender by the tenant at the door of the house of the lessor is sufficient, tho' it be open, without entering; therefore by parity of reason a demand by the lessor at the door of the tenant, without entering, is sufficient. Dalt. 59. Co. Lit. 201. 1 And. 17. 3 Leon. 4. and see Cro. Eliz. 15.

But when the demand is only in order for a distress, there it is sufficient, if it be made on any notorious part of the land, because this is only to intitle him to his remedy for his rent; therefore the whole land being equally debtor, and chargeable with the rent, a demand on it, without going to any particular part of it, is sufficient. Co. Lit. 153.

See other cases, on this subject, Co. Lit. 202. Bendl. 59. Cro. Eliz. 324. Cro. Car. 507, 521. Co. Lit. 153. 4 Co. 73. Co. Lit. 201. Cro. Eliz. 462. Mo. 404. Dyer 37. 2 *Rel. Rental, A roll wherein the rents of a manor are written and set down, by which the lord's bailiff collects the same: It contains the lands and tenements let to each tenant, and the names of the tenants, the several rents arising, and for what time, usually a year. Compl. Court Keep. 475.

Rents of Waste, The certain rents of freeholders, and ancient copyholders, so called, because they were officed, and different from others which were uncertain, paid in corn, &c. 2 Inst. 19.

Rents resolute, (Redditus-resoluti.) Are accounted among the fee farm rents, to be sold by 22 Car. 2. c. 6. and are such rents or tenths as were anciently payable to the crown, from the lands of abbies and religious houses; and after their dissolution, notwithstanding the lands were demised to others, yet the rents were still reserved, and made payable again to the crown. Conwell.

Reparations, A tenant for life or years may cut down timber-trees to make reparations, altho' he be not compelled thereto; as where a house is ruinous at the time of the lease made, and the lessee suffers it to fall, he is not bound to rebuild it, and yet if he sell timber for reparations he may justify the same. 1 Inst. 54.

Lessee covenants, That from and after the amendment and reparation of the houses by the lessor, he at his own charges will keep and leave them in repair: In this case the lessee is not obliged to do it, unless the lessor first make good the reparations: And if it be well repaired at first, when the lease began, and after happen to decay; the lessor must first repair, before the lessee is bound to keep it so. 2 Cro. 645.

If one covenant for the reparation of a house, on request of the lessor, and he repair without it; this is no performance of the covenant. 2 Leon. c. 72. See Lease, Covenant, and Waste.

Reparatione facienda, Is a writ which lies in many cases; one whereof is where there are tenants in common or jointenants of a house, &c. which is fallen to decay, and one is willing to repair it, but the others are not: In this case the party willing to repair the same, shall have this writ against the others. F. N. B. 127.

And if a man have a house adjoining to my house, and he suffer his house to lie in decay to the annoyance of my house, I may have a writ against him to repair his house. So if a person have a passage over a bridge, and another ought to repair the bridge, who suffers it to fall to decay. &c. New Nat. Br. 281.

Repeal, (from the Fr. rappeler, i. e. revocatio.) Signifies the same with revoke; as the repealing of a statute is the revoking or disannulling it. Rastal.

It is said a pardon of felony, &c. may be repealed on disproving the suggestions. 1 Keb. 19.

A deed or will may not stand good as to part, and be repealed for the rest. Style 241. And a defendant in a suit cannot repeal or revoke his warrant of attorney, given to an attorney to appear for him, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 452. without first paying his bill.

Repleader, (Replacitare) Is to plead that again which was once pleaded before. Broke.

On an immaterial issue in a cause, repleader may be awarded; and repleader is to be had where the pleading hath not brought the issue in question, which was to be tried: Also if a verdict be given where there was no issue joined, there must be a repleader to bring the matter to trial, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 460.

In debt on a sheriff's bond, for defendant's appearance in B. R. upon the return of the writ, the defendant pleaded that he had appeared secundum, &c. and on this they were at issue; and there being a verdict for plaintiff, a repleader was allowed, because the appearance was not triable by a jury, but by the record. 1 Leon. 90. 3 Nell. Abr. 123.

It was held, that at Common law, a repleader was granted before trial, because a verdict did not cure an immaterial issue; but that now a repleader ought never to be awarded before trial, because the fault in the issue may be helped by the statutes of jeofails: That if a repleader is denied where it should be granted, or converso, it is error; and the judgment in repleader is general, (vic.) Quod partes replacent: They must begin again at the first fault, which occasioned the immaterial issue; if the declaration and the bar, and the replication be all ill, they must begin de novo; but if the bar be good, and the replication ill, they must begin at the replication; and no costs are allowed on either side; and a repleader cannot be awarded after a default. 2 Salk. 579.

Tho' a repleader is allowed after verdict; it has been adjudged not so be awarded after demurrer: (But a repleader hath formerly been granted after demurrer, and likewise after the demurrer argued) and that a repleader can never be awarded after a writ of error; but only after issue joined, &c. Latch 147. 3 Lev. 440. Mod. ca. 102. Replegiare, Is to redeem a thing detained or taken by another, by putting in legal sureties. See Replevin.

Replegiare de averiis, A Writ brought by one whose cattle are distrained, or put in the pound on any cause by another person, on surety given to the sheriff to prosecute or answer the action at law. F. N. B. 68. Reg. Orig. Stat. 7 H. 8. c. 4.

Repleviti, (Plovina from replegiare, to deliver to the owner on pledges.)

1. Of the definition, and of replevin generally.
2. For what things a replevin lies.
3. Of the different kinds of replevins; out of what courts they issue, and of the power and duty of the sheriff.
4. Of the pledges in replevin, and the proceedings against them.
5. Of the original writ, and the Withernam, in replevin.
6. Of the writ of second deliverance, and the writ De proprietate probanda.
7. Of the writ de returno habendo; of returns irrepleviable, and in what manner the sheriff is to return and execute such processes.

1. Of the definition, and of replevin generally.

According to some, a replevin is, a remedy grounded and granted on a distress, being a re-deliverance of the thing distrained, to remain with the first possessor, on security (or pledges) given by him to try the right with the distrainer, and to answer him in a court of law. 1 Inst. 145.

According to others it is bringing the writ called replegiare facias by him who has his cattle or goods distrained by another, and putting in surety to the sheriff, that on delivery of the thing distrained, he will prosecute the action against the distrainer. Co. Lit. 13. s. c. 12. feet. 219.

We read of Causes replegiat, bona repleviti, in a case between the abbot of St. Albans and Gosfray Chiltonwick, 24 Hen. 3.

Goods may be replevied by writ, which is by the Common law, or by placet, which is by Statute law, for the more speedy having again their cattle and goods.

Replevi is also used for bailing a man. Stamdf. Pl. Cor. fol. 72, 74. and Westm. 1. c. 11. § 15. Replegiare is replegiare bona mobilia dato apud praesentem velle sine fide-jussore; sive Anglia brevis per quod bona in repleviti, to to replevy, &c. Voffus de vitulis fermonis, lib. 2. c. 25. See Shene cod. verbo.

Replevin is re-delivering to the owner, (by the sheriff,) his cattle or goods distrained on any cause, on surety that he will pursue the action against him who distrained; and if he pursue it not, or if it be adjudged against him; then he who took the distress shall have it again, and for that purpose may have a writ of retorno habendo. Co. Lit. 145. b. 4 Inst. 139.

Replevin is a writ, and usually granted in cases of distress, and is a MATTER OF RIGHT; so that if a man grants a rent with clause of distress, and grants further, that the distress taken shall be irrepleviseable, yet they may be replevied; for such restraint is against the nature of a distress, and no private person can alter the common course of the law. Co. Lit. 145.

In this writ, or action, both plaintiff and defendant are called ACTORS; the one, i. e. the plaintiff, suing for damages, and the avowant, or defendant, to have a return of the goods or cattle. 2 Bend. 84. Cro. Eliz. 799. 2 Mod. 149.

That the avowant is in nature of a plaintiff, appears, 1st, from his being called an actor, which is a term in the Civil law, and signifies plaintiff; 2dly, from his being being intitled to have judgment de retorno habendo, and damages as plaintiff; 3dly, from this, that plaintiff may plead in abatement of the avowry, consequently such avowry must be in nature of an action. Carth. 122. 6 Mod. 103. Yelv. 148.

The avowant being in nature of a plaintiff, need not aver his avowry with an hoc paratus est verificare, more than any other plaintiff need aver his count. Plow. 263.

Nor shall have a protection cast for him more than any other plaintiff. 2 Inst. 339.

But tho' an avowry be in nature of an action, yet one tenant in common may avow for taking cattle damage feasant. Cro. Eliz. 530.

Replevin is an action founded on the right, and different from trespass. Carth. 74. Yelv. 148. Hob. 16. Cro. Eliz. 799.

It is now held, that as no lands can be recovered in this action, it cannot with any propriety be considered as a real action, tho' the title of lands may incidently come in question, as it may do in an action of trespass, or even of debt, which are actions merely personal. Finch's law 316. and see Comb. 476. Fitzg. 109.

2. For what things a replevin lies.

It is a general rule, that plaintiff ought to have the property of the goods in him at the time of the taking: Not only a general property which every owner hath, but also a special property, such as a person hath who hath goods pledged with him, or who hath the cattle of another to manure his lands, &c. is sufficient to maintain a replevin, and in such cases either party may bring a replevin. Co. Lit. 145. Winch 26.

A replevin doth not lie of things which are ferre nature, as conies, hares, monkeys, dogs, &c. but if things wild by nature are made tame, or are reclaimed, so long as they continue in that condition, they belong to the person who hath the possession of them, and he may bring replevin; and the general rule herein seems to be, that a REPLEVIN LIES FOR ANY THING THAT MAY BY LAW BE DISTRAINED. 2 Rol. Abr. 430. Godb. 124.

A replevin lies of a leveret; for it has animum revertendi; for the same reason it lies of a ferret; but it is said not to lie for a mastiff dog, tho' an action of trespass will. Br. Repl. 64. 2 Rol. Abr. 430.

Replevin lies of a swarm of bees. F. N. B. 68.

But not of trees, or timber growing; nor of things annexed to the freehold, because such things cannot be distrained; yet replevin lies of certain iron belonging to the party's mill. F. N. B. 68.

So replevin doth not lie of deeds or charters concerning lands; for they are of no value, but as they relate thereto. Br. Repl. 34.

Nor of money, or leather made into shoes. Moor 394. 2 Brownl. 139.

If a mare in foal, a cow in calf, &c. are distrained, and they happen to bring forth their young, whilst they are in the custody of the distrainer, a replevin lies for the foal, calf, &c. Bro. Repl. 41. F. N. B. 69. 1 Sid. 82.

Replevin lies for a ship; so for the sails of the ship. March 110. Raym. 232. Per Pollenfen Ch. J. replevin lies not for goods taken beyond sea, tho' brought hither by defendant afterwards. 1 Show. 91.

3. Of the different kinds of replevins; out of what courts they issue, and of the power and duty of the sheriff.

Replevin may be made either by original writ of replevin at Common law, or by plaint by the stat. of Marl. c. 21. Co. Lit. 145. F. N. B. 69.

By this stat. enacted 52 H. 3. it is provided, "That if the beasts of any person be taken, and wrongfully withholden, the sheriff, after complaint made to him thereof, may deliver them without let or gainsaying of him that took the beasts, if they were taken out of liberties; and if the beasts were taken within any liberties, and the bailiff of the liberty will not deliver them, then the sheriff for default of those bailiffs shall cause them to be delivered."

The mischiefs before this act were the great delay and loss the party was at, by having his beasts or goods withholden from him; as also that when cattle were distrained and impounded within any liberty which had return of writs, the sheriff was obliged to make a warrant to the bailiff of the liberty to make deliverance; and there was another mischief when the distress was taken without and impounded within the liberty. 2 Inst. 139. 13 Co. 31. To remedy which,

By this statute the sheriff, on plaint made to him without writ, may either by parol or precept command his bailiff to deliver the beasts or goods, that is, to make replevin of them, and by these words (post querimoniam sibi factam) the sheriff may take a plaint out of the county court, and make a replevin presently, which he is to enter in the court, as it would be inconvenient, and against the scope of the statute that the owner, for whose benefit the statute was made, should tarry for his beasts till the next county court, which is holden from month to month. And by this act the sheriff may hold plea in the county court on replevin by plaint, tho' the value be of 20 l. or above; and yet in other actions he shall hold plea where the matter is under 40 s. value. 2 Inst. 139. 1 Keb. 205. Dalt. Sb. 430.

By the words of this law, Si averia capiant, vicecomes post querimoniam sibi factam deliberare possit; so that it becomes the sheriff's duty on such complaint, by parol or by precept to his bailiff, to replevy them, which precept may be given before any county court; but such plaint is afterwards to be entered, and (as holden in Cum.) by the party who made the complaint, and not by the sheriff. Cum. 591.

Replevins by writ issue properly out of the courts of K. B. and C. B. at Westminster, and are returnable into such courts. Dyer 246.

Replevins by plaint are made by the sheriff by force of the above-mentioned statute of Marle. by which he is directed, on complaint made to him by the party, that his goods or cattle are distrained, to command his bailiff (which may be by parol or precept) to make deliverance; and which plaint may be taken at any time, and as well out of, as in court. Br. Repl. pl. 4. Co. Lit. 145. 2 Inst. 139.

Also it hath been agreed, that the hundred court, and courts of lords of manors, may by prescription hold plea in replevin, so may incidently have power to replevy goods or cattle; but that, it seems, must be by process of the court after a plaint entered, but not by parol complaint out of court. Carth. 380.

Therefore where in trespass for taking goods, &c. defendant justified that the place where, &c. was a hundred, and time out of mind had a court of all actions, replevins, &c. grantable in or out of court, averia impia, &c. The question was, if good or not? And the reason of the doubt was, because the county court could not hold plea in replevin.

plevin at Common law; but were enabled by the statute of Marlebridge, which extends not to the hundred court, which is a court derived out of the county court; but per cur. clearly, Supposing they may grant them in court, yet they cannot prescribe to grant them out of court. 2 Salk. 580. 5 Mod. 252. Skin. 674. Carth. 380. 1 Ld. Raym. 219.

The sheriff is obliged to grant replevin in all such cases as they are allowed by law; and the officer, who takes the goods by virtue of a replevin issuing for what cause soever, is not liable to an action of trespass, unless the party in whose possession the goods were, claims property in them; and note, that in all cases of misbehaviour by the sheriff or other officers, in relation to replevins; they are subject to the controul of the King's superior courts, and punishable by attachment for such misbehaviour. Carth. 381.

And tho' the sheriff may grant replevins by plaint, and may proceed thereon in his county court, yet if any thing touching freehold come in question, or ancient demesne be pleaded, the sheriff can proceed no further; nor can any such proceedings be carried in the hundred court, court baron, or any other court claiming a jurisdiction herein by prescription. 4 H. 6. 30. 2 H. 7. 6. Co. Lit. 145.

So when the King is party, or the taking is in right of the crown, in these cases the sheriff is to surcease. Bro. Repl. pl. 3. 1 Brownl. 53.

It was ruled in the case of one Bradshaw, that where an act of parliament orders a distress and sale of goods, this is in nature of an execution, and replevin does not lie; but if the sheriff grants one, yet it is not such a contempt as to grant an attachment against him; and Powell Justice said, He remembered a case in the Exchequer, where a distress was taken for a fee-farm rent due to the King, yet on debate no attachment was granted, tho' it was in the King's case. Trin. 12 W. 3. in C. B. Bradshaw's case. See 14 Car. 2. c. 12.

And for the great ease in bringing replevins, and as a duty incumbent on the sheriff, it is enacted, by the 1st and 2d of Ph. & Mar. c. 18. "That the sheriff shall at his first county day, or within two months after he receives the patent, depute and proclaim in the shire town four deputies to make replevins, not dwelling 12 miles distant from one another, in pain to forfeit for every month he wants such deputy or deputies 5 l. to be divided between the King and the prosecutor."

4. Of the pledges in replevin, and the proceedings against them.

When the sheriff makes replevin, he ought to take two kinds of pledges; plegii de proseguendo, by the Common law, and plegii de retorno habendo, by the statute of Westm. 2. c. 2. by which it is provided, "That sheriffs or bailiffs from thenceforth shall not only receive of plaintiff pledges for pursuing the suit, before they make deliverance of the distress, but also for return of the beasts, if return be awarded; and if any take pledges otherwise, he shall answer for the price of the beasts, and the lord that distrains shall have his recovery by writ, that he shall restore to him so many beasts or cattle; and if the plaintiff be not able to restore, his superior shall restore."

• In the construction hereof the following cases have been ruled, and opinions holden:

That if the sheriff returns insufficient pledges, he shall answer according to the statute; for insufficient pledges are no pledges in law; and such pledges must not only be sufficient in estate, viz. capable to answer in value, but likewise sufficient in law, and under no incapacity; therefore infants, feme-coverts, persons outlawed, &c. are not to be taken as pledges, nor are persons politick, or bodies corporate. Co. Lit. 145. 2 Id. 346. 10 Co. 102.

In replevin the sheriff does not return any pledges, and after issue joined and found, it was moved, if they could be put in by the court after verdict; and the court held they might, notwithstanding the statute of Westm. 2. as before that statute the court might take pledges on the omission of the sheriff, and a diversity was taken between pledges for prosecuting which were at Common law, and pro retorno habendo given by this statute; and the court held, that tho' on default of the sheriff he was subject to the action of the party, that yet the taking of pledges by the court did not make the judgment erroneous. Noy 156.

A replevin by plaint was sued in the sheriff's court in London, and pledges were found de retorno habendo fi, &c. this plaint was removed according to their custom into the mayor's court, and after into the King's Bench by certiorari, and thereoyer of the certiorari being demanded, the party declared in B. R. on this a return was awarded, and on an elongat returned, a scire facias went against the pledges in the sheriff's court of London. On demurrer the question was, whether this case being removed by certiorari; the pledges in the inferior court are discharged, or whether they remain liable to be charged by this scire facias? It was adjudged, that the pledges were not discharged. Skin. 244. 2 Shew. 421. Comb. 1, 2. 3. Mod. 56. S. C.

Plaintiff declared, that he distrained for 7 l. 10 s. rent, reserved on a lease, and that defendant delivered the cattle without taking pledges; to which defendant pleaded, that plaintiff in replevin delivered to him 3 l. 10 s. for pledges, which he accepted; and on demurrer the court held, that pledges being to be found to answer the party, if he had good cause of avowry, and to be answerable for enforcement to the King, if nonsuited, or if it be found against him; the taking of money, or a pledge was not lawful; and that altho' he might take money for pledges, yet he ought not to accept less than plaintiff's demands; on which account the court likewise held the plea vicious; but they agreed, that if the mayor had taken but one pledge, (if he had been sufficient) it had been well enough. Exo. Car. 446. 1 Jon. 378.

But it hath been adjudged, that a bond taken by the sheriff, conditioned that if the party applying for the replevin should appear at the next county court, &c. and prosecute his action with effect, and should make return of the thing replevied, if return should be adjudged, and save the sheriff harmless, &c. was good in law, and agreeable to the intent of the statute of Marlebr. which requires pledges or sureties, of which nature the obligors are; and this method of taking bond instead of pledges was said to be of ancient usage; and that in the old books plegi signified the same as sureties; and that there being a proper remedy on such bond, it differed from the case of taking a deposit or sum of money; but the court agreed, that at Common law this bond had been void; because it had been to save the sheriff harmless in making replevin by plaint, which he could not have done before the statute of Marlebr. 1 Ld. Raym. 278. 2 Lutw. 686.

If in replevin in an inferior court, the condition of the bond is, if he prosecute his suit commenced with effect in the court of, &c. and make return, &c. if a return be adjudged by law, and it happens, that the plaintiff hath judgment in the court below, which is afterwards reversed on a writ of error in B. R. in such case, unless the party make a return, he forfeits his bond; for tho' he had judgment in the court below, yet the words, if he prosecute his suit commenced, &c. extend to the prosecution of the writ of error, which is part of the suit commenced in the court below; and in this case, the taking such bond was held to be lawful; and said to be common practice. Carth. 248. 1 Shew. 400. Fitzg. 158.

In debt on a replevin bond taken by the sheriff, conditioned that if C. B. appear at the next county court, and prosecute with effect for taking, &c. and make return, &c. if return be adjudged, and save harmless the sheriff, &c. then, &c. defendant afteroyer pleaded, that at the next county court, nil est ver. he did appear, and prosecuted, &c. until it was removed by recordari, and did save the sheriff harmless, but doth not say, that no return was adjudged; on demurrer the court inclined for plaintiff; for defendant should have said, that return was adjudged at all; and tho' he prosecuted to the scire facias, yet return habendo might be adjudged afterwards; and the condition goes to any adjudication of return, Comb. 228.

But

An action was brought on a bond in replevin to prosecute his suit with effect, and also to make return, &c. defendant pleaded, that E. G. did levy a plaint in replevin in the court before the steward of Westminster, and that afterwards, and before the suit was determined, viz. such a day, &c. E. G. died per quod the suit abated; plaintiff replied, quod bene & verum est, that E. G. levied such a plaint against the defendant, who immediately afterwards exhibited an English bill in the Exchequer against plaintiff in that suit, and by injunction hindered the proceedings below until such a day, &c. on which E. G. died; so that he did not prosecute his suit with effect: on demurrer to this replication the defendant had judgment; for per Holt, This was a prosecution with effect, because there was neither a nonsuit or verdict against E. G. Carth. 519.

In action on a replevin bond common bail shall be filed. 1 Salk. 99.

There are two sorts of pledges, plegii de proseguendo, and plegii de returno habendo; the pledges of prosecuting were at Common law, but those de returno habendo were appointed by Westm. 2. cap. 2. by which statute an action lies against the sheriff, if he omits to take pledges, or if he takes those that are insufficient; for the party may have a scire facias against the pledges, where the suit is in any court of record; and tho' in the county-court, &c. a scire facias will not lie against the pledges, because these are not courts of record, and every scire facias ought to be grounded on a record, yet there the party may have a precept in nature of a scire facias against the pledges. 1 Ld. Raym. 278. See Comb. 1, 2. Cum. 593.

An action on the case was brought against a sheriff for taking insufficient pledges on a replevin; to which he pleaded not guilty, and a verdict being found against him, and judgment given thereon in the court of C. B. on a writ of error brought in B. R. it was objected, first, That an action on the case was not the proper remedy; 2dly, Supposing such action lay, that there ought to have been a scire facias first sued out against the pledges. As to the first, the court held, that the party distraining has by the statute of Westminster 2. an interest in the pledges, and if the sheriff omits to take such, or which is the same thing, takes insufficient ones, he is aggrieved, and consequently intitled to his action. 3dly, That tho' a scire facias may be brought against the pledges, yet it does not follow from thence, that an action does not lie against the sheriff; and such scire facias, which is only to certify the sufficiency of the pledges, is the less necessary in the present case, such insufficiency being set forth in the declaration, and found by the verdict. Mich. 12 Geo. 2. Rouje v. Patterson in B. R.

And for the greater security of persons distraining for rent, it is enacted by stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. sect. 23. That officers having authority to grant replevins, shall in every replevin of a distress for rent take in their own names, from plaintiff and two sureties, a bond in double the value of the goods distrained, (such value to be ascertained by the oath of one or more witnesses not interested, which oath the person granting such replevin is to administer) conditioned for prosecuting the suit with effect without delay, and for returning the goods, in case a return shall be awarded, before any deliverance be made of the distress; and such officer taking such bond, shall, at the request and costs of the avowant, or person making conscience, assign such bond to the avowant, &c. by indorsing the same, and attesting it under his hand and seal in the presence of two witnesses, which may be done without stamp, provided the assignment be stamped before any action brought thereon; and if the bond be forfeited, the avowant, &c. may bring an action thereupon in his own name, and the court may by rule give such relief to the parties on such bond, as may be agreeable to justice; and such rule shall have the effect of a DEFEASANCE.

5. Of the original writ, and of the writbern in replevin.

The original writ of replevin issues out of Chancery, and neither it nor the alias replevin are returnable, but are only in nature of a justices to empower the sheriff to hold plea in his county court, when a day is given the parties;

but the pluries replevin is always with this clause vel causam nobis significes, and it is a returnable process. F. N. B. 69, 70. Doct. pl. 313, 314. 2 Inst. 139. Salk. 410. it is usual to take out the alias and pluries at the same time. Dalt. Sh. 273.

A pluries replevin returned in Michaelmas term, the defendant claimed property, and after nothing done, nor any appearance nor continuance till Easter term following, at which term they appeared and pleaded, and judgment was thereupon given; tho' no continuance was between Michaelmas and Easter, yet this was not any discontinuance, because there is not any continuance till appearance; for the parties have not any express day in court, and where there is not any continuance, there cannot be any discontinuance. 1 Roll. Abr. 485.

The pluries replevin supercedes the proceedings of the sheriff, and the proceedings are on that, and not on the plaint, as they are when that is removed by recordari, and tho' there is no summons in the writ, yet it gives a good day to defendant to appear; and if he does not appear, then a pone issues, and then a capias. 1 Ld. Raym. 617.

Capias and process of outlawry lies in replevin; for when on the pluries replegiari fac' the sheriff returns averia elongata, then a capias in writbern issues, and on that being returned nulla bona, a capias issues, and so to outlawry. Capias and process of outlawry in replevin were given by 25 Ed. 3. 17. 6 Mod. 84.

If on the pluries replevin the sheriff return, that the cattle are eloiigned to places unknown, &c. so that he cannot deliver them to plaintiff, then shall issue a writbern directed to the sheriff, commanding him to take the cattle or goods of defendant, and detain them till the cattle or goods distrained are restored to plaintiff; and if on the first writbern a nihil be returned, there an alias and pluries replevin issue, and so to a capias and exigent. F. N. B. 73.

The writ of writbern ought to rehearse the cause which the sheriff returns, for which he cannot replevy the cattle or goods; so that it does not lie on a bare suggestion, that the beasts are eloiigned, &c. F. N. B. 69, 73.

If on the writbern the cattle are restored to the party who eloiigned them, yet he shall pay a fine for his contempt. 2 Leon. 174.

Cattle taken in writbern may be worked, or if cows, may be milked; for the party has them in lieu of his own. 1 Leon. 220. Dyer 280.

And as the party is to have the use of the cattle, he is not to have any allowance made him for the expences he has been at in maintaining them. Owen 46. Cro. Eliz. 162. 3 Leon. 235.

Scire facias against an executor, reciting, that where replevin was brought against testator for a cow, and judgment against him de returno habendo, which was not executed, that he should shew cause why he should not have execution. The executor pleads plene administ'avit, upon which plaintiff demurred; and Wyld justice said, that upon the judgment the cow is in the custody of the law, therefore he ought to have execution; but the doubt is, because the replevin is determined by the death of the party; yet (by him and Rainsford, being only in court,) plaintiff shall have execution, for defendant cannot be prejudiced; for if the sheriff return averia elongata, he shall not have a writbern, but of the goods of the testator; or if there are no goods of the testator, the sheriff can take nothing, but shall return nulla bona, and then plaintiff hath his ordinary way to charge defendant, if he hath made a devastavit; and it was adjudged for plaintiff. Pasch. 27 Car 2. in B. R. Suckley v. Green.

W. sues a replevin, H. removes it by recordari into the King's Bench, plaintiff does not declare, and on that a return awarded to H. upon which the sheriff returns averia elongata, and then a writbern was awarded and executed; and now plaintiff comes and prays he may be admitted to declare, and prays a deliverance of the writbern; and it was testified by the clerks, that on plaintiff's submission to a fine for not declaring, and that being imposed on him by the judges, he shall have deliverance of the writbern; and a fine of 3s. 4d. being accordingly imposed on plaintiff, he then declared, and had deliverance.

ance. Noy 50. The course of B. R. is contrary to that of C. B.

If on an elongata returned, the sheriff's cattle are taken in withernam, yet on the defendant's appearance, and pleading non cepit, or claiming property, defendant shall have his cattle again; and if they are eloiigned, a withernam against plaintiff; for if the property or taking be in question, there is no reason that plaintiff should have defendant's cattle. 1 Ld. Raym. 614.

The withernam is but MANS PROCESS, and cannot be on execution, because it is granted before judgment. 1 Ld. Raym. 614. and see Comb. 201. Salk. 582.

6. Of the writ of second deliverance, and the writ De proprietate probanda.

At Common law, if plaintiff in replevin had been nonsuited either before or after verdict, defendant who distrained should have had return, but not irreplevisable; so as plaintiff after nonsuit might have had as many replevins as he would, which was vexatious and mischievous; for remedy whereof the act of Westm. 2. cap. 2. restrains plaintiff from any more replevins after nonsuit, but gives a writ of second deliverance. 2 Inst. 340.

And if in such writ of second deliverance plaintiff be nonsuited, or if the plea be discontinued, or the writ abates, or if he prevails not in his suit, returns irrepleviable shall be granted. 2 Inst. 341.

If defendant in replevin has return awarded on nonsuit of plaintiff, on which he sues a writ de retorno habendo, upon which writ the sheriff returns averia elongata per quarentem, and on this a withernam is awarded, and on the withernam defendant has tot catalla to him delivered of the goods of plaintiff, and thereupon plaintiff sues a second deliverance; he shall sue it for the first distress taken, not for the withernam; and this by the nature and form of the writ of second deliverance. 2 Roll Abr. 435.

If a retorno habendo be awarded to sheriff after a writ of second deliverance prayed by plaintiff, this is a superfedeas to the retorno habendo, and closes the sheriff's hand from making any return thereto; and if the sheriff will not execute the writ of second deliverance, the party has his remedy against him. Dyer 41. Dalt. Sb. 275.

This statute of Westm. 2. gives the writ of second deliverance out of the same court where the first replevin was granted, and a man cannot have it elsewhere; for if he may, then he shall vary from the place limited as to this by the statute. Plowd. 206.

In replevin defendant avowed, that plaintiff being nonsuited brought a writ of second deliverance, whereupon it was moved to stay the writ of inquiry of damages; Et per curiam, This is a superfedeas to the retorno habendo, but not to the writ of inquiry of damages; for these damages are not for the thing avowed for, but are given by 21 H. 8. c. 19. As a compensation for the expense and trouble the avowant has been at. 1 Salk. 95. and like point adjudged, Palm. 403. Latch 72.

Error of a judgment in C. B. in a second deliverance; on demurrer in pleading the error assigned was, because there was not any writ of second deliverance certified, and in nullo est erratum being pleaded, it was moved not to be material, because it is awarded on the roll, and the parties had appeared and pleaded to it; but it was adjudged ill, and reversed for that cause; for there ought to be a writ, and if it vary from the declaration in the replevin, it shall be abated. Cro. Jac. 424.

No second deliverance lies after a judgment on a demurrer, or after verdict, or confession of the avowry; but in all these cases the judgment must be entered with a return irreplevisable; but on a nonsuit, either before or after evidence, a second deliverance will lie, because there is no determination of the matter, and there a writ of second deliverance lies to bring the matter in question; but in the case of demurrer and verdict the matter is determined by confession of the party. 2 Lill. Reg. 457.

If plaintiff's writ abates, he may have a new writ, and is not put to his writ of second deliverance. Cum. 122.

If plaintiff in replevin be nonsuited for want of delivering a declaration, if it happened thro' any cause which would have entitled him to a writ of second deliverance, as sickness of the person employed, &c. the court will order defendant to accept a declaration on payment of costs; otherwise plaintiff would be remediless, the writ of second deliverance being taken away by the 17 Car. 2. c. 7. 1 Fent. 64. See Avowry.

If defendant in replevin claims property, the sheriff cannot proceed; for PROPERTY MUST BE TRIED BY WRIT; and in this case plaintiff may have the writ de propriestate probanda to the sheriff; and if it be found for plaintiff, then the sheriff is to make deliverance; if for defendant, then he is to proceed no further; but as this is but an inquest of office, if it be found against plaintiff, he may have a replevin to the sheriff; and if he return the claim of property, yet shall it proceed in the C. B. where the property shall be put in issue and finally tried. Co. Litt. 145. b. F. N. B. 77. Dier 173. Cum 592.

None but he who is party to the replevin shall have the writ de propriestate probanda; so that if on a replevin the beasts of a stranger are delivered to plaintiff, such stranger being no party to the replevin, shall not have this writ. 14 Hen. 4. 25. 2 Roll. Abr. 431.

The sheriff is to return the claim of property on the pluries, before which time the writ de propriestate probanda does not issue, for it recites the pluries. Reg. 83. Cum. 595.

The writ de propriestate probanda is an inquest of office, and the sheriff is to give notice to the parties of the time and place of executing it. Dalt. Sb. 274.

If defendant claims property in replevin, plaintiff may have the writ de propriestate probanda without continuance of the replevin, tho' it be two or three years after, because by claim of property the first suit is determined. M. or 403.

If the party who hath the cattle claims property, the sheriff cannot determine it without a writ de propriestate probanda; and then if the property be found for the party claiming, it is but an inquest of office, and the party who made the plaint may after sue a writ of replevin, to which property may again be pleaded. 7 H. 4. 46. Cum. 594.

If plaintiff has property, and omits to claim it before the sheriff, he may notwithstanding plead property in himself or in a stranger, either in abatement or in bar, tho' it was formerly held, that property in a stranger could only be pleaded in abatement. Cro. Eliz. 475. Winch. 26. 1 Show. 402. Salk. 5, 94. 6 Mod. 81.

In replevin defendant in his avowry pleads, that the beasts taken belong to a third person, and not to plaintiff, therefore prays a return; to which plaintiff demurs; for on avowant's own shewing he ought not to have return, having admitted the property of the beasts to be in another; but judgment was given for defendant, for the prior possession was in him, and he hath a right against all others but the right owner, and plaintiff by his demurrer hath admitted, that he hath no property in them. Comb. 477. See 6 Mod. 68, 139. And 2 Mod. 242.

7. Of the writ de retorno habendo; of returns irreplevisable, and in what manner the sheriff is to return and execute such process.

The retorno habendo is a judicial writ, which lies for him who has avowed the distress, and proved the same to be lawfully taken; or where on removal of the plaint into the courts above, plaintiff, whose cattle were replevied, makes default, or does not declare or prosecute his action; and thereby becomes nonsuited, &c. and by this writ the sheriff is commanded to make a return of the cattle to defendant in the replevin. 35 Hen. 6. 40. Dyer 280. Co. Litt. 145.

A bailiff who makes conveyance may have judgment of a return, and consequently a writ de retorno habendo grounded on such judgment. Ch. Ent. 59.

The writ de retorno habendo is not a returnable process. 2 Roll. Abr. 431.

If defendant hath a return awarded him, and he sueth a writ de retorno habendo, and the sheriff return on the pluries, quod averia elongata sunt, &c. he shall have a scire facias against the pledges, &c. According to the statute of Westm. 2. and if they have nothing, then they shall have a withernam against plaintiff of plaintiff's own cattle. F. N. B. 172.

Return irreplevifable is a judicial writ directed to the sheriff for the FINAL RESTITUTION or return of cattle unjustly taken by another, and so found by verdict, or after a nonsuit in a second deliverance. 2 Roll. Abr. 434.

If the plea be to the writ, or any other plea be tried by verdict, or judged on demurrer, return irreplevifable shall be awarded, and no new replevin shall be granted, nor any second deliverance by the act of Westm. 2. but only on nonsuit. 2 Inst. 340. Dyer 280.

If on issue joined in replevin plaintiff does not appear on the trial, being called for that purpose, yet return irreplevifable shall not be awarded, as in case of a verdict's being given, but the party may have a writ of second deliverance, as well as if it had been a nonsuit before declaration, or appearance. 3 Leon. 49.

If a man has return irreplevifable, and a beast die in the pound, he may distrain a-new; so if the beast die before judgment. Hob 61.

If return irreplevifable be awarded, the owner of the cattle may offer the arrears; and if defendant refuses to deliver the distress, plaintiff may have detinue, because the distress is only in nature of a pledge. 1 Ld. Raym. 720.

By the statute of Westm. 1. cap. 17. If the party who distrains, conveys the distress into any house, park, castle or other place of strength, and refuses to suffer them to be replevied, the sheriff may take the posse com. and on request and refusal break open such house, castle, &c. and make deliverance; and this was a necessary law so soon after the irregular time of Hen. 3. 2 Inst. 193. 5 Co. 93. Dalt. Sh. 373.

If the sheriff returns, that the beasts are inclosed in a park among savages, or inclosed in a castle, &c. he shall be amerced, and another writ of replevin shall be awarded; for he ought to have taken the posse com. for this was a denial. F. N. B. 257.

If the sheriff return, quod mandavi ballivo libertatis, &c. qui nullum dedit mihi responsum, or that the bailiff will not make deliverance of the cattle, these are not good returns; for by statute of West. 1. the sheriff on such return made to him by the bailiff, ought presently to enter into the franchise, and make deliverance of the cattle taken. F. N. B. 157.

If a man sue a replevin in the county court without writ, and the bailiff return to the sheriff, that he cannot have view of the cattle to deliver them, the sheriff by inquest of office ought to inquire into the truth thereof, and if it be found by a jury, that the cattle are cloigned, &c. the sheriff in the county court may award a withernam to take defendant's cattle; and if the sheriff will not award a withernam, then plaintiff may have a writ out of Chancery directed to the sheriff rehearing the whole matter, commanding him to award a withernam, &c. and he may have an alias, and after a pluries, and an attachment against the sheriff, if he will not execute the King's command F. N. B. 158.

If the sheriff return, quod averia elongata ad loca incognita, this is a good return, and the party must pursue his writ of withernam; but if the sheriff return averia elongata ad loca incognita INFRA COMITATUM MEUM, he shall be amerced, for the law intends that he may have notice in his county. Bro. Retur. de Br. pl. 100.

If in replevin the sheriff return, quod averia mortua sunt, that is a good return. Bro. Retur. de Br. pl. 125.

It is a good return, quod nullus venit ex parte querentis ad demonstranda averia; but it seems the sheriff is not obliged to require this. Dalt. Sh. 556. Allen. 33.

If the sheriff be shewn a stranger's goods, and he takes them, an action of trespass lies against him, for otherwise he could have no remedy; for being a stranger he cannot have the writ de proprietate probanda, and were he not intitled to this remedy, it would be in the power of the sheriff to strip a man's house of all his goods; but Kelw. seems to hold, that the action lies more properly against the person who shews the goods. 2 Roll. Abr. 552. Cum. 596.

The sheriff comes to make replevin of beasts impounded in another man's soil; if the place be inclosed, and has a gate open to the inclosure, he cannot break the inclosure, and enter thereby, when he may enter by the open gate; but if the owner hinders him, so that he cannot go by the open gate for fear of death, he may break the inclosure, and enter there. 20 H. 6. 28. 2 Roll. Abr. 532.

The sheriff is to return, that the cattle are cloigned, or that no person came to shew, &c. or a delivery; but he cannot return, that the defendant non cepit the cattle, because it is supposed in the writ, and is the ground of it, which the sheriff cannot falsify. 1 Ld. Raym. 613. 1 Lutw. 581. See Avoiry, Distress.

A plaint entered in replevin.

A. B. complains against C. D. of his beasts unjustly taken in his house, (or his freehold) in, &c.

Pledges, &c.

Form of a writ of replevin, or replegiare de averiis.

GEORGE the Third, &c. We command you, that A. B. justly and without delay you cause to be replevied to A. B. his beasts which C. D. took, and unjustly detaineth, as is said; and after do you cause justly to be done to him, &c. that we may hear no more clamor for defect of justice, &c.

Replevy. Tenants having their goods taken as a distress for rent, are to replevy them in five days, or they may be appraised and sold, by Stat. 2 W. & M. sess. 1. c. 5.

Where are any goods are sold, if property is claimed in them, and notwithstanding the party doth replevy, trespass will lie, &c. Mod. Caf. 69. 2 Lill. 459.

To replevy is used for the bailing a man. Stat. Westm. 1. c. 11. Vide Homine Replegiando.

Replevish, Signifies to let one to mainprise on surety.

Replication, (replicatio) Is an exception or answer made by plaintiff to defendant's plea: And it is also that which the complainant replies to the defendant's answer in Chancery, &c. West's Symb. par. 2.

The replication is to contain certainty, and not vary from the declaration, but must pursue and maintain the cause of plaintiff's action; otherwise it will be a departure in pleading, and going to another matter. 1 Inst. 304. Tho' as a faulty bar may be made good by the replication; so sometimes a replication is made good by a rejoinder; but if it wants substance, a rejoinder can never help it. 2 Lill. Abr. 462. A replication being entire, and ill in part, is ill in the whole: But if there be three replications, and one is superfluous, and the other two sufficient, and defendant demurs generally, plaintiff may have judgment on those which are sufficient. 1 Saund. 338. 2 Saund. 17.

Where defendant pleads in bar, and plaintiff replies insufficiently; if defendant demurs specially on the replication, and the bar is insufficient, if the action be of such a nature that a title is set forth in the declaration or count, as in a formedon, &c. judgment may be given for plaintiff on the insufficient bar of defendant: And where the title doth not appear till set forth in the replication, and that is insufficient, there judgment shall be had for defendant for the ill replication. Godb. 198. 1 Leon. 75. 3 Nelf. Abr. 133.

If the bar is naught, and the replication likewise, plaintiff shall never have judgment; So if there is a variance between the declaration and the replication, tho' there be a verdict, &c. Hob. 13. Style 356.

Replication concludes either with hoc paratus est verificari, or to the country. In action on a bond to pay all sums expended about certain business, &c. on defendant's pleading he paid all; plaintiff replies that he had not, et hoc paratus, &c. Upon a demurrer it was held plaintiff ought to have concluded to the country; because there is an affirmative and negative, and if he might be be admitted to aver his replication thus, there would be no end in pleading. Keyn. 98.

But where new matter is offered in a replication, plaintiff should aver his plea, so as to give defendant an opportunity to reply. 4 Mod. 285. Lucas, 98.

Replication in criminal cases. See Calveris, and Black. Com. 4 P. 223.

Report, (from the Lat. reportare) is a public relation, or bringing again to memory, of cases judicially adjudged in courts of justice, with the reasons as delivered by the judges. Co. Litt. 293.

There are likewise reports, when the court of Chancery, or other court, refer the trying some case, &c. to a Master of Chancery, or other referee, his certificate therein is called a Report: On which the court makes an absolute order. Pratt's Sols. 67.

A Master in Chancery, having an order of reference, is to issue his summons for the parties to attend him at a certain time and place; when and where they may come with their counsel, clerk or solicitor, to defend themselves, and maintain, or object, against his Report, or certificate, &c. And Masters are to draw their Reports briefly and as succinctly as may be, preserving the matter clearly for the judgment of the court; without recital of the several points of the order of reference, or the debates of counsel before them; unless in cases doubtful, when they may shortly represent the reasons which induce them to what they do. Ibid.

Reports and certificates of Masters in Chancery are to be filed with the register in four days after the making and signing; and to be confirmed by the court, to which exceptions may be made, &c.

None shall take any money for Report of an order, or cause referred to them by any judges, on pain of 5*l.* &c. so as not to prohibit the clerk from taking 1*2d.* for the first, and 2*d.* for every other sheet. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 10. But Masters in Chancery, may take for every Report or certificate, made on an order on hearing of a cause 20*s.* And for any other Report, &c. made on petition or motion 10*s.* And their clerks shall have 5*s.* for writing every Report; by 13 Car. 2. Vide Reference.

A Report by a Master in Chancery, is as a judgment of the court. 1 Wms's Rep. 653.

By a standing order of the court of Chancery, made by the Lords Commissioners in the 4 W. & M. it was directed, That all Reports should be filed within four days after the making, otherwise no decrees or proceedings to be had thereupon; but the Register reporting, that it was sufficient if the Report were filed before any proceedings had thereupon, tho' not done within four days after making, Ed. C. J. King agreed thereto. And the court took it to be well enough, tho' in this case the motion to confirm the report was made the same day that the Report was filed. 2 Wms's Rep. 517.

It is not usual to confirm Reports of Receiver's accounts, per Master of the Rolls. 2 Wms's Rep. 661.

Reposition of the forest, (repolitio foreste), i. e. a putting to) Was a statute whereby certain forest-grounds being made parkland on view, were by a second view put to the forest again. Madox. par. 1.

Repository, (Lat.) A northhouse or place wherein things are kept; also a warehouse. 3 Cr. 55.

Representation, (representatio) is personating another: There is an heir by representation, where a child dies in the life of the grandfather, leaving a son, who shall inherit his grandfather's estate, before the father's brother, &c. Bro. Abr. 103. Also executors represent the person of the testator, to receive money and debts. Co. Litt. 209.

Reprisal, (from the Fr. repris, tho' Black. Com. takes it from repraesentare) signifies to take back or demand a prisoner from the execution, and proceeding of law for the time. Town. & Keyn. Every judge who hath power to order execution, hath power to grant a reprisal, and execution is often made on a reprisal of a man's person. But no prisoner convicted of any felony, on which he cannot have his clergy, at the discretion of the Court may be taken by a reprisal; &c. Black. Com. he may be taken in the sessions; and reprisals are not to be granted unless without the King's express command, and by order of any justice of gaol delivery. Kel. 4. 2 Hawk. P. C. 463; Wood's Inst. 64.

If a woman is condemned for treason or felony, and is found by an inquest or jury of matrons impeached by the sheriff, &c. to be quick with child, execution shall be respited, and the woman reprieved till her delivery; tho' she shall take this favour but once; and cannot save herself by this means from pleading on her arraignments nor from having judgment pronounced against her on conviction. 3 P. C. 198. H. P. C. 278. Finch 478.

Where it is found by a jury of women, that a woman convicted of felony, is with child, some judges have respited her execution till a convenient time, i. e. a month after her delivery, then to be executed, but this is irregular, for she may have a pardon to plead, therefore to be reprieved till the next sessions. 12 Aff. 10. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 368, 369. See Pregnancy, and Black. Com. 4 P. 387.

Reprisal, (reprisale, or reprisalia) is taking one thing in satisfaction for another, derived from the Fr. repris; and is all one in the Common and Civil law.

Hen. IV. enacted, That application be made to the Keeper of the Privy Seal, by persons injured in the loss of shipping at sea, contrary to treaties, &c. on evidence shown, he shall sign letters of request to demand restitution and reparation; which if not made in convenient time, the Lord Chancellor is to grant letters of reprisal, to obtain the same by force, and for the indemnity of the persons interested: And this is confirmed by the Stat. 4 H. 5. c. 7.

Reprisals are ordinary and extraordinary; ordinary reprisals are to arrest and take the goods of merchant strangers within the realm; and the other is for satisfaction out of the realm, and is under the Great Seal, &c. Len Mon. 120.

If any person be killed, wounded, spoiled, or any ways damaged in a hostile manner, in the territories of any potentate, to whom letters of request are transmitted, and no satisfaction be made, there is no necessity to resort to the ordinary prosecution, but letters of reprisal issue forth; and the Prince against whom the same are issued, is obliged to make satisfaction out of the estates of the persons committing the injuries; and in case of a deficiency there, it will then be adjudged a common debt on his country. But where misfortunes happen to persons, or their goods, residing in a foreign country in time of war, reprisals are not to be granted: In this case they must be contented to sit down under the loss, for they are at their liberty to relinquish the place on the approach of the enemy, when they foresee the country is subject to spoil; and if they continue, they must partake of the common calamity. Lex Mercat. or Merch. Customs 174. 175.

Reprisals may be granted on illegal prosecutions abroad; where wrong judgment is given in matters not doubtful, which might have been redressed either by the ordinary or extraordinary power of the country or place, and which was apparently denied, &c. See Letters of Marque, and Black. Com. 1 P. 258. And as to Reprisal of Goods, see Reprisals, and Black. Com. 3 P. 4.

Requies, (Fr. requiescens, or a taking back) is used for deductions and payments out of a manor or lands, as rent-charges, annuities, &c. Therefore when we speak of the clear yearly value of a manor or estate or land, we say it is so much per annum ante requies, besides all requies.

A proviso good in the commencement may by consequence become repugnant, as grant of rent by deed for life, provided that it shall not charge his person; the proviso is good, but if the rent be arrear, and the grantee die, his executors shall charge the person of the grantor in debt; for otherwise they be remediless; and so 'tis now repugnant, by consequence void. 6 Rep. 41. 3. See Black. Com. 2 P. 156.

Reputation, (reputatio) Is defined by Sir Edw. Coke to be vulgaris opinio solita et vitiosa; and he tells us, that vulgaris opinio est duplex, viz. Una orta inter graves & discretos & quæ vulgum veritatis habet; altera orta inter leves & vulgares homines absque specie veritatis. 4 Rep. 104. That is not reputation which this or that man says; but that which generally hath been, and many men have said or thought. 1 Loh. 15.

A little time is sufficient for gaining Reputation, which needs not a very ancient pedigree to establish it; for general acceptance will produce a Reputation. 2 Cro. 308. But it has been held, that common Reputation cannot be intended of an opinion which is conceived of four or five years standing; but of long time. 2 Lill. Abr. 464. And some special matter must be averred to induce a Reputation. Ibid.

Reputation of Name, Is under the protection of the law, as all persons have an interest in their good name; and scandal and defamation are injurious to it; tho' defamatory words are not actionable, otherwise than as they are a damage to the estate of the person injured. Will. 3. 37.

The security of Reputation or good name from the arts of detraction and slander, are rights to which every man is intitled, by reason and natural justice; Right without which it is impossible to have the perfect enjoyment of any other advantage or right. Black. Com. 1 P. 134.

Request, q' things se de done: Where one is to do a collateral thing, agreed on making a contract, there ought to be a request to do it. 2 Lill. Abr. 464. If a duty is due, it is payable without request; on promise to pay a duty precedent on request, there needs no actual request; but on a promise for a penalty or collateral sum, there should be an actual request before the action is brought. Cr. Eliz. 74. 1 Sams. 33. 1 Loh. 289.

If a debt is before a promise, a request is not necessary, for then a request is not any cause of the action; tho' a promise generally to pay on request, the action lies on request, and not before. Cr. Jac. 201. 1 Loh. 28.

Action of debt, for money due on a bond, may be brought without alledging a special request; and if the action is for debt, not appointed to be paid on request, there needs no special request to be laid in the declaration; otherwise if it is of a thing collateral. Cr. Eliz. 129. 523.

A man promises to re-deliver on request, such goods as were delivered to him; if an action of detinue is brought, plaintiff need not alledge a special request, because the action is for the thing itself. But if an action of the case is had for these goods, then the request must be specially alledged; as it is not brought for the thing itself, but for damages. Sid. 66. 3 Salk. 309.

If a promise is made to pay money to plaintiff on request, no special request is required; But where there are mutual promises between two persons to pay each other money on request, if they do not perform such an award, the request is to be specially alledged. And if there is a promise to pay money to a man on request, and he dies before any request made, it shall be paid to his executors; but not till request made. 3 Salk. 309. 3 Buss. 259.

When a person promises to pay a precedent duty, the general allegation hinc sequitur request is sufficient, because there was a duty without a promise: As for instance; If one buys or borrows a horse, and promises to pay so much on Request: But where the promise is collateral, as to pay the debt of a stranger on Request, &c. the Request is part of the agreement, and traversable, there being no duty before the promise made; and for that reason the Request must be specially alledged, for bringing the action will not be a sufficient Request. Lamb 93. 3 Loh. 260. 1 Sams. 35. 3 Salk. 308.

If a debt or duty arises either on bond or contract, hinc sequitur request is good; contra where it becomes a duty by the Request itself, when it is to be alledged specially. 3 Nels. Abr. 144.

It has been adjudged, that where the thing is a duty before any request made, a Request is only alledged to aggravate damages, and such Request is not traversable; but if the Request makes the duty, as in assumpsit to do such a thing on Request, there the duty, &c. of the Request ought to be alledged, because it is traversable. Palm. 389.

An assumpsit to do a thing on Request, a Request must be alledged; and a special Request must be laid to be made such a day, at such a place; where the duty is not on bond, &c. If a Request is to be specially made, the day and year when made should be specially alledged. 1 Loh. 231. 2 Lill. Abr. 466. Cr. Gar. 280. But where a person is not restrained to make the Request by a time limited, if made at any time during his life, it has been held to be good. Cr. Eliz. 136. And a Request at any other time than named may be given in evidence. Sid. 268.

Defendant pleaded the statute of limitations in an action on a promise to pay so much money on Request, &c. And on demurrer, plaintiff had judgment; for tho' the promise was within the statute, yet the duty was not, being no duty till the request was made, and the action being then brought within time after the breach, it is good. Cr. Gar. 98.

At a trial, defendant would have plaintiff to prove the Request; but it was ruled that he need not; for not being traversed in the plea, it is admitted. 1 Lev. 166.

In a special action on the case for keeping a passage stopp'd up, so that plaintiff could not come and cleanse his gutter, &c. after verdict for plaintiff, it was objected in arrest of judgment, that plaintiff ought to have set forth a Request to defendant to open the passage; and this was held a good objection after demurrer, but not after verdict. 1 Mod. 27.

Unreasonable Requests are not regarded in law; and there is no difference where a thing is to be done on Request, and reasonable Request. Dyer 218. Cr. Gar. 176. 3 Nels. Abr. 140. 142.

Abr. 467.* But rescui is admitted only for them who have estates depending on particular estates for life, tenants by the curtesy, or other possibility, &c. and not for him in remainder after an estate tail, which is perdisseable. 1 And. 133.

Husband and wife were tenants for life, remainder to another in fee; a formosa was brought against the husband, who made default after default; and thereupon the wife prayed that she might be received to defend her right; but it was denied by the court; because if defendant should recover against her husband, it would not bar her right if she survived him, therefore it would be to no purpose. Then he in remainder prayed to be received, which at first the court doubted; by reason if the husband should recover, he might falsify such recovery; and because his estate did not depend on the estate of the husband alone, but on the estate of the husband and wife; but at last he was received. 1 Kent. 46.

The statute of Gloucester enacts, that a tervor may be received to falsify, if he hath a deed, and comes before judgment; this is where he is reversion causes himself to be impleaded, by collusion, to make the tervor lose his term, &c. 6 Ed. 2. cap. 11. And if any stranger come in by a collateral title, before he is received, he shall find surety to satisfy the demandant the value of the lands if he recovers from that time till final judgment; and demandant recovering, he shall be grievously amerced, &c. by Stat. 20 Ed. 1.

1. Of the different kinds of rescues, &c.

If a bailiff, or other officer, on a writ arrest a man, and others by violence take him away, or procure his escape; this is a rescue in viâ. So if one distress another for damage feasant, in his ground, as he drives them in the highway towards the pound, they enter into the owner's house, and he withholds them there, and will not deliver them on demand, this is rescue in viâ. 1 R. 2. c. 11. *Co. Refus is the taking away and taking of liberty against law any distress taken for rent, or services, or damage feasant; but the more general notion of refus is, resistentia proving another from an arrest or legal commitment, which being a high offence, subjects the offender not only to an action at the suit of the party injured, but likewise to fine and imprisonment at the will of the King. *Co. If on a fi. fac. the sheriff returned that he had seized the goods, but that they were rescued by B. and C. Co. Lit. 161. a. Lit. Rep. 106. Hall. 145. Lit. Rep. 106.

If the lord distrain for rent when none is due, the tenant may lawfully make refus; so may a stranger, if his beasts be distrained when no rent is due. So if the tenant distrain the rent when the lord comes to distrain, and yet he does not distrain, or if he distrain any thing not distrainable, as beasts of the plough, when other sufficient distress may be taken, the tenant may make refus; so if the lord distrain in the highway or out of his fee. Co. Lit. 161. a. Lit. Rep. 106. Hall. 145.

But tho' there must be reason for the distress, and that otherwise the rescue cannot be unlawful; yet it hath been held in a parce plein, that defendant cannot justify breaking the pound, and taking out the cattle, tho' the distress was without cause, because they are now in the actual custody of the law. Salt. 247.

There is a difference between a man's being arrested by a warrant on record, and by a general authority in law; for if a capias be awarded to the sheriff to arrest a man for felony, tho' he be innocent, he cannot make rescue; but if a sheriff will by the general authority committed to him by law arrest any man for felony, if he be innocent he may refuse himself. Co. Lit. 161. a. Salt. 247. Co. 68. Co. 11. Cro. Jac. 485.

2. Of the offence of making a rescue, and how the offenders are to be proceeded against, and punished.

It is agreed, that the rescuing a person imprisoned for felony, is also felony by the Common law. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 606.

Also it is agreed, that a stranger who rescues a person committed for, and guilty of high treason, knowing him to be so, is in all cases guilty of high treason. Statute P. C. 11. 1 Jac. 455. Whether he knew that the prisoners were so committed or not. 1 Cro. Car. 583.

To make a rescue felony, it is necessary that the felon be in custody, or under arrest for felony; therefore if A. murder B. at night, whereby the felon escapes, the town-ship shall be amerced for the escape, and A. shall be fined for the hindrance of his taking; but it is not felony in A. to make the felon escape. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 606. 1 B. 2. Coron. 355. Statute 31.

To make a rescue felony, the party rescued must be under custody for felony, or suspicion of felony; and it is all one whether he be in custody for that account by a private person, or by an officer, or warrant of a judge; for where the arrest of a felon is lawful, the rescue by him is felony; but it seems necessary that he should have knowledge that the person is under arrest for felony, if he be in the custody of a private person. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 606.

But if he be in custody of an officer, there, as he will, he is to take notice of it; so if there be felons in a prison, and A. not knowing it, breaks the prison, and lets out the prisoners, tho' he knew not that there were felons there, it is felony. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 606. Cro. Car. 583.

A person committed for high treason, who breaks the prison, and escapes, is guilty of felony, unless he lets others also escape, when he knows he is committed for high treason, in which case he is guilty of high treason, not in respect of his own breaking of prison, but of the rescue of the others. 1 B. 2. P. C. 140.

If the person rescued were indicted or attainted of felony, the rescue is felony, tho' the escape or rescue of such a person is not felony. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 599.

It is agreed, that the imprisonment is so far grounded on necessity, that the breaking of a prison is occasioned by such necessity, that the party himself breaking prison, is not guilty by the Common law, or by the statute De fractura prisonis, saved from the penalty of a capital offender, tender, a stranger who rescues him from such imprisonment is in like manner also excused; 2 Hawk. P. C. 139.

The return of a rescue of a felon, by the sheriff against A. is not sufficient to put him to answer for it as a felony, without indictment or presentment, by the assizes; Ed. 3. c. 4. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 606.

As in case of an escape, so in case of a rescue, if the party rescued be imprisoned for felony, and rescued before indictment, the indictment must surmise a felony done, as well as an imprisonment for felony or fugition thereof; but if the party be indicted, and taken by a capias, and rescued, then there needs only a recital that he was indicted prout, and taken and rescued. 1 Hal. P. C. 607.

But tho' the rescuer may be indicted before the principal is convicted and attainted, yet he shall not be arraigned or tried before the principal be attainted; but if the person rescued were imprisoned for high treason, the rescuer may immediately be arraigned, for in high treason all are principals; also it seems that he may be immediately proceeded against for a misprison only, if the King please. 2 Hawk. P. C. 140.

The rescuer of a prisoner for felony, tho' not within clergy, yet shall have his clergy. 1 Hal. Hist. P. C. 607.

By the 6 Geo. 1. cap. 23. sec. 5. If any person rescue felons ordered for transportation, or assist them in making their escape, he shall be guilty of felony, and suffer death without benefit of clergy. See also 9 Geo. 1. c. 28.

As the offence of rescuing persons in cases of treason and felony is usually punished by indictment, so the offence of rescuing a person arrested on mesne process, or in execution after judgment, subjects the offender to a writ of rescous or a general action of trespass vi et armis, or an action on the case, in all which damages are recoverable. Also it is the frequent practice of the courts to grant an attachment against such wrong-doers, it being the highest violence and contempt that can be offered to the process of the court. Co. Lit. 161. Co. Ent. 614. Rast. Ent. 577.

He who rescues a prisoner from any of the courts of Westminster-Hall without striking a blow, shall forfeit his goods and profits of his lands; and suffer imprisonment during life; but not lose his hand, because he did not strike. 22 Ed. 3. c. 13. 3 Inst. 141.

It is clearly agreed, that for a rescous on mesne process the party injured may have either an action of trespass vi et armis, or an action on the case, in which he shall recover his debt and damages against the wrong-doer; and the rather, because on mesne process he can have no remedy against the sheriff. Cro. Jac. 436. Hob. 180.

Also it hath been adjudged, that for rescous of a person in execution on a ca. fa. or ca. uita. an action will lie against the rescuer, tho' the party injured hath his remedy against the sheriff, and the sheriff hath his remedy against the wrong-doer; for perhaps the sheriff may be dead or insolvent; but herein it hath been held, that if he bring his action against the party who made the rescue, he may plead it in bar to an action brought by the sheriff; so if against the sheriff or his bailiff, they may plead that he had satisfaction from the party, so that if he recovers against one, the other is discharged. Rast. 95. Cro. Car. 109. Hutt. 98. Hob. 180.

By the statute 2 W. & M. stat. 1. cap. 5. sec. 5. on pound-breach or rescous of goods distrained for rent, the person grieved shall in a special action on the case recover treble damages and costs against the offenders, or against the owners of the goods if they come to his aid.

In an action on the case for a rescous, on this statute, it hath been held, that plaintiff shall recover treble damages as well as treble damages; for the damages are not given by the statute but increased; an action on the case lying for a rescous at Common law. 1 Salt. 216.

An attachment will be granted not only against a common person, but even against a peer of the realm, for rescuing a person arrested by due course of law; so that if the sheriff in any such return to the court, that a person arrested, or goods seized, or possession of lands delivered by him, by virtue of the King's writ, were rescued or violently taken from him, &c. they will award an attachment against the rescuers. Dyer 272. 2 Jon. 39. 40. 122.

But it seems to be the practice, not to grant an attachment in any case for a rescous, unless the officer will return it; for it hath been found by experience, that officers will take on them to swear a rescous where they will not venture to return one. 2 Hawk. P. C. 139.

A distinction was taken where an attachment is prayed for a rescous in the first instance, and where a rule to show cause is only asked; in the first instance of the fact are sufficient; in the other case the sheriff's return is requisite. Wrin. & Geo. 2. in B. R. Young v. Papes.

Where on the return of a rescue, an attachment is granted, and the party examined on interrogatories, upon answering them he shall be discharged; but if the rescous is returned to the phylaxer, and process of outlawry issues, and the rescuer is brought into court, he shall not be discharged on affidavits. Salt. 386.

3. Of the form of the proceedings on a rescue.

An indictment of a rescous ought to set forth the special circumstances of the fact with such certainty, as to enable defendant to make a proper defence. Dyer 164. No defect can be aided by the verdict. 1 Rel. Abr. 781.

Therefore, if an indictment lay the offence on an uncertain or impossible day, as where it lays it on a future day, or lays one and the same offence at different days, or lays it on such a day which makes the indictment repugnant to itself, it is void. Moor 555. Rast. Ent. 263.

It has been adjudged, on exception taken to an indictment for a rescous, that it was not necessary to allege the place where the rescue was made, and that it should be intended that where the arrest was, there also was the rescue without the word ibidem. Cro. Jac. 345. 2 Bull. 208.

An exception taken to an indictment of rescous, that it wanted the words of et armis or manu fortis, but overruled, it being held by the court, that the word rescous implies it to be done by force. Cro. Jac. 345. The same exception taken in Cro. Jac. 473 overruled; and there held, that tho' it were error at Common law, yet it is made good by the statute 3 Hen. 8. c. 8. Vide Cro. Jac. 472. Hunt's Case.

It is said, that an indictment of rescous is not within the statute of additions, and that naming the person indicted of such a parish, without giving him any title, is sufficient. 1 Inst. 665. 2 Hawk. 84.

Notes. On an indictment of rescous, if it were on an arrest upon mesne process, and the party has appeared, the court will be easily induced to quash it; for if it be on process out of an inferior court, tho' the party has not appeared, for no aid is given to higher jurisdiction.

In an action for a rescous plaintiff must allege in his declaration all the material circumstances; as that such a writ issued, that he was arrested, and in custody, and that he was rescued, &c. Godb. 125. 1 Lutw. 130.

In an action on the case for a rescous on mesne process, the evidence was, the bailiff stood at the street door, and sent his follower up three pair of stairs in disguise with the warrant, who laid hands on the party, and told him that he arrested him; but he with the help of some women got from the follower, and ran down stairs, and defendant hearing a noise came up, and put the party into a room, locked the door, and would not suffer the bailiff to enter. But disputed whether this was a lawful arrest, being by the bailiff's serving, and with his process; but said, that plaintiff must prove his cause of action against the party; that he must prove the writ and warrant by producing sworn copies of them; he must prove the manner of the arrest, that it may appear to the court to be legal, and that the party rescued was not lawfully taken; and that the party rescued was not lawfully taken, and that the party rescued was not lawfully taken, and that the party rescued was not lawfully taken, &c. 1 Inst. 111.

Form of the writ of Rescous.

GEORGE the King, to the Sheriff of the County of Middlesex, greeting. We command thee, that thou cause to be returned to us, by the Sheriff of the County of Middlesex, the names of all persons who have rescued or violently taken from him, by virtue of the King's writ, were rescued or violently taken from him, &c. they will award an at-church or King; or is entertained in the King's service. 6 Rep. 21. 1 Cro. 580.

In an information on the statute, it was adjudged that the parson is to live in the parsonage-house, and not in any other, tho' in the same parish. But as by stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 20. Leases made by parsons are declared void, where the parson is absent above eighty days in any one year, &c. On this act defendant pleaded to an agreement for tithes, that the parson was absent from his parsonage by the space of eighty days in one year; and the jury found that he dwelt in another town adjoining, and came constantly to his parish church four days in every week, and there read divine service; and it was held, that this was not such an absence as is intended by the statute to avoid any agreement or lease made by the parson. 1 Bull. 112.

A person allowed to have two benefices, may demise or lease one of them (on which he is non-resident) to his curate only; but if the curate leases over, such lease shall last no longer than during the curate's residence, without absence above forty days in any one year. 1 Leon. 100. See 1 Cro. 123. Some words in the act 13 Eliz. as to leases by parsons not resident, repealed, vide 14 Eliz. cap. 11.

An incumbent presented by the university to a recusant's living, shall lose it by 60 days absence in a year, 1 W. & M. c. 26. s. 6. See 19 Vin. Abr. tit. Residence, and see Non-residence. And Black. Com. 1 V. 390, 392.

Residuary Legatee. Is he to whom the residuum of the estate is left by will. And such legatee being made executor with others, shall retain against the rest: where there are two residuary legatees, and one dies intestate, his administrator shall have a moiety of the surplus of the personal estate of the testator, contrary to joint executors, who are not intitled to moieties; because by making them residuary legatees, the testator intended an equal share to both: And if a residuary legatee dies before the will is proved, his executor shall have administration, &c. 6 H. 7. 1 Chanc. Rep. 238. Show. 26. See Executor, and Black. Com. 2 V. 514.

Resignation; (Resignatio) Is the yielding up a benefice into the hands of the ordinary, called by the Canonists Renunciatio; and tho' it is all one in nature with the word surrender, yet it is by use restrained to yielding up a spiritual living to the bishop, as surrender is the giving up of temporal land into the hands of the lord. And a resignation may now be made into the hands of the King as well as the diocesan, because he has supremam auctoritatem ecclesiasticam, as the Pope had in ancient times; tho' it has been adjudged that a resignation ought to be made only to the bishop of the diocese, and not to the King; because the King is not bound to give notice of the resignation to the patron, as the ordinary is; nor can the King make a collation himself, without presenting to the bishop. Plowd. 498. Roll. Abr. 358.

Every parson who resigns a benefice, must make the resignation to his superior; as an incumbent to the bishop, a bishop to the archbishop, and an archbishop to the King, as supreme ordinary; and a donative is to be resigned to the patron, not the ordinary; for in that case the clerk received his living immediately from the patron. 1 Rep. 137.

A common benefice is to be resigned to the ordinary, by whose admission and institution the clerk first came into the church: And the resignation must be made to that ordinary who hath power of institution; in whose discretion it is either to accept or refuse the resignation; as the law hath declared him the proper person to whom it ought to be made, it hath likewise empowered him to judge thereof. 2 Cro. 64, 198.

The instrument of resignation is to be directed to the bishop, and when the bishop hath accepted of it, the resignation is good; to make void the church, and not before; unless it be where there is no cure, when it is good without the acceptance of the bishop.

A resignation may be made before a publick notary, but without the bishop's acceptance it doth not make the church void: the notary can only attest the resignation, in order to its being presented, &c. Ibid.

Before acceptance of the resignation by the bishop, no Presentation can be had to the church; but as soon as the acceptance is made, the patron may present to the benefice resigned: And when the clerk is instituted, the church is full against all men in case of a common person; tho' before induction, such incumbent may make the church void again by resignation. Count. Parl. Compan. 106.

A parsonage is not to be granted over by the incumbent, but it may be resigned; and resignations are to be absolute, and not conditional: for it is against the nature of a resignation to be conditional, being a judicial act. 3 Nelf. Abr. 157.

If any incumbent corruptly resigns his benefice, or take any reward for resigning the same, he shall forfeit double the value of the sum, &c. given, and the party giving it, be incapable to hold the living. Stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 6. But a man may bind himself by bond to resign, and it is not unlawful, but may be on good and valuable reasons; as where he is obliged to resign if he take a second benefice, or if he be non-resident by the space of so many months, or to resign on request, if the patron shall present his son or kinsman when he shall be of age capable to take the living, &c. Cro. Jac. 249, 274.

Tho' bonds for resignation of benefices have no encouragement in Chancery; for on such bonds generally the incumbent is relieved, and not obliged to resign. 1 Roll. Abr. 443.

On debt upon a bond to resign a benefice, the court would not let defendant's counsel argue the validity of the bond, these bonds having been so often established even in a court of equity. 1 Strange 227. But such a bond will not be allowed, where money has been paid on it. Ibid. 534.

A parson's refusal to pay his tenths, 'tis said is a resignation, for which he may be deprived. Owen 5. And where resignation is actually made de ecclesia, it extends to all the lands and possessions of the church. Cro. Jac. 63.

The usual words of a resignation are Renuncio, Cedo, Dimitto, and Resigno; and the word Resigno is not a proper term alone, 2 Roll. 350. See Black. Com. 1 V. 382, 393.

Form of a Resignation of a Benefice.

IN Dei Nomine Amen. Ego A. B. rector & incumbens ecclesie parochialis de, &c. in com. & dioces. Oxon. In cujus rei testimonium nomen & sigillum meum his præsentibus apposui die & anno, &c.

As to resignation of temporal offices,—declaring at an assembly of the corporation, that he would hold the place of alderman no longer is a good resignation, especially since the corporation accepted it, and chose another in his place; but till such election he had power to waive his resignation, but not afterwards. 2 Salt. 433.

A burgess of a corporation came to the mayor, and desired the mayor to remove and dismiss him from the place of burgess. On return of this, a mandamus was denied to to restore him; for having resigned voluntarily, he is estopped to say, that the mayor had no power to remove him; and the case being sent to Hale Ch. B. he agreed, and said that a corporation, as such, have power to take such resignation. Sid. 14.

But giving consent to be removed, does not amount to a resignation. Per Holt and Powell, a man may resign an office by parol. Holt's Rep. 450.

Resignation by a common council man need not be by deed. Lutw. 405.

Where an alderman is a justice of peace for life, by force of the patent of the King, who created the corporation, he cannot resign his office of justice of peace; because he cannot resign it but to a superior; per Coke Ch. J. Quod fuit concessum; per Haughton. Rol. Rep. 135. pl. 19.

Resignation of Offices. If a man can have no title to the profits of an office, without the admission or confirmation of a superior, there the resignation of that office must be to him. 3 Nels. Abr. 158.

Resort, (Resortum) Signifies the authority or jurisdiction of a court: Salvo tamen tam resorto quam aliis jure nostro et jure etiam alieno. Spelm.

Dernier resort, the last refuge.

Respectu computi Vicecomitis habendo, Is a writ for respiting a sheriff's account, directed to the treasurer and barons of the Exchequer. Reg. Orig. 139.

Respite, (Respiatus) A delay, forbearance, or continuation of time. Glanvil, lib. 12. c. 9.

Respite of Homage, (Respiatus homagii) Is the forbearance or delay of homage, which ought to be performed by tenants holding by homage, &c. tho' it had the most frequent use for such as held in knight service and in capite, who formerly paid into the Exchequer every fifth term some small sum of money to be respited their homage: But this charge being incident to, and arising from knight service, it is taken away by the stat. 12 Crr. 2.

Respite of Jury, see Jury, and Black. Com. 3 V. 354. x.

Respondens, or Respondens Ouster, To answer over in an action to the merits of the cause, &c. If a demurrer is joined on a plea to the jurisdiction, person, or writ, &c. and it be adjudged against defendant, it is a respondens ouster. Jenk. Cent. 306. See Judgment. And Black. Com. 3 V. 303, 396. 4 V. 332.

Respondens Superior If sheriffs of London are insufficient, the mayor and commonalty must answer for them: And per insufficiency del bailiff d'un liberty, respondens dominus libertatis. 4 Inst. 114. Stat. 44 Edw. 3. cap. 13.

If a coroner of a county is insufficient, the county as his superior shall answer for him. Wood's Inst. 83.

A gaoler constitutes another under him, and he permits an escape, if he be not sufficient, respondens superior; and superior officers must answer for their deputies in civil actions, if they are insufficient to answer damages. Dr. & Stud. c. 24.

Respondentia, see Bottomry. Black. Com. 2 V. 459.

Responsalis, (Qui responsum deservit) Is he who appears and answers for another in court at a day assigned. Glanvil, lib. 12. c. 1. And Fleta makes a difference between responsalem, attornatum, and offeniatorem; and says that responsalis was for the tenant, not only to excuse his absence, but to signify what trial he meant to undergo, the combat or the country. Fleta, lib. 6. c. 21.

This word is made use of in the Canon law, to signify procuratorem vel eum qui absentem excusat.

Restitution, (Restitutio) Is restoring any thing unjustly taken from another: It signifies also the setting him in possession of lands or tenements, who had been unlawfully disseised of them. Cramp. Inst. 144. And restitution is a writ which lies where judgment is reversed, to restore and make good to defendant what he hath lost; The court which reverses the judgment, gives on reversal, a judgment for restitution; whereon a scire facias quare restitutionem habere non debet, reciting the reversal of the judgment, and the writ of execution, &c. must issue forth. 2 Lill. Abr. 472. But the law doth often restore the possession to one without a writ of restitution, i. e.

by writ of habere facias possessionem, &c. in the common proceeding of justice on a trial at law. Ibid. 473.

There is a restitution of the possessions of lands in cases of forcible entry; a restitution of lands to an heir, on his ancestor's being attainted of treason or felony; and restitution of stolen goods, &c.

A writ of restitution is not properly to be granted but where the party cannot be restored by the ordinary course of law; and the nature of it is, to restore the party to the possession of a freehold, or other matter of profit, from which he is illegally removed; and it extends to restitution on mandamus to any publick office. 2 Lill. 472, 473.

Where a judgment for land is reversed in B. R. by writ of error, the court may grant a writ of restitution to the sheriff to put the party in possession of the lands recovered from him by the erroneous judgment; tho' there ought to be no restitution granted of the possession of lands, where it cannot be grounded on some matter of record appearing to the court. Hill. 22 Car. And persons who are to restore, are to be parties to the record; or they must be made so by special scire facias. Cro. Car. 328. 2 Salk. 587.

If a lease is taken in execution on a Fi. fa. and sold by the sheriff, and afterwards the judgment is reversed; the restitution must be of the money for which it was sold, not the term. Cro. Jac. 246. Moor 788. But a sheriff extended goods and lands on an elegit, and returned that he took a lease for years, which he sold and delivered to plaintiff as Bona & Catalla of defendant for the debt, and afterwards the judgment was reversed for error; and it was adjudged; that the party shall be restored to the lease, because the elegit gave the sheriff no authority to sell the term, therefore a writ of restitution was awarded. Yel. 179. And there has been in this case a distinction made between compulsory and voluntary acts done in execution of justice; where the sheriff is commanded by the writ to sell the goods, and where he is not, when the goods are to be restored, &c. 8 Rep. 96.

If plaintiff hath execution, and the money is levied and paid, and afterwards the judgment is reversed, there the party shall have restitution without a scire facias, for it appears on the record what the party had lost and paid; but if the money was only levied, and not paid, then there must be a scire facias suggesting the sum levied, &c. And where the judgment is set aside after execution for an irregularity, there needs no scire facias for restitution; but an attachment of contempt, if on the rule for restitution the money is not restored. 2 Salk. 588.

In a scire facias quare restitution. &c. defendant pleaded payment of the money mentioned in the scire facias, and it was held to be no plea. Cro. Car. 328. But now payment is a good plea to a scire facias by the stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. 2 Lill. Abr. 479.

Upon a Vi laticia removenda a parson was put out of possession; and on a suggestion thereof, and affidavit made, restitution was ordered. Cro. Eliz. 465.

The justices of peace, before whom an indictment for forcible entry is found, must give the party restitution of his lands, &c. who was put out of possession by force. Stat. 8. H. 6. c. 9. But where one is indicted for a forcible entry, and the party indicted traverses the indictment, there cannot be restitution before trial and a verdict, and judgment given for the party, tho' the indictment be erroneous; it being too late to move to quash the indictment after the traverse, which puts the matter on trial. 2 Lill. 473, 474.

A person being attainted of treason, &c. he or his heirs may be restored to his lands, &c. by the King's charter of pardon; and the heir by petition of right may be restored if the ancestor is executed: But restitution of blood must be by act of parliament; and restitutions by parliament are some of blood only, some of blood, honour, inheritance, &c. 3 Inst. 240. 1 Inst. 8, 391. The King may restore the party or his heirs to his lands, and the blood as to all titles begotten after the attainder. Ibid.

There shall be a writ of restitution granted to the owner of stolen goods, by the court where a felon is tried on indictment, after attainder of the felon, as in case of appeal of of robbery. 21 H. 8. c. 11. And it may be also of money when the felon is convicted of this felony by reason of the evidence given by the party robbed, or by his procurement, &c. And by this statute executors and administrators shall have restitution of goods, and it is said notwithstanding sale in market-overt. 2 Inst. 714. 3 Inst. 242. 5 Rep. 109.

If goods stolen are not waived by flight, or seized for the King, the party robbed may take his goods again without prosecuting the felon; but after seized for the King, they may not be restored without appeal or indictment. Kel. 48. 2 Hawk. P. C. 168.

A servant took gold from his master, and changed it into silver; the master shall have restitution of the silver by this statute. Cro. Eliz. 661. pl. 9.

A stole cattle and sold them at Coventry, in an open market, and immediately he was apprehended by the sheriff of Coventry, and they seized the money; and afterwards the thief was arraigned and hanged at the suit of the owner of the cattle. And by the court, the party shall have restitution of the money, notwithstanding the words of 21 H. 8. c. 11. the goods stolen, &c. And Crooke said, that it is usual at Newgate. Noy 128.

On this statute of restitution, see 2 Hawk. P. C. 171. c. 23. sec. 56.

'Tis said the party who loses goods and prosecutes the felon to conviction, shall have restitution of goods stolen, notwithstanding sale in market-overt, unless a new property be fairly acquired therein.

Kelyng's Rep. 47. 48. S. P. Dah Just. marg. c. 164. See Appeal of Robbery, and 19 Vin. Abr. tit. Restitution.

Restitution on an Indictment for a forcible entry. An indictment lies for one jointenant against another for a forcible entry, and the court of King's Bench hath power to award restitution, upon a removal of the indictment by certiorari. And per Hardwicke Ch. J. there must be a writ of restitution, unless the defendant pleads in a reasonable time. The King v. Marrew. Rep. Temp. Hardw. Per Annull, 174. Vide Latch 172. 4 Inst. 176. Salk. tit. Entry Forcible. Dalton's Justice, c. 131. p. 314. and c. 134. p. 319. Also vide the case above cited from Annull. And see Forcible Entry.

Re-restitution. Is when there hath been a writ of restitution before granted: And restitution is generally matter of duty; but re-restitution is matter of grace. Raym. 85.

A writ of re-restitution may be granted on motion, if the court see cause to grant it. And on quashing an indictment of forcible entry, the court of B. R. may grant a writ of re-restitution, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 474.

Restitutio excoacti ab ecclesia. A writ to restore a man to the church, which he had recovered for his sanctuary, being suspected of felony. Reg. Orig. 69.

Restitutio Temporalium. A writ directed to the sheriff to restore the temporalities, or barony of a bishoprick to the bishop elected and confirmed. F. N. B. 169. 1 Roll. Abr. 880.

Resulting use. Whenever the use limited by a deed expires, or cannot vest, it returns back to him who raised it, after such expiration or during such impossibility, and is styled a resulting use. As, if a man makes a feoffment to the use of his intended wife for life, with remainder to the use of her first-born son in tail: Here, till he marries, the use results back to himself; after marriage, it is executed in the wife for life; and, if she dies without issue, the whole results back to him in fee. Bacon of Uses, 350. 1 Rep. 120. See Uses, and Black. Com. 2 V. 335. And Com. Dig. tit. Uses. (K. 7.)

Resumptions. (Resummonitio) Signifies a second summons, or calling a man to answer an action, where the first summons is defeated by any occasion; and when by death, &c. of the judges, they do not come on the day to which they were continued, for trial of causes, such causes may be revived or recontinued by resumptions. Vide Re-attachment.

Resumption. (Resumptio) Is particularly used for taking again into the King's hands such lands or tenements, &c. as before on false suggestion he had granted by letters patent to any man. Broke 298. It is said, that the King cannot grant a prerogative of power so, but that he may resume it; otherwise it is of a grant of an interest. Skinner's Rep. 236. Resumption of Grants is mentioned in the Stat. 31 Hen. 6. c. 7. and other statutes.

Retainer. (From the Latin Retinere) Signifies in a legal sense, a servant but not menial or familiar, that is, not continually dwelling in the house of his master, but only wearing his livery, and attending sometimes upon special occasions. This livery was wont to consist of hats (or hoods) badges, or other suits of one garment by the year; and were many times given by great men, on design of maintenance and quarrels, therefore justly forbidden by several statutes; as 1 R. 2. c. 7. on pain of imprisonment and forfeiture to the King; and again, 16 R. 2. c. 4. 20 R. 2. c. 1. and 1 H. 4. c. 7. by which the offenders should make ransom at the King's will; and any knight or esquire thereby duly attainted should lose his livery, and forfeit his fee for ever, &c. Which statute is farther confirmed and explained by 2 H. 4. c. 21. 7 H. 4. c. 3. and 8 H. 6. c. 4. And yet this offence was so deeply rooted, that Edward the Fourth was necessitated to confirm the former statutes, and further to extend their meaning, as appears by 8 Edw. 4. cap. 2. adding a special penalty of five pounds on every man who gave such livery, and as much on every one so retained, either by writing, oath or promise, for every month.

These are by the feudists called effidati, sic enim dicuntur qui in alienius fidem & tutelam recepti sunt. And as our retainers are here forbidden, so are those effidati in other countries. But most of the above-mentioned statutes are repealed by 3 Car. 1. c. 1. Cowell.

Retainer of debts. By an executor or administrator, is a remedy effected by the mere operation of law, see Black. Com. 2 V. 511. 3 V. 18.

Retaining fee. (Merces retinens) Is the first fee given to any serjeant or counsellor at law, whereby to make him sure that he shall not be on the contrary part: It is, Honorarium seu premium causidici precedentium, quo clientis suo obligatur ut adversarii causam agat.

Retenementum. Is a word used for detaining, withholding, or keeping back. And sine ullo retenemento was an usual expression in old deeds and conveyances of lands. Cowell.

Retinentia. A retinue, or persons retained to a prince or nobleman. Pat. 14 R. 2.

Retorno habendo. see Returno habendo.

Retrahitus Aquæ. The ebb or return of a tide. Plac. 30 Edw. 1.

Retrahit. Is when plaintiff cometh in person in court where his action is brought, and saith he will not proceed in it; and this is a bar to that action for ever: It is so called, because it is the emphatical word in the Latin entry, entered thus, ff. Et præd. quer. in propria persona sua venit & dicit quod ipse placitum suum præd. versus præd. defendens. ulterius prosequi non vult, sed abinde omnino se retrahit, &c.

A retrahit must be always in person; if it is by attorney, it is error. 8 Rep. 58. 3 Salk. 245.

As to a retrahit, it is a bar to any action of equal nature brought for the same cause or duty; but a nonsuit is not. 1 Inst. 208. See Wils. par. 1. 90.

If plaintiff says he will not appear, this is not a retrahit, but nonsuit: But if the plaintiff says he will not sue, it is a retrahit. 2 Danv. Abr. 471. And retrahit is always on the part of plaintiff or demandant; and it cannot be before a declaration, for before the declaration it is only a nonsuit. 3 Leon. 47. 2 Lill. Abr. 476.

If plaintiff enter a retrahit against one joint-trespasser, it is a release to the other. Cro. Eliz. 762. But if a retrahit be entered as to one appellee in appeal of murder, the suit may be continued against the rest; because the appellant is to have a several execution against every one of them. H. P. C. 146. In a prohibition by three, 1 remainder of one shall not bar the other two plaintiffs. Moor 460. Nels. Abr. 165. See Nolle Prosequi. And Black Com. 3 V. 296, 395.

Retra. (Fr.) A charge or accusation. Stat. West. 1 cap. 2.

Return

Return, (Retorna, or retorna, from the Fr. retour, i. e. reditio, recursus) Hath many applications in law; but is most commonly used for the return of writs, which is the certificate of the sheriff made to the court, of what he hath done touching the execution of any writ directed to him; and where a writ is executed, or defendant cannot be found, &c. then this matter is indorsed on the back of the writ by the officer, and delivered into the court whence the writ issued, at the day of the return thereof in order to be filed. Stat. Westm. 2. cap. 39. 2 Lill. Abr. 476.

The name of the sheriff must always be to the return of writs; otherwise it doth not appear how they came into court: If a writ be returned by a person to whom it is not directed, the return is not good, it being the same as if there was no return on it. And after a return is filed it cannot be amended; but before it may. Cro. Eliz. 310. 2 Lill. Abr. 477, 478.

If the sheriff doth not make a return of a writ, the court will amerce him; so if he makes an insufficient return; and if he makes a false return, the party grieved may have an action of the case against him. Wood's Inst. 71.

If a sheriff return a vouchee summoned, where in truth he is dead, and there is no such person; or in a præcipe quod reddat that the tenant is dead, &c. there may be an averment against such returns, by the stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 8. Jenk. Cent. 121, 122.

Some returns are a kind of declaration of an accusation; as the return of a rescous, and the like; and these must be certain and perfect, or they will be ill. 11 Rep. 40. Plow. 63, 117. Kelw. 165.

Writs to do things in franchises, are directed to, and returned by the sheriff, to whom bailiffs make their returns: And an action will lie against a sheriff, who takes the return of one who is no bailiff, and against him who makes it; and likewise against the bailiff of a franchise, for negligence in execution, &c. 7 Ed. 4. 14. 12 Ed. 4. 15. Moor, c. 606.

Sheriffs are to accept of returns of bailiffs of liberties, where they are sufficient. 1 Danv. 191.

There is a return of juries by sheriffs; and returns of commissions, by commissioners, &c.

Return-Days, Are days in term called by that name; or days in bank. See Term.

Retorno Habendo, Is a writ which lies where cattle are distrained and replevied, and the person who took the distress justifies the taking, and proves it lawful; on which the cattle are to be returned to him.

This writ also lieth when the plaint in replevin is removed by recordare, into the King's Bench or Common Pleas, and he whose cattle are distrained makes default, and doth not prosecute his suit. F. N. B. 74. See Replevin.

Returns of members to Parliament. See Parliament.

Retornum Habendum, A judicial writ, the same with retorno habendo. Reg. Judic. 4.

Retornum irreplegiabile, Is a writ judicial, directed to the sheriff for the final restitution or return of cattle to the owner when unjustly taken or distrained, and so found by verdict; and it is granted after a nonsuit in a second deliverance. Reg. Judic. 27.

Rebe, or Gerere, (From the Saxon word, Grefa, Præfatus, Lambert's explanation of Saxon words, verb. Præfatus.) Signifies with us the bailiff of a franchise or manor, especially in the Western part of England: Hence shire-reve for sheriff. See Kitchin, 43.

Rebelach, rebellion, from revellare, to rebel. Quicumque faciebat rebelach vel latrocinium vel violentiam facinora in domo inferbat, 20 solidis amadebatur. Gale. Domesday, iii. Cestrescire.

Rebeland, Domesday book. Herefordshire. Terra Regis. Hac terra fuit tempore Edwardi Regis Tainland, sed postea conversata est in Rebeland. Et tunc dicunt legati Regis, quod ipsa terra est confusa, qui inde erit, fursum auferetur a rege.

The land here said to have been Thainland, T. E. R. and after converted into Reveland, seems to have been such land as being reverted to the King after the death of his Thans, who had it for life, was not since granted out to any by the King, but rested in charge on the account of the Reve or bailiff of the manor, who (as it seemeth) being in this lordship of Hereford, like the Reve in Chaucer, a false brother, concealed the land from the auditor, and kept the profit of it, till the surveyors, who are here called legati Regis, discovered this falsehood, and presented to the King that fursum auferetur Regi.

This passage from Domesday-book is imperfectly quoted by Sir Edward Coke, in his Institutes, sect. 117. who from these words draws a false inference, That land holden by knight service was called Thain-land, and land holden by socage was called reveland. Cowell. See Spelman of Feuds, c. 24. See Teinland.

Rebels, Signify with us sports of dancing, masking, &c. formerly used in Princes courts, the inns of court, or other noblemens houses, which are commonly performed by night; and there was an officer to order and supervise them, who was intitled Master of the Revels. Cowell.

Rebentue, (Fr.) Is properly the yearly rent which accrues to any man from his lands and possessions; and is generally used for the revenues or profits of the crown.

An act passed for preventing all doubts and questions concerning the collecting the publick revenues. 1 W. & M. sess. 2. c. 3.

Whoever chuses to be informed of the fiscal prerogatives of the King, or such as regard his revenue; which the British constitution hath vested in the royal person, in order to support his dignity and maintain his power, will find them very curiously and learnedly treated of by Backstone, in the 8th Chapter of the first Vol. of his Commentaries.

Reversal, Of judgment, is making it void for error, and when on the return of a writ of error, it appears that the judgment is erroneous, then the court give judgment, Quod judicium revocetur, adnuletur & penitus pro nullo habetur. 2 Lill. Abr. 481.

The ancientest judge of the court, or in his absence the next in seniority, always pronounces the reversal of an erroneous judgment openly in court, on the prayer of the party; and formerly it was the course to pronounce it in French, to this effect, Par les errors evandit, & autres errors manifest in le record, soit le judgment reverse, &c. Trin. 22 Car. B. R.

Reversal of a judgment may be pronounced conditionally, i. e. That the judgment is reversed if defendant in the writ of error doth not shew good cause to the contrary at an appointed time; and this is called a revocetur nisi; and if no cause be then shewn, it stands reversed without further motion. 2 Lill. 482.

The stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. hath provided a new writ, where judgment is reversed after verdict, or where an outlawry is reversed, &c. Lutw. 264. Vide Attainder, Error, Judgment, Outlawry.

Reversion, (Reversio, from Revertor) Signifies a returning again; therefore Reversio terre est tanquam terra revertens in possessione donatori sive heredibus suis post donum finitum. 1 Inst. 142.

A reversion hath two significations; the one is an estate left, which continues during a particular estate in being; and the other is the returning of the land after the particular estate is ended: It is said to be an interest in the land, when the possession shall fall, and so it is commonly taken; or it is when the estate which was parted with for a time, ceaseth and is determined in the persons of the alienees or grantees, &c. and returns to the grantor or donor, or their heirs from whence derived. Plow. 160. 1 Inst. 142.

But the usual definition of a reversion is, that it is the residuum of an estate left in the grantor after a particular estate granted away, continuing in him who granted the particular estate; and where the particular estate is derived out of his estate: As in a gift in tail, the reversion of the fee-simple is in the donor; and in a lease for life, or years, the reversion is in the lessor: Also a reversion takes place after a remainder, where a person makes a disposition of a less estate, than that whereof he was seised at the time of making thereof. 1 Inst. 22, 142. Wood's Inst. 151.

When

When the particular estate determines, then the reversion comes into possession, and before it is separated from it; for he who hath the possession, cannot have the reversion, because by uniting them, the one is drowned in the other. 2 Lill. Abr. 484.

The reversion of land when it falls, is the land itself; and the possession of the tenant, preserves the reversion of the lands, with the rents, &c. in the donor, or lessor. 1 Inst. 324.

A reversion of an estate of inheritance, may be granted by bargain and sale inrolled, lease and release, fine, &c. And by the grant of lands, a reversion will pass; tho' by the grant of a reversion, land in possession will not pass. Bridgm. Conveyan. 237. 6 Rep. 36. 5 Rep. 124. 10 Rep. 107.

If one have a reversion in fee, expectant on a lease for years, he may make a bargain and sale of his reversion for one year, and then make a release to the bargainee in fee; by which the reversion in fee will pass to the bargainee. 2 Lill. Abr. 483. And a reversioner may covenant to stand seised of a reversion to uses, &c. 11 Rep. 46. Likewise a reversion may be devised by will; and a testator being seised in fee of lands which he had in possession, and of other lands in reversion, devised all his lands for payment of debts; adjudged, that by the words all his lands, the reversion as well as the possession passed. 2 And. 59. Cro. Eliz. 159.

A person devised a manor to A. B. for six years, and some other lands to C. D. and his heirs; and all the rest of his lands to his brother, and the heirs male of his body; and it was held, that these words, "the rest of his lands," did not only extend to the lands which were not devised before, but to the reversion in fee of the manor, after the determination of the estate for years. Allen 28. And by devise of all lands, tenements and hereditaments, undisposed of before in a will, a reversion in fee will pass. 2 Vent. 285. 3 Nelf. Abr. 166.

One seised of lands in fee, devises part thereof to B. for life, and after by the same will, gives to C. all his lands not before particularly disposed of; by this devise of "all lands," &c. the reversion of the part given for life passes to C. Preced. Chanc. 202. There was lessee for years, remainder for life, reversion in fee, the tenant for life died, and the lessee for years did not attorn to him in the reversion; yet it was resolved, that it passed without attornment, and he might bring an action of debt, or avow. Hestl. 73.

If tenant for life, and he in reversion join in a lease for life, or gift in tail, rendering rent; it shall enure, after the death of tenant for life, to him in reversion. 1 Inst. 214. And if a reversion be granted to one for life, and to another in fee, the reversion is gone for a moiety: Also if such tenant for life get the remainder or reversion of the land, his estate for life is at an end. 3 Rep. 60.

The particular estate for life or years, and his estate in reversion, are divers and distinct; therefore aid may be prayed of him in the reversion: Yet these estates have relation one to another. 3 Shep. Abr. 220.

Copyholder for life, cannot by forfeiture or otherwise destroy the estate in reversion: And he who hath a reversion cannot be put out of it, unless the tenant be ousted of his possession also. 39 Hen. 6. Plowd. 162. Telv. 1.

Reversions expectant on an estate-tail, are not assets, or of any account in law, because they may be cut off by fine and recovery; but it is otherwise of a reversion on an estate for life, or years. 1 Inst. 173. 6 Rep. 38. Wood's Inst. 151.

No lease, rent charge, or estate, &c. made by tenant in tail in remainder, shall charge the possession of the reversioner. 2 Lill. 448. But as no statute hath made any provision for those who have remainders or reversions on any estate-tail, they are barred by a recovery. 10 Rep. 32.

There were no reversions or remainders on estates in tail, at Common law: And by the Common law, no grantee of a reversion could take advantage of any condition or covenant broken by the lessees of the same land; but by statute, grantees of reversions may take advantage of conditions and covenants against lessees of the same lands, as fully as the lessors and their heirs; and the lessees may have the like remedies against the grantees of reversions, &c. 1 Inst. 327. 32 H. 8. c. 34.

A reversioner may bring action of the case for spoiling trees; for any injury to his reversion, he may have this action; but he cannot have trespass, which is founded on the possession. 3 Lew. 209, 233. 3 Cro. 55.

He in reversion shall have a writ of entry ad communem legem, where tenant for life, &c. aliens the lands: And writ of intrusion, after their deaths, &c. New Nat. Br. 461.

How to plead a reversion in fee. 2 Lutw. 1174.

The difference between a reversion and a remainder, is that a remainder is general, and may be to any man, but he who granteth the land, for term of life or otherwise; and a reversion is to himself from whom the conveyance of the land proceeded, and is commonly perpetual, &c. And remainder is an estate, appointed over at the same time: But the reversion is not always at the same time appointed over. See Remainder. And Black. Com. 2 V. 175. Reversions in Offices, vide Office.

Review, (Fr. Revue) A Bill of Review in Chancery, is where the cause hath been heard, and the decree therein signed; but some error appears in the body of the decree, or new matter is discovered in time after the decree made: Which bill must be exhibited by leave of the court, and is usually done on oath made of the discovery of new matter, which could not be had or used at the time of the decree passed; and the sum of 20*l.* must be deposited in court, on bringing this bill, as a security for costs and delay, if the matter be found against the party, &c. Ord. in Chanc. 69. Pract. Solic. 121, 122.

Where a decree of Chancery is repugnant, or one part of it contradicts another, &c. it may be reversed by bill of review. Ibid. See Black. Com. 3 V. 454.

Review of Appeal of Delegates, Is a commission granted by the King, to certain commissioners, &c. See Appeal to Rome.

Rebelling church ordinances, Is a positive offence against religion, that affects the established church; for which see Black. Com. 4 V. 50.

Rebival of persons hanged. It is clear, that if, on judgment to be hanged by the neck till dead, the criminal be not thoroughly killed, but revives, the sheriff must hang him again. 2 Hal. P. C. 412. 2 Hawk. P. C. 463. For the former hanging was no execution of the sentence; and, if a false tenderness were to be indulged in such cases, a multitude of collusions might ensue. Nay, even while abjurations were in force, such a criminal, so reviving, was not allowed to take sanctuary and abjure the realm; but his fleeing to sanctuary was held an escape in the officer. Fitzb. Abr. t. corone. 335. Finch. L. A. 67. Black. Com. 4 V. 399.

Rebiving, Is a word metaphorically applied, to rents and actions, and signifies renewing them after they are extinguished. Of which see many examples in Broke, tit. Revivings of Rents, Actions, &c. 23. See 19 Vin. Abr. 228—230.

Rebivor, or Bill of Revivor, or Reviver. Is when a bill hath been exhibited in Chancery, against one who answers, and before the cause is heard, or if heard, and the decree is not inrolled, either party dies: In this case a bill of Revivor must be brought, praying the former proceedings may stand revived, and be put in the same condition as at the time of abatement.

If a party dieth, a female plaintiff marries, or there have been no proceedings on a decree, &c. for a year past, the decree and proceedings must be revived by subpoena fieri facias, or if the decree be inrolled, by bill of Revivor: But if the parties are not heirs or executors, &c. to the party dead, the decree or cause is to be revived by original bill, and not by subpoena fieri fac. or bill of Revivor; and a bill of Revivor lies not on a decree of long standing, but an original bill is to be preferred. Pract. Solic. 122. See Black. Com. 3 V. 448.

Revocation, (Revocatio) Signifies the calling back of a thing granted; or a destroying or making void of some deed that had existence until the act of Revocation, made, it it void. 2 Lill. Abr. 485. And a revocation may be either general, of all acts and things done before; or special, to ~~revoke~~ such a thing: And where any deed or thing is revoked, it is as if it never had been. 5 Rep. 90. Perk. fect. 105. In voluntary deeds and conveyances, there are frequently provisoes containing power of revocation, which being coupled with an use, and tending to pass by raising of uses, according to the Stat. H. 8. are allowed to be good, and not repugnant; as where one seised of an estate in fee, covenants to stand seised thereof to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of his son in tail, remainder over, &c. with proviso that he may revoke any of the said uses; now if afterwards he revokes them, he is seised again in fee, without entry or claim: But in case of a feoffment or other conveyance, whereby the feoffee or grantee is in by the Common law, such proviso would be merely repugnant and void. 1 Inst. 237. Stat. 27 Hen. 8. c. 10.

And voluntary estates made with power of revocation, as to purchasers, are held in equal degree with conveyances made by fraud and covin to defraud purchasers. 27 Eliz. c. 4. 3 Rep. 82. Uses, and powers in contingency and possibility, by mutual assent of parties may be revoked and determined; and as by indenture they may be raised, so by proviso or limitation in the same indenture, they may be extinguished and destroyed. 10 Rep. 86. And where a power of revocation is reserved for a man to dispose of his own estate, it shall always have a favourable construction; but it shall be taken strictly when it is to charge the estate of another. 2 Vent. 250.

When there is a power to revoke uses, a new declaration of uses is a sufficient revocation of the former, without any express disannulling, &c. And limiting new uses shews the power to alter and determine the former uses: Also if power is reserved to a man to revoke a deed by writing, subscribed and sealed in the presence of two or more credible witnesses; if he makes his will in writing, without making any express revocation, it will be a good revocation, and the will a good execution of the power. Hob. 312. Raym. 295. 3 Nelf. Abr. 168, 169. Tho' it hath been held, that all incident circumstances prescribed by the proviso or power of revocation, as to subscriptions, witnesses, &c. ought to be observed. 10 Rep. 143. 6 Rep. 33. 2 Lill. 487.

It is said where the power is only to revoke, when that power is executed, a man cannot limit new uses. 1 Vent. 197. 3 Salk. 316. Yet it hath been decreed, that the limitation of new uses is good, where the express power in the first deed was only to revoke. 1 Chanc. Rep. 242. If a person make a feoffment in fee, or levy a fine, &c. of the lands, before the deed of revocation is executed; these amount to a revocation in law, and extinguish the power of revocation. 1 Vent. 371. 1 Rep. 111. Power of revocation may be released; and where a man has an entire power of revocation, and he suspends or extinguishes it as to part, he may revoke as to the residue, if the conveyance was by way of use; but not where a condition is annexed to the land. 1 Rep. 174. Moor 615. A will is revocable; and a last will revokes the former: Tho' a new publication of the first will, where there are two wills, it is said may revoke the last. Perk. 479. 2 Sid. 2. See 3 Mod. 207.

Wills are to be revoked by some other will in writing, signed in the presence of three witnesses, or by cancelling by the testator, &c. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. A will revoking a former, tho' it must be subscribed by three witnesses, 'tis said need not be in the testator's presence, as the will of lands must be, by the statute. 1 P. Williams 344. if a person cancels or revokes either the duplicate or original will, this avoids both: they being but one will, and must stand or fall together: But where a man makes a second will, and intends that as a revocation of the first; if it be insufficient, it shall not destroy the first will tho' cancelled. 3 Mod. 220, 258. 2 Fern. 741. The testator is to be of a good disposing memory when he revokes his will, as well as when he makes it; he must have animus revocandi, as well as animus testandi, to make an effectual revocation. Show, 89. Cro. Jac. 497. Hard. 574. 3 Mod. 203.

Writings of revocation are to be taken according to the subject matter, viz. where a last will cannot stand with the first. Ibid. A testator made his will, and some time afterwards made a feoffment of the lands in the will to uses; and adjudged this was a revocation of his will, because a will cannot take effect till after his death. Dyer 74. And a tenant in tail made his will in writing, which was duly executed; afterwards he made a bargain and sale of the same lands contained in the will, to make a tenant to the præcipe, in order to suffer a common recovery, which was done accordingly, and he declared the uses to himself and his heirs: by the bargain and sale, &c. the will was revoked. 3 Lev. 108.

It hath been admitted to be a settled rule in Chancery, that where a testator devises his land in fee to one, and after mortgages it in fee to another, and then dies before the principal and interest is paid; this is not a total revocation of the will, but only quoad so much for which the lands were mortgaged, and the devisee shall have the equity of redemption. 1 Salk. 236, 258. Where lands are devised to one in fee, and after mortgaged to the same person, it is a revocation in toto of the devise; but if the land be mortgaged to a stranger, in that case 'tis otherwise. Preced. Canc. 515. A man seised of lands, devises the same in fee, or for life, and afterwards makes a lease thereof to another for years, it shall not be a revocation but during the years: Tho' in case a person has devised lands to one and his heirs, and after leases the same to him for a certain term, to commence after his death; this is a revocation of the whole estate. 1 Roll. Abr. 616. 2 Cro. 49.

In case a fortune be given to a child by the father, subsequent to the making of his will, wherein he had bequeathed her a portion; this shall be taken as a revocation of the legacy and will for so much. Preced. in Chanc. 183. A person being unmarried, by will devised all his personal estate to T. P. and afterwards he married and had several children; and died without making any other will: It was ruled by Commissioners of Delegates, that there being such an alteration of his estate and circumstances, so widely different from the time of making his will to his death, there was room to presume a revocation, and that he did not continue of the same mind when he died. 2 Salk. 592.

Letters of attorney, and other authorities, may be revoked, by the persons giving the powers; and as they are revocable in their nature, it has been adjudged, that they may be revoked, tho' they are made irrevocable. 8 Rep. 82. Wood's Inst. 286. These revocations of a power regularly must be made after the same manner it was given; and there ought to be notice to the party, &c. But if once the power be executed, a revocation after will come too late. Dyer 210.

A warrant of attorney from a defendant to appear and accept a declaration, and plead for the defendant, may not be revoked with an intent to slay the plaintiff's proceedings; but the defendant on good cause shewn to the court may change his attorney, so as he plead by another in due time. Riding armed, With dangerous and unusual weapons, is an offence at Common law. 4 Inst. 160. By the Stat. 2 Ed. 3. cap. 3. None shall ride armed by night or day to the terror of the people; or come with force and arms before the King's justices, &c. during their office, upon pain to forfeit their armour, and suffer imprisonment at the King's pleasure; and a fine may be set upon them by the justices, by 10 Ric. 2. cap. 1. And no person can excuse the going or riding armed in publick, by alledging that he wears armour for his defence against an assault; but men may wear common arms according to their quality and the fashion, and have attendants with them armed agreeable to their characters; also persons may ride or go armed to take felons, suppress riots, execute the King's process, &c. 3 Inst. 162.

Riding-Clerk, Is one of the six clerks in Chancery, who in his turn, for one year, keeps the controllment books of all grants that pass the Great Seal. Blount.

Ridings, Are the names of the parts or divisions of Yorkshire, which are three, viz. East-Riding, West-Riding, and North-Riding, mentioned in the Stat. 22 H. 8. c. 5. And in indictments for offences in that county, the town and the riding must be expressed, &c. West's Symb. par. 2. See Registry of Deeds. The word riding is a corruption from tribing. See Black. Com. 1 V. 116.

Riens arrear, A plea used in an action of debt for arrearages of account, whereby the defendant alledges that there is nothing in arrear. Book Entr.

Riens passe per le fait, Signifies that nothing passes by the deed; and is the form of an exception taken in some cases to an action. Broks.

Riens per Descent, Is the plea of an heir, where he is sued for his ancestor's debt, and hath no land from him by descent, or assets in his hands. 3 Cro. 151. In an action of debt against the heir, who pleads riens per descent, judgment may be had presently; and when assets descend, a scire facias lies against the heir, &c. 8 Rep. 134.

Riter County, (Retro Comitatus, from the Fr. arrear, i. e. posterior) Is opposed to full and open county; and appears to be some publick place, which the sheriff appoints for receipt of the King's money, after the end of his county court. 2 Ed. 3. cap. 5. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 38. Pl. 1a, lib. 2. c. 67.

Ristare, (from the Sax. riefe, rapina) To take away any thing by force; from whence comes our English word riste. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 57.

Ristura, A slight wound in the flesh: It is mentioned in Fleta, lib. 1. c. 41.

Right, (ius) In general signification includes not only a right, for which a writ of right lies, but also any title or claim, either by virtue of a condition, mortgage, or the like, for which no action is given by law, but only an entry. Co. on Lit. lib. 3. c. 8. f. 445. There is ius proprietatis, a right of property; ius possessionis, a right of possession, and ius proprietatis & possessionis, a right both of property and possession; and this was antiently called ius duplicatum: For example, If a man be disseised of an acre of land, the disseisee hath ius proprietatis, the disseisor hath ius possessionis; and if the disseisee release to the disseisor, he hath ius proprietatis & possessionis. Co. on Litt. lib. 3. sect. 447. Jus est sextuplex. 1. Jus recuperandi. 2. Intrandi. 3. Habendi. 4. Retinendi. 5. Percipiendi. 6. Et possidendi. Co. 8 Rep. Edward Altham's case.

Gilbert, Treat. of Ten. 18. says, That the disseisor has only the naked possession, because the disseisee may enter and evict him; but against all other persons the disseisor has right, and in this respect only can be said to have the right of possession; for in respect to the disseisee he has no right at all. But when a descent is cast, the heir of the disseisor has ius possessionis, because the disseisee cannot enter upon his possession, and evict him, but is put to his real action, because the freehold is cast upon the heir; and says, That the notions of the law do make this title to him, that there may be a person in being to do the feudal duties, to fill the possession, and to answer the actions of all persons whatever; and since it is the law that gives him this right, and obliges him to these duties, antecedent to any act of his own, it must defend such possession from the act of any other person whatever, till such possession be evicted by judgment; which being also the act of law may destroy the heir's title.

There are also a present and future right; a ius in re, which may be granted to a stranger; and what is called a naked right, or ius ad rem, where an estate is turned to a right, on a discontinuance, &c. Co. Lit. 345. A right in writs and pleadings, is properly in one, when he is ousted of the possession of his estate by disseisin or wrong, and hath remedy by entry, or action: But right doth also include an estate in esse in conveyances; and therefore if tenant in fee-simple makes a lease and release of all his right in the land to another, the whole estate in fee passes. Wood's Inst. 115, 116. Sir Edward Coke tells us, That of such an high estimation is right, that the law preserveth it from death and destruction; trodden down it may be, but never trodden out: And there is such an extreme enmity between an estate gained by wrong and an ancient right, that the right cannot possibly incorporate itself with the estate gained by wrong. 1 Inst. 279. 8 Rep. 105. 6 Rep. 70. A right may sometimes sleep, tho' it never dies; a long possession exceeding the memory of man, will make a right; and if two persons are in possession by divers titles, the law will adjudge the possession in him that hath the right. Co. Litt. 478. 6 Litt. sect. 158. Where there is no remedy, there is presumed to be no right by law. Faugh. 38. No commands shall be made under the great or little Seal, to disturb or delay common right. Stat. 2 Ed. 3. c. 8. See Reds. See also Property, and 19 *Vin. Rights and Liberties. The rights and liberties of the English subject, are secured (not granted) by Magna Charta, confirmed by many subsequent statutes, and particularly ticularly by the act of the first of William and Mary, stat. 2. c. 2. (36.) See most of the laws relative to this subject collected together with many observations, and an essay on the constitution, in an octavo work, lately published, called British Liberties, being an enlargement of Care's English Liberties.

Rights and Liberties. The declaration of rights and liberties against the conduct of King James II. sets forth, That he by the assistance of divers evil counsellors, did endeavour to subvert the laws and liberties of this kingdom; by exercising a power of dispensing with, and suspending of laws; by levying money for the use of the crown by pretence of prerogative, without consent of parliament; by raising and keeping a standing army, in time of peace; by violating the freedom of election of members to serve in parliament; by violent prosecutions in the court of King's Bench; and causing partial and corrupt jurors to be returned on trials; excessive bail to be taken; and excessive fines to be imposed; also cruel punishments inflicted, &c. All which were declared to be illegal, and infringing upon the ancient rights and liberties of the people. 1st. 1 W. & M. stat. 2. c. 2. (36.)

Rine, (Sax. ryne) A water-course, or little stream, which rises high with floods.

Ringa, A military girdle; from the Sax. ring, i. e. annulus, circulus, because it was girt round the middle: But according to Bracton, ringa enim dicuntur quod renes circumdant, unde dicitur accingere gladio. Bract. lib. 1. c. 8.

Ringhead, An engine used in stretching of cloth. 43 Elin. c. 10.

Ringdote, A kind of bailiff or serjeant; and such ringdote signifies in Welsh. Chart. Hen. 7.

Riot, Rout and unlawful Assembly, Riot, (riota and riotum, from the French riotte, quod non solum rixam & jurgium significat, sed vinculum etiam, quo plura in unum, fasciculum insar, colliguntur.) Signifies the forcible doing of an unlawful thing by three, or more persons assembled together for that purpose. West. Symbol. part 2. tit. Indictments, sec. 65. The difference between a riot, rout and unlawful assembly, see in Lamb. Eiren. lib. 2. cap. 5. Stat. 1 Mar. c. 12. and Kitchin 19. who gives these examples of riots, the breach of inclosures, banks, conduits, parks, pounds, houses, barns, the burning of stacks of corn, &c. Lamb. ubi supra, mentions these, to beat a man, to enter upon a possession forcibly. Cowell.

Holt Ch. J. in delivering the opinion of the court, said, That the books are obscure in the definition of riots, and that he took it, that it is not necessary to say they assembled for that purpose; but there must be an unlawful assembly; and as to what act will make a riot or trespass, such an act as will make a trespass will make a riot. 11 Mod. 116. pl. 2. Trin. 6 Ann. B. R. The Queen v. Selby.

As if a number of men assemble with arms, in terror of the people, tho' no act is done, it is a riot. Hob. 91. If three come out of an alehouse, and go armed, it is a riot. 3 H. 7. 1. Per Holt Ch. J. in delivering the opinion of the court. 11 Mod. 116, 117. The Queen v. Selby.

Serjeant Hawkins says, A riot seems to be a tumultuous disturbance of the peace by three persons, or more, assembling together of their own authority, with an intent mutually to assist one another against any who shall oppose them; in the execution of some enterprise of a private nature, and afterwards actually executing the same in a violent turbulent manner, to the terror of the people, whether the act intended was of itself lawful or unlawful. Hawk. P. C. 155. c. 65. f. 1.

A riot seems to be, according to the general opinion, a disturbance of the peace by persons assembling together with an intent to do a thing, which if it be executed will make them rioters, and actually making a motion towards the execution thereof: But by some books, the notion of a riot is confined to such assemblies only, as are occasioned by some grievance common to all the company, as the inclosure of land in which they all claim a right of common, &c. However, Hawkins is generally agrees with a riot, as to all the rest of the above-mentioned particulars, requires a condition, a riot, accept only in this, that it may be a compleat offence without the execution of the intended enterprise, it seems not to require any farther explication. Hawk. Pl. C. 158. c. 65. f. 8.

That an unlawful assembly, according to the common opinion, is a disturbance of the peace by persons barely assembling together, with an intention to do a thing, which, if it was executed, would make them rioters, but neither actually executing it, nor making a motion towards the execution of it; but he says this seems to be much too narrow a definition; for any meeting whatsoever of great numbers of people with such circumstances of terror, as cannot but endanger the publick peace, and raise fears and jealousies among the King's subjects, seems properly to be called an unlawful assembly; as where great numbers, complaining of a common grievance, meet together armed in a warlike manner, in order to consult together concerning the most proper means for the recovery of their interests; for no one can foresee what may be the event of such an assembly. Hawk. Pl. C. 158. c. 65. f. 9.

If a man be in his house, and he hears that J. S. will come to his house to beat him, he may well make an assembly of people of his friends and neighbours to assist and aid him in safe keeping his person. Per Finem Ch. J. Br. Riots, pl. 1. cites 21 H. 7. 39.

But if a man be menaced or threatened that if he comes to the market of B. or to W. that he shall be beat, he cannot make an assembly of people to assist him to go there, and this in safeguard of his person; for he need not go there, and he may have remedy by surety of the peace; but the house of a man is to him his castle and his defence, and where he properly ought to abide, &c. Br. Riots, pl. 1. cites 21 H. 7. 39. Per Finem Ch. Justice.

Dalt. Just. cap. 137. cites S. P. Hawk. Pl. C. 158. cap. 65. sec. 10. cites S. C. accordingly, and says, That such violent methods cannot but be attended with the danger of raising tumults and disorders to the disturbance of the public peace.—Tho' a man may ride with arms, yet he cannot take two with him to defend himself even tho' his life is threatened; for he is in the protection of the law which is sufficient for his defence. Per Holt Ch. J. in delivering the opinion of the court. 11 Mod. 116, 117. pl. 2. Trin. 6 Ann. B. R. The Queen v. Selby.

If a number of people assemble together in a lawful manner, and upon a lawful occasion, as for electing a mayor (as it was in this case) or the like, and during the assembly a sudden affray happens, this will not make it a riot ab initio; but it is only a common affray. Ld. Raym. 965. Trin. 2 Ann. Grampound Corporation's case.

If a number of people assemble in a riotous manner to do an unlawful act, and a person, who was upon the place before upon a lawful occasion, and not privy to their first design, comes and joins himself with them he will be guilty of a riot equally with the rest. Per Holt Ch. J. which Powell J. seemed to agree. Ld. Raym. Rep. 965. Trin. 2 Ann. Grampound Corporation's case.

Holt Ch. J. thought an assembly might meet together with such circumstances of terror as to be a riot. Salk. 594, 595. pl. 4. Trin. 6 Ann. in the case of The Queen v. Selby & al.

If several are assembled lawfully without any ill intent, and an affray happens, none are guilty but such as act; but if the assembly was originally unlawful, the act of one is imputable to all. Per Holt Ch. J. Salk. 595. 6 Ann. in affray in Middlesex. The Queen v. Ellis.

It seems agreed, that a number of persons, being met together at a fair, or market, or church-ale, or any other lawful and innocent occasion, happen on a sudden quarrel to fall together by the sword, they are not guilty of a riot, tho' of a sudden affray only, of which none are guilty, but those who actually engage in it; because the design of their meeting was innocent and lawful; and the subsequent breach of the peace happened unexpectedly without any previous intention concerning it; yet it is said, that if persons lawfully assembled together, do afterwards upon a dispute happening to arise among them, form form themselves into parties, with promise of mutual assistance, and then make affray, they are guilty of a riot, because upon their confederating together with an intention to break the peace, they may as properly be said to be assembled together for that purpose from the time of such confederacy, as if their first coming together had been on such a design; however, it seems clear, that if in an assembly of persons met together on any lawful occasion whatsoever, a sudden proposal should be started of going together in a body to pull down a house of inclosure, or to do any other act of violence, to the disturbance of the publick peace, and such motion be agreed to and executed accordingly, the persons concerned cannot but be rioters, because their associating themselves together for such a new purpose is no way extenuated by their having met at first upon another. Henrik. Pl. C. 156, 157. c. 65. f. 3.

A mayor and alderman of a town making a riot, are punishable in their natural capacities; but where they have countenanced dangerous riots within their precincts, their liberties have been seized, or the corporation fined. 3 Cro. 252. Dalt. 204, 326. Women may be punished as rioters; but infants under the age of fourteen years, are not punishable. Dalt. 325. Wood's Inst. 429. By the Common law, riots are punished by fine and imprisonment; and if enormous, by pillory: And by statute, Justices of the peace have power to restrain rioters, &c. to arrest and imprison them, and cause them to be duly punished. 34 Ed. 3. c. 1. As soon as the sheriff and other the King's ministers hear of a riot, or other assembly against the peace, they with the power of the county shall apprehend such offenders, and put them in prison until delivered by law. 27 R. 2. c. 8. And two or more justices of the peace, dwelling near the place where such offences shall be committed, together with the sheriff or under-sheriff of the county, shall by the power of the county, if need be, suppress riots, routs, &c. arrest the offenders, and record what shall be done in their presence; by which record the offenders shall stand convicted, as by Stat. 15 R. 2. in case of forcible entries; and if offenders are departed, the said justices, &c. shall within a month after make inquiry thereof, and hear and determine the same; and if the truth cannot be found, then within a further month the justices and sheriffs are to certify to the King and council, &c. on default whereof, the justices, &c. shall forfeit 100*l.* 13 H. 4. c. 7.

These statutes are understood of great and notorious riots: And the record of the riot within the view of the justices, by whom it is recorded, is such a conviction as cannot be traversed, the parties being concluded thereby; but they may take advantage of the insufficiency of the record, if the justices have not pursued the statute, &c. It is said that the offenders being convicted upon the record of their offence, in the presence of the justices, ought to be sent immediately to gaol, till they pay a fine assessed by the same justices; which fine is to be extracted into the Exchequer; or the justices may record such riot, and commit the offenders, and after certify the record into B. R. or to the assize or sessions: If the offenders are gone, then the justices shall inquire by a jury; and the riot being found, they are to make a record of it, and fine them, or receive their traverse, to be sent by the justices to the next quarter-sessions, or into the King's Bench, to be tried according to law. Dalt. 200, 201, 202.

It hath been adjudged, that where rioters are convicted upon the view of two justices, the sheriff must be a party to the inquisition on the Stat. 13 H. 4. But if they disperse themselves before conviction, the sheriff need not be a party; for in such case the two justices may make the inquisition without him; and this is pro Domino Rege: And if the justices neglect to make an inquisition within a month after the riot, they are liable to the penalty for not doing it within that time; but the length of the month doth not determine their authority to make an inquisition afterwards. a Dalt. 592.

Rioters convicted on view of two justices, and of the sheriff of the county, are to be fined by the two justices and the sheriff; and if the sheriff do not join in taxing the fine, it is error; for the statute requires that he should be joined with the justices in the whole proceedings.

Raym. 386. 13 H. 4. c. 7. By the 2 H. 5. c. 8. If the justices make default in inquiring of a riot; at the instance of the party grieved, the King's commission shall be issued to inquire, by sufficient and indifferent men of the county, at the discretion of the Chancellor; and the coroners shall make the panel of inquest upon the said commission, which is returnable into the Chancery, &c. and by this statute, heinous rioters are to suffer one year's imprisonment.

The Lord Chancellor, having knowledge of a riot, may send the King's writ to the justices of peace, and to the sheriff of the county, &c. requiring them to put the statute in execution; and the Chancellor, upon complaint made, that a dangerous rioter is fled into places unknown, and on suggestion under the seals of two justices of peace and the sheriff, that the common fame runneth in the county of the riot, may award a capias against the party, returnable in Chancery upon a certain day, and afterwards a writ of proclamation returnable in the King's Bench, &c. 2 Hen. 5. c. 9. 8 Hen. 6. c. 14.

If one justice of peace hath notice of a riot, he must endeavour to remove it, and may bind the rioters to the good behaviour; and if they have no sureties, or refuse to be bound, he may commit them to prison. 13 Hen. 4. c. 7. Mod. Inst. 368. Where riots are committed, the sheriff, upon a precept directed to him, is to return twenty-four persons dwelling within the county to inquire thereof, &c. 19 Hen. 7. c. 13. The Stat. 1 Geo. 1. st. 2. c. 5. enacts, That if any persons, to the number of twelve or more, unlawfully and riotously assembled against the peace, being required by a justice of peace, sheriff, under-sheriff, mayor, or other head officer of any town, &c. by proclamation in the King's name, to disperse themselves, shall continue together an hour afterwards, they shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy; and persons thus assembled and continuing, are to be apprehended and carried before a justice of peace, &c. And if in resistance, the rioters are killed, the persons concerned in it shall be indemnified: Persons by force hindering the proclamation, it shall be adjudged felony; and the offenders nevertheless guilty, if they do not disperse, &c. Rioters demolishing any church, chapel, or dwelling-house, are guilty of felony; and inhabitants of towns and hundreds are to yield damages for rebuilding or reparation, to be levied and paid in such manner as money recovered against the hundred, by persons robbed on the highway, &c. Prosecutions on this act are to be commenced within one year after the offence: And this is the severest statute that hath been made against rioters, but it being wholly in the affirmative, it doth not take away any authority in the suppressing a riot by Common law, or by other statutes. Wood's Inst. 430. See Rebellious Assembly, and Black. Com. 4 V. 125, 142, 143, 146, 433.

A record of a riot on view.

BE it remembered, That on the day, &c. in the first year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord George the Third, now King of Great Britain, &c. We A. B. and C. D. Esquires, two of the justices of our said Lord the King assigned to keep the peace in the county of, &c. aforesaid, and E. F. Esquire, then sheriff of the said county, upon the complaint and humble supplication of L. B. of, &c. in the county aforesaid, in our own proper persons went to the mansion-house of the said L. B. in the parish, &c. in the county aforesaid, and then and there saw G. H. of, &c. and J. K. and L. M. of, &c. in the county aforesaid, and other malefactors and disturbers of the peace of our said Lord the King, to us unknown, to the number of five persons, armed with swords, staves, &c. unlawfully and violently assembled at the said house, threatening great damage to the said L. B. to the disturbance of the peace of the said Lord the King, and terror of his people, against the form of the Statute, &c. And therefore we the said A. B. and C. D. then and there caused the said G. H. J. K. and L. M. to be arrested, and carried to the next gaol of our said Lord the King in the county aforesaid, by our names and record being convicted of the unlawful assembly, tumult and riot aforesaid, there in manner as they have made fine and ransom to our said Lord

The King for the same. In witness whereof we have set our seal to this our present record, dated at, &c. as aforesaid, the day and year above-mentioned.

Form of an inquisition of a riot.

South'ton, ff. A N inquisition for our Sovereign Lord the King, taken at, &c. in the county aforesaid, the day and year of the reign, &c. on the oath of A. B. C. D. E. F. G. H. &c. (the jury) honest and lawful men of the said county, before T. D. and J. B. Esquires, two justices of our said Sovereign Lord the King, assigned to keep the peace in the said county, &c. Which said jurors upon their oath aforesaid say, that J. K. of, &c. L. M. N. O. &c. and other malefactors and disturbers of the peace of our said Lord the King, to the said jurors unknown, on the day of, &c. last past, with force and arms, that is to say, with swords, staves, &c. and other offensive weapons, into the messuage of T. W. in the parish, &c. aforesaid, in the said county, between the hours, &c. of the same day, unlawfully and riotously entered, and him the said T. W. assaulted, beat and wounded, to the great disturbance of the peace of our said Lord the King, and terror of his people; and against the form of the statute in such case made and provided.

An indictment for a riot.

T H E jurors, &c. do present, That J. K. late of, &c. in the county of, &c. aforesaid, yeoman, L. M. late of, &c. and N. O. late of, &c. on the day, &c. in the year of the reign, &c. at, &c. with force and arms, &c. did riotously and unlawfully meet and assemble themselves together, to disturb the peace of our said Lord the now King; and being so assembled and met together, did then and there make an assault upon one L. B. then being in the peace of God and of our said Sovereign Lord the King; and then and there beat, wounded and evilly treated the said L. B. and other injuries did to him, to the great damage of the said L. B. and against the peace of our said Lord the King, his crown and dignity, and also against the form of the statute, &c.

Robbers. During the middle ages the highways were so much infested with banditti, that it was necessary for travellers to form themselves into companies or caravans, that they might be safe from the assaults of robbers. Bouquet Recueil des Hist. Vol. 7. 515. They became so frequent and audacious, that the authority of the civil magistrate was unable to repress them. The ecclesiastical jurisdiction was called in to aid it, councils were held with great solemnity, the bodies of the saints were brought thither, and in presence of their sacred reliques, anathemas were denounced against robbers, and other violators of the publick peace. *Id. Robbery, (Robaria) Is a felonious taking away of another man's goods from his person or in his presence against his will, putting him in fear, and of purpose to steal the same. West. Symbol. part 2. tit. Indictments, sect. 60. And this offence was called robbery, either because they bereaved the true man of some of his robes or garments, or because his money or goods were taken out of some part of his garment or robe about his person. Co. 3 Inst. cap. 16. This is sometimes called violens theft. West. Symbol. ibid. which is felony of two-pence. Kirkeby, fol. 16. and 22 Lib. off. 39. See Stat. de verborum signific. verb. Rob. and Crim. Justice of Peace, fol. 30.

Robbery is a felony by the Common law, committed by a violent assault upon the person of another, by putting him in fear, and taking from him person his money, or other goods of any value whatsoever. 3 Inst. 68. c. 16.

1. What is or amounts to a robbery in respect of the manner, or person from whom any thing is taken.
2. Of raising hue and cry, and what kind of robbery it may be, as made the hundred chargeable.
3. Who is to bring the action, and of the previous steps requisite.
4. At what time the action is to be brought; what evidence is necessary, and what shall excuse the hundred.
5. Of trying the money, or the hundredors.

1. What is or amounts to a robbery in respect of the manner, or person from whom any thing is taken.

The circumstance of putting one in fear makes the difference between a robbery and a cut-purse; both take it from the person, but this takes it clam & ferre without assault or putting in fear, and the robber by violent assault and putting in fear. 3 Inst. 68. cap. 16.

Wherever

Wherever a person assaults another, with such circumstances of terror as put him into fear, and causes him, by reason of such fear, to part with his money, the taking thereof is adjudged robbery, whether there were any weapon drawn or not, or whether the person assaulted delivered his money upon the other's command, or afterwards gave it to him upon his ceasing to use force, and begging an alms; for he was put into fear by his assault, and gives him his money to get rid of him. Hawk. Pl. C. 96, 97. cap. 34. sect. 9.

In the case of Macdaniel and others, at the Old Bailey sessions in December 1755. Mr. Justice Foster was of opinion, that if a man attacked by an highwayman and robbed, previous to the robbery resists, and is overpowered, without being under any fear at all, it is not the less robbery upon that account. Fost. 128.

The words of the indictment, violenter & felonice cepit, must be understood that there is an actual taking in deed, and a taking in law, and that may be when a thief receives, &c. For example: If thieves rob a true man, and finding but little about him, take it, this is an actual taking; and by means of death compel him to swear upon a book to fetch them a greater sum, which he does and delivers it to them, which they receive, this is a taking in law by them, and adjudged robbery; for fear made him to take the oath, and the oath and fear continuing, made him bring the money, which amounts to a taking in law; and in this case there needs no special indictment, but the general indictment (Quod violenter & felonice cepit) is sufficient. And so it is, if at the first the true man for fear delivers his purse, &c. to the thief. 3 Inst. 68. cap. 16.

See Hawk. P. C. 96. c. 34. s. 4. The thief must be in possession of the thing stolen, or otherwise he is not guilty of robbery. 3 Inst. 69. c. 16. S. P. Hawk. Pl. C. 96. c. 34. sect. 6. But though he is not guilty of robbery, he is highly punishable by fine and imprisonment, &c. for so enormous a breach of the peace. See infra.

The words of the indictment are (a persona) &c. If the true man, seeking to escape for the safeguard of his money, casts it into a bush, which the thief perceiving, takes it: This is a taking in law from the person, because it is done at one time. 3 Inst. 69. cap. 16. S. P. And so if he drives my cattle in my presence out of my pasture, or takes my hat which fell from my head, he may be indicted as having taken things from my person. *Hawk. Pl. In some cases, a man may be said to rob me, where in truth he never actually had any of my goods in his possession; as where I am robbed by several in one gang, and one of them takes my money, in which case, in judgment of law, every one of the company shall be said to take it, in respect of that encouragement which they give to another thro' the hopes of mutual assistance in their enterprize: Nay, though they miss of their first intended prize, and one of them afterwards rides from the rest, and robs a third person in the same highway, without their knowledge, out of their view, and then returns to them, all are guilty of robbery; for they came together with an intent to rob, and to assist one another in so doing. Hawk. Pl. C. 96. cap. 34. sect. 7.

An attempt to rob is made felony with benefit of clergy, by 7 Geo. 2. c. 21.

2. Of raising hue and cry, and what kind of robbery it must be, to make the hundred chargeable.

The levying of hue and cry is enjoined by several acts of parliament, and to this purpose it is enacted by W. 1. 1. cap. 9. "That all be ready and apparelled at the summons of the sheriff, to pursue and arrest felons."

Though some imagined that hue and cry was grounded on this statute; yet Lord Coke says, That it was used long before, as appears even by this statute, which, instead of introducing a new law, enforces obedience to that which was founded on the ancient laws of the realm. 2 Inst. 171.

By the statute of 4 Ed. 1. De officio coronatoris, hue and cry shall be levied for all murders, burglaries, men slain, or in peril to be slain, as other where is used in England; and all shall follow the hue and steps as near as they can.

By the statute of Winton, or 13 Ed. 1. s. 2. c. 1. it is enacted, "That from thenceforth every country shall be so well kept, that immediately upon robberies and felonies committed fresh suit shall be made from town to town, and from country to country." And cap. 2. of the said statute, If the country will not answer for the bodies of such offenders, the people dwelling in the country, shall be answerable for the robberies done, and also the damages: And if the robbery be done within the division of two hundreds, both the hundreds, and the franchises within them shall be answerable.

The statute of Winton gives the action against the hundred; but by subsequent statutes, such as 27 Eliz. cap. 13. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. Several alterations and additions have been made therein.

It seems to be admitted, that no kind of robbery will make the hundred liable, but that which is done openly, and with force and violence; and that therefore the private stealing, or taking any thing from the party does not come within the statutes which make the hundred liable, because the hundred is not liable in not preventing the robbery, but because they did not apprehend the robbers, which in private felonies, and of which they had no notice, it would be difficult, if not impossible, for them to do. 7 Co. 6, 7. 2 Salk. 614.

Also it hath been adjudged, and is admitted in all the books which speak of this matter, that a robbery in a house, whether it be by day or by night, does not make the hundred liable: The reasons whereof are, that every man's house is in law esteemed his castle, which he himself is obliged to defend, and into which no man can enter, to see what is doing there, without his leave; also being done in a house, the inhabitants of the hundred cannot be presumed to have notice of it, so as to be able to apprehend the offenders. 7 Co. 6. a. Sendl's case.

But if a person be assaulted in the highway, and carried into a house, and there robbed, it seems the hundred shall be liable; for otherwise the provision made by the statute would be eluded. 1 Sid. 263. and see 1 Salk. 614. Faresl. 157. Also it does not seem necessary, that the robbery should be committed in the highway, nor alledged to have been so by the plaintiff in his declaration. Faresl. 159. It may be in a private way, or be in a coppice; and in both cases the hundred shall be chargeable. 2 Salk. 614. and vide Cartb. 71. 3 Mod. 258. 1 Show. 60. Comb. 150. S. C. adjudged between Young and the inhabitants of the hundred of Talscomb.

The robbers ought to be taken in 40 days, to excuse the hundred. In 3 Lev. 320. it is said, that upon search of the parliament roll it appears, that the statute of Winton gives only forty days to the country, and that the statute 28 Ed. 3. is but a confirmation thereof; and accordingly it was adjudged, where the plaintiff brought an action on the statute of Winton, and declared that he was robbed, and none of the robbers taken within forty days, according to the said statute; and with this the modern precedents agree, as Rass. Ent. 406. Co. Ent. 351. Harb. 215. Theb. Brev. 141. 2 Sal. 376.

Nevertheless the inhabitants shall make fresh suit and pursue after the offenders.

It is clearly agreed, that for a robbery committed in the night the hundred is not chargeable, because they cannot be presumed to have notice thereof, so as to be able to apprehend the robbers. 7 Co. 6 b. Milborne's case. 2 Inst. 369.

But yet it is not necessary that the robbery should be committed after sun-rise, and before sun-set, and that therefore if there be as much day-light at the time that a man's countenance might be discerned thereby, though it be before sun-rise, or after sun-set, the hundred shall be liable. 7 Co. 6. a. Affpole's case. Also it hath been held, that if robbers drive or oblige the waggoner to drive his waggon from the highway by day, but do not rob or take any thing till night, that yet this is a robbery in the day-time so as to charge the hundred. Sid. 263. Farest. 159. Also see Hutton 125.

Plaintiff was travelling in the highway in the hundred of A. where he was set upon and carried into the hundred of B. and robbed in a copse in the highway of this hundred; it was adjudged that the hundred of B. should be liable. 2 Salk. 614, 615. Farest. 157. S. C. Cowper v. The Hundred of Basingstoke.

By the 27 Eliz. cap. 13, par. 2. it is enacted, "That the inhabitants and residents of every hundred (with the franchises within the precinct thereof,) wherein negligence, fault or defect of pursuit and fresh suit after hue and cry made shall happen to be, shall answer and satisfy the one moiety of all such money and damages, as shall be recovered against the hundred, with the franchises therein, in which any robbery or felony shall be committed, to be recovered by action of debt, &c. by and in the name of the clerk of the peace for the time being, of or in every such county, and recovery by the party or parties robbed shall be, without naming the christian name or surname of the said clerk of the peace; which moiety so recovered shall be to the use of the inhabitants of the hundred where any such robbery, &c. shall be committed."

3. Who is to bring the action, and of the previous steps, requisite.

If a servant be robbed in the absence of his master, of his master's money, it is clear that the master may maintain an action for it against the hundred, but then the servant must make oath that he knew not any of the robbers. Cro. Car. 37. Raymond v. Hundred of Okeing adjudged. Also the servant being robbed in his master's absence, may himself maintain an action against the hundred, and may declare that he was possessed ut de bonis suis propriis, &c. And though the jury find that he was robbed of his master's money, yet shall he recover; for the servant is possessed ut de bonis suis propriis, against the hundred, and in respect of all, but him that hath the very right. 2 Salk. 613-4. 4 Mod. 303. If A. and B. travelling together are robbed of a sum of money, to which they are both jointly intitled, they may both join in action against the hundred; seem if they had separate and distinct interests. Dyer 370. a. pl. 59.

By statute, 27 Eliz. cap. 13. par. 11. it is enacted, That no person that shall happen to be robbed shall maintain any action, or take any benefit of the statutes which make the hundred liable, except the person so robbed shall, with as much convenient speed as may be, give notice of the robbery to some of the inhabitants of some town, village or hamlet near unto the place where any such robbery shall be committed.

In the construction of this clause of the statute it hath been holden,

That if a person be robbed in a highway in divers hundredorum, he need not give notice to the inhabitants of each hundred, but notice to either of them is sufficient.

Cro. Jac. 675. Foster v. The hundred of Speenhor and Illeworth, adjudged, vide also, Cro. Car. 41. 379. 1 show. 94.

It hath been resolved, that though the notice given be five miles from the place where the robbery was committed, that it is sufficient; the reason whereof is, because that the party, who is a stranger to the country, cannot have conuance of the nearest place or town. March 11. Sir John Compton's case, which vide, and see also 2 Leon. 82.

Also if the party robbed give notice with as much convenient speed as may be, though he be otherwise remiss in not pursuing the robbers, or refuses to lend his horse for that purpose, yet he shall not lose his action for this, nor the hundred be excused. March 11. 2 Leon. 82. S. P. agreed per cur.

Now by the 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. sect. 1. it is further enacted, "That no person shall maintain any action against the hundred, unless he shall, besides the notice already required by the last statute, with as much convenient speed as may be, after any robbery committed, give notice thereof to one of the constables of the hundred, or to some constable, borougher, headborough or tithingman of some town, parish, village, hamlet or tithing, near unto the place where such robbery shall happen, or shall leave notice in writing of such robbery at the dwelling house of such constable, &c. describing so far as the nature and circumstances of the case will admit, the felon, and the time and place of the robbery, and also shall, within the space of twenty days next after the robbery committed, cause publick notice to be given thereof in the London Gazette, therein likewise describing, so far as the nature and circumstances of the case will admit, the felon, and the time and place of such robbery, together with the goods and effects, whereof he was robbed."

By the 27 Eliz. c. 13. par. 11. it is enacted, "That the party robbed shall not have any action, except he shall first, within twenty days next before such action to be brought, be examined upon his corporal oath, before some justice of the peace of the county where the robbery was committed, whether he knows the parties that committed the robbery, or any of them; and if upon examination, it be confessed, that he knows the parties, or any of them, that then he shall, before the action be commenced, enter into sufficient bond by recognizance before the said justice, effectually to prosecute the same person and persons."

In the construction of this clause of the statute, the following points have been holden;

That if the party does not know the robbers at the time of the robbery committed, tho' he happens to know them afterwards, it is not material. March 11.

It hath been adjudged, that the oath may be taken before a justice of the county, though not in the county at the time of administering it. 1 Jones 239. Holier v. The hundred of Benburs.

As to giving bond for payment of costs, by stat. 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. it is enacted, "That before any action commenced the party shall go before the chief clerk, or secondary, or the filazer of the county wherein such robbery shall happen, or the clerk of the pleas of that court wherein such action is intended to be brought, or their respective deputies, or before the sheriff of the county wherein the robbery shall happen, and enter into a bond to the high constable, or high constables of the hundred in which the robbery shall be committed, in the penal sum of one hundred pounds with two sufficient sureties to be approved of by such chief clerk, &c. with condition for securing to such high constable or high constables, the due payment of his or their costs, after the same shall be taxed by the proper officer; in case the plaintiff in such action shall happen to be non-suited, or shall discontinue the action, or in case judgment shall be given on demurrer, or a verdict against him."

And as to what time the action is to be brought; what evidence is necessary; and what shall excuse the hundred.

By 27 Eliz. c. 13. par. 9. The action is to be brought within one year after the robbery committed.

In the construction of this statute it hath been holden ; That if a person be robbed the 9th of October 13 Jac. and so laid, and the teste of the writ be the 9th Octob. 14 Jac. that this is not pursuant to the statute ; and that in this action, which is penal against the hundred, there is no reason to exclude the day on which the fact was done, nor to make such construction as is done in protections and the enrolment of deeds, which have always received a benign interpretation. Hob. 139, 140. Moor 878. pl. 1233. 1 Brownl. 156. S. C. Norris v. Hundred of Gwotry. Vide 1 Sid. 139. 1 Keb. 495. S. C. Newman v. Inhabitants of Strafford.

An action was brought by the master, on the statute of Wimes, for a robbery committed on his servant, in which he declared of an assault and battery done to himself, (though then 50 miles from the place,) also that he made oath that he did not know any of the persons ; the issue was entered of record, and the jury appeared at the bar ready to try it ; but being for other business adjourned to another day, the plaintiff observing his mistake moved to amend, by declaring of a robbery on his servant, &c. and it appearing that the year in which the action must be brought was expired, and consequently the action must be lost if not allowed, the court, after long debates and consideration of former precedents, admitted him to amend. 3 Lev. 347. Barcroft ver. Hundred of Barnham and Stone.

It seems that from the necessity of the case, the party himself that was robbed is to be admitted as a witness, but then his testimony must be corroborated by collateral proof and circumstances, and such as may induce a jury to believe that a robbery was actually committed, and that the party lost what he declared for. 2 Leon. 12.

By 8 Geo. 2. c. 16. it is enacted, " That in any action against any hundred, any person inhabiting within the hundred, or any franchise thereof, shall be admitted as witness for or on behalf of the hundred."

By 27 Eliz. cap. 13. par. 8. it is enacted, " That where any robbery is committed by two, or a greater number of malefactors, and that it happen any one of the said offenders to be apprehended by pursuit, to be made according to the statutes, that then, no hundred or franchise shall in any wise incur the penalty, loss or forfeiture mentioned in the statutes, although the residue of the malefactors shall happen to escape". See 1 Vent. 118, 325. Raym. 221. 2 Lev. 4. S. C. Methwin ver. Hundred of Thistleworth, and vide infra.

If hue and cry be made towards one part of the county, and an inhabitant of the hundred apprehends one of the robbers within another, this is a taking within the statute. 1 Vent. 118, 119. per Hale Ch. J.

By the 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. it is enacted, " That no hundred, or franchise therein, shall be chargeable by virtue of any of the statutes, if any one or more of the felons, by whom such robbery shall be committed, be apprehended within the space of forty days next after publick notice given in the London Gazette, as by the statute is provided."

5. Of levying the money on the hundreders.

By 27 Eliz. c. 13. par. 14. it is enacted, " That after execution of damages by the party or parties so robbed had, it shall be lawful (upon complaint made by the party charged) to and for two justices of the peace (whereof one to be of the quorum) of the same county, inhabiting within the hundred, or near unto the same where any such execution shall be had, to assess and tax reasonably and proportionably, according to their discretions, all and every the towns, parishes, villages and hamlets, as well of the said hundred where any such robbery shall be committed, as of the liberties within the said hundred, so and toward an equal contribution, to be had and made for the relief of the inhabitants, against whom the party or parties robbed before that time had execution."

The constables, &c. are to levy the money and pay it over to the justices, and they are to deliver it over to the inhabitants, for whose use it was collected.

The same taxation is to be in cases where there's default or negligence of pursuit and fresh suit, for the benefit of inhabitants having damages or money levied on them.

It hath been holden, that a person occupying lands in an hundred, although he hath no house or dwelling there, is an inhabitant within the meaning of the statute, for that otherwise the statute might be eluded. 2 Sand. 423. Leigh v. Chapman.

And now for the more equal rating and levying the money, for which the hundreds are chargeable, by the 8 Geo. 2. cap. 16. it is enacted, " That no process for appearance in any action to be brought upon either of the statutes against any hundred, shall be served on any inhabitant thereof, save only upon the high constable, or high constables of the hundred wherein the robbery shall happen, who are to cause publick notice thereof to be given, to enter an appearance, and defend the action, as advised. On recovery by the plaintiff and execution issued, the sheriff is to shew it to two justices, who are to cause an assessment, as directed by 27 Eliz. which is to include the high constable's costs." Vide the Stat. and see to the same purpose as to not executing writ of execution on any particular inhabitant, on any judgment obtained by virtue of any act of parliament. Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 46. jud. 34.

By Stat. 22 Geo. 2. cap. 24. No person shall recover against any inhabitants of any hundred, in any action on any of the statutes of hue and cry, more than 200 l. unless the persons robbed, at the time of such robbery for which such action is brought, be in company two at least, to attest the truth of being so robbed.

Robbers, (Robatores) Are interpreted to be mighty thieves by Lambard in his Eiren. lib. 2. c. 6. — Larrones validi, qui in personas hominum inflicientes bona sua diripiunt. Spelm.

Robbersmen or Robardsmen, Were a sort of great thieves, mentioned in the statutes 5 Ed. 3. c. 14. and 7 R. 2. c. 5. of whom Sir Edw. Coke says, That Robin Hood lived in the reign of King Rich. 1. on the borders of England and Scotland, by robbery, burning of houses, rapine and spoil, &c. and that these Robardsmen took name from him. 3 Inst. 197. Rome-Scot, (Romesh vel Romesc, Romescy, alias denarius Sancti Petri & hearib-peny) Is compounded of Rome and Scot, from the Sax. Scot, symbolum. Mss. Westm. says, It was Consuetudo Apostolica, a quany; van, neg; archiepiscopus vel episcopus, abbas vel prior, non quilibet in regno immunitas erat. It was an annual tribute of one penny from every family, paid yearly to Rome, at the feast of St. Peter ad Vincula, being the first of August. Camden in his Brit. says, Offa, the Saxon, first granted it; but others, that Ina, a King of the Wessex, being in pilgrimage at Rome, anno 725. gave it as an alms, and that Ina was forbidden by Edward the Third. It amounted to three hundred marks and a noble yearly. See Leg. Hen. 1. c. 1. Rog. Hoveden per. poster. Jur. Anol. Joh. 344. in ville Hen. 2. and see Peter-Prince and Heard-Penny. This payment was continued 25 H. 8. restored 1 & 2 H. 8. M. but utterly abolished 1 Eliz. 1. See Spelman's Glossary, verbiis Romesh, Romeshab, Romescy. This mark of Ravay was a burthen and a scandal to the English nation. Our fore-born ancestors often complained of it. It was one of the complaints of grievances in parliament, 8 Joh. A. D. 1206. when the King issued out this writ of sequestra; Rex archiepiscopo, episcopis, abbatibus, archidiaconis, &c. omni clero, apud sanctum Albani: contumaciter salutem. Consequens universitate civium, haereticorum, milium, & aliquam fideliem nostrorum, audimus quod non solum in laicorum gravem perniciem, sed in totius regni nostri intolerabile dispendium super Romescot praefer consuetudinem solvendo—Mandamus—ne contra regni nostri consuetudinem aliquid novum statuas.—Teste me ipso apud Rbor. 16. die Maii, anno regni nostri, 8. Car. 2. Jo. m. 1. Cordell.

Romney-Marsh, Is a large tract of land in the county of Kent, containing 24000 acres; and is governed by certain ancient and equitable laws of sewers composed by Henry de Bathe, a venerable judge, in the reign of King Henry the Third; from which laws all commissioners of sewers in England may receive light and direction. 4 Inst. 276. The commissioners of sewers, in other parts of England, may act according to the laws and customs of Romney-marsh, or otherwise at their own discretion. Black. Com. 3 P. 74. But they are subject to the discretionary coercion of the court of King's Bench. 16.

Rowt, (Fr. Route, i. e. a company or number) In a legal sense, signifies an assembly of persons, going forcibly to commit an unlawful act, though they do not do it. West. Symb. par. 2. A rowt is the same which the Germans call rot, meaning a band or great company of men gathered together, and going to execute, or intend executing, any not or unlawful act; but the Stat. 18 Ed. 3. c. 1. against rowts before justices, or in assay of the people, and 2 R. 2. c. 6. that speaks of riding in great rowts, to make entry into lands, &c. do seem to make it to be where the persons unlawfully assembled, have moved forward in order to do the intended act, but part without doing it; for whether they put their purpose in execution or not, if they do not, or move forward, after their assembling, it is a rowt. Broke 4. 5. Duke 121. However, two things are common to rowts, routs, and unlawful assemblies; the one, that three persons at least be gathered together; the other, that they being together do disturb the peace, either by words, show of arms, turbulent turbulent gesture, or actual violence, &c. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 1. c. 5. Process granted against persons causing routs, &c. Vide 18 E. 3. And Bla. k. Com. 4 V. 146. See Riot.

Royal Assent, (Regius assensus.) Is that assent which the King gives to a thing formerly done by others, as to the election of a bishop by Dean and Chapter; which given, then he sends a special writ for the taking of fealty. The form of which you may see in F. N. B. fol. 170. And to a bill passed in both houses of parliament, Crompt. Jur. fol. 8. which assent in parliament being once given, the bill is indorsed with these words, Re Roy le veult, i. e. It pleases the King. But if he refuse to agree to it, then thus, Le Roy aviseira, i. e. The King will advise. Cowell. Vide Black. Com. 1 V. 154, 183.

Rules of Court. Attornies are bound to observe the rules of the court, to avoid confusion; also the plaintiff and defendant in a cause are at their peril to take notice of the rules made in court touching the cause between them. 2 Lill. Abr. 492, 493. The court will not make a rule for a thing which may be done by the ordinary course; and if the court be informed that they have made such a rule, they will vacate it. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. And if a rule be made by the court grounded upon an affidavit, the other side may move the court against this rule; and thereupon shall bring into court a copy of the affidavit and rule made, that the affidavit may be read, to put the court in mind for what reasons they made the rule, and whether there be stronger reasons for the vacating of it, than there were for the making of it, or not. 2 Lill. 494. Where a rule of court is made, and it is not drawn up and entered before the continuance day of the same term, the clerk of the rules will not draw it up afterwards until the court be moved, and shall again order it to be entered. Pasch. 1656. For breach and contempt of a rule of court, an attachment lies; and if a rule of court is made betwixt parties by their consent, tho' the court would not have made such rule without their consent, yet, if either party refuse to obey such a rule made, the court will upon motion grant an attachment against the party that disobeyes the rule. Hill. 1655. But generally an attachment is not grantable for disobedience to any rule, unless the party hath been served with it personally; nor for disobeying a rule at Nisi prius, till it is made a rule of court; or for disobedience to a rule made by a judge at his chambers, if it be not entered. 1 Salk. 71, 83. And a rule not entered, is of no force to ground a motion upon, &c. Service of a rule for an information at the house, not good where the defendant is gone to sea. 2 Strange 1044.

Rule of court may be granted to any prisoner in the King's Bench or Fleet prison, every day the court sits, to go at large, if such prisoner hath business in law of his own to follow. 2 Lill. Abr. 493.

Rum. See Brandy, Plantations.

Rumney Marsh. King Hen. 3. granted a charter to Rumney Marsh, in the county of Kent, empowering twenty-four men thereunto chosen to make distresses equally upon all those who have lands and tenements in the said marsh, to repair the walls and watergates of the same, against the dangers of the sea. And there are several laws and customs observed in the said marsh, established by ordinance of justices thereto appointed, in the 42d year of King Hen. 3. the 16 Ed. 1. the 33 Ed. 3. &c. Sabbatum, The Sabbath, or day of rest; the seventh day from the creation: It is used for peace in the book of Domefday.

Saballinz Pelles, i. e. Sable furs, mentioned in Hornd. p. 758.—Statutum fuit in Anglorum gente ne quis escaletto, sabellino varia, vel griseo uteretur. Brompt. Anno 1188.

Sabulonarium, A gravel pit; or liberty to dig gravel and sand; also the money paid for the same. Pet. Parl. temp. Ed. 3.

Sac, (Saca vel saca) Is an ancient privilege which a lord of a manor claims to have in his court, of holding plea in causes of trespass arising among his tenants, and of imposing fines and amercements touching the same: But by some writers it is the amercement and forfeiture itself. Rastal. In the laws of King Edward, set forth by Lambard, saca is said to be the amercement paid by him who denies that which is proved against him to be true; or affirms that which is not true. Lamb. 244. And according to Fleta, Sac significat acquitanciam de scilla ad comitatum & hundredum. Fleta lib. cap. 47. Præcip. ut A. B. bene & libere habeat focan & facam. Brev. Hen. 2.

Saca, In the Saxon properly signifies as much as Causa in Lat. whence we in England still retain the expression, For whose sake, i. e. For whose cause, &c.

Sacaburh or Sacabere, Is he that is robbed, or by theft deprived of his money or goods, and puts in surety to prosecute the felon with fresh suit. Briton, c. 15 & 29. With whom agrees Bracton, lib. 3. c. 32. The Scots term it Sikerborgh, that is certum vel securum plegium vel pignus; for with them Siker significeth securus, and borgh, plegium.

Saccini, Monks so called, because they wore next their skins a garment of goat's hair; and saccus is applied to coarse cloth made of such hair. Walsing.

Saccis, Fratres de faccis, the sack-cloth brethren, or the penitential order. Placit. 8 Ed. 2.

Saccus cum brachia, Is a service or tenure of finding a sack and a broach to the King, for the use of his army. Bracton, lib. 2. c. 16.

Sack of wool, A quantity of 26 stone of sheeps wool; and of cotton-wool, from one hundred and a half to four hundred. Stat. 14 Ed. 3. c. 2.

Sacrament, (Sacramentum) Is the most solemn act of worship amongst us, being instituted by our Saviour himself; and by the Rubric there must be three at the least to communicate, and a minister is not without lawful cause to deny it to any who shall devoutly and humbly desire it: But notorious sinners are not to be admitted to it till they have repented; nor those who maliciously contend, until they are reconciled, &c. also the Sacrament is not to be administered to such who refuse to be present at the prayers of the church, or to strangers; for a minister is not obliged to give it to any but those of his own parish; and the partakers of the Holy Sacrament ought to signify their names to the curate at least a day before it is administered. Can. 27. Count. Paris. Com. 36, 37, 38.

If a minister refuse to give the Sacrament to any one, being required by the bishop, he is to certify the cause of such refusal; and a person refusing to administer the Sacrament to any without just cause, is liable to be sued in action of the case; because a man may have a temporal loss by such refusal. Rigs. Clergy 489. By the statute, no person shall be chosen into any office of magistracy, or place of trust, &c. unless they receive the Sacrament, according to the rites of the church of England, and deliver a certificate thereof to the court of King's Bench or quarter-sessions; under the hand of the minister, and prove it by witnesses. 13, 14 Car. 2. c. 4. 25 Car. 2. c. 2. In every parish church the Sacrament is to be administered three times in the year, (whereof the feast of Easter to be one) and every layman is bound to receive it thrice every year, &c. In colleges and halls of the Universities, the Sacraments are to be administered the first or second Sunday of every month; and in Cathedral Churches, upon all principal feast-days: Canon 21, 22, 23. The churchwardens as well as the minister, are to take notice whether the parishioners come so often to the Sacraments as they ought; and on a churchwarden's presenting a man for not receiving the Sacrament, he may be libelled in the Ecclesiastical court and excommunicated, &c. Reviling the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper is punishable by fine and imprisonment. 1 Eliz. c. 1.

Sacramentum, Is used for an oath: The common form of all inquisitions may by a jury run thus; Qui dicunt fateri Sacramentum suum, &c. whence possibly the proverbial offering to take the Sacrament of the truth of a thing, was first meant by attesting upon oath.

Sacramentum altaris, The sacrifice of the mass, or what is now called the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper; for which communion in the times of popery, the parish priest provided bread and wine for the people and himself, out of the offerings and oblations. Parv. Antiq. 488.

Sacrilege, (Sacrilegium) Is church robbery, or a taking of things out of a holy place; as where a person steals any vessels, ornament, or goods of the church: And it is said to be a robbery of God, at least of what is dedicated to his service. 3 Cra. 153. If any thing belonging to private persons, left in a church be stolen, it is only common theft, not sacrilege: But the Canon law determines that also to be sacrilege; as likewise the stealing of a thing known to be consecrated, in a place not consecrated. Treat. Law. 360. By the Civil law, sacrilege is punished with greater severity than any other thefts; and the Common law distinguished this crime from other robberies; for it denied the benefit of the clergy to the offenders, which it did not do to other felons: But by statute it is put upon a footing with other felonies; by making it felony excluded of clergy, as most other felonies are. 2 Inst. 250. All persons not in holy orders, who shall be indicted, whether in the same county where the fact was committed, or in a different county, of robbing any church, chapel, or other holy place, are excluded from their clergy, by 23 H. 8. c. 1. 25 H. 8. c. 3. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 10. And all persons in general are ousted of their clergy for the felonious taking of any goods out of any parish church, or other church or chapel, by the 1 Ed. 6. c. 12. But the word robbing being always taken to carry with it some force, it seems no sacrilege is within these statutes, which is not accompanied with the actual breaking of a church, &c. Kel. 58, 69. Dyer 224. And the statute 23 H. 8. is the only act which extends to accessaries to these robberies; except the offence amount to burglary, in which case accessaries before are ousted of clergy, by 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9. 2 Hawk. P. C. 351.

Sacrilege, Or alienation to laymen and to profane or common purposes of what was given to religious persons and to pious uses, was a guilt which our forefathers were very tender of incurring; and therefore when the order of the Knights Templars was dissolved, their lands were given to the Knights Hospitallers of Jerusalem for this reason—Ne in pios usus erogata contra donatorum voluntatem in alios usus distraberentur. Paroch. Antiq. 390.

Sacrista, (Lat.) A Sexton, belonging to a church, in old times called Sacristan and Sagison.

Safe-conduct, (Salmi conductus) Is a security given by the Prince, under the Great Seal, to a stranger, for his safe coming into and passing out of the realm; the form whereof is in Reg. Orig. 25. There are letters of safe conduct which must be enrolled in Chancery; and the persons to whom granted must have them ready to shew: And touching which there are several statutes, viz. 9 H. 3. c. 30. 15 H. 6. c. 3. 28 H. 8. c. 1. Vide Black. Com. 1 P. 259: 4 P. 68.

Saguardia, (Salva guardia) A protection of the King to one who is a stranger that fears violence from some of his his subjects, for seeking his right by course of law. Reg. Orig. 26.

Salary, (Salarium) Is a recompence or consideration made to a person for his pains and industry in another man's business: The word is used in the statute 23 Ed. 3. cap. 1. Salarium at first signified the rent or profits of a Sala, hall or house; (and in Gascogne they now call the seats of the gentry Sala's, as we do halls) but afterwards it was taken for any wages, stipend, or annual allowance.

Sale, (Venditio) Is the transferring the property of goods from one to another, upon valuable consideration: And if a bargain is that another shall give me 5 l. for such a thing, and he gives me earnest, which I accept, this is a perfect sale, Wood's Inst. 316. On sale of goods, if earnest be given to the seller, and part of them are taken away by the buyer, he must pay the residue of the money upon fetching away the rest, because no other time is appointed; and the earnest given binds the bargain, and gives the buyer a right to demand the goods; but a demand without paying the money is void: And it has been held, that after the earnest is taken, the seller cannot dispose of the goods to another, unless there is some default in the buyer; therefore if he doth not take away the goods and pay the money, the seller ought to require him so to do; and then if he doth not do it in convenient time, the bargain and sale is dissolved, and the seller may dispose of them to any other person. 1 Salk. 113. A seller of a thing is to keep it a reasonable time, for delivery: But where no time is appointed for delivery of things sold, or for payment of the money, it is generally implied that the delivery be made immediately, and payment on the delivery. 3 Salk. 61. Where one agrees for wares sold, the buyer must not carry them away before paid for; except a day of payment is allowed him by the seller. Noy 87. It is said a perfect bargain and sale between parties, will be good, tho' the seller knows of an execution that is against him; and doth sell the goods to prevent the falling of it upon them. 3 Shrep. Abr. 115. A sale may be of any living or dead goods in a fair or market, be they whose they will, or however the seller come by them; if made with the cautions required by law: But if one sell my goods unduly, I may have them again. Dott. and Stud. 328. Perk. Sect. 93. If a man affirms a thing sold is of such a value when it is not, this is not actionable; but if he actually warrants it, at the time of the sale, and not afterwards, it will bear an action, being part of the contract. 2 Cro. 5, 386, 630. 1 Roll. Abr. 97. See Contract. And Sales of Goods in Markets, to be binding, &c. Vide Market. And Black. Com. 2 V. 9, 446.

Sale. The price of sale is to be set by justices of peace in their sessions; and persons selling it at a higher rate shall forfeit 5 l. Also sale shall be sold by weight after the rate of 56 lb. to the bushel, under the like penalty. Stat. 9 & 10 H. 3. And a duty is imposed on salt by statute; pits to be entered, &c. at the Salt-Office on pain of 40 l. penalty; and proprietors removing salt from any pit, before weighed in presence of the proper officer, to forfeit 20 l. &c. 10 l. 3. c. 22. 1 Ann. c. 21. But the duties on salt made in this kingdom were taken off, and duty on foreign salt to continue, except for the British fishery, &c. by Stat. Geo. 2. c. 20. And since the duties on salt have been revived and continued, to be managed by commissioners, &c. who may grant licences to erect houses for refining of rock salt, at certain places in the counties of Essex and Suffox. 5 Geo. 2. c. 6. and 7 Geo. 2. c. 6. The salt duties continued for a further term, and under the same provisions, &c. with a clause of loan of 500,000 l. And proprietors of salt works in Scotland, are not to pay their work-people in salt, under the penalty of 20 l. Stat. 8 Geo. 2. c. 12. By a late statute, the salt duties are further continued, with a loan of 1,200,000 l. at 4 l. per cent. interest, &c. Rock salt may be used in the making of salt from sea water in works in Wales, paying the duties on both. 14 Geo. 2. c. 22. The salt duties are made perpetual by Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 3. And see Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 32.

Sanction of Laws. With regard to the sanction of laws, or the evil that may attend the breach of publick duties; it is observed, that human legislators have for the most part chosen to make the sanction of their laws rather vindicatory than remuneratory, or to consist rather in punishments, than in actual particular rewards. Because, in the first place, the quiet enjoyment and protection of all our civil rights and liberties, which are the sure, and general consequence of obedience to the Municipal law, are in themselves the best and most valuable of all rewards. Because, also, were the exercise of every virtue to be enforced by the proposal of particular rewards, it were impossible for any state to furnish stock enough for so profuse a bounty. And farther, because the dread of evil is a much more forcible principle of human actions than the prospect of good. (Locks, Hum.

Und. 1. 2. c. 21.) For which reason, tho' a prudent bestowing of rewards is sometimes of exquisite use, yet we find that those Civil laws which enforce and enjoin our duty, do seldom, if ever, propose any privilege or gift to such as obey the law; but do constantly come armed with a penalty denounced against transgressors, either expressly defining the nature and quantity of the punishment, or else leaving it to the discretion of the judges, and those who are entrusted with the care of putting the laws in execution.

Of all the parts of a law the most effectual is the vindicatory. For it is but lost labour to say, "do this, or avoid that," unless we also declare, "this shall be the consequence of your non-compliance." We must therefore observe, that the main strength and force of a law consists in the penalty annexed to it.—Herein is to be found the principal obligation of human laws. Black. Com. 1 V. 56, 7.

Sanctuary, (Sanctuarium) Is a place privileged for the safe-guard of offenders lives, being founded upon the law of mercy, and the great reverence and devotion which the Prince bears to the place whereunto he grants such privilege. Sanctuaries were first granted by King Lucius to our churches and their precincts; and among all other nations, our ancient Kings of England seem to have attributed most to those Sanctuaries, permitting them to shelter such as had committed both felonies and treasons; so as within forty days they acknowledged their fault, and submitted themselves to banishment; during which space, if any layman expelled them, he was excommunicated; and if a clerk, he was made irregular. Mat. West. Ann. 187. S. P. C. lib. 2. cap. 38. Phia; lib. 1. cap. 29. St. John's of Beverly in Yorkshire had an eminent sanctuary belonging to it in the time of the Saxons: And St. Burien in Cornwall had the like granted by King Albelsian, Anno 935. so had Westminster granted by King Edward the Confessor; and St. Martin le Grand in London. 21 H. 8. &c. See Black. Com. 4 V. 326, 358, 429.

Sanctuaries, It has been observed, did not gain the name of such till they had the Pope's bull, tho' they had full privilege of exemption from temporal courts by the King's grant only: But no sanctuary granted by general words, extended to high treason; tho' it extended to all felonies, except sacrilege, and all inferior crimes, not committed by a sanctuary man; and it never was a protection against any action civil, any farther than to save the defendant from execution of his body, &c. 2 Hawck. P. C. 335, 336. Sanctuaries were abolished here by the statutes 26, 28 & 32 H. 8. and 1 & 2 Ed. 6. And the Plea of Sanctuary with Abjuration is taken away by 21 Jac. 1. c. 2.

Saxon-lage, (Saxon-laga, Lex Saxonum) The law of the West Saxons by which they were governed. See Merchenlage. And Black. Com. 4 V. 403, 4. 5.

As to the reason why so many traces of the Saxon laws, language and customs are to be found in England, Robertson, in his History of Emperor Charles V. 1 V. 197. Note, IV. Says, "The Saxons carried on the Conquest of that country with the same destructive spirit, which distinguished the other barbarous nations. The ancient inhabitants of Britain were either exterminated; or forced to take shelter among the mountains of Wales, or reduced into servitude. The Saxon government, laws, manners, and language were of consequence introduced into Britain; and were so perfectly established, that all memory of the institutions previous to their Conquest was abolished." As to the laws of the Saxons, for putting an end to private wars. See Id. 285.

Scabini, Is a word used for wardens at Linne in Norfolk. Sciunt presentes & futuri quod nos, &c. Custodes fore scabini & fratres fraternitatis fore glida mercatoria sancte trinitatis villa Linne in Com. Norf. Chanc. Hen. 8.

Scalam, Ad scalam, The old way of paying money into the Exchequer. The Merit, &c. is to make payment ad scalam, i. e. solvitur præter quamlibet numeratum librum seu denarium. Stat. W. 1. And at that time sixpence being added to the pound made up the full weight, and near the intrinsic value. This was agreed upon as a medium to be the common estimate for the defective weight of money; thereby to avoid the trouble of weighing it when brought to the Exchequer. *Lowndes's Ess. on Coin, pag. 4. Scandalum magnatum, Is the special name of a statute, and also of a wrong done to any high personage of the land, as prelates, dukes, earls, barons, and other nobles; and also to the chancellor, treasurer, clerk of the Privy seal, steward of the house, justice of one bench or other, and other great officers of the realm, by false news, or horrible or false messages, whereby debates and discords betwixt them and the commons, or any scandal to their persons might arise. Stat. 2 R. 2. cap. 5. and hath given name to a writ, granted to recover damages thereupon. Corwell.

At the time of making the law, on which this action is founded, the constitution of this kingdom was martial, and given to arms; the very tempers were military, and so were the services; as knight-service, castle-guard and escuage; so that all provocations by vilifying words were revenged by the sword, which often created factions in the Commonwealth, and endangered the government itself; for in this kind of quarrels the great men, or peers of the realm, usually engaged their vassals, tenants and friends; so that laws were then made against wearing of liveries or badges, and against riding armed; so the stat. Westm. 2. appoints that the offender shall suffer imprisonment until he produces the author of a false report. 2 Mod. 156.

The law on which this action is grounded, is the 2 Rich. 2. stat. 1. cap. 5. which enacts, "That of counterfeits of false news, and horrible lies, of Prelates, Dukes, Earls, Barons, and other nobles and great men of the realm, and also of the chancellor, treasurer, clerk of the Privy seal, steward of the King's house, justices of the one bench or of the other, and other great officers of the realm, it is defended that none contrive or tell any false things of Prelates, Lords, and of others aforesaid, whereof discord or slander might rise within the realm, and he who doth the same shall be imprisoned till he have brought him forth that did speak the same." This statute is recited by the 12 R. 2. cap. 11. and thereby it is further provided, that the offender shall be punished by the advice of the council. 4 Inst. 51. 4 Co. 12. b. See Black. Com. 1 V. 402. 3 V. 123.

1. Who may bring this action, and for what words it lies.
2. Of the proceedings in this action.

1. Who may bring this action, and for what words it lies.

It hath been held, that the King is not included in the words great men of the realm, as the statute begins with an enumeration of persons of an inferior rank, as Prelates, Dukes, &c. Crompt. Jurist. 19. 35.

Also it is held, that a woman noble by birth is not included to this action. Crompt. Jurist. 34.

It hath been adjudged, that tho' there was no viscount at the time of making this statute, (the first viscount being John Beaumont who was created viscount, 18 Hen. 6.) yet when created noble, tho' by a new title, he was included to this action on this statute. Crompt. Jurist. 136. Falsb. 565. Viscount Sey and See v. Stephens.

Also it hath been adjudged, that since the union a peer of Scotland may have an action on this statute, and that it is not necessary for him to alledge that he hath a seat and and voice in parliament; for by the 5 Ann. c. 8. art. 23. All peers of Scotland after the union shall be peers of Great Britain, and have rank and precedence, &c. be tried, &c. and enjoy all privileges of peers as the peers of England now do or hereafter may enjoy, except the right and privilege of sitting in the House of Lords, and the privilege depending thereon, and particularly the right of sitting upon the trial of peers. Cam. 439. Lord Viscount Falkland v. Phipps.

It hath been contended for, that no words of slander are punishable by this statute, unless they are actionable at Common law, and that they are only aggravated by the statute, which in this respect is like the King's proclamation. 2 Mod. 151. Sir Robert Atkins in his argument. Freeman. 222.

But the contrary hereof seems to have been holden in most of the cases on this head, and not without reason, as it would be to no purpose to make a law, and thereby to give a peer an action for such words as a common person might have before the making of the statute, and for which the peer himself had equally a remedy by the Common law; and therefore the design of the statute must be, not only to punish such things as import a great scandal in themselves, or such for which an action lay at the Common law, but also such things as favoured of any contempt of the persons of the peers or great men, and brought them into disgrace with the Commons, whereby they took occasion of provocation and revenge. 2 Mod. 156.

It hath been observed, that no action was brought on this statute 'till 100 years after the making thereof, the Lords still continuing the military way of revenge to which they had been accustomed. 2 Mod. 156. Sir Francis Pemberton's argument.

The first case on this statute, said to be reported, is in Kelw. where the Lord Blanchamp brought an action of scan. mag. against Sir Richard Croft, for that the said Richard had sued out a writ of forgery of false deeds against him; and it was held, that the taking out the writ being done in a legal way, and in a course of justice, the action did not lie. Kelw. 26, 27. 2 Mod. 164. cited.

Scan. mag. brought for saying of a judge; you are a corrupt judge, and held actionable. Cromp. Jur. 35. Ld. Ch. J. Lord Winchester's case, cited Freeman. 221. So these words, You have writ a letter to me, which I have to shew, which is against the word of God, against the Queen's authority, and to the maintenance of superstition, and that I will stand to prove against you, were held actionable; and 500 marks damages given. Cro. Eliz. 1. Bishop of Norwich v. Prichett. So of these words, My Lord Mordant did know that Prude robbed Shutbol, and bid me compound with Shutbol for the same, and said he would see me satisfied for the same tho' it cost him 100*l.* which I did for him, being my master, otherwise the evidence I could have given, would have hanged Prude. Cro. Eliz. 67. Ld. Mordant v. Bridges. For these words wrote in a letter, I have heard that your Lordship hath sought by uncharitable means to bereave me of my life, lands and liberty, an action lies. Moor 142. Ld. Lumley v. Fox. 4 Co. 16. S. C. that the action as well lies for words written as those spoken. 2 Show. 505.

An action of scan. mag. was brought for these words, There are more Jesuits come into England since the Earl of Northampton was Lord of the Cinque ports than ever there were before, and held actionable. 22 Co. Earl of Northampton's case. In scan. mag. for these words spoken by a parson in the pulpit, The lord of Lancaster is a wicked and cruel man; and an enemy to the reformation in England, adjudged actionable, and 500*l.* damages given. 2 Sid. 21. Ld. Leicester v. Mancy.

So for these words, The Earl of Portland is of so little esteem in the country, that no man of reputation hath any esteem for him, and no man will take his word for a d. and no man of reputation values him more than I do the dirt under my feet, and held actionable, tho' said they would not be so in the case of a common person. Freem. 49. Earl of Portland v. Savill.

If one says, I met J. S. whom I do not know, but my Lord P. sent after me to take my purse, an action of scan. delum magnatum lies, tho' not positively said my Lord P. sent him, or that it was to take the purse feloniously; which last, in case of an action by a common person, might be a good exception. 1 Lev. 277. 1 Sid. 434. 2 Keb. 537. E. of Peterborough v. Sir John Mordant. Vide 1 Sid. 233. 1 Keb. 813. 1 Lev. 148. Marquis of Dorchester v. Proby. If one says of a peer, He is an unworthy man, and acts against law and reason; an action of scan. mag. lies, notwithstanding the words are general, and charge him with nothing certain: And so adjudged by North, Windham, and Scroggs; against the opinion of Atkins, who said the statute extended not to words of so small and trivial a nature, but to such only which were of greater magnitude, by which discord might arise, &c. and therefore the words horrible lies were inserted in the statute. Note; the rule laid down by the court in this case was, that words should not be construed either in a rigid or mild sense, but according to the general and natural meaning, and agreeable to the common understanding of all men. 2 Mod. 151. &c. 1 Mod. 232. Freeman. 220. Lord Townsend v. Doctor Hughes.

2. Of the proceedings in this action.

It is now clearly agreed, that tho' there be no express words in the statute which give an action, yet the party injured may maintain one on this principle of law, that when a statute prohibits the doing of a thing, which if done might be prejudicial to another, in such a case he may have an action on that very statute for his damages. 2 Mod. 152.

That tho' the action is to be brought tam pro domino rege quam pro se ipso, yet the party is to recover all the damages. 1 Peer Will. 690. That if the words are actionable at Common law, the peer hath his election to proceed on the statute, or at Common law. Freem. 49. It hath been held, that this being a general law, the plaintiff need not recite it particularly, and that if he sets forth so much thereof as shews his case to be within the statute, it is sufficient. Cro. Car. 136. 2 Sid. 21. Freeman. 425. That it is now settled that no new trial is to be granted in scan. mag. for excessive damages; which points seem to have been first determined in the before mentioned case of Lord Townsend v. Dr. Hughes, where the jury gave 4000*l.* damages. 2 Mod. 151. 1 Mod. 231.

It has been ruled, that in scan. mag. the defendant cannot justify, let the words be ever so true, because the action is brought qui tam, in which the King is concerned; but it hath been held that the defendants may explain the words by shewing the occasion of speaking of them, and thereby extenuate the meaning of them, as was done in Lord Cromwell's case. 4 Co. 14. 2 Mod. 166. Freeman. 220. Poph. 67.

In scan. mag. the court will never change the venue on the common affidavit that the words were spoken in another county, because a scandal raised on a peer of the realm reflects on him thro' the whole kingdom; and he is a person of so great notoriety, that there is no necessity of his being tied down to try his cause among his neighbourhood. Carth. 400. 2 Salk. 668. Vide 1 Lev. 56. 1 Keb. 514. 1 Sid. 185. 2 Mod. 216.

But in the case of Lord Shaftesbury v. Graham, the court in scan. mag. on a special affidavit of the plaintiff's power and interest in the county where the action was laid, made a rule for changing the venue; but note, that the books which report and cite this case, mention it as a case of the times; and that it was owing to the great influence that Lord had in the city of London that the court varied from the general rule, and which rule hath ever since, notwithstanding this case, been adhered to. 2 To. 103. 1 Peer Will. 363. Skin. 40. 2 Show. 200.

It hath been held, that the statute, which appoints that actions for words shall be commenced in the Exchequer chamber, does not extend to scan. mag. Cro. Car. 586. And it hath been held, that the statute 27 Eliz. for bringing a writ of error in the Exchequer chamber does not extend to this action. Cro. Car. 385. 1 Sid. 143.

It hath been held, that in an action of flan. mag. special bail is not required. 3 Mod. 41. Holt Rep. 646. It hath been held, that no costs are to be given the plaintiff on his obtaining a verdict. 2 Show. 506.

Scavage, Screebage, or Schewage, (from the Sax. schewian, i. e. offendere) A kind of toll or custom, exacted by mayors, sheriffs, &c. of merchant strangers, for wares shewed or exposed to sale within their liberties; prohibited by the statute 19 H. 7. c. 7. But the city of London still retains this ancient custom to a good yearly profit: And the Lord Chancellor, Treasurer, President of the Council, Privy Seal, Steward, and two Justices of the King's Bench and Common Pleas, are to ascertain these duties, and order tables to be made, mentioning the particulars, &c. by 22 H. 8. c. 8.

Scabaldus, The officer who collected the scavage money, which was sometimes done with great extortion.

Scavengers, (from the Belg. schaven, to scrape or carry away) Are persons chosen into this office in London and its suburbs, who hire rakers and carts to cleanse the streets, and carry the dirt and filth thereof away. 14 Car. 2. c. 2. In Easter week yearly, two tradesmen in every parish within the weekly bills of mortality must be elected scavengers by the constables, churchwardens, and other inhabitants, who are to take upon them the office in seven days, under the penalty of 10*l.* These scavengers every day, except Sundays or holidays, are to bring their carts into the streets, and give notice by a bell, or otherwise, of carrying away dirt, and to stay a convenient time, or shall forfeit 40*s.* and justices of peace in their petit sessions may give scavengers liberty to lodge their dirt in vacant places near the streets, satisfying the owner for the damage, &c. All persons, within the weekly bills, are to sweep the streets before their doors, every Wednesday and Saturday, on pain of forfeiting 3*s.* 4*d.* and persons laying dirt or ashes before their houses, incur a forfeiture of 5*s.* Inhabitants and owners of houses are also to pave the streets before their own houses, on the penalty of 20*s.* for every perch: And constables, churchwardens, &c. may make a scavenger's tax, being allowed by two justices of the peace, not exceeding 4*d.* in the pound, &c. 2 W. & M. c. 2. By the Stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 48. Justices of peace in their quarter-sessions may appoint scavengers, and order the repairing and cleansing the streets in any city or market-town, and appoint persons to make assessments, so as not to exceed 6*d.* per pound per ann. to defray the charge of such scavengers, to be collected and levied by distress; and when new scavengers are chosen, the old ones must account before two justices for the money assessed and collected, and pay what remains in their hands to the new scavengers, or be committed to prison, &c. The assessments for scavengers of the parishes of St. Anne Westminster, and St. James, shall be rated according to the custom of the city; and ancient streets in the city are to be maintained according to ancient usage, &c. The Lord Mayor or any Alderman may present upon view, any offence within the city of London, and assess fines not exceeding 20*s.* to be paid to the Chamberlain for the use of the city, &c. Stat. 16. Trustees and commissioners appointed to clean and repair St. James's Square, and continue the same cleaned; and rates to be made and assessed on houses, at so much per foot in front, leviable by distress; and annoying the square by filth, is liable to 20*s.* penalty, &c. by 12 Geo. 1. c. 25. For the better paving and cleansing the streets in the city of Westminster, &c. Surveyors are to be nominated by justices of peace, who shall take a view of all the streets every six weeks, and make presentments of pavements out of repair, cause the same to be amended, &c. And the surveyors to have an allowance not exceeding 8*l.* per ann. out of the scavenger's rates, &c. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 11. Persons authorized by 22 & 23 Car. 2. may order such parts of London streets, &c. as lie before vacant houses, to be paved and amended; and impose assessments on the owners, to be paid on their account by the next occassers, and deducted out of rent; and in the mean time, the Chamberlain of the city shall pay the taxes: And such authorized persons may direct posts to be set up in all passages within the city, to preserve foot-paths, and for that purpose make assessments. 20 Geo. 2. c. 22. A scavenger's rate cannot be made for a division in which there is no parish officer. 1 Str. 630. See the new statutes.

Schoolmaster. No person shall keep or maintain a schoolmaster, who does not constantly go to church, or is not allowed by the ordinary; in pain of 10*l.* a month; and the schoolmaster shall be disabled, and suffer a year's imprisonment. Stat. 23 Eliz. c. 1. Recusants are not to be schoolmasters in any publick grammar school, nor any other, unless the persons be licensed by the bishop; under the penalty of forfeiting 40*s.* a day. 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. Every schoolmaster keeping any publick or private school, and every tutor in any private family, shall subscribe the declaration, that he will conform to the liturgy of the church of England as by law established, and be licensed by the ordinary; or he shall for the first offence suffer three months imprisonment, &c. 13 Car. 2. c. 4. If any papist shall be convicted of keeping a school, or take upon him the education of youth, he shall be adjudged to perpetual imprisonment. 12 Geo. 2. c. 4. Persons keeping schools without a licence from the bishop, and receiving the sacrament of the church of England, taking the oath, &c. (except tutors in reading, writing, and arithmetic) shall be committed to the common goal for three months, &c. 12 Ann. c. 7. But this last statute, as to schoolmasters receiving the sacrament of the church, is repealed by 5 Geo. 3. c. 3. By our canons, no man shall teach in a publick school, or private house, but such as is examined and allowed by the bishop, and of school life: And all schoolmasters are to teach the catechism of the church in English or Latin; and bring their scholars to church; and afterwards examine them how they have benefited by sermons, 32. Can. 77, 79. Tho' the act of uniformity obliges schoolmasters only to assent to and subscribe the declaration, yet it adds according to the laws and statutes of this realm, which presupposes some necessary qualification. And therefore a bishop may take time to inquire into the character of elected schoolmaster, before he licenses him. 2 Strange 1023. See Black. Com. 1 V. 453.

Scilicet, An adverb, signifies, that is to say, to wit; and hath been often used in law proceedings. Sir John Hobart, in his exposition of this word, says, it is not a direct and separate clause, nor a direct and intire clause, but intermedia; neither is it a substantive clause of itself, but it is rather to usher in the sentence of another, and to particularise that which was too general before, or distribute that which was too gross, or to explain that which was doubtful and obscure; and it must neither increase nor diminish, for it gives nothing of itself. But it may make a restriction, where the precedent words are not so very express, but they may be restrained. Hob. 171, 172. The word scilicet, in a declaration, shall not make any alteration of that which went before. Poph. 201, 204. And yet, in some cases, the scilicet which introduces a subsequent, shall not be rejected. 2 Cro. 618.

Scire facias, Is a writ judicial, most commonly to call a man to shew cause to the court whence it issues, why execution of a judgment passed should not be made out. This writ is not granted until a year and a day be elapsed after a judgment given. Old Nat. Brev. fol. 451. Scire facias upon a fine lies not, but within the same time after the fine levied, otherwise it is the same with the writ of habere facias possessionem. *Westl. 1. Of the nature of the writ, and in what cases it is a proper remedy.
2. Of the scire facias to revive judgments, and after what time necessary.
3. Of the scire facias on recognizances and statutes.
4. Of pleading to a scire facias.
5. Of scire facias against testaments, and against whom to be brought, &c.
6. Of other points generally, not classed under the former heads.

1. Of the nature of the writ, and in what cases it is a proper remedy.

A scire facias is deemed a judicial writ, and founded on some matter of record, as judgments, recognizances and letters patent, on which it lies to enforce the execution of them, or to vacate or set them aside; and tho' it be a judicial writ of execution, yet it is so far in nature of an original, that the defendant may plead to it, and is in that respect considered as an action; and therefore it is held, that a release of all actions, or a release of all executions, is a good bar to a scire facias. Lit. sect. 305. Co. Litt. 290. b. 291. a. F. N. B. 267.

But tho' it be held that a scire facias is in nature of an original, yet it hath been adjudged, that no writ of error lies into the Exchequer chamber on a judgment given in B. R. on a scire facias the statute 17 Edw. 3. cap. 8. which gives the writ of error, mentioning only suits or actions of debt, detinue, covenant, account, actions upon the case, questions of law, or trespass. Cro. Car. 286. 300. 460. 1 Rol. Rep. 260. 1 Vent. 38. 1 Ball. 267.

Also it was formerly held, that the plaintiff could not in a scire facias recover costs; but this is now remedied by the statute 8 W. 3. Will. 4. 17 Geo. 3. 3 Inst. 320.

If a bill of exception be tendered to a judge, and he signs it and dies, a scire facias lies against his executor or administrators to certify it. 4 Inst. 428. See 1 Inst. 428.

A scire facias lies against a sheriff who levies money on a fi. fa. and retains it in his hands. Holt 32. Cro. Jac. 514. 1 And. 247. Godh. 276.

So a fi. fa. will lie for a fine assessed on the party at the justice seat of a forest. Cro. Car. 409. Lies to have execution of damages recovered in appeal. Cro. Jac. 549.

Upon an elegavit returned by the sheriff, a scire facias lies against the pledges in a replevin, by plaint in the sheriff's court, transmitted to the hushings, and so to B. R. by certiorari. Comb. 1. That a scire facias lies against the sheriff for taking insufficient pledges in replevin. Hutt. 77.

If one hath judgment in a quare impedit, and afterwards, before execution, the party is outlawed, the King may have a scire facias to execute the judgment; the King having privy enough in this case to sue execution, because the thing, as it was in the plaintiff, vested in the King. Moor 241. Cro. Eliz. 44, 325. Where having the thing gives a sufficient privy to maintain a scire facias. Kelw. 168, 169.

On a motion to discharge an outlawry which was pardoned by the act of oblivion, the court held that it could not be done on motion, but that the party must bring a scire facias on the act. Stil. 348.

Where one obtained judgment, and after had judgment on a scire facias thereupon, and then became a bankrupt, and the original judgment was assigned by the commissioners to S. S. upon motion, it was entered to intitle him to the benefit of the judgment on the scire facias without bringing a new one. 3 Med. 88.

A scire facias brought by the successor of a president of the college of physicians in London, upon a judgment in debt obtained by him upon the statute 14 H. 8. against practising physick in London without a licence, but died before execution; it was objected on demurrer, that the scire facias ought to have been brought by the executor or administrator of him who recovered: But without argument the court held, that the successor might well maintain the action, for the suit is given to the college by a private statute, and the suit is to be brought by the president for the time being; and he having recovered in right of the corporation, the law shall transfer that duty to the successor of him who recovered. Cro. Jac. 159. Dr. Atkins v. Gardiner.

A scire facias was brought in the court of C. B. to reverse a fine in ancient demesne; and it was ruled, that no such writ lay, but that the party ought to bring his writ of deceit. Mitch. 7. W. 3. in C. B. Zouch v. Thompson.

2. Of the scire facias to revive judgments, and after what time necessary.

There have been different opinions whether a scire facias lay at Common law; but this doubt, says my Lord Coke, arose for want of distinguishing between personal and real actions. 2 Inst. 469.

At Common law, if after judgment given, or recognizance acknowledged, the plaintiff did not sue out execution within the year, the plaintiff or his counsel was driven to his original upon the judgment, and the scire facias in personal actions was given by the statute of Westm. 2. c. 45.

But in real actions, or upon a fine, tho' no execution was sued out within a year after the judgment given or fine levied, yet after the year a scire facias lay for the land, &c. because no new original lay upon the judgment or fine. 2 Inst. 470.

A scire facias lay as well in mixed as real actions, and upon a judgment in an assize. So it lay upon a judgment in a writ of annuity. 10 E. 258. 600.

It hath been adjudged, that if there be judgment in execution, and no execution had thereon is a year and a day, an elegavit from the sheriff cannot be sued out after without a scire facias; and Holt Ch. J. said, that as to the execution of the law, judgment was real, and the only remedy a scire facias for years had, and that a recovery therein bound the right of inheritance. Salk. 258. 600. Comb. 250. Barth. 64. and 1 Sid. 307, 331. 2 Kellogg. Stil. 161. 3 Lew. 200. Linn. 2262.

But

But tho' after a year and a day there can be no execution of a judgment without a scire facias, yet if the plaintiff hath been delayed by a writ of error, he may take out execution within a year and a day after the judgment affirmed. 5 Co. 88. Moor 566. pl. 77a. *Cro. So if after the year after the recovery the defendant brings a writ of error, and the judgment is affirmed, tho' before the writ of error brought the recoverer was put to his sci. fa. yet this affirmance is a new judgment, and the recoverer may have within the year after the affirmance a fi. fa. or capias without a scire facias. 1 Rel. Abr. 899. and see Palm. 449. Latch 193.

So if he be nonsuit in the writ of error, or if the writ of error be discontinued; for tho' in these cases there is not any new judgment given, yet the bringing of the writ of error revives the first judgment. Cro. Jac. 364. 1 Rel. Rep. 104, 113. Vide 1 Rel. Abr. 899.

Also it hath been held, that where execution hath been taken out after the year and day, it is not void, but voidable only. 3 Leon. 404. Salk. 273.

In the case of the King there need not be any sci. fa. after the year and day. 2 Salk. 603.

If a judgment be above ten years standing, the plaintiff cannot sue a scire facias without a motion in court; if under ten but above seven, he cannot have a scire facias without a motion at sole bar. Note; after such motion, and judgment revived by sci. fa. if the defendant dies before execution, the plaintiff must sue a new sci. fa. but may have it without motion, for the judgment was revived before. Salk. 598. Hardisty v. Barny.

After a judgment, if the plaintiff within the year sues a sci. fa. he cannot after have a capias within the year 'till he hath a new judgment in the sci. fa. 1 Rel. Abr. 900. Trin. 13 Car. 1. Roberts v. Pifeng. See Black. Com. 3 V. 421.

3. Of the scire facias on recognizances and statutes.

Recognizances and statutes are considered as judgments, being obligations solemnly acknowledged, and entered of record, and the sci. fa. on those is the judicial writ and proper remedy which the consuee hath; but herein we must distinguish between recognizances at Common law and statutes merchant, &c. for upon the former, if the consuee did not take out execution within a year after the day of payment assigned in the recognizance, he was obliged to commence the suit again by original; the law presuming the debt might have been paid, if they did not sue execution within the year after the money became payable; but this law is altered by Westm. 2. c. 49. by which the consuee hath a sci. fa. given him to revive the judgment, and put it in execution, if the consuee cannot stop it by pleading such matter as the law judges sufficient for that end, such as a release, &c. but the consuee of a statute merchant, &c. may at any time sue execution on them without the delay or charge of a sci. fa. Lit. R. 89. That a capias lies not on a recognizance, but only a sci. fa. 1 Brownl. 83. Co. Lit. 291. 2 Inst. 469. F. N. B. 296. Bro. Recog. 17.

Also as to recognizances at Common law, and statutes and recognizances introduced by statute law, we must further distinguish, that if on the first the consuee dies before execution sued, his executor shall not sue it, even within the year, without bringing a sci. fa. against the consuee; the reason is, because the law presumes the debt might have been paid to the testator, and therefore will not suffer the debtor to be molested, unless it appear that he hath omitted to perform the judgment; and this is to be done by sci. fa. brought by the executor, for the alteration of the person altereth the process at Common law; but this tending to delay, the sci. fa. is taken away in statutes and recognizances by statute law, by the several acts of parliament which introduced them, and therefore upon the death of the consuee of a statute merchant, &c. his executors may come into Chancery, and upon their producing the testament and the statute, shall have execution without a sci. fa. as the testator himself might. 2 Inst. 395, 471. Bro. Stat. Merch. 16, 43, 50.

If a man be bound in a recognizance to the King, upon condition to be of good behaviour, &c. he cannot be indicted for breach of the good behaviour, by which he forfeits his recognizance, without a sci. fa. for if a sci. fa. had been brought, he might have pleaded some matter in discharge thereof. 4 Inst. 181. 1 Rel. Abr. 900. What shall be said a breach, see Cro. Car. 498. and how to be assigned, see 3 Bulst. 220. Cro. Jac. 415. Stil. 369.

If a man acknowledges a recognizance to be paid at a day within the year after the date of the recognizance, in this case he may have execution by fi. fa. or elegit within the year after the day of payment, tho' the year be past from the date of the recognizance. 21 Ed. 3. 22. b. 1 Rel. Abr. 899, 900. 2 Inst. 471. Vide 2 Rel. Abr. 468. Ca. Lis. 292.

If a man recovers an annuity, he shall have execution for every time that occurs after by fi. fa. or elegit within the year after the time incurred, tho' the year be past from the judgment, but not after the year without a sci. fa. 1 Rel. Abr. 900. 2 Inst. 471. Salk. 258, 600.

If two acknowledge a recognizance of 100 l. quilibet eorum in solido, that is jointly and severally, the consuee may sue several sci. fa. against the consuees upon this recognizance. 2 Inst. 395. See farther as to sci. fa. against bail, Black. Com. 3 V. 416. et infra.

4. Of pleading to a scire facias.

Scire facias may be pleaded to, before judgment given upon it; afterwards it is too late: Though a writ of error may be brought to reverse the judgment on the scire facias, if that be not good on which the judgment was grounded. Ibid. 503. Payment is no plea at Common law to a scire facias upon a judgment; because it is a debt upon record. 3 Lev. 120. But this is altered by the 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. Whatever is pleadable to the original action in abatement, shall not be pleadable to disable the plaintiff from having execution on a scire facias; because the defendant had admitted him able to have judgment. 1 Salk. 2. If a judgment be obtained against an executor, and afterwards a scire facias is brought against him upon that judgment, he cannot plead a judgment recovered against his testator, and that he hath not assets infra, &c. because he might have pleaded it to the first action; for it is a settled rule that if a defendant hath a matter proper for his defence, and he neglects to plead it in bar to the action at the time he may, he shall never take advantage of it after. 2 Strange 732. In scire facias on a judgment in debt, or other personal action, the defendant cannot plead non-tenure of the land generally, where it is contrary to the return of the sheriff; but he may plead a special non-tenure: But in a scire facias facias to have execution in a real action, the defendant may plead non-tenure generally, because the freehold is in question, and that is favoured in law; and the tenants may plead there are better tenants not named, and pray judgment if they ought to answer quousq, the others are summoned, &c. though it would be other wise if the sci. fac. had been against particular tenants by name. 2 Salk. 601. On a sci. fac. to have execution upon a judgment in action of debt, every tenant is to be contributory; and therefore one shall not answer, as long as he can shew that another is so, and not warned: Contra in a scire facias upon a judgment in a real action; for every tenant is to answer for that which he hath, and one may be contributory, and the other not. 2 Cro. 507. 3 Nelf. Abr. 204.

5. Of scire facias against ter-tenants, and against whom to be brought, &c.

There is to be a scire facias against the heir and tenants to reverse a common recovery of lands; the scire facias is to issue against all the ter-tenants, for they are to gain or lose by the judgment in the recovery. Raym. 16. 3 Mod. 274. A scire facias to have execution of a fine, shall not be sued against lessee for years; but against him who hath the freehold, who may have some matter to bar the execution. Cio. Elm. 471. 2 Browl. 144. In quellment, it was adjudged, that a scire facias might be brought by the lessee, though he was but nominal, and that it may be had by the lessor himself; as either of them may have a writ of error on the judgment: And that it might be brought against those who were strangers to the judgment, and against the executors of the defendant, &c. 2 Lutw. 1267.

6. Of other points generally, not classed under the former heads.

A defendant being summoned upon a scire facias, and the summons returned, if he doth not appear, but less judgment go by default, he is for ever barred. 1 Leu. 41, 42. If the sheriff hath returned him warned, he shall not have audita querela on a release, &c. for the defendant might have pleaded the same on the return of the scire facias; but if the sheriff return nihil, on which an execution is awarded, he shall have audita querela. New Nat. Br. 230. Where there has been no scire fac., and only two nibils, the court will often relieve upon motion, and not put the party to an audita querela. Salk. 93, 264. 2 Strange 1675. Where the plaintiff in the judgment releaseth the defendant of all judgments and executions, &c. the defendant may upon his release sue out a writ of scire facias against the plaintiff in the judgment ad cognoscendum scriptum suum relaxationis; and he need not sue out his audita querela. Hill. 5 W. & M. B. R.

If one sues out two writs of scire facias, one after the other, where it is upon a judgment by bill, there ought to be fifteen days inclusive between the teste of the first and return of the second scire facias. Salk. 559. And the teste of the alias scire facias is to be the day of the return of the first. 3 Ann. B. R. 9 Lill. 503. Costs allowed in suits on writs of scire facias, &c. Fide Stat. 8 Geo. 3. c. 11.

For more learning on this subject, see 4 New Abr. and 19 Wils. Abr. 211. Scire facias, and Wilson, par. 1. 98, 243. par. 2. 61, 372.

Scire facias against bail. To an action, is where a capias ad satisfaciendum is sued out and returned, and excommunicatus against the principal, and the writ filed; after which this writ is brought to have execution against the bail, &c. And if upon the scire facias, or two nibils returned, the bail do not appear, judgment shall be entered against them. 1 Inst. 290. Leu. 1273. In C. B. there is but one scire fac. against the bail, and upon a total returned, there is execution; but in B. R. there are two scire facias's and two nibils, and the testes to be duly returned, before the second is sued out, and there must be fifteen days inclusive between the teste of the first and the return of the last. 2 Salk. 599. There must be a particular warrant of attorney to a scire facias against the bail; for such a warrant in the principal action is no warrant to the scire facias, because these are distinct actions; and the particular warrant is to be entered when the suit commences, which is when the writ is returned. 2 Salk. 603. When a scire facias is brought against the bail, it must be in ea parte, and where it is brought against the defendant in the principal action, it is to be in hac parte. 2 Salk. 599. If bail are prosecuted on a scire fac. when a writ of error is depending in the Exchequer-Chamber, and the defendants to bail will confess judgment, and enter into a rule to pay the debt, or to deliver up the principal within four days after the judgment affirmed; in such case the proceedings on the scire facias shall be stayed. Med. Cas. in 1 S. E. 130. And if there be no good judgment against the principal, judgment against the bail by scire facias may be reversed, &c. 3 Nelf. Abr. 190. See Bail, and Black. Com. 3 V. 416.

Scire facias ad audiendum Errores. On writs of error. There are to be fifteen days between the teste and return of every scire fac. ad audiendum error. upon a writ of error returnable in B. R. And if on the return of two nibils, &c. the defendant in error doth not appear, it is not then with him as in case of a sci. fac. quare execution non, &c. But the cause is to be set down to be heard by the court, and the plaintiff in errors shall be heard thereunto ex parte. 2 Lill. Abr. 499. If a writ of error is brought in B. R. and the record brought in, the defendant appearing may thereupon sue out a scire facias quare executionem habere non debet, and an alias sci. fac. after that, if there be not a scire fac. returned on the first writ; and if the plaintiff in error after a sci. fac. or two nibils returned, doth not, before the rule for judgment upon the scire fac. is out, appear and assign errors, or plead to the scire fac. there will be judgment against him, Quod habet executionem, &c. But the writ of error depends still until judgment is affirmed or reversed, or the plaintiff in the errors is nonsuited. Ibid. 502.

Scire facias in detinuit. In detinuit, after judgment, the plaintiff shall have a distingas, to compel the defendant to deliver the goods, by repeated distresses of his chattels; or else a scire facias against any third person in whose hands they may happen to be, to shew cause why they should not be delivered. Black. Com. 3 V. 413.

Scire facias to remove an usurper's clerk. On a quare impedit, and as admittas sued out, if the bishop, after receipt of the latter writ, admit any person, even though the patron's right may have been found in a jure patronatus, then the plaintiff, after he has obtained judgment in the quare impedit, may remove the incumbent, if the clerk of a stranger, by writ of scire facias. Black. Com. 3 V. 248.

Scire facias upon a recognizance in Chancery, may be sued out to extend lands, &c. If upon a scire facias upon a recognizance in the Chancery, the record be transmitted into B. R. to try the issue, and the plaintiff is nonsuited; he may bring a new sci. fac. in B. R. upon the record there. 2 Saund. 27. Where a statute is acknowledged, and the cognitor afterwards confesseth a judgment, and the land is extended thereon; in this case the cognisee shall have a scire facias to avoid the extent of the lands; but if the judgment be on goods, it is otherwise. 1 Browl. 37. 3 Nelf. Abr. 186. Sci. fac. lies on recognizance of the peace, &c. removed into B. R.

Scire facias to repeal letters patent and grants. Where the crown hath unadvisedly granted any thing by letters patent, which ought not to be granted, or where the patentee hath done an act that amounts to a forfeiture of the grant, the remedy to repeal the patent, is by writ of scire facias in Chancery. Black. Com. 3 V. 260, 261. which vide.

A scire facias to repeal a patent, must be brought where the record is, which is in Chancery; and there are to be two of these writs sued out of the party-bag office directed to the clerk of the Chancery, who by a letter under the seal of the court must summon the corporation or person whose concern the patent is, that there is a scire facias sued out, returnable at such a time, and remaining with him, for the revocation of such a patent, and that if they do not appear thereunto, judgment will be had against them by default; and this letter to be delivered to the corporation or person interested in such patent, by some person who can make oath thereof. Dalton's Sheriff. On a sci. fac. out of Chancery returnable in B. R. to repeal letters patent, it was held, that if the letters patent are granted to the prejudice of any person, as if a fair is granted to the damage of the fair of another, &c. he may have a scire facias on the inrollment of such grant in Chancery, as well as the King in other cases; but it may be a question, whether a scire facias upon a record in Chancery is returnable in B. R. though after it is made returnable into B. R. that court, and not the Chancery, hath the jurisdiction of it. Mod. Caf. 229. In all cases at Common law, where the King's title accrues by a judicial record, and he grants his estate over; the party grieved could not have a scire facias against the patentee, but was forced to his petition to the King; otherwise it is when his title is by conveyance on record, which is not judicial. 4 Rep. 59. The King hath a right to repeal a patent by scire facias, where he was deceived in his grant, or it is to the injury of the subject. 3 Lew. 220. And where a common person is obliged to bring his action, there, upon an inquisition or office found, the King is put to his scire facias, &c. 9 Rep. 96. A scire facias to repeal letters patent doth not abate by the demise of the crown. 1 Strange 43.

Scire facias's Have issued to repeal the grants of offices, for conditions broken, non-attendance, &c. And for disability, or in case of forfeiture, the offices may be seized without sci. fac. 3 Nelf. Abr. 201, 202. See Black. Com. 3 V. 261.

Scire facias in appeal of murder, before a pardon shall be allowed: vide Appeal.

Scire feci. Is the return of the sheriff, on a scire facias, that he hath caused notice to be given to the party, against whom the scire facias issued. See the return Black. Com. 3 V. xxv.

Scirewyte, The annual tax or prestation paid to the sheriff for holding the assizes or county courts.—In solutiis pro quadam pensione vocata Scirewyte annuatim 10 sol.—Paroch. Antiq. p. 573.

Sicte, (Situs) Signifies the setting or standing of any place; the seat or situation of a capital messuage, or the ground whereon it stood. Mon. Ang. Tom. 2. fol. 278. The word in this sense is mentioned in the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 20. and 22 Car. 2. cap. 11.

Scolds, In a legal sense are troublesome and angry women, who by their brawling and wrangling amongst their neighbours, break the publick peace, and increase discord. Stat. 5 H. 3. They are indictable in the sheriff's turn, and punished by the cucking-stool, &c. Kitch. 13. See Castigatory, and Black. Com. 4 V. 169.

Scot and lot, (Sax. Scea, pars, & Llot, i. e. Sors) Signifies a customary contribution laid upon all subjects, according to their ability. Spelm. Nor are these old words grown obsolete, for whoever in like manner (though not by equal proportion) are assessed to any contribution, are generally said to pay scot and lot. Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 9.

Scotal or Scotalt, Is where any officer of a forest keeps an alehouse within the forest, by colour of his office, causing people to come to his house, and there spend their money for fear of his displeasure: It is compounded of scot and ale, which by transposition of the words is otherwise called an alebot. This word is used in the charter of the forest, cap. 8.—Nullus foresterius faciat Scotalas, vel garbas colligat, vel aliquam collectionem faciat, &c. Manwood 216.

Scottart, Those tenants are said scottart, whose lands are subject to pay scot. Mon. Ang. Tim. 1. pag. 875.

Scotland, Is united to England by 1 Ann. In the reigns of King James 2. and King Charles 2. Commissioners were appointed to treat with commissioners of Scotland, concerning an union. But the bringing about this great work, was reserved for the reign of Queen Anne. The 1 Ann. cap. 14. ordained articles to be settled by commissioners for the union of the two kingdoms, &c. and by the 5 Ann. cap. 8. the union was effected; the kingdoms united are to be called Great Britain, and the cross of St. George and St. Andrew to be conjoined; they are to be represented by one parliament; and fifteen peers of Scotland, and forty-five commons are to be elected for Scotland, and have all the privileges of parliament as peers and commons of England: The subjects of either kingdom shall have freedom of trade, and be liable to the same customs, and like laws for publick government, &c. Kirk-government of the church is confirmed; and the courts of justice are to remain the same as before the union, but subject to regulation: When 1,997,763 l. shall be raised in England on a land-tax, Scotland is to be charged with 48,000 l. And Scotland is to have an equivalent for being charged towards the payments of the debts of England, &c. A court of Exchequer is erected in Scotland, to be a court of record, revenue, and judicature for ever; and barons of the said court to be appointed, who shall be judges there. Statute 6 Ann. cap. 26. Peers of Scotland, and all officers civil and military, &c. are to take the oath of abjuration, &c. A peer committing high treason or felony in Scotland may be tried by commission under the Great Seal, constituting justices to inquire, &c. in Scotland: And the King may grant commissions ofoyer and terminer in Scotland, to determine such treason, &c. By 6 Ann. c. 14. and 7 Ann. cap. 21. Persons having lands in Scotland, guilty of high treason by corresponding with, assisting, or remitting money, &c. to the pretender, on conviction, are to be liable to the pains of treason; and their vassals continuing in dutiful allegiance, shall hold the said lands of his Majesty in fee and heritage for ever, where the lands were so held of the crown by the offender: And tenants continuing peaceable and occupying land, are to hold the same two years rent free. 1 Geo. 1. cap. 20. An act for disarming the Highlands of Scotland; and requiring bail of persons for their loyal and peaceable behaviour, &c. 1 Geo. 1. cap. 54. Persons summoned are to bring in and deliver up their arms, or refusing to do it, shall be taken as lifted soldiers to serve his Majesty beyond the seas; and concealing their arms, are liable to penalties: Also the lords lieutenants or justices of the peace, may appoint persons to search houses for arms, &c. Statute 11 Geo. 1. cap. 26. When any ordinary place is vacant in the court of sessions in Scotland, the King may nominate a person, who is to be examined by the lords of the session, and then admitted, &c. 10 Geo. 1. cap. 18. And the election of members of parliament for Scotland, is particularly regulated by a late statute; requiring the magistrates to summon the councils of boroughs, and an oath to be taken by every freeholder and voter as to the estates to qualify them, that they are actually their own, and not fictitious; and sheriffs or stewards not to make any false return, &c. under the penalty of 500 l. recoverable in a summary way: And no judge of the court of session, or baron of the Exchequer in Scotland, shall be elected a member of parliament. Stat. 7 Geo. 2. cap. 16. See 16 Geo. 2. c. 11. The city of Edinburgh in Scotland, to forfeit 2000 l. on account of the murder of Captain Porteus; (who was hanged by the mob, for causing his soldiers to fire upon persons hiding at an execution) and a reward of 200 l. ordered for apprehending the offenders. 10 Geo. 2. cap. 34. Acts for regulating the making of plaidings, stockings, &c. And of the linen manufactures in Scotland. See 6 Geo. 1. and 13 Geo. 1. c. 26. In time of scarcity, persons may import victuals from Ireland into Scotland, on obtaining a licence for it, &c. 14 Geo. 2. cap. 7. By the statute 19 Geo. 2. c. 9. Every juror for trial of high-treason or misprision of treason, shall be possessed in his own or his wife's right of lands, &c. as proprietor or life-renter within the shire, &c. of the yearly value of 40 s. Sterling at least, or valued at 30 s. Sterling per annum in the tax roll. By the stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 38. Pastors or ministers not duly qualified are not to officiate in episcopal meeting-houses, and persons resorting to unregistered meeting-houses are subject to a penalty of 5 l. &c. and if a peer, he is disqualified from voting, or being elected. By the Stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 32. the two colleges of St. Salvator and St. Leonard in the university of St. Andrews are united. By the stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 43. the heretable jurisdictions are taken away and restored to the crown, and more effectual provision is made for the administration of justice by the King's courts and judges there: And all persons acting as procurators, writers or agents in the law, are to take the oaths. By the stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 50. the tenure of ward-holding is taken taken away; and converted into blanch and fen-holdings. The casualties of single and life-rent estates, incurred by horning and denunciation for civil causes, is taken away. A summary process is given to heirs and successors against superiors. The attendance of vassals at head-courts is discharged. Heirs and possessors of tailzied estates, are empowered to sell to the crown. By the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. c. 19. Offences of high-treason, committed in the shire of Dumfriesshire, Stirling, Perth, Kincardine, Aberdeen, Inverness, Naír, Cromartie, Argyl, Forfar, Bamf, Sutherland, Caithness, Elgin and Ross, or the shire or stewartry of Orkney, may be inquired of in any shire in Scotland, as shall be assigned by the King. Jurors may come out of adjoining counties. The practice of taking down evidence in writing, in crimes not affecting life or member, abrogated. By the Stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 39. 20 Geo. 2. c. 51. and 21 Geo. 2. c. 34. Provision is made for disarming the Highlands, and restraining the use of the Highland dress; and the masters and teachers of private schools, chaplains, tutors, and governors of youth and children, are to take the oaths to his Majesty. The Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 29. For order for making an authentick roll of valuation of the shire of Argyl. By the Stat. 22 Geo. 2. c. 48. The court before whom any indictment for high-treason, or misprision of high treason in Scotland shall be found, may issue writs of capias, proclamation, and exigent against the party, if not in custody; whereon the defendant not appearing, shall be deemed outlawed and attainted of high treason, or misprision of high-treason; persons out of the kingdom, and returning within a year, may traverse the indictment. See Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 20. to obviate doubts that have arisen with regard to the admission of the vassals of the principality of Scotland, and payment of their rents and duties, and Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 41. for annexing certain forfeited estates in Scotland to the crown unalienable, and for making satisfaction to the lawful creditors thereupon, and applying the rents thereof for the better civilizing the Highlands, and Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 29. for explaining and amending, 19 Geo. 2. c. 39. and 20 Geo. 2. c. 51. and Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 36. For erecting publick buildings in the city of Edinburgh; and for widening and enlarging the streets of the said city.

Scripture. All profane scoffing of the Holy Scripture, or exposing any part thereof to contempt and ridicule is punished by fine and imprisonment. 1 Henr. P. C. 7. Vide Black. Com. 4 V. 59.

Scriveners. Are mentioned in the statute against usury and excessive interest of money. 12 Ann. c. 6. If a scrivener is intrusted with a bond, he may receive the interest; and if he fails, the obligee shall bear the loss; and so it is if he receive the principal, and deliver up the bond, for being intrusted with the security itself, it shall be presumed he is trusted with power to receive the principal and interest; and the giving up the bond on payment of the money is a discharge thereof; But if a scrivener be intrusted with a mortgage-deed, he hath only authority to receive the interest, not the principal; the giving up the deed in this case not being sufficient to restore the estate, but there must be a reconveyance, &c. Decreed in Chancery, Hill. 7 Ann. 1 Salk. 157. It is held, where a scrivener puts out his client's money on a bad security, which on inquiry might have been easily found so; yet he cannot be charged in equity to answer the money: for it is here said no one would venture to put out money of another upon a security, if he were obliged to warrant and make it good; in case a loss should happen, without any fraud in him. Preced. Chanc. 146, 149. See 19 Vin. Abr. 289—292.

Seutage. (Soutage, Sax. Scilapung) Was a tax or contribution, raised by those that held lands by knight-service, towards furnishing the King's army, at one, two, or three marks for every knight's fee. Henry the Third, for his voyage to the Holy Land, had a tenth granted by the clergy, and Seutage, three marks of every knight's fee, by the laity. Baronag. Anglie, 1 Part. fol. 211. b. This was also levied by Henry the Second, Richard the First, and King John. See Estuags, and Black. Com. 1 P. 309. 2 V. 74.

Scutagio habendo. A writ that anciently lay against tenants by knight-service, to serve in the wars, or send sufficient persons, or to pay a certain sum, &c. F. N. B. 83.

Scute. A French gold coin of 3 s. 4 d. in the reign of King Hen. 5. And Catherine Queen of England had an assurance made her of sundry castles, manors, lands, &c. valued at the sum of forty thousand scutes, every two whereof were worth a noble. Rot. Parl. 1 Hen. 6.

Scutella. (from Scutum, Sax. Scutel) A scuttle, any thing of a flat and broad shape, like a shield.

Scutella elemosynaria. An alms basket or scuttle. Paroch. Antiq.

Seal. (Sigillum) Is a stamp engraved with a particular impression, which is fixed upon the wax that closes letters, or affixed as a testimony. Johns. The first sealed charter we find extant in England, is that of King Edward the Confessor upon his foundation of Westminster Abbey. Dugdale's Warwickshire, fol. 138. b. Yet we read in the manuscript history of Offa, King of the Mercians.—Rex Offa literas Regii Sigilli sui munimine consignatas eidem nuncio commisit deferendas. And that seals were in use in the Saxons time, see Taylor's History of Garulkind, fol. 73. It was usual in the time of H. 2. and before, to seal all grants with the sign of the cross: Has donationes & ordinationes confirmant & cruce signantur Henricus Rex & Mathildis Regina. Monast. 3 tom. fol. 7. And Ordericus Vitalis tells us, That archbishop Dunstan with his suffragans, predictarum rerum donationem facto crucis in Charta signo corroboravit. lib. 4. That most of the charters of the English-Saxon Kings were thus signed, appears by Ingulphus, and in the Monasticon, and that the crosses were all gold. But it was not so much used after the conquest. Constit. See Sigillum, Wang.

As to counterfeiting the King's Great or Privy seal, it is high treason. See Black. Com. 4 V. 83, 89. and 1 Mar. 2. c. 6. With respect to the use, &c. of the Great seal, see Black. Com. 2 V. 346. 3 V. 47. As to the seal of a corporation, Black. Com. 1 V. 475. And as to the Privy seal, ib. 2 V. 347. With respect to sealing of deeds, id. 305. And as to the antiquity of seals, id. 305.

Sea-Laws, Are laws relating to the sea; as the laws of Oleron, &c. See Oleron Laws.

Sealer, (Sigillator) Is an officer in Chancery appointed by the Lord Chancellor, or Lord Keeper of the Great-seal of England, to seal the writs and instruments there made in his presence.

Sealing Deeds, Makes persons parties to them; and if they are not thus sealed they are void. Dyer 13. If a seal is broken off, it will make the deed void, and when several are bound in a bond, the pulling off the seal of one makes it void as to the others. 2 Lev. 220. But in a deed of covenants, 'tis held that a person's breaking off the seal of one of the covenantors, after making the covenant, shall avoid the deed only against himself. Cro. Eliz. 408, 546. In case the seal of a bond be broken or eat off by rats, or it is any ways cancelled, no action can be brought on such bond, &c. 2 Bullf. 246. But relief may be had in equity.

Seal, Exchequer seal, Great seal, Privy seal, seals of office, of bishops, &c. Vide the heads. As to sealing of deeds, see Black. Com. 2 V. 305.

Sea-Marks. The erection of beacons, light-houses, and sea-marks, is a branch of the royal prerogative. By 8 Eliz. c. 13. The corporation of the Trinity-House are empowered to set up any beacons or sea-marks wherever they shall think them necessary; and if the owner of the land or any other person shall destroy them, or shall take down any steeple, tree, or other known sea-mark, he shall forfeit 100l. or, in case of inability to pay it, shall be ipso facto outlawed.

Seamen, Retained to serve the King, are punishable for departing without licence. Stat. 2 R. 2. And fighting, quarrelling, and disturbances of seamen may be punished by the commissioners of the navy by fine and imprisonment. 19 Car. 2. c. 7. Registered seamen are exempted from serving upon juries, or in any parish office, &c. And shall have 40s. per annum bounty-money, besides their pay; and on disability of service be admitted into Greenwich hospital: And seamen to the number of 30,000 were to be registered for the King's service, by Stat. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 21. repealed 9 Ann. 24. See Stat. 1 Geo. 2. c. 19. Seamen on board English merchant ships, maimed in fight against an enemy, shall be admitted into the hospital at Greenwich, as other seamen wounded in the service of his Majesty. 8 Geo. 2. c. 29. Provision for relief of widows of sea officers, see 6 Geo. 2. c. 25. Vide Navy and Mariners, and Black. Com. 1 V. 418.

Seamens Wages. They are one proper object of the Admiralty jurisdiction, even tho' the contract be made for them upon the land. 1 Vent. 146. Black. Com. 3 V. 107. Yet the courts of Common law have jurisdiction; and an action may be maintained for work and labour.

Seam-Fish, Seems to be that sort of fish which is taken with a large and long net, called a sean. Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 25.

Searcher, An officer of the Customs, whose business it is to search and examine ships outward bound, if they have any prohibited or unaccustomed goods on board, &c. This officer is mentioned in the Stat. 12 Car. 2. And there are searchers concerned in customs duties; of leather, and in divers other cases.

Seacreeper, In villis maritimis ipsius maritimam Dominii jurisdictionem curat, littus lustrat, et ejusdem maris (quod wreck appellatur) Dominum colligit. Spelm.

Sea-Robbers, Pirates and robbers at sea. Stat. 16 Car. 2. c. 6. Vide Pirates.

Secondary, (Secundarius) Is an officer who is second, or next to the chief officer; as the Secretaries to the Prothonotaries of the courts of B. R. and C. B. The Secondary of the Remembrancer in the Exchequer & Secondary of the Compter, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 506. Secondary of the King's Bench, may have three clerks. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23.

Secondary of the Office of Privy Seal, Is taken notice of by 1 Edw. 4. c. 1.

Secondary Conveyances, Those which presuppose some other conveyance, and precede it, and only serve to confirm, alter, restrain, restore, or transfer the interest granted, by such original conveyance. Black. Com. 2 V. 324.

Secondary Use. A use, tho' executed, may change from one to another by circumstances ex post facto; as, if A. makes a feoffment to the use of his intended wife and her eldest son for their lives, upon the marriage the wife takes the whole use in severalty; and, upon the birth of a son, the use is executed jointly in them both. This is sometimes called a secondary, sometimes a shifting use. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 334, 335.

Second Deliberance, (secunda deliberatione) Is a judicial writ that lies after a nonsuit of the plaintiff in replevin, and a retorno habendo of the cattle replevied, adjudged to him that distrained them; commanding the sheriff to replevy the same cattle again, upon security given by the plaintiff in the replevin for the re-delivery of them, if the distress be justified. It is a second writ of replevin, &c. F. N. B. 68.

Second Marriage, (secunda nuptia) Is when after the decease of one a man marries a second wife; which the law terms bigamus.

Secunda, To duellers. See Homicide, Murder.

Second Surcharge, writ of. If after admeasurement of common, upon a writ of admeasurement of pasture, the same defendant surcharges the common again, the plaintiff may have this writ of second surcharge, de secunda superincursionem, which is given by the statute Westm. 2. c. 13 Ed. 1. c. 8. And thereby the sheriff is directed to inquire by a jury, whether the defendant has in fact again surcharged the common, contrary to the tenure of the last admeasurement: And if he has, he shall then forfeit to the King the supernumerary cattle put in, and shall also pay damages to the plaintiff. Black. Com. 3 V. 239.

Secretary, (Secretarius à Secretis) A title given to him that is ab Epistolis et Scriptis Secretis; as the two Secretaries of State, &c. The Secretaries of State have an extraordinary trust which renders them very considerable in the eyes of the King, and of the subject also; whose requests and petitions are for the most part lodged in their hands, to be represented to his Majesty, and to make dispatches thereupon, pursuant to his Majesty's directions: They are Privy Counsellors, and a Council is seldom or never held without the presence of one of them; they wait by turns, and one of these Secretaries always attends the court, and by the King's warrant, prepares all bills or letters for the King to sign, not being matter of law. And depending on them is the office called the Paper Office, which contains all the publick writings of state, negotiations, and dispatches, all matters of state and council, &c. and they have the keeping of the King's seal, called the signet, because the King's private letters are signed with it. There was but one Secretary of State in this kingdom, 'till about the end of the reign of King Hen. 8. but then that great and weighty office was thought proper to be discharged by two persons, both of equal authority, and styled Principal Secretaries of State. The correspondence with all parts of Great Britain is managed by either of the Secretaries, without distinction; but in respect to foreign affairs, all nations which have intercourse of business with Great Britain, are divided into two provinces, the Southern and the Northern; of which the Southern is under the senior, and the Northern is under the junior Secretary, &c. The Secretaries of State have power to commit persons for treasons, and other offences against the state, as conservators of the peace at Common law, or as justices of peace all over England; and it is incident to their office. 1 Hall. 247. Wood's Inst. 451. &c. If they are not constantly named in the commissions of the peace for every county in England and Wales; and whether they have any power to commit but in virtue thereof, as justices of the peace? See Black. Com. 4 V. 202.

Touching the power of a Secretary of State to commit criminals for high treason, writing seditious libels, &c. see Wilson, par. 2. s. 288.

The Secretary of State, as such, is not a consequator, or justice of the peace; nor is he, or the King's messengers in ordinary acting under his warrant within the meaning of the statute. 24 Geo. 2. c. 44. Entick clerk v. Carrington and others. C. B. M. 6 Geo. 3. Wilson, par. 2. s. 290, 291.

Secta, or Suit, (a sequendo). By this word was anciently understood the witnesses or followers of the plaintiff. Seld. in Fortesc. c. 21. Black. Com. 3 V. 295.

Secta ad Curiam, Is a writ that lies against him who refuses to perform his suit either to the county or court-baron. F. N. B. f. 158.

Secta ad Iusticiam faciendam, Is a service which a man is bound to perform by his fee. Bracton, lib. 2. cap. 16. num. 6.

Secta curiae, Suit and service done by tenants at the court of their lord. Paroch. Antiq. p. 320.

Secta facienda per illam quae habet sententiam partem, Is a writ to compel the heir, who hath the elder's part of the coheirs, to perform service for all the coparceners. Reg. Orig. fol. 177.

Secta Molendini, A writ lying where a man by usage time out of mind, &c. hath ground his corn at the mill of a certain person, and afterwards goeth to another mill with his corn, thereby withdrawing his suit to the former: And this writ lies especially for the Lord against his tenants, who hold of him to do suit at his mill. Reg. Orig. 153. F. N. B. 122. The count in the writ secta molendini may be on the tenure of the land; or upon prescription, viz. That the tenant, and all those who held those lands, have used to do their suit at the plaintiff's mill, &c. New Nat. Br. 272. Secta ad molendinum, and offices of nuisance are now much turned into actions of the case. See Black. Com. 3 V. 235.

Secta Regalis, A suit by which all persons were bound twice in a year to attend the sheriff's tourn; and was called regalis, because the sheriff's tourn was the King's leet, wherein the people were to be obliged by oath to bear true allegiance to the King, &c.

Secta unica tantum facienda pro pluribus hereditatibus, Is a writ that lies for an heir who is distrained by the lord to do more suits than one, in respect of the land of divers heirs descended to him. Reg. Orig.

Sectis non faciendis, Is a writ that lies for a woman, who, for her dower, ought not to perform suit of court. Reg. Orig. fol. 174. It lay also for one in wardship to be freed of all suits of court during his wardship. Reg. Orig. fol. 173. but see 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

Secundary. See Secondary.

Secunda Supercongratione Pasturae, Is a writ which lieth where admeasurement of pasture hath been made, and he that first surcharged the common doth it a second time, notwithstanding the admeasurement. Old Nat. Br. 73. See Second Surcharge, writ of.

Securitatem indentendi quod se non distent ad partes externas sine Licentia Regis, An ancient writ lying for the King against any of his subjects, to stay them from going out of this kingdom to foreign parts; the ground whereof is, that every man is bound to serve and defend the commonwealth, as the King shall think fit. F. N. B. 85. See Ne exeat Regnum.

Securitatis Pactis, Is a writ that lies for one who is threatened death or bodily harm by another, against him who so threatens; and is issued out of the Chancery directed to the sheriff, &c. Reg. Orig. 88.

Securitates for Money, As to their true construction, see Black. Com. 3 V. 439.

Security for good Behaviours, the Peace, and of Person, &c. See Peace, and Black. Com. 1 V. 129. 4 V. 248, 251, 3. See Surety of the Peace.

Se Defendendo, Is a plea for him that is charged with the death of another person, by alleging that he was driven unto what he did in his own defence; and the other so assailing him, that if he had not done as he did, he must have been in danger of his own life; which danger ought to be set out, as that it appears to have been otherwise insupportable. Standf. P. C. lib. 1. c. 7. Any person in his defence may kill another for the safety of his life; and where a man is attacked, a defence may be made without expecting the first blow, which may render a person incapable of making any defence: But a defence ought to be always unblameable, not to take revenge. Bar. Max. 25. If a man attack another person on a sudden falling out, and before a mortal wound is given, the other flies to the wall, or some other unpassable place, to save his life, and being still pursued kills the person making the assault; from the unavoidable necessity of it, this is se defendendo; and so in the like cases. Bract. 3 Edw. 3. A flight upon necessity, to make killing another se defendendo, must not be a feigned one to gain breath, or opportunity to fall on afresh; but it must be a flying from the danger, as far as the party can, either by reason of some wall, ditch, company, or the fierceness of the assailant will permit. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 483. If A. assaults the master, who flies to avoid death, and the servant kills A. in his master's defence, it is homicide defendendo of the master; tho' if he had not been driven to that extremity, it would have been manslaughter. Ibid. 484. Plowd. 100. And if I have a weapon in my hand, and a person assaults me, if he runs so hastily after me, that he runneth on my sword which I hold forth for the defence of myself, and so is killed, it is se defendendo: But if there be any malice in the case, or one kill him before he need to do it, the offence will be of a higher nature. Fitz. Coron. 284, 286, 307. Poult. 119. There is no express judgment in chancery, or se defendendo; but the offender is let to mainprise to sue out his pardon; and yet his goods and chattels are forfeited: Tho' where one kills another in his own defence, upon the special matter found, it is said he may be dismissed without any forfeiture, or pardon purchased, 2 Inst. 148. 3 Inst. 220. 1 Inst. 391. H. P. C. 138. See the statute 4 H. 8. c. 5. and Black. Com. 1 V. 130. 4 V. 183.

Sedgmore, In the county of Somerset, an act for draining the same. 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 26.

Seditious Conventicles, To the disturbance of the peace, &c. See Conventicles and Heresy.

Seduction of Women-Children. By 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 8. If any person, above the age of fourteen, unlawfully shall convey or take away any woman child unmarried, (which is held Str. 1162. to extend to bastards as well as to legitimate children) within the age of sixteen years from the possession and against the will of the father, &c. he shall be imprisoned two years, or fined at the discretion of the justices. See the statute, and Black. Com. 4 V. 209, 210.

Sed-cod, (from the Sax: sed, seed, and codde, a purse, or such like continent) Is a basket or other vessel of wood, carried on one arm of the husbandman or sower of ground, to bear the seed or grain which he sows, and spreads abroad with the other hand. In Westmoreland a bolster or pillow is called a cod; and in other northern parts a pin-cushion is termed a pin-cod.—Pro uno seed cod empto 4 d. Paroch. Antiq. 549. Kennet's Gloss.

Seedier, A seedsmen, or one who sows the land. Blount.

Seignior, (Fr. Seigneur, i. e. Dominus) Is in general signification as much as Lord; but particularly used for the Lord of the fee, or of a manor, as Seigneur among the Foedists is he who grants a fee or benefit out of the land to another; and the reason is, because having granted away the use and profit of the land, the property or dominion he still retains in himself. Hartm. P. N. B. 23.

Seigniorage, Is a royalty or prerogative of the King, whereby he claims an allowance of gold and silver brought in the mints, to be exchanged for coin. As seigniorage, out of every pound weight of gold, the King had for his coin 5 s. of which he paid to the Master of the Mint for his work sometimes 1 s. and sometimes 1 s. 6 d. Upon every pound weight of silver, the seigniorage answered to the King in the time of King Edw. 3. was eighteen penny-weight, which then amounted to about 1 s. out of which he sometimes paid 8 d. at others 9 d. to the Master: In the reign of King Hen. 5. the King's seigniorage of every pound of silver was 15 d. Stat. 9 Hen. 5. cap. 1. Hale's Sher. Acc. pag. 3.

Seignior, in grofs, Seemeth to be one that is a Lord, but of no manor, and therefore can keep no court. F. N. B. fol. 3. See next title.

Seigniorie, (Dominium) Is borrowed from the French seigneurie, i. e. dominatus imperium principatus; and signifies with us a manor or lordship, seigniorie de Schemans, Kitchin, fol. 80. Seigniorie in grofs, which seems to be the title of him who is not lord by means of any manor, but immediately in his own person; as tenure in capite, whereby one holds of the King as of his crown, is seigniorie in grofs. Kitchin, fol. 206. See Seignior.

Seisin, (seisus, Fr. seisne) In the Common law signifies possession. To seise is to take possession of a thing; and primer seisin is the first possession. Co. Litt. 152. There is a seisin in deed or in fact, and a seisin in law; a seisin in deed is when an actual possession is taken; and seisin in law is where lands descend, and one hath not actually entered on them, &c. 1 Inst. 31. Seisin in law is a right to lands and tenements, tho' the owner is by wrong disseised of them: And he who hath an hour's actual possession quietly taken, hath seisin de droit & de claim, whereof no man may disseise him, but must be driven to his action. Perk. 457, 458. A seisin in law is sufficient to avow upon; but to the bringing an assise actual seisin is required, &c. 4 Rep. 9. Seisin of a superior service, is seisin of all inferior services which are incident thereto: And seisin of homage is a seisin of all other services, because in the doing thereof the tenant takes upon himself to do all services. 4 Rep. 80. 1 Danv. Abr. 647. The seisin of rent, or other annual services, is a sufficient seisin of casual services. 4 Rep. 80. But seisin of one annual service is not seisin of another annual service; as if there be lord or tenant by fealty, ten shillings rent, and three days work in the year; in this case seisin of the rent is no seisin of the work, nor is seisin of the rent seisin of the suit of court, which is annual. 4 Rep. 9. 1 Danv. Abr. 647. 2 Lill. 507. The seisin of the father is not sufficient for the heir: Though if a fine be levied to one for life, the remainder to another in tail, and the tenant for life takes seisin of the services, this will be a good seisin for him in remainder; and the seisin of a lessee for years is sufficient for him in reversion. 2 H. 6. 7. 45 Edw. 3. 26. 1 Danv. 805, 646. Where a man is seised of a reversion, depending upon an estate for life, the pleading of it is that he was seised of it ut de feodo, leaving out the word dominio; but if it be a reversion in fee, expectant upon the determination of a lease for years, there he may plead that he was seised of it in dominio suo ut de feodo. Dyer 185, 257. Rep. 20, 27. 4 Rep. 62. Seisin is never to be alledged, but where it is traversable; and when a defendant alledgeth a seisin in fee in any one under whom he claims, the plaintiff cannot alledge a seisin in another, without traversing, confessing or avoiding of the seisin alledged by the defendant. Cro. El. 30. 1 Brown. 170. If a seisin in fee is alledged, it shall be intended a lawful seisin till the contrary appears. 2 Lutw. 1337. But the party is to shew of what estate he is seised, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 215. See Stat. 32 Hen. 8. cap. 2. See Black. Com. 2 V. 131, 209. Livery of seisin, id. 2 V. 311. Writ of seisin, id. 2 V. 359. xix. 3 V. 412.

Seisina habenda, quia Rex habuit Banum, Seisina Massum, Is a writ that lies for delivery of seisin to the lord of lands or tenements, after the King in right of his prerogative hath had the year, day and waste, on a felony committed, &c. Reg. Orig. 165.

Seising of Heriots, Is the seising of the best beast, &c. (where an heriot is due) on the death of the tenant. It is a species of self-remedy, not much unlike that of taking of cattle or goods in distress, only in the latter case they are seised as a pledge, in the former, as the property of the person for whom seised. See Black. Com. 3 V. 15.

Seizure of Goods by Offences. No goods of a felon or other offender can be seized to the use of the King, before forfeited; And there are two seizures, one verbal only, to make an inventory, and charge the town or place, when the owner is indicted of the offence; and the other actual, which is the taking of them away afterwards on conviction, &c. 3 Inst. 103.

Set, Denotes the bigness of a thing to which it is added; as Setwood is a great wood.

Setda, (from the Sax. felda, a field, or fowl) is used for a shop, shed, or stall in a market. Aff. 9 B. 1. It is also made to signify a wood in fallows or willows: And Sir Edward Coke takes setda for a salt-pit. Co. Lit. 4.

Self-bane, (Sax. self-bana) Is where a man murders himself, called felo de se.

Self-Defence. As to the defence of one's self, or the mutual and reciprocal defence of such as stand in the relations of husband and wife, parent and child, master and servant; if the party himself, or any of these his relations, be forcibly attacked in his person or property, it is lawful for him to repel force by force; and the breach of the peace which happens, is chargeable upon him only who began the affray. 2 Rel. Abr. 346. 1 Hawk. P. C. 131. See Black. Com. 3 V. 3. Also vide Homicide, and Black. Com. 1 V. 130. 4 V. 183.

Self-Murder. The law hath ranked this among the highest crimes, making it a peculiar species of felony, a felony committed on one's self. A felo de se is he that deliberately puts an end to his own existence, or commits any unlawful malicious act, the consequence of which is his own death. The punishment is, an ignominious burial in the highway, with a stake driven thro' his body; and a forfeiture of all his goods and chattels to the King. This forfeiture has relation to the time of the act done in the felon's life-time, which was the cause of his death. See Black. Com. 4 V. 189, 190.

Self-Preservation. Every creature has implanted in it by nature a strong desire of self-preservation: And by our ancient law, if a man stole victuals merely to satisfy his present hunger, being for the preservation of life, it was not felony; but this law is become obsolete. Staundf. P. C. See Self-Defence.

Setlon of Land, (setio terra) Is derived from the Fr. seillon, which signifies a ridge of ground rising between two furrows, and contains no certain quantity, but sometimes more and sometimes less: Therefore Crompton says, that a setlon of land cannot be in demand, because it is a thing uncertain. Crompt. Jurist. 221.

Setme, (Sax. seam, i. e. onus) A horse load or eight bushels of corn. Blount. A sume of glass is twenty-four stone, each stone five pounds weight.

Setmebale, A pipe or half a ton of wine. Morib. Dist.

Seminaries, Persons are not to go or be sent to Papish seminaries, to be instructed or educated, under diverse penalties and disabilities, by the Stat. 1 Jac. 1. c. 4. And contributing to the maintenance of a papish seminary, is made a praemunire. Stat. 27 Eliz. c. 2. See Papish.

Seminatorius, A preacher or sower of words. Ps. Bless.

Senage, (senagium, from senatus, sometimes used for synod) Is money paid for synodals.

Senator, (Lat.) As now taken is a parliament man. In the laws of King Edward the Confessor we are told, that the Britons called those senators whom the Saxons afterwards termed aldermen, and borough-masters; tho' not for their age, but their wisdom, for some of them were young men, but very well skilled in the laws. Kenilb. King of the Mercians, granted a charter which ran thus, vix. Consilio & consensu episcoporum & senatorum gentis sue &c. Statut. P. C. cap. 13.

Sentel, A kind of thin fine silk, mentioned in the Stat. 2 R. 2. c. 1.

Sentinel, (Sentinalis) derived from the Germ. sein, a house or place, and Schoch, an officer) is a Steward; and signifies one who hath the dispensing of justice, in some particular cases: As the High Sentinel, or Steward of England; Sentinel de la Bord de Roy, Steward of the King's Household; Sentinel, or Steward of Courts, &c. Co. Lit. 51. Crut. Jurist. 102. Kirk. 83. See Steward.

Sententia & Quarantalle and non tenant placita de libertatibus, A writ directed to the Steward, and Marshal of England, inhibiting them to take cognizance of an action in their court that concerns freehold. Reg. Orig. 185, 191.

Widowhood. If a widow, having dower after the death of her husband shall marry vel filium, vel filiam in senectute pariter, she shall forfeit and lose her dower in what place soever in Kent. Tenen. in Gavelkind. Plac. Trin. 17 E. 3.

Widowhood. A word anciently used for widowhood. Plac. Trin. 17 E. 3.

Widow-days. Are play-days, or times of pleasure and diversion. — Dies recreationis vocati, Anglice seney-days, &c. Regist. Eccl. Ebor. annis 1562.

Widow. To what duties liable on importation. 1 Geo. 1. Stat. 2. c. 43.

Widow. Several, or severed and divided from other ground. Paroch. Antiq. 336.

Widow. (separatio) Is the living asunder of man and wife. See Divorce, Mulier.

Widow. Blackstone, in his Commentaries, 1 V. 189. says, (after observing that the utmost extent of time that the same parliament was allowed to sit, by the Stat. 6 W. & M. c. 2. was three years) "But by the Stat. 1 Geo. 1. §. 2. c. 38. (in order, protestingly, to prevent the great and continued expences of frequent elections, and the violent heats and animosities consequent thereupon, and for the peace and security of the government then just recovering from the late rebellion) this term was prolonged to seven years; and what alone is an instance of the vast authority of parliament, the very same house, that was chosen for three years, enacted its own continuance for seven."

Widow. The third Sunday before Quadragesima Sunday in Lent, and is called Septuagesima, because it is about the seventyish day before Easter; as Septuagesima and Quinquagesima are thus denominated from their being, the one sixty, and the other fifty days before the same feast, which are all of them days appropriated by the church to acts of penance and mortification, preparatory to the devotion of Lent. From Septuagesima Sunday until the Octaves after Easter, the solemnizing of marriage is forbidden by the Canon law; and the laws of King Canutus ordained a vacancy from judicature, from Septuagesima to Quinquagesima Pasche. See Stat. Westm. 1. c. 51.

Widow. The seventy interpreters of the Bible; who were in truth seventy-two, viz. six out of every one of the twelve tribes. Litt. Dict.

Widow. An enclosure so called, because it is encompassed cum sepe & fossa, with a hedge or ditch, at least with a hedge; and it signifies any place walled in.

Widow. (sepulchrum) Is the place where any body lies buried; but a monument is set up for the memorial of the deceased, tho' the corpse lie nowhere. Cowell.

Widow. An offering made to the priest for the burial of a dead body. Doct. d.

Widow. sub suo Periculo, Is a writ that lies where a summons ad warrantandum is awarded; and the sheriff returns that the party hath nothing whereby he may be summoned; then goes forth an alias and a pluries, and if he come not in on the pluries, this writ shall issue. Old Nat. Br. 163.

Widow. Cause, The process and depending issue of a cause for trial.

Widow. Curia, Is used for suit of court. — Et quod sint liberi a sequela curia. Mss. Ang. tom. 2. p. 253.

Widow. molendinum, The owing suit to a particular mill, or being bound to grind corn in that place only; which was a duty and service laid upon many tenants. Considerare sequela molendini, was to grant all the toll and profit arising from such customary rights. Cowell.

Widow. Ultimogenitus, The residue and appurtenances to the goods and chattels of villans, which were at the absolute disposal of the lord. In former times, when any lord sold his villen, it was said dominus vendit villanum cum tota sequela sua, which included all the villen's offspring. Paroch. Antiq. 266, 288.

Widow. Sequitur, Signify to follow a cause; as where a guardian is admitted ad prosequendum for an infant. 17. 1. Par. 74.

Widow. (sequestrare) Is a term used in the Civil law for renouncing; as when a widow comes into court, and disclaims having any thing to do, or so intermeddles with her husband's estate who is deceased, she is said to sequestrare.

Widow. (sequestratio) Signifies the separating or setting aside of a thing in controversy, from the possession of both the parties that contend for it; and it is twofold, voluntary and necessary; voluntary, is that which is done by consent of each party; necessary, is what the judge of his authority doth, whether the party will or not. Forfeiture, cap. 50. Dyer 232, 256. And there is a sequestration on a person's standing out all the processes of contempt for non-appearance in Chancery upon a bill exhibited; so where obedience is not yielded to a decree, the court will grant a sequestration of the lands of the party, &c. And a sequestration is also a kind of execution for debt; especially in the case of a beneficed clerk, of the profits of the benefice, to be paid over to him that had the judgment, till the debt is satisfied. 2 Inst. 474. 2 Roll. Abr. 474. But the most usual sequestration of a benefice, is upon a vacancy, for the gathering up the fruits of the benefice to the use of the next incumbent; and the profits of the church being in abeyance, are to be received by the churchwardens by appointment of the bishop, to make provision for the cure during the vacancy, &c. Stat. 28 H. 8. c. 11. Sequestration is further the act of the ordinary, disposing of the goods of one that is dead, whose estate no man will meddle with. See Kemmer's Glossary in Sequestrare.

Sequestration in the court of Chancery is a commission usually directed to 7 persons therein named, and empowering them to seize the defendant's real and personal estate into their hands, (or it may be some particular part or parcel of his lands) and to receive and sequester the rents and profits thereof, until the defendant shall have answered the plaintiff's bill, or performed some other matter which has been ordered and enjoined him by the court, for not doing whereof he is in contempt. Curf. Canc. 89.

A sequestration out of Chancery is grounded on the return of the serjeant at arms, wherein it is certified that the defendant had secreted himself; and therefore this process issues, and gives authority and power to the sequestrators (who are persons of the plaintiff's own naming) to enter upon and seize his, the defendant's real and personal estate.

It appears that there were great struggles between the Common law courts and courts of Equity, before this process came to be established; the former holding that a court of conscience could only give remedy in personam, and not in rem; that sequestrators were trespassers, against whom an action lay; and in the case of Colston v. Gardiner, the Chancellor cites a case, where they ruled, that if a man killed a sequestrator in the execution of such process, it was no murder. Cro. Eliz. 651. Arggrave v. Watts. 1 Mod. 259. But 2 Mod. 258. that the Chancellor having issued such sequestration, it will be as binding as any other process according to the rules of the Common law. 2 Chan. Ca. 44.

But these were such bloody and desperate resolutions, and so much against common justice and honesty, which requires that the decrees of this court, which preserved men from deceit, should not be rendered illusory, that they could not long stand; but this process got the better of these resolutions on this ground; viz. that the extraordinary jurisdiction might punish contempts by the loss of estate as well as the imprisonment of the person, because that liberty being a greater benefit than property, if they had a power to commit the person, they might take from him his estate still he had answered his contempt. 2dly. To say that a court should have power to decree about liberty, and yet should have no jurisdiction in rem, is a perfect solecism in the constitution of the court itself. 2 Par. Antiq. 621. 2 Ch. Ca. 44.

It has been said, that the first instance of a sequestration after a decree, was Sir Thomas Row's case in Lord Chancery's time, and that it was afterwards awarded in Chancery, in the case of Row v. Piu. 1666, and affirmed in parliament: and by the court of Exchequer, Graves v. Fontaine, 1687, and since, without scruple. The doubt formerly was, that lands were not liable to execution before the statute West. 2. cap. 18. 1 Ch. Ca. 92. 2 Ch. Ca. 44.

In Porter's Reports it is said, that sequestrations were first introduced in Lord Bacon's time, and then but sparingly used in process, and after a decree to sequester the thing in demand only. 1 Vern. 423. See Black. Com. 3. 444.

1. In what cases a sequestration is to be awarded.

2. The power and duty of the sequestrators; and when a sequestration is determined.

1. In what cases a sequestration is to be awarded.

A sequestration nisi is the first process against a peer or member of the House of Commons. 2 Peer Will. 385. 1 Ch. Ca. 61, 138. S. P.

A sequestration is also the first process against the menial servant of a peer, within the words and meaning of the statute 12 W. 3. for that otherwise such servant would have greater privilege than his lord. 1 Peer Will. 525.

If there be a sequestration nisi against a peer for waste of an answer, and the peer puts in an answer, that is insufficient; yet the order for a sequestration shall not be absolute, but a new sequestration nisi. 2 Peer Will. 385.

Notwithstanding the superintendent power of the courts in this kingdom over those in Ireland, and what is said in some of our books, it seems to be now the better opinion, that the court of Chancery here cannot award a sequestration against lands in Ireland. 1 Vern. 76. 2 Ch. Ca. 189. 2 Peer Will. 261.

It was said, that such process had been awarded to the governor of North Carolina; but herein it was doubted whether such sequestration should not be directed by the King's council, where alone an appeal lies from the decrees in the plantations. 2 Peer Will. 261.

Copyholds may be sequestered, tho' not extendible at Common law or the statute of Westm. 2. for courts of equity have potestatem extraordinariam et absolutam; but it seems a doubt whether such a sequestration can be revived against the heir of a copyholder, which arises from the difficulty of obliging the lord to admit, and depriving the lord of his fine, &c. upon the death of his tenant. 2 Ch. Ca. 46. Vide 1 Bernard. 431.

A sequestration out of Chancery is more effectual than an execution by fi. facias at law; for a sequestration may lie against the goods, though the party is in custody upon the attachment; whereas in law, if a capias ad satisfaciendum is executed, there can no fi. fa. issue. Cases in Lord Talbot's Time 222.

Where the sequestrators seize the real estate of the party, any tenant or other person who claims title to the estate so sequestered, either by mortgage, judgment, lease or otherwise, who hath a title paramount to the sequestration, shall not be obliged to bring a bill to contest such title, but he shall be let in to contest such a title in a summary way.

He may move by his counsel as of course to be examined pro interesse suo; and in this case the plaintiff is to exhibit interrogatories in order to examine him for a discovery of his title to the estate, and he must be examined upon such interrogatories accordingly; and the master must state the matter to the court; and the parties may enter into proof touching the title to the estate in question; and when the master hath stated the whole matter, the court proceeds to give judgment therein upon the report; and if it appears that the party who is examined pro interesse suo hath a plain title to the estate, and is not affected with the sequestration, then it is to be discharged as against him, with or without costs, as the court shall determine upon the circumstances of the case, and so vice versa. See Talbot's Time 1 Peer Will. 309.

The sequestration binds from the time of awarding the commission; and only from the time of executing it and its being laid on by the commissioners; for if that should be admitted, then the inferior officer would have ligandi & non ligandi potestatem. 1 Vern. 58.

2. The power and duty of the sequestrators; and when a sequestration is determined.

The sequestrators are officers of the court, and as such are amenable to the court, and are to act from time to time in the execution of their office as the court shall direct; they are to account for what comes to their hands, and are to bring the money into court as the court shall direct, to be put out at interest, or otherwise, as shall be found necessary; but this money is not usually paid to the plaintiff, but is to remain in court till the defendant hath appeared or answered and cleared his contempt, and then whatsoever hath been seized shall be accounted for and paid over to him; however, the court hath the whole under their power, and may do therein as they please, and as shall be most agreeable to the justice and equity of the case.

The plaintiff's counsel may move and obtain an order for tenants to attorn and pay their rents to the sequestrators, or for the sequestrators to sell and dispose of the goods of the party, and to keep the money in their hands, or to bring it into court, as shall be most adviseable and discretionary, and sitting for the court to do.

Sequestrators on mesne process are accountable for all the profits, and can retain only so far as to satisfy for contempt. 1 Vern. 248.

If sequestrators, having power to sell timber, dispose of 7000*l.* worth, and only bring 2000*l.* to account, they, as officers and agents of the court, are responsible, and not the plaintiff. 1 Vern. 161.

A sequestration is in nature of a replevin at Common law, and the party sequestering has neither juris rem, vel in re; the legal estate of the premises remaining in every respect as before. 1 Peer Will. 307.

Sequestrators being in possession of a great house in St. James's square, which was the defendant's for life, the court ordered that the master allow a tenant for the house, and the sequestrators to make a lease, and the tenant to enjoy. 3 Ch. Rep. 87.

It was moved, that the irregularity of a sequestration might be referred to the deputy, which was taken out against the defendant for not appearing, by reason of its being taken out sooner than by the course of the court it could, and yet the sequestrators had taken the goods off the premises, and threatened to sell them; the chief baron said, that as to the carrying the goods off the premises, it was clear the sequestrators could do that, because a sequestration upon mesne process answers to a distingas at law; but however, as to selling them, the court agreed in the present case it could not be lawful, and said it had lately been sealed on debate; and observed further, that courts of equity could not authorise sequestrators to sell goods even upon a decree till Lord Stamford's case, which makes decrees in this respect equivalent to a judgment; and even now the counsel said, sequestrators cannot sell but by leave of the court; however, the court said this was a matter proper for them to consider upon another occasion, and therefore only referred the irregularity of the sequestration as to the point of time to the deputy. 1 Bernard. Rep. 212. in Search.

A sequestration that issues as a mesne process of the court will be discontinued and determined by the death of the party; but where a sequestration issues in pursuance of a decree, and to compel the execution of it, there tho' the same be for a personal duty, it shall not be determined by the death of the party. 1 Vern. 58.

A sequestration was against the father, who appeared to be only a tenant for life, and on his death the sequestration was discharged. 1 Ch. Ca. 44. 2 Ch. Ca. 44. 48.
Sequestration is made upon an action of debt; and the court of proceeding in it is the same. The action being entered, the officer goes to the shop or warehouse of the defendant, where there is no household, and takes a peevish man, and binds him upon the door, and then the words, I sequester the goods and chattels of the defendant in this action, to the use of the plaintiff, the said defendant not his heirs, and makes return thereof at the Chamber; then the next day being being past, the next court after the plaintiff may have judgment to open the doors of the shop or warehouse, and to appraise the goods therein by a serjeant, who takes a bill of appraisement, having two freemen to appraise them, for which they are to be sworn at the next court holden at that Compter; and then the officer puts his hand to the bill of appraisement, and the court giveth judgment: Tho' the defendant in the action may put in bail before satisfaction, and so dissolve the sequestration; and after satisfaction, may put in bail ad dispendium debiti, &c. Pract. Solic. 429.

Sequestration, of the estates of peers and members of parliament, not appearing to actions, &c. Stat. 12 W. 3. See Parliament.

Sequestro habendo, Is a writ judicial for the discharging a sequestration of the profits of a church benefice granted by the bishop at the King's command, thereby to compel the parson to appear at the suit of another; and the parson upon his appearance, may have this writ for the release of the sequestration. Reg. Judic. 36. See Black. Com. 3 V. 418.

Serement, (Fr.) An oath which is to be taken before a person who hath power to administer it, or shall be void. 2 Feb. 284. See Oath.

Serjeant or Serjeant, (Lat. Serviens) Is a word diversely used in our law, and applied to sundry offices and callings. First a Serjeant at law, (Serviens ad Legem) otherwise called Serjeant Counter or of the Cais, is the highest degree in the Common law, as a Doctor is in the Civil law; but according to Selman, a doctor of law is superior to a serjeant, for the very name of a doctor is magisterial, but that of a serjeant is only ministerial. To these serjeants, as men best learned and experienced in the law and practice of the courts, one court is severally to plead in, by themselves, which is that of the Common Pleas, where the Common law of England is most strictly observed; yet they are not limited as to be restrained from pleading in any other court, where the judges (who cannot be such till they have taken the degree of serjeant) call them brothers, and hear them with great respect; and of which one or more are filed the King's Serjeants, being commonly chosen out of the rest in respect of their great learning, to plead for the King in all his causes, especially upon indictments for treason, &c. In other kingdoms the King's Serjeant is called Advocatus Regis; and here in England, in the time of King Edward the Sixth, Serjeant Bente wrote himself solus serviens ad legem, there being for sometime none but himself; and in Ireland at this day there is only a King's Serjeant. Serjeants at law are made by the King's writ directed unto such as are called, commanding them to take upon them that degree by a certain day; and by the writ or patent of creation it appears that the honour of serjeant at law, is a state and dignity of great respect: In conferring these degrees much ceremony is used; and the serjeants chosen hold a sumptuous feast, like that at a coronation, which formerly continued several days; also they make presents of gold rings to a considerable value, &c. Fortescue, c. 50. 3 Cro. 1. Dyer 72. 2 Inst. 213, 214. Their privilege of being impleaded in C. B. &c. Vide Privilege. See Black. Com. 3 V. 24. 3 V. 28.

Serjeants at Arms, Their office is to attend the person of the King; to arrest persons of condition offending, and give attendance on the Lord High Steward of England, sitting in judgment on any traitor, &c. There may not be above thirty Serjeants at Arms in the realm, who shall not oppress the people, in pain to lose their offices, and be fined, by the Stat. 13 R. 2. cap. 6. And two of them by the King's allowance, do attend on the two houses of parliament; the office of him in the house of commons is, the keeping of the doors, and the execution of such commands touching the apprehension and taking into custody of any offender, as that house shall instruct him. Another of them attends on the Lord Chancellor in the Chancery; and one on the Lord Treasurer of England. Also one upon the Lord Mayor of London, on extraordinary solemnities, &c. They are in the old books called Portitores, because they carried silver rods gilt with gold, as they now do, before the King. Stat. 7 Hen. 7. c. 9. Grange.

Jer. 9. Flata, l. 2. c. 38. See Black. Com. 3 V. 444.

Serjeants, of a more inferior kind are Serjeants of the Mace, whereof there is a great band in the city of London, and other corporate towns, that attend the mayor or other head officer, chiefly for matters of justice, &c. Kitch. 143. Formerly all the Justices in Eyre had certain officers attending them called Serjeants, who were in the nature of tip-staves. Westm. 1. c. 30. And the word Serjeant is used in Britten for an officer belonging to the county; which is the same with what Bracton calls Serjeant of the Hundred, being no more than bailiff of the hundred. Bract. lib. 5. c. 4. And we read of serjeants of manors, of the peace, &c.

Johannes Freeman tenet unam virgatam terra, per serjeantiam mensurandi fossata & opera Domini Regis, ad castrum Domini Regis. Lib. niger Herefordiz. Tho' services or tenures are now turned into seage, yet it may be necessary to shew how they are described in our old law-books, which see under the word servitium. See Skene de verbor. signif. and Kennet's Glossary.

Serjeants of the Household, Are officers who execute several functions within the King's household, mentioned in the Stat. 33 H. 8. c. 12.

Serjeanty, (Serjeantia) Signifies in law a service, that cannot be due from a tenant to any lord but to the King only; and this is either grand serjeanty, or petit; the first is a tenure whereby one holds his lands of the King by such services as he ought to do in person to the King at his coronation; and may also concern matters military, or services of honour in peace, as to be the King's butler, carver, &c. Petit serjeanty, is where a man holds lands of the King, to furnish him yearly with some small thing towards his wars; and in effect payable as rent. Though all tenures are turned into seage by the 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. Yet the honorary services of grand serjeanty still remain, being therein excepted. List. 153, 159. 1 Inst. 105, 108. See Chivalry. And Black. Com. 2 V. 73, 81.

Sermonium, Was an interlude or historical play, acted by the inferior orders of the clergy, assisted by youths, in the body of the church, suitable to the solemnity of some high procession day; and before the improvements of the stage, these ruder sort of performances were even a part of the unreformed religion. Collect. Matt. Hutton, Es. Reg. Eccl. Lincoln. MS.

Serpiens, A mantle or upper coat; from the Lat. superpellicium. Blount.

Servage, (mentioned in statute 1 Rich. 2. c. 6.) That is, when each tenant, besides payment of a certain rent, finds one or more workmen for his lord's service. Ing. 7 Ed. 1. Not. Etiam est religio illa ita posita in servagio per abbates Cisterciensis, quod servitium Dei in hac parte impeditur. Pla. Parl. 33 E. 1. See Service. King John brought the crown of England in servage to the see of Rome. 2 Inst. 274.

Servants, Are such as men of trades and professions employ under them, to assist them in their particular callings; or such persons as others retain to perform the work and business of their families, which comprehends both men and women: And servants are menial, or not so; menial, being domesticks living within the walls of the house. Wood's Inst. 51. Every person under the age of thirty years, that has been brought up in handicraft trades, and hath not lands of inheritance, or for life, of the yearly value of forty shillings, or is not worth ten pounds in goods, and so allowed by two justices of peace; and not being retained with any person in husbandry, or in the said arts, nor being lawfully hired as a servant with any nobleman or gentleman, or having any farm or other holding whereupon he may employ his labour; shall, upon request made by any person using the mystery wherein such person hath been exercised, be obliged to serve him as a servant therein, on pain of imprisonment. 5 Eliz. c. 4. And by the same Statute, persons are compellable to serve in husbandry by the year, with any person that cannot or useth husbandry, and who will require any poorer person to serve; and the justices of peace have authority therein, and to assess the wages of such servants in husbandry.

husbandry, order payment, &c. Also two justices, and mayors or head officers of any city or town, may appoint any poor woman of the age of twelve years, and under forty unmarried, to go to service by the year, &c. for such wages and in such manner as they think fit; and if any such woman shall refuse to go abroad as a servant, then the said justices, &c. may commit such woman until she is bound to service. Stat. Ibid. If any master shall give more wages than assessed by the justices; or any servant takes more, or refusing to serve for the statute wages, they are punishable; but a master may reward his servant, as he pleases, so as it be not by way of contract on the retainer: And if a servant depart before the end of the term, being hired for a year, without cause allowed by a justice; or after his term is expired, without giving a quarter's warning, two justices may commit him to prison till he give security to serve out the time; or one justice of peace may send him to the house of correction, there to be punished as a disorderly person. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4.

A master cannot put away a servant before the end of his term without some reasonable cause, to be allowed by one justice; nor after the end of the term without a quarter's warning given before witnesses, if a master discharges a servant otherwise, he is liable to a penalty of forty shillings. 5 Eliz. c. 4. And where servants quit their service, testimonials are to be given by constables and two householders, &c. declaring their lawful departure; and a servant not producing such a testimonial to the constable where he designs to dwell, is to be imprisoned till he gets one; and in default thereof be whipped as a vagabond; masters retaining them without such testimonial, shall forfeit five pounds. But the testimonial concerns only servants in trades and husbandry. Stat. Ibid.

No person may retain a servant for less than a year, by the ancient statutes; if one retains a servant generally, without expressing any time, the law construes it for a year; and where a servant is hired for a year, according to the statute, and the master dieth within that time, the executor must pay the wages. Dalt. 129. 1 Inst. 42. If a woman servant marrieth, she is obliged to serve out her year; but if a single woman who is with child procures herself to be retained with a master, who knows nothing thereof, this is a good cause to discharge her from her service; and so if she be gotten with child during her service. Dalt. 92. Resol. Ann. 1633. A servant retained for a year, falling sick, ought not to be discharged therefore, or for any disability by the act of God; neither may his wages be abated for these causes. Dalt. 129.

Master and servant may part by consent, and then the allowance of the discharge by a justice of peace is not necessary: And a master's detaining wages, not allowing sufficient meat, &c. or the master's wife beating him, are good causes for a servant's departure; but they must be allowed by a justice. Dalt. If a master put away his servant, he must pay him his wages to the time he served, though if the servant go away from his service before the end of the time agreed, he shall forfeit all his wages. Dalt. 129. A servant is not to depart from his service; and if he refuseth to do his business, this is a departure in law, altho' he go not ways. Noy's Max. 90.

Enticing away a servant, or retaining and keeping one who departed from his master without licence, knowing him to be a servant to another, the master may have action of the case against the person doing it. 2 Lev. 63. Stat. 23 Ed. 3. But if a man do retain another's servant, not knowing that he was in the service of the other, he shall not be punished for so doing, if he do not retain him after notice of his first service: And if a person do retain one to serve him forty days, and another doth afterwards retain him to serve for a year, the first covenant is avoided, because the retainer was not according to the statute. New Nat. Br. 374. 375. i. e. according to the law above.

A master is answerable for the actions and trespasses of his servant in many cases; but not for trespass of battery, &c. and in criminal cases, unless done by his commandment. Noy's Max. 90. And if the master order his servant to detain another man's cattle, and after he hath detained he kills or abuses the distress, the master shall answer it. Noy 111. If a man has a servant known to be such, and he send him to fairs and markets to buy or sell, his master shall be charged if the thing come to his use; tho' if the servant makes a contract in his master's name, the contract will not be binding, unless it were by the master's commandment or assent; and where a servant borrows money in his master's name, without order, that does not bind the master. Dodd & Stud. Dial. 2. c. 42. A servant buys things in his own name, the master shall not be charged, except the things bought come to his use, and he have notice of it. Kitch. 371. Where a master always gives his servant money, he shall not answer for what the servant buys on trust; but if he sends sometimes on trust, he must answer to his usual tradesmen for what is so taken up upon trust by him. Wood's Inst. 56. A master used to give his servant money every Saturday, to defray the charges of the foregoing week, and the servant kept the money; per Holt Ch. J. the master is here chargeable; for the master at his peril ought to take care what servant he employs; and 'tis more reasonable that he should suffer for the cheats of his servants, than strangers and tradesmen who do not employ them. 3 Salk. 234. It has been adjudged, that where a servant usually buys goods for his master upon tick, and takes up things in his master's name, but for his own use, the master is liable; but it is not so where the master usually gives him ready money: That if the master gives the servant money to buy goods for him, and he converts the money to his own use, and buys the goods upon tick, yet the master is answerable, as the goods come to his use; otherwise he is not: Also a note under the hand of an apprentice shall bind his master, where he is allowed to deliver out notes, tho' the money is never applied to the master's use; but if he be not allowed or accustomed to deliver out notes, his note shall not bind the master, if the money be not applied to the use of the master. 3 Salk. 234, 235.

The act of a servant shall not bind the master, unless he acts by authority of his master; and therefore if a master sends his servant to receive money, and the servant instead of money takes a bill, and the master as soon as told thereof disagrees, he is not bound by this payment: But acquiescence, or any small matter, will be proof of his master's consent, and that will make the act of the servant the act of his master. Hill. 2 Ann. B. R. 2 Salk. 442. For what is within the compass of a servant's business, the master shall be generally chargeable; and also have advantage of the same against others. Noy's Max. An assumption of the servant, by order and appointment of the master, shall bind his master; and a promise to my servant is good to me: If my bailiff buy cattle to stock my ground, I shall be chargeable in debt for the money; and if he sell corn for me, I may have action in my own name against the buyer. Bro. 24. Godb. 360. If one owe me money, and I send my servant for it, and he pay it to him; this is a good payment and discharge, tho' the servant do not bring the same to me: But if I send him not, it is otherwise. Dodd & Stud. 138.

A master sends his servant with deceitful wares to market, and orders him to sell them, but says not to whom, if he sells them, no action will lie against the master: Tho' if he had bid the servant sell them to such a man in particular, and he had done so, the master would be chargeable in action of the case. 11 Ed. 4. Kitch. 385. The master is liable for the neglects of his servant; (tho' not the wilful wrong) where a carrier's servant loses things delivered to him, the master must answer it, and action lies against him; and if goods be undertaken to be carried safely for hire, but by negligence are spoiled, it has been held, that whoever employs another, is answerable for him, and undertakes for his care to all that make use of him. 2 Noy. 440. If a surgeon undertakes the cure of a person, and by sending medicines by his servant, the wound is hurt and made worse, the patient shall have action against the master, and not against the servant. 18 Hon. 8. And where a smith's servant pricks a horse in shoeing him, the master shall answer the damages. Wood's Inst. 56. A servant casting any thing into the highway to the nuisance of the King's subjects, the master shall be charged, &c. Noy's Max. 49.

A master may maintain the cause of his servant: He may bring an action for the battery of a servant, where he loses his service, which is to be alledged: And if a servant is cozened of his master's money, the master may have action on the case against the person that cozened him. 9 Rep. 113. 10 Rep. 130. 1 Roll. Abr. 98. And in case a servant give away his master's goods, the master may have action against the receiver. Noy's Max. 94.

Where a servant damages goods of his master, action lies against him; and being employed to sell goods in his master's shop, if the servant carries away and converts them to his own use, action of trespass may be brought by the master against the servant; for the servant cannot meddle with them in any other manner than to sell them. 5 Rep. 14. 1 Leon 88. Moor 244. But if a servant be robbed, without his default, &c. he shall be excused, and allowed it in his account. 1 Inst. 9.

Servants going or making away with, imbeziling or purloining any of their master's goods, to the value of 40 s. are guilty of felony, by the stat. 21 Hen. 8. c. 7. and 12 Ann. c. 7. And assaulting their masters, they may be bound to the good behaviour, or be committed to prison for a year, &c.

By the stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 19. All complaints and disputes between masters and servants in husbandry hired for a year or longer, or between masters and artificers, handicraftsmen, miners, colliers, keelmen, pitmen, glassmen, potters, and other labourers employed for any certain time, shall be heard and determined by a justice or justices of the peace, altho' no rate of wages hath been made that year by the justices, and may order payment of so much wages as to him and them shall seem just, not exceeding 10 l. to any servant, nor 5 l. to any artificer, &c. and in case of non payment by twenty-one days, may issue a warrant to levy the same of the master's goods. And upon complaint on oath of any misdemeanor, miscarriage or ill behaviour in any such servant, artificer, &c. such justice or justices may punish the offender by commitment to the house of correction, there to be corrected and held to hard labour, not exceeding a calendar month; or by abating some part of his or her wages, or by discharging such servant, artificer, &c. from his or her service or employment. And on complaint upon oath of any misfeasance, refusal of necessary provision, cruelty, or other ill treatment to such servant, artificer, &c. by any master, the justice or justices may summon the Master to appear before him or them, and upon proof thereof upon oath to the satisfaction of such justice or justices, he or they may discharge such servant or artificer, &c. from his said service or employment, such discharge to be given gratis. Persons thinking themselves aggrieved by any such determination, may appeal to the next sessions of the peace. But no Certiorari to remove any such proceedings to any of the Courts at Westminster. But there being a proviso in the act, that nothing therein contained should extend to the stannaries in Devon and Cornwall, by the stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 6. that proviso is repealed, and it is thereby enacted that all the provisions and regulations in the said stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 19. relating to servants in husbandry, &c. shall extend to such tinners and miners as shall be employed in the said stannaries; but not to hinder any person from applying to the stannary courts, or to the warden, subwarden, or steward of the stannaries, in relation to any of the aforesaid matters. See Artificers, Felony, Labourers, Manufactures, and Black. Com. 1 V. 423. 424. 3 V. 142, 153. 4 V. 230, 231.

Servi, Bond-men, or servile tenants. Our northern servi had always a much sadder condition than the Roman servi. Servus non in nostrum morem deservit per familiam ministeriis utuntur, eum quisque suum, suos penalis regit. Ferventi modum domus, aut pecoris, aut vestis, colono iungit, & servus baltham parat. Tacitus de Moribus Germanorum. Which plainly describes the condition of our axon and Norman servants, natives and villains, whose servitude had more respect to their tenure, than their persons. No author has fixed the distinction between servus and villanus, though undoubtedly their servile state was different, for they are all along in the Domesday-Book distinguished from each other. So in Burcester there were — Quinque servi, & viginti octo villani, &c. It's supposed the servi were those, whom our lawyers have since called pure villanes, and villani in gross, who, without any determined tenure of land, were at the arbitrary pleasure of the lord appointed to such servile works, and received their wages or maintenance at discretion of the lord. The other were of a superior degree, and were called villani, because they were villæ & glebæ adscripti, i. e. held some cottage and lands, for which they were burdened with such stated servile offices, and were conveyed as appurtenant to the manor or estate to which they belonged. See Kennet's Glossary. The name and quality of their bondage do often occur in Domesday register: And their condition, no doubt, was worse than that of the bordarii or Coseti, who performed likewise some servile offices for their lord, and yet as to their persons and goods were not obnoxious to servitude, as the proper servi were. These were of four sorts, 1. Such as sold themselves for a livelihood. 2. Debtors that were to be sold, for being incapable to pay their debts. 3. Captives in war, retained and employed as perfect slaves. 4. Nativi, such as were born servants, and by such descent belonged to the sole property of the Lord. — All these had their persons, their children, and their goods, at the disposal of their Lord, incapable of making any wills, or giving away any matter. Cowell.

Servi, Were bond-men; and servi testamentarii, those which we now call covenant servants. Leg. Athelt. The proper servi were of four sorts, viz. such as sold themselves for a livelihood; debtors that were to be sold for being incapable to pay their debts; captives in war, employed as perfect slaves; nativi, such as were born servants, and by descent belonged to the sole property of the lord. And all these had their persons, their children and goods, at the disposal of their lords; and were incapable of making any wills, or giving away any thing, &c.

Servitium, (Servitium) Is that duty which the tenant by reason of his fee or estate, oweth unto the lord.

Our ancient law books make many divisions of it; as into personal and real; free and base; continual or annual; casual and accidental; intrinsic and extrinsic, &c. Bract. lib. 2. Brit. c. 66. 4 Co. Rep. 9. Personal service, is where something is to be done by the person of the tenant, as homage and fealty; and real, was wards and marriages, when in use: Annual and certain service is rent, suit of court to the lord, &c. Accidental services, are heriots, reliefs and the like: And some services are only for the lord's benefit; and some pro bono publico. Co. Copyhold 22. Co. Litt. 222. 22 E. 4. 3. Also services are said to be intire; of chattels valuable, such as an ox, or things pleasurable, as a hawk, &c. And so are those personal, and consisting of manual work, or to exercise some office, &c. The statute of Magna Charta ordains, that no freeman shall sell so much of his lands, but that of the residue the lord may have his services. 9 Hen. 3. c. 32. In feoffments to a man and his heirs, the feoffee shall hold the land of the lord by the same services as the feoffor, &c. Stat. 18 Edw. 1. And where services are intire, and cannot be divided; upon the alienation of parcel of the lands by the tenant, the services shall be multiplied, and every alienee render the whole services; tho' by the purchase of parcel by the lord, the whole is extinct, except in case of fealty and heriot custom. 6 Rep. 1. Wood's Inst. 133. As to feodal service, see farther Black. Com. 2 V. 54. And as to heriot service, Id. 422. And see Heriot.

Servitium et Sacraments, The penalty of depraving the sacrament of the altar, 1 Ed. 6. c. 1. The blessed sacrament to be administered in both kinds, 1 Ed. 6. c. 1. For the uniformity of the service and administration of sacraments, 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 1. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 1. 1 Eliz. c. 1. 8 Eliz. c. 1. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. Such service shall be used as in the last year of King Hen. 8. 1 Mar. 2. c. 2. The penalty of disturbing a preacher or priest saying divine service, or pulling down an altar, &c. 1 Mar. 2. c. 3. The penalty of not repairing to church on Sundays and holidays, 1 Eliz. c. 2. The Bible and divine service shall be translated into the Welsh tongue, 5 Eliz. c. 28. All ecclesiastical persons to read and subscribe to the Book of Common Prayer, &c. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 4. 15 Car. 2. c. 5. All persons in office to take the sacrament, and the declaration against transubstantiation, 25 Car. 2. c. 2. Time given to those in the Fleet and beyond sea till three calendar months after their return, 13 Geo. 1. c. 29. Four months, 2 Geo. 2. c. 31. Six months given for taking the sacrament, 16 Geo. 2. c. 30. Allowance of impediments for not reading the service, extended to the certificate of subscription, 23 Geo. 2. c. 28. Reading the articles to indemnify against neglect in point of time, ib.

Servitium Secular, Signifies worldly service, contrary to Spiritual and ecclesiastical. Stat. 1 Edw. 4. c. 1.

Servientibus, Are certain writs touching servants and their masters, violating the statutes made against their abuses, which see in Reg. Orig. f. 189, 190, 191.

Servitium feudale & praeiale, Was not a personal service, but only by reason of the lands which were held in fee. Bracton, lib. 2. c. 16. par. 7.

Servitium Forinsecum, A service which did not belong to the chief lord, but to the King: It was called forinsecum and foraneum, because it was done foris, vel extra servitium quod sit domino capitali: And we find several grants of liberties with the appurtenances, salvo forensi servitio, &c. in Mon. Ang. tom. 2. pag. 48.

Servitium Intrinsecum, Is that service which was due to the chief lord alone from his tenants within his manor. Bracton, lib. 2. fleta, lib. 3.

Servitium Liberum, A service to be done by feudatory tenants, who were called liberi homines, and distinguished from vassals, as was their service; for they were not bound to any of the base services of ploughing the lord's land, &c. but were to find a man and a horse, or go with the lord into the army. or to attend his court, &c. and sometimes it was called servitium liberum armorum; as in an old rental of the manor of South Malling in Essex, mentioned by Sommer in his treatise of Gavelkind, pag. 56.

Servitium Regale, Royal service, or the prerogatives that within a royal manor belonged to the lord of it; which were generally reckoned to be the following. viz. power of judicature in matters of property; and of life and death in felonies and murders; right to waifs and estrays; minting of money; assize of bread and beer; and weights and measures: All which privileges 'tis said were annexed to some manors by grant from the King. Paroch. Antiq. 60.

Servi testamentales, Were those whom we now call covenant servants. They are mentioned in the laws of King Atelstan, c. 34.

Servitius Requistandis, Is a writ judicial that lies for a man distrained for services to one, when he owes and performs them to another, for the acquittal of such services. Reg. Judic. 27.

Servitor, (Servulus) Is a serving-man; particularly applied to Scholars in the colleges of the universities, who are upon the foundation.

Servitors of Bills, Such servants or messengers of the Marshal of the King's Bench, as were sent abroad with bills or writs to summon men to that court. Stat. 2 H. 4. c. 23.

Sessur, Seems to signify the assessing or rating of wages. 25 Ed. 3. c. 6.

Sessio, (Sessio) Is a sitting of justices in court upon their commission; as the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, &c. See Black. Com. 4 P. i.

Sessio of Parliament, (Sessio Parliamenti) The sitting of the parliament; and the session of parliament continues till it be prorogued or dissolved, and breaks not off by adjournment. 4 Inst. 27. See Parliament. And Black. Com. 1 P. 186, 7.

Sessio, great, of Wales. By the stat. 34 & 35 Hi. 8. c. 26. A sessions is to be held in Wales, twice in every year in each county by judges appointed by the King, to be called the great sessions of Wales, in which all pleas of real and personal actions shall be held, with the same form of process and in as ample a manner as in the court of Common Pleas at Westminster: And writs of error shall lie from judgments therein (it being a court of record) to the court of King's Bench at Westminster.

Sessio of Great Delfbery. A session held for delivering a gaol of the prisoners therein being. See Black.

Com. 4 P. iii. And Crown & Circuit Com. 1 P. 6, 37, 58.

Sessions of the Peace, A court of record, held before two or more justices of peace, (Quorum unus) for the execution of the authority given them by their commission and certain acts of parliament. And the justices of sessions have power to hear and determine trespasses against the publick peace, &c. and many offences by statute: This court is held four times in a year at some place within the county, &c. Also besides the General Sessions of the peace, there are private sessions held by the justices, for divers particular branches of the business of their offices. Dak. Just. 573. See Black. Com. 4 P. 288.

The sessions cannot adjourn any matter without expressly adjourning the court also. Rep. Temp. Hardw. Per Anny, 80. The sessions must make a direct and final judgment themselves, Id. 81. The sessions proceeding on indictments as a court of record at Common law, must make formal and regular continuances, but need not when they proceed in making orders on a power given them by statute, Id. 81. An order of sessions for discharging an apprentice must set out the appearance of the master. Id. 101.

Sessions for ordering Servants, called statute sessions, held by constables of hundreds, &c. 5 Elix. See Statutum Sessionum.

Sessions for Weights and Measures, In London four justices from among the mayor, recorder, and aldermen, (of which the mayor or recorder to be one) may hold a sessions to inquire into offences of selling by false weights and measures, contrary to the statutes; and to receive indictments, punish the offenders, &c. Char. K. Chs. 1.

Set off. A set off may be either by plea, or notice. In such case the defendant acknowledges the justice of the plaintiff's demand on the one hand; but, on the other, sets up a demand of his own, to counter-balance that of the plaintiff, either in the whole or in part. Vide the statutes 2 Geo. 2. c. 22. and 8 Geo. 2. c. 24.

Settlement of Poor, In parishes there are several statutes relating to, viz. 43 Elix. c. 2. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 12. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 30. 12 Ann. c. 18. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. &c. See Apprentice, Bastard, Poor. Burn's Justice, tit. Poor, and 19 Vin. Abr. tit. Settlement of the Poor. And Black. Com. 1 P. 362.

Settlement, Act of. The stat. 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2. is so called, whereby the crown was limited to his present Majesty's illustrious house, and some new provisions were added at the same fortunate æra for better securing our religion, laws and liberties; which the statute declares, to be "the birthright of the people of England;" according to the antient doctrine of the Common law. Black. Com. 1 P. 128. See Id. 217. and 4 P. 433.

Seven-oke, Wool-key, how vested in trustees for the King, subject to an agreement concerning the free-school in Seven-oke, 8 Geo. 1. c. 31.

Several Action, Is where two or more persons are severally charged in any action.

Several Covenant, A covenant by two or more severally: And in a deed where the covenants are several between divers persons, they are as several deeds, wrote in one piece of parchment. 5 Rep. 23.

Several Fishery, A free fishery, or exclusive right of fishing in a publick river, is a royal franchise; and is considered as such in all countries where the feudal polity has prevailed. Black. Com. 2 P. 39.

Several Inheritance, An inheritance conveyed, so as to descend, or come to two persons severally by moieties, &c. Vide Inheritance.

Several Tail, Is that whereby land is given and intailed severally to two. Co. Litt.

Several Tenancy, (Tenura Separata) A plea or exception taken to a writ that is laid against two persons as joint tenants, who are several. Bro. 273.

Severalty, Estate in. He that holds lands or tenements in severalty, or is sole tenant thereof is he that holds them in his own right only, without any other person being joined or connected with him in point of interest, during his estate therein. Black. Com. 2 P. 179.

Servant,

Severance, Is the singling or severing of two or more joined in one writ or action. There is a Severance of the tenants in an assise, when one or two disseisees appear upon the writ, and not the other. Best Int. 8. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8. 9. 10. 11. 12. 13. 14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19. 20. 21. 22. 23. 24. 25. 26. 27. 28. 29. 30. 31. 32. 33. 34. 35. 36. 37. 38. 39. 40. 41. 42. 43. 44. 45. 46. 47. 48. 49. 50. 51. 52. 53. 54. 55. 56. 57. 58. 59. 60. 61. 62. 63. 64. 65. 66. 67. 68. 69. 70. 71. 72. 73. 74. 75. 76. 77. 78. 79. 80. 81. 82. 83. 84. 85. 86. 87. 88. 89. 90. 91. 92. 93. 94. 95. 96. 97. 98. 99. 100. Severance in debt, where two executors, &c. are plaintiffs, and one refuseth to act or prosecute. Ibid. 220. Severance in quarrel, in assise, &c. 5 Rep. 97. And it lies in real, as well as personal actions; and on writs of expropr. F. N. B. 28. 10 Rep. 135. In writ of error, if three defendants in the action bring error, and one releases the error, he may be summoned and seised, and then the other two shall proceed to reverse the judgment. 6 Rep. 26. And if in error where there are several plaintiffs, one only appears and assigns error; this is not good, without summoning and severing the rest. Cro. Eliz. 899. It has been held, that summonses and Severances in partition; yet he who was seised shall have his part: For partition must be made of the whole. Jenk. Cont. 211. And in case of jointtenants of lands, by Severance the prosecution of the suit is severed, but not the jointure; for where one alone recovers afterwards, the other may enter into the moiety recovered. Ibid. 40. Summons and Severance is usually before appearance; as nonsuit is after appearance. 10 Rep. 134. But according to Hale, there are two sorts of Severances, one when a plaintiff will not appear; and the other when several plaintiffs appear, but some will not proceed and prosecute. Hale. 317. 3 Nels. Abr. 255. If a plaintiff or defendant on a writ of Summons and Severance, sued out against him by another, doth not come in upon it, judgment shall be had ad prosequendum scilicet pro; and this hath been done in B. R. by giving a rule to appear and come in. 2 Lill. Abr. 539. See Summons and Severance.

Severance of Corn. The cutting and carrying it from off the ground: and sometimes the setting out the sithes from the rest of the corn is called Severance. 2 Cro. 325. And where executors of tenants for life, &c. dying before Severance, shall have corn down; see Emblements.

Severance of Jointure. An estate in joint-tenancy may be severed and destroyed by destroying any of its constituent unities. 1. That of time, which respects only the original commencement of the joint estate, cannot indeed (being now past) be affected by any subsequent transactions. But, 2. The joint-tenant's estate may be destroyed, without any alienation, by merely disuniting their possession. For joint-tenants being seised per my et per te, every thing that tends to narrow that interest, so that they shall not be seised throughout the whole, and throughout every part, is a Severance or destruction of the jointure. By statutes 31 H. 8. c. 1. and 32 H. 8. c. 32. joint-tenants either of inheritances or other less estates, are compellable by writ of partition to divide their lands. 3. The jointure may be destroyed, by destroying the unity of title. 4. It may also be destroyed, by destroying the unity of interest. See Black. Com. 2 K. 183, 6, 7.

Severity of Punishment. It is but reasonable among crimes of different natures those should be most severely punished, which are the most destructive of the public safety and happiness. See Black. Com. 4 K. 16. And the Marquis Beccaria's excellent Treatise on Rewards and Punishments: Especially cap. 6, &c.

Severs. A recompence for robberies done on the river Severn in Gloucestershire, may be had by action of debt, according to the statute of Winchester, 2 H. 6. None shall be disturbed in his passage over the Severn, nor any disorders committed upon the said river. Stat. 2 H. 6. and 19 H. 7. Vide Passage.

Seaward. A Saxon word for him who turns the face east; it signifies Cyphodanias.

Sewer, (Sewera) Is a fresh-water trench, or little river, inclosed with banks on both sides, to carry the water into the sea, and thereby preserve the lands against inundations, &c. The Kings of England granted Commissions of Sewers long before any statute was enacted in parliament for it; and during the reign of King Hen. 6. Ed. 2. & Hen. 7. several statutes were made for appointing commissions of sewers in all parts of the realm where needful: some for indurment years, some fifteen years, and others five years; &c. with certain powers to the commissioners; which commissions, by the 23 Hen. 8. are to be settled by the Lord Chancellor, Lord Treasurer, and the two chief justices, or any three of them, whereof the Lord Chancellor to be one; and are to continue ten years, unless repealed by a new commission: And by this law, the commissioners each is appointed: they are to be qualified as justices, by having lands, tenements or hereditaments in fee or for life, worth forty marks per ann. besides reversion; and have moveables worth 100 l. and if they execute the commission, not being thus qualified or before sworn, they incur a forfeiture of 40 l. Commissioners that may lawfully act, have an allowance for their pains of 4 s. per Diem, and their clerks 2 s. a day, out of the taxes to be laid and levied. 23 H. 8. c. 5. The commissioners of sewers have power to make and ordain laws, but not to continue in force longer than their commission by this statute; and may decree lands to be sold to levy charges assessed, upon non-payment, &c. Stat. Ibid. All laws, and ordinances of the commissioners, are to remain in force till repealed, notwithstanding the determination of their commission; and clerks of commissioners of sewers are to collect fines and penalties imposed by the commissioners yearly into the Exchequer, by 13 Eliz. c. 9. The business of the commissioners of sewers is to repair sea-banks, and walls, survey rivers, publick streams, ditches, &c. and make orders for that purpose. They have authority grounded on the statutes, to inquire of all nuisances, and offences committed by the stopping of rivers, erecting mills, not repairing of banks and bridges, &c. and to tax and assess all whom it may concern, for the amending of defaults, which tend to the obstruction or hindrance of the free passage of the water through its ancient courses: and they may arrest carts and horses, and take trees, paying a reasonable price for them, for reparations; appoint workmen, bailiffs, surveyors, and other officers, &c. Terms de Ley 541. 4 Inst. 275. Laws Sew. 86, 96. They proceed by jury and view; in their inquiries into annoyances and defects of repairs; and the jury may amerce for neglects: Also the commissioners may punish by fine for contempt, and where officers are negligent in their duty; though they may not imprison persons for disobedience to their orders. Laws Sew. But they cannot intermeddle where there is not a publick prejudice; nor can they make a new river: Upon the statute 23 Hen. 8. of sewers, the commissioners decreed, that a new river should be made out of another large river; through the main land for seven miles, unto another part of the old river, and for that purpose they laid a tax of a sum in gross upon several towns: adjudged that the commissioners have no power to make a new river, or any new invention to cast out water, &c. for such things are to be done in parliament: But they may order an old bank to be new made, or alter a sewer upon any inevitable necessity; and the tax of a sum in gross is not warranted by their commission, they being to tax every owner or possessor of the lands, according to the quality of their lands, rents, and number of acres, and their respective portions and profits, whether of pasture, fishing, &c. 10 Rep. 141.

Commissioners of sewers are to tax all equally, who are in danger to receive any damage by the waters, and not only those whose lands are next adjoining; because the rage of the waters may be so great, that the land contiguous may not be of the value to make the banks; and therefore the stat. 6 Hen. 6. c. 6. will have all that are in danger to be contributory. 5 Rep. 200. The commissioners having made a rate, according to the quantity and quality of the land, &c. may grant warrants to distrain for it; or the land may be decreed to be sold to pay the rate. But the desires of commissioners of sewers are to be certified into the Chancery, and have the King's assent to be binding; and the commissioners and their proceedings are subject to the jurisdiction of the King's Bench.

There are several causes and considerations for which persons may be obliged to repair and maintain sewers; as sewers were bound to the repairs of the walls and banks, &c. by reason of franchise; by 27 Ed. 1. c. 10. The being owner of a bank, wall, or other defence, is a sufficient inducement to impose the charge of the repairs thereof thereof upon such owner. 1 Hen. 7. Prescription and custom are much of the same nature, and the law takes notice of them in this case; but prescription doth not bind a man to the repairs, except it be ratione tenuræ. 21 Ed. 4. 38. 19 Hen. 7. By tenure of land, a person may be bound to repair a wall, bank, or defence mentioned in the statute of sewers. 12 H. 4. A man may bind himself and his heirs by covenant expressly to repair a bank, wall, or sewer, and be good; yet this shall not bind the heir after his death, where assets are not left from the ancestor, who entered into the covenant. Callis's

The use of defences may tie a man to the reparation thereof; if one and his ancestors have had the use of a river by failing up and down the same, or have used a ferry on or over it, &c. Laws Sew. 57. If no person or grounds can be known, who ought to make repairs by tenure, prescription, custom or otherwise, then the commissioners are to tax the level: And by the laws and statutes of sewers, all shall be charged, &c. Ibid. 67, 68. If it is found before commissioners of sewers, that such a person ought to repair a bank; and this is removed into B. R. the court will not quash the inquisition, or grant a new trial, except he repair it; and if afterwards he is acquitted, he shall be reimbursed. Sid. 78. In cases of sewers, the court of King's Bench inquires into the nature of the fact, before they grant a certiorari to remove orders; that no mischief may happen by inundations in the mean time, which is a discretionary execution of their power. 1 Salk. 146.

The court commonly hears counsel on both sides, where orders of commissioners of sewers are removed by certiorari, before such orders are filed; for if good, the court will grant a procedendo, which cannot be done after they are filed: but now they will file them in any case, where there is no danger likely to ensue. 1 Salk. 145. If commissioners of sewers proceed after a certiorari delivered out of B. R. attachment will issue against them, and they may be fined. 3 Nels. Abr. 218. An order of sewers was made for levying of 9 d. per acre on 1312 acres, to be paid to the clerk, to be applied towards defraying of charges in and about the execution of the commission; and held to be good, the act does not require it should be on the occupiers; and there is an express power to allow charges. 2 Str. 1127. 10 Co. 139.

Orders of sewers being removed by certiorari, the court would not file the orders till they had heard the objections debated, so as to have it in their power to send the orders back again. 2 Str. 1263. The court held, that a certiorari to bring up an order made by the commissioners, for the removal of their own clerk, was of common right, and not discretionary, as in the case of other orders, where great inconveniencies may follow by inundations in the mean time. 1 Str. 609.

The sea, creeks, and bays, on the coasts, are all within the statutes of sewers, in point of extent; but they and the shores, and the relinquished grounds, are out of the commission of sewers, to be determined thereby: but ports and havens, as well as the walls and banks of waters, are within the commission of sewers; and the shore and grounds left by the sea, when they are put in gainage and made profitable, are then within the power of the commission of sewers: And though before, the ground left by the sea, is not, as to defence, within the commission of sewers; yet a wall or bank may be thereon raised, for the succour of the country, although not for any private commodity, the commission of sewers aiming at the general good. Callis's Read. Laws Sew. 31, 32. The stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 14. ordains, That all ditches, banks, bridges, streams and watercourses, within two miles of London, falling into the Thames, shall be subject to the commission of sewers: And the Lord Mayor, &c. is to appoint persons who have power of commissioners of sewers. 7 Ann. c. 10. Repairs of sea-banks in Norfolk, by order of justices of peace as highways. Sheriff, Sherriff, or Shire-reeve, (Vicecomes) Sax. Scire gerebb, i. e. Pagi vel comitatus praepositus, or rather from the Sax. Scyrian, to divide; is the chief officer under the King in every shire or county, being so called from the first division of the kingdom into counties. Camb. Brit.

2. Who are qualified or exempt from serving the office of sheriff.
3. Manner of appointing him, and of his oath.
4. The sheriff can execute no other office; how long to continue in office; and of his jurisdiction.
5. The sheriff cannot dispose of his bailiwick; and of his power and duty in appointing an under sheriff.

1. Of sheriffs generally.

It seems that anciently the government of the county was by the King lodged in the Earl or Count, who was the immediate officer to the crown; and this high office was granted by the King at will, sometimes for life, and afterwards in fee; but when it became too burthensome, and could not be commodiously executed by a person of so high rank and quality, it was thought necessary to constitute a person duly qualified to officiate in his room and stead; from hence he is called in Latin Viccomes, and Sheriff from Shire Reeve, i. e. governor of the shire or county. He is likewise considered in our books as bailiff to the crown; and his county of which he hath the care, and in which he is to execute the King's writs, is called a bailiwick. Dav. 60. Savil 43. 1 Rol. R.p. 274. Co. Lit. 168. Vide Pref. to 9 Rep. Co. 33.

It is said by Lord Coke and Dalton, that Earls, by reason of their high employments and attendance upon the King, being not able to follow all the business of the county, were delivered of all that burthen, and only enjoyed the honour as they now do, and that labour was laid upon the sheriff; so that now the sheriff doth all the King's business in the county; and the sheriff, though he be still called Viccomes, yet all he doth, and all his authority, is immediately from and under the King, and not from or under the Earl; so that at this day the sheriff hath all the authority for the administration and execution of justice, which the Count or Earl had; the King by his letters patent now committing to the Sheriff Custodiam Com. 9 Co. 49. Dalt. Sher. 2.

He is therefore at this day considered as an officer of great antiquity, trust and authority, having, as Mr. Dalton observes, from the King the custody, keeping, command and government (in some sort) of the whole county committed to his charge and care; and, according to my Lord Coke, he is said to have triplicem custodiam, viz. Vita justitiae, vita legis & vita reipublicae, &c. Vita justitiae to serve process, and to return indifferent juries for the trial of mens lives, liberties, lands and goods; vita legis to execute process and make execution, which is the life of the law, and vita reipublicae to keep the peace. Co. Lit. 168. Dalt. Sb. 5.

It seems that anciently, and before the statute 9 Ed. 2. Sheriffs were elected by the freeholders of the county, as the coroners are at this day, and consequently that their offices did not determine by the death of the King. 2 Inst. 558. 2 Brownl. 282.

And though at this day the King hath the sole appointment of sheriffs, except in counties palatine, and where there are jura regalia, yet it hath been adjudged, that the office of sheriff is an entire thing, and that therefore the King cannot apportion or divide it, that is, he cannot determine it in part as for one town or one hundred; neither can he abridge the sheriff of any thing incident to or belonging to his office. Dav. 60. 4 Co. 33. Milton's case, Dalt. Sb. 6. Hob. 13. Raym. 363.

The Lord Mayor and citizens of London have the soverignty of London and Middlesex in fee; by charter; and two sheriffs are annually elected by them, for whom they are to be answerable: If one of these sheriffs dies, the other cannot act till another is made, and there must be two Sheriffs of London; which is a city and county, though they make but one sheriff of the county of Middlesex: they are several as to plaints, in their respective courts. 3 Rep. 72. Shew. Rep. 289.

2. Who are qualified or exempt from serving the office of sheriff.

It is provided by several acts of parliament, that no man shall be sheriff in any county, except he have sufficient lands within the same county where he shall be sheriff, whereof to answer the King and his people in case that any person shall complain against them; and that none that is steward or bailiff to a great lord shall be made sheriff. 9 Ed. 2. 2 Ed. 3. c. 4. 4 Ed. 3. c. 9. 5 Ed. 3. c. 4.

It is holden that the King hath an interest in every subject, and a right to his service, and that no man can be exempt from the office of sheriff but by act of parliament or letters patent. Sav. 43. 9 Co. 46.

And on this foundation it was adjudged in Sir John Read's case, who was made high sheriff of Hertfordshire, at the time he was excommunicated for non-payment of alimony, that an information properly lay against him for not executing the office; though it was objected on his behalf, that the oath and sacrament imposed by act of parliament are necessary qualifications for all sheriffs, which he was disabled to take by reason of the excommunication; but the court held that he was punishable for not removing the disability, it being in his power to get himself absolved from the excommunication; and that therefore it could be no excuse. 2 Mod. 299. Attorney General v. Sir John Read.

And though in the above case it was admitted, that the subject was bound to serve the King in such capacity as he is in at the time of the service commanded, yet it was insisted upon, that he was not obliged to qualify himself to serve in every capacity; and that therefore a prisoner for debt is not bound nor compellable to be sheriff, no more than a person is bound to purchase lands to qualify himself to be either a coroner or justice of the peace; and it was likewise said, that by the stat. 3 Jac. 1. c. 4. Every recusant is disabled; he may conform, but he is not bound to it; for if he submits to the penalty, it is as much as is required by law. 2 Mod. 301.

Dissenters are not compellable to serve the office of sheriff, the Chamberlain of London and Evans, in the house of Lords 1766.

If a man is disabled by a judgment in law to bear an office, he is excused; nam judicium redditur in invitum; for though his fault or neglect was the occasion of such judgment, yet it is a mark set upon him by the government. Salk. 168. 4 Mod. 273.

And as nothing but an invincible necessity can exempt a person from serving the office of sheriff, &c. on this foundation a by-law made in London, that no freeman chosen sheriff, &c. shall be excused unless he voluntarily swears he is not worth 10,000 l. &c. and if he openly refuses to take the office, then to forfeit the sum of 400 l. was adjudged good. Salk. 142. Carth. 480. 5 Mod. 438. City of London v. Fanacre.

3. Manner of appointing him, and of his oath.

The high sheriff hath his authority given him by two patents; by the one the King commits to him the custody of the county; by the other the King commands all other his subjects within that county to be aiding and assisting to him in all things belonging to his office. Dalt. Sb. 7. where see the form of such patents.

By the stat. 9 Ed. 2. s. 2. The chancellor, treasurer and judges are to meet crastino autumum, being the 3d of November, every year, in the Exchequer chamber, to nominate persons to be made sheriffs; and the manner is, the lord chancellor, treasurer and other high officers, being of the Privy council, together with the judges of both benches and the barons of the Exchequer, being assembled in the Exchequer chamber, nominate three persons in every county to be presented to the King, that he may prick one of them to be sheriff of every county. Dalt. Sb. 6.

Sb. 6. But it may be put off to another day. Cro. Car. 13. 595.

And yet the King by his prerogative may make and appoint the sheriffs without this usual assembly, and election or nomination in the Exchequer, as is the daily practice at this day upon the death of any sheriff. Dyer 225. Dalt. Sb. 6.

The sheriffs in every of the shires of Wales shall be nominated yearly by the lord president, council and justices of Wales, and shall be certified up by them; and after appointed and elected by the King as other sheriffs be, 34 Hen. 8. cap. 26. Dalt. Sb. 6.

The sheriff, before he doth exercise any part of his office, and before his patent is made out, is to give security in the King's Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, under pain of 100*l.* for the payment of his proffers, and all other profits of the sheriffwick; but these securities are never sued, unless there is a deficiency in the sheriff's effects. Dalt. Sb. 7.

The sheriff, before he takes upon him the exercise of his office, must not only take the oaths of allegiance and abjuration enjoined to all officers by divers acts of parliament, and all sheriffs, except those of Wales and the counties palatine, an oath, appointed by stat. 3 Geo. 1. c. 15. stat. 18. for the due execution of their office.

If a person refused to take upon him the office of sheriff, it was usual to punish him in the Star-chamber; and he may now be proceeded against by information in the court of King's Bench. Also if he refuses to take the oaths enjoined him, or officiates in the office before he hath thus qualified himself, the court, which hath a general superintendancy over all officers and ministers of justice, will grant an information against him; and it hath been held, that a refusal of oaths enjoined to be taken, amounts to a refusal of the office. Dalt. Sb. 15. Dyer 167. 3 Lev. 116. Carib. 307.

A sheriff at the entrance into his sheriffalty, is to go to the Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, and there enter into a recognizance with sureties, with conditions for payment of his proffers or accounts: then his attorney, &c. will write him a note, signifying that he is chosen sheriff of such a county, and hath entered a recognizance; which he must deliver to one of the six clerks in Chancery, to make his patent by; with the writ of assistance, and writ of discharge to his predecessor: And in the next place, the new sheriff is to go to a master in Chancery, if he be in London, to take the oaths. Dalt. Sher. 291.

If the sheriff be not in London, the oath may be taken by dedimus potestatem, directed to any two justices of the peace of the same county, one to be of the quorum, or to any other commissioner or commissioners, or before one of the judges of assize for that county, or one of the masters in Chancery, who, it is said, may as well as the judge administer such oath without any dedimus. Dalt. Sb. 13, 14.

If the commissioners shall return the commission or writ, and the oaths to be taken when they are not taken, this is finable. Dyer 168. Dalt. Sher. 14.

When a sheriff is chosen, the old sheriff continues sheriff of the county till the new is sworn, which completes him in his office: But the office of the old sheriff ceases, and is at an end when the writ of discharge comes to him.

4. The sheriff can execute no other office; how long to continue in office; and of his jurisdiction.

It is holden, that a sheriff cannot be elected knight of the shire for that county for which he is sheriff. 4 Inq. 48. Lit. R. 326. Sir Simon Dene's Year. 38, 436.

And altho' a sheriff is by virtue of his office a conservator of the peace, yet it is enacted by the 1 Mar. 2. cap. 8. stat. 2. that no person having the office of sheriff of any county shall exercise the office of justice of the peace in any county where he shall be sheriff during the time he shall use the office of sheriff. Dalt. Sb. 27.

By the 1 Hen. 5. cap. 4. it is enacted, That no under-sheriff, sheriff's clerk, receiver, nor sheriff's bailiff, shall be attorney in any of the King's courts during the time that he is in office. Dalt. Sb. 454.

By the 14 Ed. 3. cap. 7. Confirmed by 23 H. 6. cap. 8. It is enacted, That no sheriff, under-sheriff, nor sheriff's clerk, shall tarry or abide in his office above one year, upon pain to forfeit two hundred pounds a year as long as he occupieth the office; and every pardon made for such offence or forfeiture shall be void; and see 42 Ed. 3. cap. 9.

By the 1 Ric. 2. cap. 11. it is enacted, That none that hath been sheriff of any county a year shall be within two years next chosen again, or put in the same office, if there be other sufficient. Confirmed by 23 H. 6. cap. 8.

And by the 1 H. 5. cap. 4. it is enacted, That they that be bailiffs of sheriffs one year, shall be in no such office by three years next following, except bailiffs of sheriffs which inherit in their office.

By the Common law the patents of sheriffs, like all other commissions, determined by the death or demise of the King; but now by the statutes 7 W. 3. Mav. and 1 Ann. such commission shall remain in full force for the space of six months next after such death or demise, unless superseided, determined or made void by the next succession. Dyer 165. Dalt. Sb. 17. Vide 7 Co. 30.

It hath been held, that the office of sheriff doth not determine by the party's becoming a peer on the death of his father, but that he still remains sheriff ad voluntatem Regis. Cro. Eliz. 12. Sir Lewis Mordant's case.

By the fourth of H. 4. cap. 5. it is enacted, That every sheriff shall be dwelling in proper person within his bailiwick for the time he shall be such officer, and that the sheriff shall be sworn to do the same.

Hence it is clear, that a sheriff hath no jurisdiction in any other county, nor can he do a judicial act, and in which his personal presence is required, out of his county; but it is held that he may do a ministerial act, as make a panel, or return a writ out of his county, unless he is beyond sea. *Dalt. 5. The sheriff cannot dispose of his bailiwick; and of his power and duty in appointing an under-sheriff.

By the 23 Hen. 6. cap. 10. it is provided, "That no sheriff shall let to farm in any manner his county, nor any of his bailiwicks, hundreds or wapentakes."

In the construction hereof it hath been holden, that this is a particular law, and must be pleaded, otherwise the judges cannot take notice of it. 3 Keib. 678. Ellis v. Nelson.

By the 3 Geo. 1. cap. 15. stat. 10. "It shall not be lawful for any person to buy, sell, let or take to farm, the office of under-sheriff or deputy-sheriff, seal-keeper, county-clerk, shire-clerk, gaoler, bailiff, or any other office pertaining to the office of high-sheriff, or to contract for any of the said offices, on forfeiture of 500*l.* one moiety to his Majesty, the other to such as shall sue in any court at Westminster, within two years after the offence."

Provided, that nothing in this act shall hinder any high sheriff from constituting an under-sheriff or deputy-sheriff, as by law he may, nor to hinder the under-sheriff in any case of the high sheriff's death, when he acts as high sheriff, from constituting a deputy, nor to hinder the receipt of, or accounting to the sheriff, &c. for legal fees. See Dalt. 3, 514. Hob. 13. 2 Brownl. 281.

The high sheriff may execute the office himself, and the under-sheriff hath not, nor ought to have, any estate or interest in the office itself; neither may he do any thing in his own name, but only in the name of the high sheriff.

By the 3 Geo. 1. cap. 19. sec. 8. it is enacted, "That if any sheriff shall die before the expiration of his year, or before he be superseded, the under-sheriff shall nevertheless continue in his office, and execute the same in the name of the deceased, till another sheriff be appointed and sworn; and the under-sheriff shall be answerable for the execution of the office during such interval, as the high-sheriff would have been; and the security given by the under-sheriff and his pledges shall stand a security to the King, and all persons whatsoever, for the performing his office during such interval."

The under-sheriff, before he intermeddle with the office, is to be sworn; this is enjoined by the statute 27 Eliz. cap. 12. and the form of the oath there prescribed. That before this statute the under-sheriff was never sworn. 1 Roll. Rep. 274. per Coke.

And now by the 3 Geo. 1. cap. 15. sec. 19. In Derbyshire the King's bailiffs anciently took 6 d. of every bovat of land, in the name of sheriff-tooth. Ryl. Plac. Parl. 653. And it is said to be a common tax levied for the sheriff's diet.

Shewring. (monstratio) Is specially used to be quit of attachment in a court, in plaints shewed and not avowed. Shep. Epitom. 1130. Vide Monstrans.

Shield. (scutum) An instrument of defence; (from the Sax. scýldan) to cover, or the Greek συντα a skin, anciently shields being made with skins.

Shifting Use. See Secondary Use, and Black. Com. 2 V. 335.

Shilling. (Sax. selling, Lat. solidus) Among the English Saxons passed but for 5 d. afterwards it contained 16 d. and often 20 d. In the reign of King William I. called the Conqueror, a shilling was of the same value as at this day. Leg. H. 1. Domeyday.

Shillotte. Est emenda pro transgressione facta in nativam, tam impregnando. Monast. Rading. MS.

Ship-money. Was an imposition charged upon the ports, towns, cities, boroughs and counties of this realm, in the time of King Charles I. by writs commonly called ship-writs, under the Great Seal of England in the year 1635 and 1636, for the providing and furnishing certain ships for the King's service, &c. which was declared to be contrary to the laws and statutes of this realm, the petition of right, and liberty of the subject. by Stat. 17 Car. 1. c. 14. See Black. Com. 4 V. 430.

Shipper. Is a Dutch word signifying the master of a ship, mentioned in the Stat. 1. Jac. 1. rep. 3. We use it for any common seaman; and commonly say shipper.

Shipper in Kent. Its inhabitants liable towards the repair of the King's ferry. 18 Eliz. c. 10.

Ships and Shipping. None of the King's subjects are to export and import merchandise in any ships but

English, on pain of forfeiture. 5 R. 2. c. 3. But merchants had power to hire other ships, by 6 R. 2. c. 8. and 4 H. 7. c. 10. Goods imported or exported out of or to any territories belonging to England in Asia, Africa, or America, shall be in ships belonging to the English, and the master and three-fourths of the mariners to be also English, upon pain to lose such goods and the vessel, &c. 12 Car. 2. c. 18. A duty of 5 s. per ton is granted on foreign built ships, one moiety for the chest at Chatham, and the other for Greenwich Hospital, to relieve decayed seamen. 1 Jac. 2. c. 18. No owner of a ship shall be liable answer loss, by reason of imbeziling any gold, silver, jewels, &c. taken in or put on board, or for any forfeiture incurred, without the privity or knowledge of such owner, further than the value of the ship and freight due: But other remedies against the master and seamen of such ships, are not taken away. 7 Geo. 2. c. 15. As a master or owners of a ship may have an action for the freight; either the one or the other are answerable, where goods are damaged in the ship. But where there are several owners, and one disagrees to the voyage, he shall not be liable to any action after for a miscarriage, &c. Comberb. 116. See 2 Strange 1251. where the owner, and not the freighter, is liable for a loss of gold sent by the ship. See how far owners of ships are liable for default of the masters at Common law, Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annaly, 85, 194. Owners of ships are liable for the goods on account of the freight, tho' robbed of them, and for default of the master. Id. 86. An action doth not lie against a man as owner, but as he hath the benefit of the freight; for when there are several owners, and one dissents from the voyage, he shall not be liable afterwards for a miscarriage, &c. Id. 90. Comb. 117. per Holt Ch. J. See 2 Strange 816. where it was held, that prima facie the repairer of a ship has his election to sue the master who employs him, or the owners; but if he undertakes it on a special promise from either, the other is discharged. See Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 6. to oblige ships more effectually to perform quarantine; and for the more effectually preventing the plague being brought from foreign parts. Ships ballast in the Thames, how raised, and at what prices to be delivered, &c. Vide 6 Geo. 2. c. 29. Ships of War, see Navy.

By 26 Geo. 2. c. 19. Plundering any vessel either in distress or wrecked, and whether any living creature be on board or not, or preventing the escape of any person that endeavours to save his life, or wounding him, &c. or putting out false lights to bring any vessel into danger, are capital felonies. For assisting ships in distress, see 4 Geo. 1. c. 12.

Shire. (comitatus, from the Sax. scýre, to part or divide) Is well known to be a part or portion of this kingdom, called also county; The old Latin word was scýra; and scýra, provincia indicabatur. Brompt. 659. King Alfred first divided this land; and his division was in satrapias, which we now call shires, in centurias, now called hundreds, and decennas, which we call tithings. Leg. Alfred. See Brompton 956. and Black. Com. 1 V. 116.

Shire-clerk. Is he that keeps the county court; his office is so incident to the sheriff, that the King cannot grant it. Mitton's case. 4 Rep.

Shire-man, or Shyre-man. Was anciently judge of the county, by whom trials for land, &c. were determined before the conquest. Lamb. Peramb. p. 442.

Shire-mote. An assembly of the county or shire at the assizes, &c. See Scyregemot, Shire, Turn.

Shoemakers. Are to make their shoes of sufficient leather, or forfeit 3 s. 4 d. 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. Journeymen shoemakers, imbeziling leather, shall make satisfaction for damage, or be ordered by justices to be whipped, &c. Also persons buying or receiving such leather are to make reasonable recompence, to be levied by distress, &c. and search is to be made after the same. 9 Geo. 1. cap. 27. And all journeymen employed in making boots, shoes, slippers, or gloves, &c. that neglect their business, by working for any other master, before they have done the work first undertaken, may be committed to the house of correction for a month, by 13 Geo. 2. c. 8. Vide Lea-

Shooting. Shooting at persons in any dwelling house, or other place, felony without clergy. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22.

Shop. (shopa) A place where any thing is openly sold — Johannem H. dediff. Rogero Smith anam shopam cum pertin. in, &c. situat. in le market-place, &c. Dat. 27 Feb. 9 Edw. 4.

Shop-books. These are not allowed of themselves to be given in evidence for the owner; but a servant who made the entry may have recourse to them to refresh his memory: And if such servant (who was accustomed to make such entries) be dead, and his hand be proved, the book may be read in evidence. Black. Com. 3 V. 368. The degree of credit which such evidence deserves, must rest with a jury.

Shoplifters. Are those that steal goods privately out of shops; which being to the value of 5 s. tho' no person be in the shop, is felony excluded clergy, by the 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 23.

Shorling and morling. Are words to distinguish fell of sheep; shorling being the fells after the fleeces are shorn off the sheep's back; and morling, the fells she'd off after they die or are killed: In some parts of England they understand by a shorling, a sheep whose face is shorn off; and by a morling, a sheep that dies. Stat. 3 Ed. 4. c. 1. See Morling.

Shortheld. The ancient custom of the city of Exeter is, when the lord of the fee cannot be answered rent due to him out of his tenement, and no distress can be levied for the same; the lord is to come to the tenement, and there take a stone or some other dead thing of the said tenement, and bring it before the mayor and bailiffs; and thus he must do seven quarter-days successively; and if on the seventh quarter-day, the lord is not satisfied his rent and arrears, then the tenement shall be adjudged to the lord to hold the same a year and a day; and forthwith proclamation is to be made in the court, That if any man claims any title to the said tenement, he must appear within the year and a day next following, and satisfy the lord of the said rent and arrears: But if no appearance be made, and the rent not paid, the lord comes again to the court, and prays that, according to the custom, the said tenement be adjudged to him in his demesne as of fee, which is done accordingly; so as the lord hath from thenceforth the said tenement with the appurtenances to him and his heirs: And this custom is called shortheld; being as much as in French to foreclose. Sica, Sicha. A ditch from the Sax. sic, lacuna. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 130.

Sich. (sichetum and sichetus) Is a little current of water, which is dry in summer; a water furrow or gutter. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 426.

Siclus. Was a sort of money current among the old English, of the value of 2 d. We read of it in Egbert's Dialogo de Ecclesiasticis institutionibus, p. 98.

Sicut alias. Another writ like the former; it runs, Præcipimus tibi sicut alias præcepimus, &c. 4 Co. Rep. 55. See Alias.

Sidelings. Are meers betwixt or on the sides of ridges of arable land. Mon. Ang. tom. 2. p. 275.

Sidemen, (rebus synodsmen) Is used for those persons or officers that are yearly chosen in great parishes in London and other cities, according to custom, to assist the churchwardens in their presentments of such offenders and offences to the ordinary, as are punishable in the spiritual courts: And they are also called questmen. They take an oath for doing their duty; and are to present persons that do not resort to church on Sundays, and there continue during the whole time of divine service, &c. Can. 90. They shall not be cited by the ordinary to appear but at usual times, unless they have wilfully omitted for favour, to make presentment of notorious publick crimes, when they may be proceeded against for breach of oath, as for perjury. Canon 117. Vide Synodales Testes.

Si fecerit te securum. A species of original writ, so called, from the words of the writ, which directs the sheriff to cause the defendant to appear in court, without any option given him, provided the plaintiff gives the sheriff security effectually to prosecute his claim. Black. Com. 3 V. 274.

Sigillum. A seal for the sealing of deeds and charters, &c. Before the time of William the Conqueror the English did not seal with wax, but they usually made a golden cross on the parchment, and sometimes an impression on a piece of lead, which hanged to the grant with a string of silk; and this was held a sufficient confirmation of the grant itself, without signing, or any witnesses. The colour of the wax with which the King's grants were sealed, was usually green, to signify rem in perpetuo vigore permanuram; and the impression in laymen's seals was, a man on horseback with a sword in his hand, till the year 1218, and then they began to engrave their coats of arms on their seals; only the archbishops and bishops, by a decree of Cardinal Otto, who was legate here in the year 1237, were to have sigillum, puta nomen dignitatis, officii, seu collegii, & etiam illorum proprium nomen, qui dignitatis vel officii perpetui gaudens honore, insculptum notis & characteribus manifestis, sicque sigillum authenticum habebatur. Cowell.

Sigla. (from the Sax. sigel) A sail, mentioned in the laws of King Ethelred, cap. 24.

Sign Manual. Is where any bill or writing is signed under the hand of the King, and usually in order to the passing of the King's grants, &c. through the offices of the Keepers of Seals. Counterfeiting sign manual made treason. 1 Mar. sess. 2. c. 6.

Signet. (Fr.) Is one of the King's seals, used in sealing his private letters, and all such grants as pass his Majesty's hand by bill signed; which seal is always in the custody of the King's secretaries, and there are four clerks of the signet-office attending them. 2 Inst. 556. The law takes notice of the sign-manual and privy signet; and it is said a ne exeat regno may be issued by commandment under the privy signet, as well as by the King's writ under the Great Seal. Wood's Inst. 457. See Privy Seal, and Black. Com. 2 V. 347.

Significavit. A writ issuing out of the Chancery, upon a certificate given by the ordinary of a man's standing excommunicate by the space of forty days, for the laying him up in prison till he submit himself to the authority of the church: And it is so called, because significavit is an emphatical word in the writ. Reg. Orig. There is also another writ of this name in the register, directed to the justices of the bench, commanding them to stay any suit depending between such and such parties, by reason of an excommunication alledged against the plaintiff, &c. Reg. Orig. 7. And in Fitzherbert we find writs of significavit in other cases; as significavit pro corporis deliberatione, &c. F. N. B. 62, 66. Stat. 23 & 24 Car. 2. The common writ of significavit is the same with the writ de excommunicatione capiendo.

Signing of deeds and wills is necessary to make them binding; the signing a will by the testator is an essential circumstance, without which 'tis not a will; for this is expressly expressly required by the Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. See Black. 2 V. 305.

Sign-Manual. The subscription of the King at the top of grants or letters patent, which first pass by bill, &c. Black. Com. 2 V. 347. By Stat. 1 Mar. 2. c. 6. If any person shall falsely forge or counterfeit the sign-manual, privy-signet, or privy-seal, such offences shall be deemed high treason.

Signum. A cross prefixed as a sign of assent and approbation to a charter or deed, used by the Saxons. Vide Seals.

Signs. The citizens of London are to hang out signs at their houses, for the better finding out their respective dwellings, &c. Chart. K. Char. I.

Silentarius. Signifies one of the privy council; and silentium was formerly taken for conventus privatus. Matt. Paris. anno 1171. According to Littleton, it is an usher, who seeth good rule and silence kept in court. Litt. Dia.

Simnel, (fiminellus, vel fimmellus) Is mentioned in the assise of bread, and is still in use, especially in Lent: The English simnel is panis purior, or the purest white bread. Stat. 51 H. 3.

Simnell, (fiminellus) From the Lat. simila, which signifies the finest part of the flour; panis similageneus, simnell-bread. It is mentioned in stat. assisa panis, (and is still in use, especially in Lent;) bread made into a simnell shall weigh two shillings less than wastell-bread. Stat. 51 H. 3. The English simnell was the purest white bread. Cowell.

Simony, (simonia, venditio rei sacræ) So called from Simon Magus.

1. Of simony, generally.

2. What shall be deemed simony; and the penalty on this offence.

3. How far bonds of resignation are lawful; and the power exercised over such bonds by the court of Chancery.

4. Whether the ordinary is obliged to accept a resignation on such bond; and some objections to these bonds considered.

1. Of simony, generally.

Simony is a corrupt contract for a presentation to any benefice of the church, for money, gift, or reward: It is defined to be, studiosa voluntas emendi vel vendendi aliquid spirituale aut spirituali annexum opere subsecuto. — Also venditio rei sacræ; so called from Simon Magus. And some authors mention simony per munus triplex; as per munus a manu, i. e. by bribery, where money is paid down for a benefice; per munus a lingua, by favour and flattery; per munus ab obsequio, i. e. by a sordid subjection to the patron, or doing him services: To which has been added, the making of presents, without taking any notice of expecting a church benefice.

It was agreed by all the justices, Trin. 8 Jac. That if the patron present any person to a benefice with cure, for money, that such presentation, &c. is void, tho' the presentee were not privy to it; and the statute gives the presentation to the King. Co. 12 Rep. fol. 74. Simony may be by compact between strangers, without the privy of the incumbent or patron. Cro. 1 par. fol. 331. Barwiderake's case. Hob. Rep. fol. 165. Noy's Rep. fol. 22. Pasfall's case. And 3 Inst. 153. Some authors mention simoniacum per munus triplex, and tell us of a person who took off the cap of Grosulan, an archbishop of Milan, and shaking it, told the people, Iste Grosulanus qui est sub ista cappa (et non de alio dico) est simoniacus, &c. per munus a manu, i. e. by bribery, per munus a lingua, i. e. by favour and flattery, per munus ab obsequio, i. e. by a sordid subjecting himself to the patron. Cowell.

Simony is generally said to be the buying or selling holy orders, or some ecclesiastical benefice. An ecclesiastical benefice, in the larger sense of it, in which it is here used, comprehends not only parochial benefices, but all ecclesiastical dignities and promotions. As by this offence worthy and learned men are kept out of the church, and a door is, to the great scandal of religion and prejudice of morality, opened to persons by no means qualified to discharge the duties of the sacred function, it is of the utmost consequence to society that it be prevented. With a view to this, canons were anciently made, by which a very strict oath was enjoined; and it was punished with deprivation or disability, as the case required.

In 1 Inst. 17, b. 89. a. simony is spoke of as a thing so detestable in the eye of the Common law, that a plaintiff in quære impedit could not, before the statute of Westm. 2. recover damages for the loss of his presentation, it being considered as a thing of no value; nor could a guardian in soage present to an advowson in the right of his heir, because, as he could take nothing for it, he could not bring bring it to account. This doctrine is confirmed in 3 Inst. 176. and the book adds, that it is the more odious to the Common law, because it is frequently accompanied with perjury, for the presentee is sworn to commit no simony. In Cro. Ch. 353. MacKaller and Fotherick, it is said that this has by the law of God and of the land been always accounted a great offence. In Hob. 167. Wincomb and Pulleton, it is laid down, that a bond on a simoniacal contract is against law, because ex turpi causa, and contra bonos mores; nay, that it is as void as an usurious bond, which, if paid by an executor, is a devastavit. The same is held in Cro. Car. 425. Byrte and Manning. In Carth. 252. Bartlett and Vinor, such bonds are said to be void as being against law, altho' they are not so declared by the statute. As neither the consideration of the heinousness of the offence, nor the provision made against it by the Canon or Common law, was sufficient to put a stop to this mischief, it was at length restrained under severe penalties by stat. 31 Eliz. cap. 6. 4 New Abr. 465.

2. What shall be deemed simony; and the penalty on this offence.

By stat. 31 Eliz. c. 6. sect. 35. it is enacted, 'That if any person or persons, bodies politick or corporate, shall for any sum of money, reward, &c. or by reason of any promise, &c. present or collate any person to any benefice, &c. every such presentation, collation, &c. shall be utterly void, and it shall be lawful for the Queen, her heirs and successors, to present, &c. unto such benefice, &c. and that every person or persons, bodies politick or corporate, that shall give or take any such sum of money, &c. or take or make any such promise, &c. shall forfeit the double value of one year's profit of every such benefice, &c. and the person so corruptly taking, &c. such benefice, &c. shall be adjudged a disabled person in law to enjoy the same.'

By sect. 6. it is enacted, 'That if any person shall for any sum of money, reward, &c. admit, institute, install, induct, invest, or place any person in or to any benefice, &c. shall forfeit the double value of one year's profit of every such benefice, &c.' Vide the statute.

A donative is not within the words of the statute; yet, as a corrupt presentation thereto is within the mischief intended to be thereby remedied, it is within the meaning of it. Cro. Car. 331. Bawderick and Mackaller. For the same reason the corrupt promoting to, or obtaining of a curacy, has been held to be simony. Carth. 485. Bishop of St. David's and Lucy.

This offence is more frequently committed when a church is void; but it may be committed when it is full. If a contract be when a church is full, to give a sum of money for a presentation to it, when it shall become void, this is a simoniacal contract. 1 Brownl. 7. So the buying when a church is full, with intent to present a certain person, and the presenting that person when the living becomes void, is simony. Lane 102. Kitchin v. Calvert. Noy 25. Wincomb v. Pulleton. So if one purchase the next avoidance of a church, with intent to present his son or kinsman, and does present the person intended to be presented, this is simony. Noy 25. Godb. 390. So the purchase of the next avoidance of a church when the incumbent is sick or near dying, with intent to present a certain person, and the presenting him, is simony. Winch 63. Sheldon v. Brett. Noy 25. Hughes 390. See 4 New Abr. 469.

Notwithstanding the determinations, that if one person purchased the next presentation of a benefice when full, with design to present a certain person, and did present him, it was simony, it became a doubt whether it was so for a clerk himself to purchase for himself the next turn in a living? To remove this it was enacted, 'That if any person shall for money or profit, in his own name, or in the name of any other person, procure the next presentation or collation to any benefice, and be presented or collated thereto, it shall be deemed to all intents and purposes a simoniacal contract.' 12 An. B. 2. cap. 12. par. 2.

From all these authorities it appears, that altho' it be lawful, except in the cases excepted, to purchase the next avoidance when a church is full, there is great danger of being guilty; at least in foro conscientia, of this offence. It is fit it should be so, else men would be for ever purchasing for their sons and friends, and the almost necessary consequence of such a traffick in livings, would be the filling the church with very improper persons. 4 New Abr. 469.

It is equally simony where the presentation is by a person usurping the right to present, as if it had been by the person having a good right. 3 Inst. 153. So if a presentation be by one usurping the right of patronage, and pending a quare impedit for removing his clerk, who is after removed, the living is sold, this is simony, for the church was never full of that clerk; and by this means the statute might be eluded, for it would only be getting an usurper to present while the living was void, and then selling it. 3 Lev. 115. Walk. v. Hammerly, S. C. 2 Vent. 32. A corrupt contract with the wife of the patron is simoniacal, altho' the patron is not privy to it. 1 Ref. Rep. 255. Cro. Jac. 385. If a clerk contracts to give money for being presented to a church, and is after presented gratis; this is simony. Lane 103. Kitchin v. Calvert. In this case the clerk is an unfit person, for having at that time been capable of intending to buy a living corruptly. It also implies some defect in him; for the presumption is that persons well qualified will always be preferred, and have therefore no need to purchase. With this agrees Cro. Eliz. 789. where simony is said to be voluntas sine desiderio emendi vel vendendi spiritualia vel spiritualibus adhaerentia. This offence may be by a corrupt contract between strangers, even when neither the patron nor incumbent is privy to it; for if there be a corrupt contract, it matters not by whom it is made: But in this case the presentee is not simoniacus, and only simoniace promotus. Cro. Car. 331. Bawderick v. Mackaller. Sid. 329. 3 Lev. 337. Lane 103. Kitchin v. Calvert. See Lane 73. and 3 Lev. 338.

If a stranger, the church being void, contracts with the patron for a grant of the void turn, and presents a clerk not privy to the contract; yet, although the grant being of a chose in action is void, as the incumbent comes in by a simoniacal contract, he is not to be considered as an usurper, but as one simoniace promotus. Cro. Eliz. 788. Baker v. Rogers. So where a father, the church being void, contracts with the grantee of the void turn to permit the grantor to present his son, and it is done, this is a simoniacal promotion. Cro. Jac. 533. Booth v. Potter. So if a father, in consideration of a clerk's marrying his daughter, doth covenant with the father of the clerk, to procure for him a presentation to a certain church when it shall become void, and he is afterwards thereto presented, it is a simoniacal promotion. Cro. Car. 425. Birt v. Manning.

These three last cases may serve to confirm what has been observed, that in the case of simony, it is unlawful for a father to do what may not be done by a stranger. See Noy 142. Cro. Car. 426. Lutw. 343.

3. How far bonds of resignation are lawful; and the power exercised over such bonds by the court of Chancery.

A bond of resignation is a bond given by the person intended to be presented to a benefice, with condition to resign the same; and is special or general. The condition of a special one is to resign the benefice in favour of some certain person, as a son, kinsman, or friend of the patron, when he shall be capable of taking the same; by a general bond the incumbent is bound to resign on the request of the patron. 4 New Abr. 470.

A bond with condition to resign within three months after being requested, to the intent that the patron might present his son when he should be capable, was held good; and the judgment was affirmed in the Exchequer chamber; for that a man may without any colour of simony bind himself for good reason, as if he takes a second benefice, or if he be non-resident, or that the patron may present his son, to resign; but if the condition had been to let the patron have a lease of the glebe or tithes, or to pay a sum of money, it had been simoniacal. Cro. Jac. 248. Jones v. Lawrence. The doctrine laid down in Jones and Lawrence, which was in the case of a special bond, was not many years after extended to that of a general general bond, and the judgment in this last was also affirmed in the Exchequer Chamber. Cro. Car. 180. Babington v. Wood.

The authority of those two cases having been repeatedly recognised, at length it was considered as a point settled, that a general bond of resignation is good; and the court refused to let the validity of it be called in question. Str. 227. Peels v. Countess of Carlisle. So in a late case, Mr. Serjeant Draper being about to argue against the validity of such a bond, he was stopped by the court. MS. Rep. Trin. 27 Geo. 2. Wyndham v. Bowyer. If a bond of resignation, which ought only to be made use of to keep the incumbent to residence or good behaviour, be made an improper use of, the court of Chancery will interpose. Chan. Proc. 513. 2 Chan. Rep. 399. A perpetual injunction was granted against such a bond, because it appeared on hearing the cause, that the patron had made use of it to prevent the incumbent from demanding his tithes. 1 Vern. 411. Durston v. Sands.

A bill being brought to be relieved against a judgment obtained on a bond to resign upon request, it appeared to have been offered to the incumbent, that if he would give 700*l.* he should not be sued upon it. Satisfaction was ordered to be entered upon the judgment, and a perpetual injunction was granted. A new bond of resignation in penalty of 200*l.* a much less sum was indeed decreed; but no action was to be brought on it without leave of the court: And the Lord Keeper said he did not know that such bonds were used before the statute; that they had been since allowed only to preserve the benefice for the patron himself, or some child or friend of his, or to prevent non-residence or a vicious course of life in an incumbent; and that though a bond be to resign generally, he would not allow it to be put in suit, unless some such reason was shewn for requiring a resignation, because a door would be thereby opened for simony. Eq. Cases Abr. 86. Hilliard v. Stapleton.

On a bill to be relieved against a judgment on such a bond, the defendant proved misbehaviour, and it was for that reason dismissed. Eq. Cases Abr. 228. Hodgson v. Thornton. So a bond to resign on request shall not be made use of to turn out the incumbent, unless there be non-residence or gross misbehaviour; and if any other use be made of it, the court will grant an injunction. Chan. Proc. 513. Hawkins v. Turner. From some of these cases, and particularly the last, which was Passib. 5 Geo. there is reason to conclude that general bonds of resignation were not then held good in equity: But later determinations shew that they now are. A bond to resign generally has been often held good in the court of Chancery. Str. 227. Peels v. Countess of Carlisle.

An injunction has been granted where an ill use has been made of the bond, i. e. by taking an annuity from the incumbent, for the use of the nephew, for whom the living was intended. Str. 534.

4. Whether the ordinary is obliged to accept a resignation on such bond; and some objections to these bonds considered.

However it may be now settled, that such bonds are good both in law and equity; a question has arisen, and is not perhaps settled by judicial determinations, whether the ordinary is obliged to accept a resignation on such a bond. 'Tis said it's in the power of the ordinary to discourage the use of such bonds, for he may refuse to accept a resignation made by constraint of one of them. Wat. Com. Inc. 24.

The bishop refused to accept a resignation on such a bond, and ordered the incumbent to continue to serve the cure, declaring that he would never countenance such unjust practices. 2 Chan. Rep. 398. Durston v. Sands. An ordinary is not obliged to accept a resignation on such a bond, unless there be just cause to turn the incumbent out of the benefice. Chan. Proc. 513. Hawkins v. Turner.

In a late case a grant was to a clerk of the two first of three livings which should fall, provided he was capable when they did fall of holding them. In order to make himself capable of taking one of these benefices, Griffith the clerk tendered a resignation of another benefice to the ordinary, but he refused to accept it. One of the questions made in this case was, whether the ordinary was obliged to accept this resignation? It was insisted by Mr. Henley on one side, that no case could be adduced to shew that the ordinary can arbitrarily refuse to accept a resignation of a benefice. Mr. Attorney Murray, who was on the other side, contented himself, as to this objection, with saying, that the plainest points having scarce ever been called in question are supported by the fewest authorities. No decree was made as to this point; but Lord Hardwicke intimated it once or twice so strongly to be his opinion, that the ordinary ought to have accepted the resignation, that he did afterwards accept it. What fell from these great men on this occasion, is enough to render the doctrine of the two last cases suspicious: For if these are law, some notice would undoubtedly have been taken of them. This was not indeed in the case of a resignation bond; but it was perhaps a stronger case; for if the ordinary cannot refuse, where, as here, a clerk would resign merely to take another benefice, it would be strange to hold he may refuse a resignation made at the request of a patron, in consequence of an agreement with him, which it has been again and again determined both at law and in equity, he has a right to make. Marquis of Rockingham v. Griffith, Easter term, 27 Geo. 2.

Whatever doubt may still remain, as to the ordinary's being obliged to accept a resignation on such a bond, these two things have, as will presently appear, been determined; that the patron cannot present again till he has accepted it; and that whether he does or not, the obligor is liable to the penalty of the bond, if he undertakes as is usually done for the acceptance of the ordinary. 4 New Abr. 473. If a presentation be made before the bishop accepts the resignation of the last incumbent, it is void. Cases in the time of Queen Ann 276. Riely v. Adams. Noy 147. Cro. Jac. 198. If the obligor binds himself to resign a benefice, it is upon him to procure the ordinary's acceptance of his resignation. Lutw. 693. Studholme v. Norrison.

To an action upon a bond, with condition so to resign on request that the patron may present again, it was pleaded that the ordinary would not accept the defendant's resignation. On a demurrer this plea was held bad; and per cur. it should have been averred that the ordinary accepted the resignation, for his acceptance being, as is laid down, Cro. Jac. 198. necessary to complete the resignation; it was the duty of the obligor, who undertook to resign, to procure this. So if one undertakes to enfeoff another, he undertakes to make livery as incident thereto. The bishop as to the obligee is a stranger, and if an obligor undertakes for the act of a stranger, he is at his peril, as is held 1 Saund. 215. to procure it. MS. Reports Hil. 28 Geo. 2. Hefcot v. Gray.

The result of the whole is, that bonds of resignation are good in law, and that equity will restrain all improper use of them. It is not always true, but is so much oftener than superficial and hasty thinkers imagine, that the law, and particularly that part of it which is deduced from judicial determinations, is founded in solid reason; and it may perhaps be shewn that it is so in the present case. The attempting this will at least be excusable, because some great and good men have expressed their dislike of these bonds. 4 New Abr. 473. which vide.

The principal of the particular objections is, that which is reported to have fallen from Halt Ch. J. Comb. 394. that is, that a resignation bond comes as near simony as possible; it being easy to procure a round sum of money thereby. By making the penalty of the bond adequate to the value of the benefice, and agreeing privately that the money shall be paid, it would without doubt be an oblique way of selling it, and more than come near, for it would be downright simony. If there was no other way, or not as easy a one, to do the same thing, this objection would be insurmountable; but if there is, it can never be of much importance to stop this up. The same clerk, whose conscience would allow him to do this, might as well advance the money agreed upon at first, or, if that did not suit him, give an absolute bond to pay the money at a future day. As the same crime might still be committed, and with as much secrecy, what what good end would it answer to prohibit such bonds, which, as is allowed by all, may be made use of by a patron to punish neglect of duty or immoral conduct in the incumbent, and for other good purposes? 4 New Abr. 473, 474.

Another objection is, that, when the patron takes a general bond of resignation, it is only a presentation during pleasure. Be it so, and suppose, which is the utmost that can be supposed, that it is not taken with a design to awe the incumbent into great care in the discharge of his duty, but to let some friend or relation afterwards into the benefice. It by no means necessarily follows that the church, which is the grand thing to be guarded against, will therefore be filled with an unfit person. If the successor, which may be the case, is better qualified for the office, the interest of religion will be advanced by the exchange. If he be not so well qualified, it is a misfortune; but it is such a one as, in the present circumstances of things, cannot be entirely prevented. While the right of patronage, or while human nature continues as it is, there will be mistakes in judgment, and patrons will be induced by partiality to judge too well of the abilities of a relation or friend; but it makes no difference, whether either of these happens when the benefice is at first void, or at any given time after; or if there be any, it is in favour of the practice, for the mischief for so long at least as the first incumbent holds the living, is thereby postponed. 4 New Abr. 474. For more learning on this subject, see 19 Fin. Abr. 54 4 New Abr. tit. Simony, and Black. Com. 1 V. 389, 393. 2 V. 278. 4 V. 62.

Simple-contract, debt by. Debts by simple-contract, are such, where the contract upon which the obligation arises, is neither ascertained by matter of record, nor yet by deed or special instrument, but by mere oral evidence, the most simple of any; or by notes unsealed, which are capable of a more easy proof, and (therefore only) better, than a verbal promise. Black. Com. 2 V. 465.

Simple-larceny, The felonious taking and carrying away of the personal goods of another. See Black. Com. 2 V. 230, &c. where the subject is fully, methodically and learnedly treated: and see also, Larceny.

Simplex, Signifies simple, or single; as Charta simplex is a deed poll or single deed.

Simplex beneficium, A minor dignity in a cathedral or collegiate church, or any other ecclesiastical benefice opposed to a cure of souls; and which therefore is consistent with any parochial cure, without coming under the name of pluralities.

Simplex Justiciarius, This style was anciently used for any justice judge, that was not chief in any court: and there is a writ in the Register, beginning thus:—I John Wood, a simple judge of the court of Common Pleas, &c.

Simul cum, Are words used in indictments, and declarations of trespass against several persons, where some of them are known, and others not known: As the plaintiff declares against A. B. the defendant simul cum C. D. E. F. and disseins others unknown, for that they committed such a trespass, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 469. If a writ is generally against two or more persons, the plaintiff may declare against one of them with a simul cum; but if a man bring an original writ against one only, and declares with a simul cum, he abates his own writ. Comber. 260.

Sine assensu capitali, A writ that lies where a bishop, dean, prebendary, or master of an hospital alien the lands holden in right of his bishoprick, deanry, house, &c. without the assent of the chapter or fraternity; in which case, his successor shall have this writ. F. N. B. 195. And if a bishop or prebendary be disseised, and afterwards he releaseth to the disseisor; this is an alienation, upon which may be brought a writ De sine assensu capitali: But the successor may enter upon the disseisor, if he doth not die seised, notwithstanding the release of his predecessor; for by the release, no more passeth than he may rightfully release. New Nat. Br. 432. A person may have this writ of lands upon demises of several predecessors, &c.

Sine-cure, Is where a rector of a parish hath a vicar under him endowed and charged with the cure; so that the rector is not obliged either to duty or residence. Dagg's Parf. Connc. 195. And when a church is fallen down, and the parish becomes destitute of parishioners, it is said to be a sine-cure. Wood's Inst. 153. See Black. Com. 1 V. 386.

Sine die, i. e. Without day: before the act for turning the law into English, when judgment was given against the plaintiff in an action, he was said to be in misericordia pro falso clamore suo; and for the defendant, eat inde sine die, and the defendant was discharged, &c. 2 Lill. 220.

Single-bond, Simplex obligatio. A deed whereby the obligor obliges himself, his heirs, executors, and administrators, to pay a certain sum of money to another at a day appointed. Black. Com. 2 V. 340.

Si non omnes, Is a writ on association of justices, by which if all in commission cannot meet at the day assigned, it is allowed that two or more of them may finish the business. Reg. Orig. 202. F. N. B. 185. And after the writ of association, it is usual to make out a writ of Si non omnes, directed to the first justices, and also to those who are so associated to them, which reciting the purport of the two former commissions, commands the justices, that if all of them cannot conveniently be present, such a number of them may proceed, &c. F. N. B. 111.

Sinking fund, Is a provision made by parliament, consisting of surpluses of other funds, appropriated for paying the publick debts of the nation: And many late statutes have been made for applying the growing produce thereof; also money is often borrowed on the credit of the sinking fund, usually one million a year towards raising supplies for publick service. See the several statutes concerning the funds.

This sinking fund is the last resort of the nation; it's only domestic resource, on which must chiefly depend all the hopes we can entertain of ever discharging or moderating our incumbrances. And therefore the prudent application of the large sums, now arising from this fund, is a point of the utmost importance, and well worthy the serious attention of parliament; which was thereby enabled, in the year 1765, to reduce above two millions sterling of the public debt. Black. Com. 1 V. 329, 330. which vide.

Stipessona, Was what we now call a hundred. Leg. H. 1. c. 6.

Si recognoscant, A writ that, according to the old books, lies for a creditor against his debtor, who before the sheriff in the county-court hath acknowledged to owe his creditor such a sum received of him: The form of which writ is this:—Per viccom. S. Salutaris Præcip: tibi quod si A. B. recognoscat se debere C. D. Quinque lib. sine ulteriori dilatione tunc ipsum distringas ad prædicta debitam eidem C. sine dilatione reddendum. Teste, &c. Old Nat. Br. 68.

Site of a messuage or manor-house, &c. See Scite.

Sithcundman, (Sax.) Such a man as had the office to lead the men of a town or parish. Leg. Int. cap. 56. Dugdale says that in Warwickshire the hundreds were formerly called Sithesoca, and that Sithocundman and Sithcundman was the chief officer within such a division, i. e. The high constable of the hundred. Dugd. Antig. Warw.

Sithesoca, A Saxon word for franchise or liberty, a hundred. Rot. Parl. 16 H. 2.

Six Clerks in Chancery. These are offices in Chancery of ancient continuance, and they were heretofore spiritual persons, as may appear by the Stat. 14 C. 15 c. 8. They are principally concerned in matters of equity: and transact and file all proceedings by bill and answer; and also issue some patents that pass the great seal, as pardons of men for chancemedley, patents for ambassadors, sheriffs patents, and some others: And all these matters are transacted by their under-clerks, or others by them appointed. They likewise sign all office copies in order to be read in court, and also certificates, and attend upon the court in term, by two at a time, at Westminster, and there read the pleadings.

The business of the office is done by their under-clerks; each of which has a seat in the office (in Chancery-Lane) and whereof every six-clerk has a certain number, usually about ten, besides two waiting clerks in each division; all all which are accountable to their respective fix clerks for the business they transact. Harrison's Chan. Pract. 1 V. 25, 26.

Sirhindi, Were servants of the same nature with red-wights, viz. Bound to attend their lord wherever he went; but they were accounted among the English Saxons as freemen, because they had lands in fee, subject only to such tenure. Leg. Inc. cap. 26. See Hindoni.

Sizel, Is where pieces of money are cut out from the flat bars of silver, after drawn through a mill, into the respective fixes or dimensions of the money to be made; the residue is called by this name, and is melted down again. Lownd's Ess. upon coin, pag. 96.

Skarballa, Seems to be an engine for catching of fish: It was especially given in charge by the justices, that all juries should inquire de hiis qui piscantur cum Kiddellis & Skarballis. 2 Inst. 38.

Skerba, A scar or wound.—Si ossa extrahuntur a capite & skerda magna levetur, &c. Bract. lib. 3.

Skerries, (island or rock). Patent granted to William French, Esq; for a light-house there, confirmed, 3 Geo. 2. c. 36.

Skinner. None shall retain any servant, journeyman, &c. to work in the trade of a skinner, unless he himself hath served seven years as an apprentice in the same trade, in pain to forfeit double the value of his ware wrought. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 9.

Skins. None shall take the wool from any sheep-skin or lamb-skin, unless he make leather or parchment of it, &c. 5 El. c. 22. f. 1. None shall buy skins but to make leather or parchment, &c. 5 El. c. 22. f. 1. Exportation of skins and leather prohibited, 5 El. c. 2. f. 2. Of sheep-skins tawed permitted, 8 El. c. 14. None but artizans skimmers shall dress or export black coney-skins, 3 Jac. 1. c. 9. Merchants shall not buy coney-skins or morkins in small quantities, 3 Jac. 1. c. 9. Duty on skins imported, 9 Ann. c. 11. f. 1. Drawback of two-thirds on exportation, 9 Ann. c. 11. f. 39. Additional duty on skins imported, 10 Ann. c. 26. f. 1. Drawback on exporter's oath that hides are marked, 10 Ann. c. 26. f. 5. See Leather.

Skepinage, Is used for the precincts of Calais. Stat. 27 H. 6. cap. 2.

Slade, (Sax. Slæd.) A long narrow piece or slip of ground. Paroch. Antiq. 465.

Slander, Is the defaming of a man in his reputation, profession, or livelihood; which is actionable, &c. See Action of the Case for Words, and Prohibition, and Black. Com. 3 V. 123.

Slaves. There are no slaves in England; one may be a villain here, but not a slave. 2 Salk. 666.

As to slavery, as Blackstone observes, it is now laid down (Salk. 666.) that a slave or negro, the instant he lands in England, becomes a freeman; that is, the law will protect him in the enjoyment of his person and his property; yet, with regard to any right which the master may have acquired to the perpetual service of John or Thomas, this will remain exactly in the same state as before; for this is no more than the same state of subjection for life, which every apprentice submits to for the space of seven years, or sometimes for a longer term. Black. Com. 1 V. 424, 425. From this doctrine it evidently follows, that the master may maintain an action against any one, who, after notice, retains or harbours, or detains from his master's service, a negro, &c. against the will of the master: and this, whether the negro be or be not baptized which does not in any manner, alter the case.—As to slavery, see the subject learnedly treated in Black. Com. 1 V. 423 f. 4. and Montesquieu's Spirit of Laws, L. xv. and of the slavery of negroes. Id. c. 3.

Sledge. A sledge or hurdle is generally allowed to draw offenders guilty of high treason to the gallows, to preserve them from the extreme torture of being dragged on the ground or pavement. 1 Hal. P. C. 82.

Sloppe, A Sirrup; and there is a tenure of land by holding the King's Sirrup, in Cambridgeshire. Cart. 5 H. 7.

Sloppe-silver, A rent paid to the estate of Wigmore, in lieu of certain days work in harvest; heretofore reserved to the lord from his tenants. Par. 43 Edw.

Spilite, (Exclusa) Is a frame to keep or let water out of a ground. By stat. 1 Geo. 2. c. 19. to destroy any sluice or lock on any navigable river, is made felony to be punished with transportation for seven years.

Smack, A smack, or small light vessel. Cowell.

Small debts, Courts for. In London, and other trading and populous districts, courts are established for recovery of small debts in a summary way, called courts of conscience. See Courts, and Black. Com. 3 V. 81. 4 V. 434.

Smalt, (Ital. Smalto) Is that of which painters make their blue colouring; mentioned in the Stat. 21 Jac. 1. c. 3.

Smock-farthings, The pentecostals or customary oblations offered by the dispersed inhabitants within a diocese, when they made their procession to the mother cathedral church, came by degrees into a standing annual rent, called smock-farthings. Cowell.

Smoke-silver, Lands were holden in some places by the payment of the sum of 6 d. yearly to the sheriff, called Smoke-silver. Pat. 4 Ed. 6. Smoke-silver and Smoke-penny are to be paid to the ministers of divers parishes, as a modus in lieu of tithes-wood: And in some manors, formerly belonging to religious houses, there is still paid as appendant to the said manors, the ancient Peter Pence by the name of Smoke-money. Twiss. Hist. Vindicat. 77. The Bishop of Lincoln, anno 1444, issued out his commission—Ad levandum le Smoke-Farthings, &c.

Smugglers, Are those persons that conceal prohibited goods, and defraud the King of his customs on the sea coasts, by running of goods and merchandize. Stat. 8 Geo. 1. c. 18. See Customs, and Black. Com. 1 V. 317. 4 V. 155.

Snattering-silver, There was a custom in the village of Wylgh, that all the servile tenants should pay for their tenements a small duty called Snattering Silver, to the abbot of Calchefer. Placit. 18 Edw. 1.

Snuff or Snuth, Mixing and colouring it with saker, umber, or fustick, yellow ebony, tobacco dust, sand, &c. incurs a penalty of 3 l. for every pound-weight. Stat. 1 Geo. 1. cap. 46. The penalties of adulterating tobacco, extended to snuff, 5 Geo. 1. cap. 11. A duty is granted of 2 s. 6 d. a pound on snuff imported from the Spanish West-Indies; and 5 s. for what is brought from Spain and Portugal, &c. except France, by the Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 26.

Soc, (Sax.) Signifies power, or liberty to minister justice and execute laws; also the circuit or territory wherein such power is exercised: Whence our law Latin word soca is used for a seignior or lordship enfranchised by the King, with the liberty of holding or keeping a court of his sockmen: And this kind of liberty continues in divers parts of England to this day, and is known by the names of soka and sofen. Bract. lib. 3. Lamb.—Nullus sockman habeat impune peccandi; i. e. None hath liberty of sinning without punishment. Leg. H. 1.

Socage, or Socage, (Socagium, from the French Soc, that is vomer, a coulter or plough-share) Is a tenure of lands by or for certain inferior services of husbandry to be performed to the lord of the fee. Socage de verbor. signif. says, Socage is a tenure of lands, when a man is infeoffed freely, without any service, ward, relief or marriage, and pays to his Lord such duty as is called petit serjeanty, &c. There is free socage, and base socage, otherwise called villanage.—And according to Bract. Socagium liberum est, ubi fit servitium in denariis Dominis capitalibus, & nihil inde omnino datur ad scutum & servitium Regis. This free socage is also called common socage. Stat. 37 H. 8. cap. 20. Other divisions there are in our books, viz. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 8. num. 3. Old Nat. Brew. fol. 94. and others. But by the statute 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. all tenures shall be adjudged and taken to be turned into free and common socage. See Kimber's Glossary in Socage. This was a tenure of so large an extent, that Littletown tells us, all the lands in England, which were not held in knights service, were held in socage. So that it seems the land was divided between these two tenures, and as they were of different natures, so the descent of these lands was in a different manner; for for the lands held in knights service descended to the eldest son; but these held in quillano Socagio, equally among all the sons; yet if there was but one messuage, the eldest son was to have it, so as the rest had the value of that messuage to be divided between them. Bracton, lib. 2. cap. 35, 36. See Black. Com. 2. V. 99, 98. 4. V. 412, 461.

Socagers, Were those tenants whose tenure was called Socage; otherwise styled Sockmen.

Sockmans, or Sokemans, (Socmanni) Are such tenants as hold their lands and tenements by Socage tenure, of which there are several kinds, viz. Sokemans of frank tenure, Kitchin, fol. 81. Sokemans of base tenures, ibid. and Sokemans of antient demesne, which last seem properly to be called Sockmans. Cowell.

Socmen. The husbandmen among our Saxon ancestors were of two sorts; one, that hired the Lord's outland or tenementary land, like our farmers; the other, that tilled and manured his inland or demesne (yielding operam, not cursum, work, not rent) and were thereupon called his Sockmen, or ploughmen. Spelman of Feuds, cap. 7. But after the conquest, the proper Sockmanni, or Sokemanni, often mentioned in Domesday, were those tenants who held by no servile tenure, but commonly paid their rent as a Soke or sign of freedom to the Lord, tho' they were sometimes obliged to customary duties for the service and honour of their Lord. Cowell.

Socome, Signifieth a custom of grinding corn at the Lord's mill; and bond socome is where the tenants are bound to it. Blount.

Sodomy, The crime of, and how punished, see Bug-gery, and Black. Com. 4. V. 215.

Sodor and Man, Bishopric of. By stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 28. authority was given to the treasury to purchase the interest of the then proprietors of the Isle of Man, (which was formerly a distinct jurisdiction,) for the use of the crown: which purchase was at length completed in the year 1765, and confirmed by statutes 5 Geo. 3. c. 26 & 39. See the Statutes. The Bishopric of Man or Sodor, or Sodor and Man, was formerly within the province of Canterbury, but annexed to that of York, by stat. 33 H. 8. c. 31.

Soke, Soc, Sob, Soca, Generally signify liberty or privilege of tenants excused from customary burdens and impositions. Sometimes Soka, or Soke, was the territory or precinct in which the chief Lord did exercise his Sac, Sake, or Saka, his liberty of keeping court, or holding trials within his own Soke or jurisdiction. Sometimes it signified a payment or rent to the Lord for using his land with such liberty and privilege, as made the tenant a Sockman or freeholder, upon no other conditions than a quit-rent. Cowell.

Soke, Significat libertatem curiæ tenentium quam socam appellamus. Fleta, lib. 1. cap. 47. Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 15.

Sokemans, and Sokemanries. The former certain copyhold tenants so called, the latter their tenures. Which Briton, c. 66. describes to be "lands and tenements, which are not held by knight-service, nor by grand serjeanty, nor by petit, but by simple services, being as it were lands enfranchised by the King or his predecessors from their antient demesne." And the same name is also given them in Fleta, l. 1. c. 8. Vide Black. Com. 2. V. 99, 100.

Soke-reebe, The lord's rent-gatherer in the soke or soken. Fleta.

Soldiers. The military state of England includes the soldiery by land and sea; and it is against our antient law to keep up any army of soldiers in the time of peace. In time of war particular orders are made for the order and discipline of officers and soldiers, which are to be consulted upon all emergencies: and therefore we are not to expect many standing and perpetual laws on that account. Wood's Inst. 45. The chief statutes relating to the army, and its contents, are as follow, viz. By 18 H. 6. Soldiers retained, departing from their colours, without licence, are guilty of felony. The 7 H. 7. cap. 1, and 3 H. 8. cap. 5. enact, That if a captain shall not have the whole number of his soldiers, or not pay them their due wages, within six days after he hath received it, he shall forfeit all his goods and chattels, and suffer imprisonment. By the 4 & 5 Ph. & M. c. 3. If any person being commanded to muster, doth absent himself (having no lawful excuse) he shall suffer ten days imprisonment, or pay a fine of 40*s.* And if any one authorized to levy or muster soldiers, shall take any toward to discharge or spare any from the said service, he shall forfeit ten times as much as he shall take, &c. The statute 1 Jac. 1. cap. 4. ordains, That if any person go beyond sea, to serve any foreign prince, as a soldier, and he do not take the oath of allegiance before he goes, it is felony; and if he is a gentleman or officer, that is going to serve a foreign prince, he is to be bound with two sureties not to be reconciled to the see of Rome, &c. or it will be felony. By 31 Car. 2. cap. 1. no soldiers shall be quartered on any persons without their consent; and inhabitants of places may refuse to quarter any soldier, notwithstanding any order whatsoever. The 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 3. was made for punishing mutiny and desertion, &c. And by 10 & 11 W. 3. Officers and soldiers may exercise trades. The 1, 4, 7, 9 & 10, &c. Ann. were made for punishing mutiny and desertion of soldiers, and false-musters; and for better payment of the army and quarters, &c. Since which there have been a variety of acts to punish mutiny and desertion, &c. in general, all formed on the same plan. Vide the last.

The 3 Geo. 1. cap. 2. and 4 Geo. 1. c. 4. ordain, That no soldier shall be taken out of the service, by any process, except it be for some criminal matter, or for a real debt amounting to 10*l.* of which affidavit is to be made; and if any soldier be otherwise arrested, a justice of peace by warrant under his hand shall discharge him: Yet the plaintiff may file an appearance, in an action of debt, upon notice thereof given, and proceed to judgment and execution; other than against the body of such soldier. A serjeant in the guards cannot be arrested under 10*l.* Wils. par. 1. fo. 216.

A common soldier cannot be a vagrant within the stat. 17 Geo. 2. Wilson, par. 1. fo. 331.

By the 5 Geo. 1. c. 5. when an officer or soldier is accused of a capital crime, the commanding officer, on application made to him, is to use his utmost endeavours to deliver over the criminal to the civil magistrate, and he is not to be tried by a court-martial in eight days; within which time, application is to be made: but after that the criminal may be tried by a court-martial.

Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 6. No justice of peace having a military office, shall be concerned in quartering of soldiers in the company, &c. under his command: And victuals refusing soldiers quartered, or constables receiving reward to excuse them, are to forfeit not above 5*l.* nor under 40*s.* 3 Geo. 2. c. 2. By subsequent acts, so justice, constable, &c. may direct more billets for quartering soldiers than there are effective men: And if any soldier be quartered on a private house, without the owner's consent, he may have his remedy at law; and officers or constables that quarter wives, children, or maid servants of any officer or soldier in such manner; the officer shall be cashiered, and constable forfeit 20*s.* Likewise where persons are grieved in billeting soldiers, or constables, they may complain to the justices of peace, who shall order so many to be removed as they see cause.

13 Geo. 2. c. 10.

Officers or soldiers, if they destroy game on their marches, or poultry or fish, being convicted before a justice, are to forfeit 5*l.* an officer, and 20*s.* a soldier. Ibid. When any person is enlisted a soldier, he shall within four days be carried before the next justice of peace or chief magistrate of a town, and declare that he did it voluntarily; upon which the justice is to certify it; and give him the oath of fidelity, &c. But if then he dissent, on returning the money received, and 20*s.* for charges, he shall be discharged: And military officers acting contrary to this act, to incur the like penalty as for making a false muster. 8 Geo. 2. c. 2. If a person abscond, or refuses to go before a justice, in order to declare his at-

sent or dissent; he shall be deemed a listed soldier, and may be proceeded against as if he had taken the oath directed by the articles of war. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. And in case any subject here or in Ireland shall list or enter himself, or any one procure him, to go beyond the seas, with an intent to be enlisted as a soldier, to serve any foreign prince or state, without leave of his Majesty, he shall be guilty of felony; but if such person listed, in 14 days after discover upon oath before any justice, &c. the person by whom he was drawn in, so as he may be apprehended and convicted, the party discovering is to be indemnified. 9 Geo. 2. c. 30. His Majesty may form articles of war, and constitute courts-martial as well in Great Britain and Ireland, as in the islands of Minorca, Gibraltar, &c. And if any officer or soldier deserts his Majesty's service beyond sea, and escape into this realm, or Ireland, he shall be tried here, as if the offence had been committed within this realm. Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 2. and 15 Geo. 2. c. 4. See Court Martial, and Black. Com. 1 V. 407. 4 V. 163.

Sole Corporations. A corporation sole consists of one person only and his successors, in some particular station, who are incorporated by law, in order to give them some legal capacities and advantages, particularly that of perpetuity, which in their natural persons they could not have had. In this sense the King is a sole corporation, so is a bishop; so are some deans and prebendaries, distinct from their several chapters: And so is every parson and vicar. See Corporations, and Black. Com. 1 V. 469.

Solet & Debet. Words inserted in writs for recovery of rights, &c. Vide Debet.

Sole Tenant. (solus tenens). Is he that holds land by his own right only, without any other joined; and if a man and his wife hold land for their lives, with remainder to their son for life; here the man dying, the lord shall not have a heriot, because he dies not sole tenant. Kitch. 134.

Solicitor. (solicitor) A person employed to follow and take care of suits depending in courts of law or equity; and solicitors are within the late statute to be sworn and admitted by the judges, like unto attorneys, before they shall practise in our courts; and attorneys may be admitted solicitors in the courts of equity, &c. Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 23. There is also a solicitor general to the King, who is a great officer next the attorney general. See Attorney, and Black. Com. 3 V. 27.

Solidagium. Used in the neuter gender is taken for that absolute right or property which a man hath in any thing. Malmsh. lib. 1.

Solinus terrae.—In communis terra Sancti Martini sunt 400. aera. & dim. quae faciunt duos solinos & dim. Domesday. In which book, this word is only used in Kent, and no other county. Septem solini terra sunt 17 Carucatae. 1 Inst. fol. 15. According to this computation solinus terrae is about 160 acres, and 7 solini are about 1120 acres, which is less than 17 carucatae, for at the lowest carucata terrae is 100 acres. But Lord Coke was of opinion, that it did consist of no certain number of acres. This word solinus was probably from the Sax. julk a plough, but what quantity of land this solin, suling, or swoling did contain, is not so easily determined. It seems to have been the same with a plough-land; so in Domesday, Se defendit pro uno solino, is, it is taxed for one carucate or plough-land. Cowell.

Soller or Solar. (solarium) A chamber or upper room. Id.

Solbendo esse. Is a term of art, signifying that a man hath wherewith to pay, or is a person solvant.

Solvere poenae. To pay the penalty; or undergo the punishment inflicted for offences. 3 Salk. 30.

Solvit ad diem. Is a plea in action of debt on a bond, bill, &c. that the money was paid at the day limited. Mod. Cas. 22. To a bond of 30 years standing the defendant pleaded solvit ad diem, relying on the presumption; the plaintiff proved payment of interest two years after the day; this falsified the plea; the defendant should have pleaded upon the act for amendment of the law, that he paid the money after the day, 1 Strange 652. See Payment.

Solutio scoti militis Parliamenti, and Solutio scoti Burgens. Parliamenti. Are writs whereby knights of the shire and burgesses may recover their allowance, if it be denied. Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 11.

Somerset-house. Assigned to Queen Charlotte for life, 2 Geo. 3. c. 1.

Somersetshire. Its fishery how preserved, 1 Jac. 1. c. 23.

Son Assuit Demeine. Is a justification in an action of assault and battery; because the plaintiff made the first assault, and what the defendant did was in his own defence. 2 Lill. Abr. 523. But son assuit cannot be pleaded by a defendant for his outrageous battery. Ibid. See Black. Com. 3 V. 120, 306.

Sontage. Was a tax of forty shillings laid upon every knight's fee, according to Stow, pag. 284.

Sope. A duty granted on it for 32 years, &c. And sope-makers are to give notice of the time of making and working of sope to excise officers, on pain of forfeiting 50 l. Stat. 10 Ann. c. 19. and 11 Geo. 1. c. 30.

Sophia. (princess) Naturalized, 4 Ann. c. 1 & 4. See King. She was the youngest daughter of Elizabeth Queen of Bohemia, who was the daughter of James the First, and (in the latter end of the reign of William the Third) the nearest of the ancient blood royal, who was not incapacitated (to take the crown) by professing the Popish religion. On her therefore, and the heirs of her body, being protestants, the remainder of the crown, expectant on the death of King William and Queen Anne without issue, was settled by statute 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 2.

Sorcery. (fortilegium) Witchcraft or divination by lots; which was made felony by 1 Jac. 1. c. 12. See Witchcraft. By 9 Geo. 2. c. 5. No prosecution shall for the future be carried on against any person for conjuration, witchcraft, sorcery, or enchantment. But the misdemeanor of persons pretending to use witchcraft, tell fortunes, or discover stolen goods by skill in the occult sciences, is still deservedly punished with a year's imprisonment, and standing four times in the pillory. Black. Com. 4 V. 61.

Sors. In sums of money lent upon usury, the principal was anciently called sors, to distinguish it from the interest. Pryn's Collect. tom. 2. p. 161.

Sorvus Accipiter. Is a for or sear hawk: King John granted to Robert de Hese, land in Barton of the honour of Nottingham, to be held by the service of yielding the King yearly one sear hawk, &c. Cartular. S. Edmund. MS.

Sothale. or Sothail. Is conceived to be mistaken for scotale. Bract. lib. 3.

Sothlaga. or Sothlage. Is an old word, which signifies history: From the Sax. soth, verum, and saga, testimonium; for all histories should be true, or true sayings; from hence we derive our English word soothsayer. Cowell.

Sovereign. or Soveraign. Is a chief or supreme person, one highest of all; as a King, &c.

Sovereign. A piece of gold coin current at 22 s. in 1 H. 8. when by indenture of the Mint, a pound weight of gold of the old standard was to be coined into twenty-four sovereigns. In 34 H. 8. sovereigns were coined at 20 s. a-piece, and half sovereigns at 10 s. But anno 4 Ed. 6. the sovereign of gold passed for 24 s. and in 6 Ed. 6. at 30 s.

Sovereign Power. or Sovereignty. By this is truly meant, the power of making laws; for wherever that power resides, all others must conform to and be directed by it, whatever appearance the outward form and administration of the government may put on. For it is at any time in the option of the legislature to alter that form and administration by a new edict or rule, and to put the execution of the laws into whatever hands it pleases. And all the other powers of the state must obey the legislative power in the execution of their several functions, or else the constitution is at an end. Black. Com. 1 V. 49. In our constitution the law ascribes to the King the attribute of sovereignty, but that is to be understood in a qualified sense, i. e. as supreme magistrate, not as sole legislator, as the legislative power is vested vested in the King, Lords and Commons, not in any one of the three estates alone.

Mortuary. A mortuary is so called in the laws of King Canute. c. 13. See Black. Com. 2 V. 425. and vide Mortuary.

Sound. Is a narrow sea, as Mare Balticum, the Sound; and to sound is to make trial how many fathom a sea is deep. Merch. Dict.

Southampton. Any man may pull down wears; &c. in the haven of Southampton, between Calford and Redbridge; and whosoever levieth any other there, shall forfeit 100 l. Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 5. An act was made for confirming some part of the charter granted to the mayor, bailiffs and burgeses of Southampton, and for relief of the town. 4 Jac. 1. c. 10.

South-Sea Annuities. See South-Sea Company.

South-Sea Bonds. Stealing them made felony, 2 Geo. 2. c. 25. sect. 3.

South-Sea Company. A company of merchants trading to the South-Sea. They were incorporated, on lending the government ten millions of money, towards paying the debts of the army, &c. and may purchase lands not exceeding 1000 l. per annum; and besides an interest for the money advanced the government, 8000 l. a year is to be paid them out of the funds towards the management of this company: the corporation shall have the sole trade from the river Oronoko on the east-side of America, to the southermost part of Terra del Fuego, and from thence through the South-Sea, &c. And the company to be owners of all islands, ports, &c. they can discover. Stat. 9 Ann. c. 21. See 1, 6, 7 and 9 Geo. 1. 6 Geo. 2, &c. See Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 11. for reducing the interest upon the capital stock of the South-Sea company, from the time, and upon the terms therein mentioned, and for preventing of frauds committed by the officers and servants of the said company; and 26 Geo. 2. c. 16. for reducing the number of directors of the said company, and for regulating the election of the governors and directors of the said company.

Establishment of the South-Sea company and their fund, 9 Ann. c. 21. 3 Geo. 1. c. 9. Creation of the old South-Sea annuities, 9 Geo. 1. cap. 6. f. 3. Redemption of South-Sea annuities out of sinking fund, 4 Geo. 2. c. 5. And see 6 Geo. 2. c. 25. 9 Geo. 2. f. 34. 10 Geo. 2. c. 19. f. 35. New South-Sea annuities created, 6 Geo. 2. c. 28. Restrained from issuing bonds without a general court, 6 Geo. 2. c. 28. f. 26. 7 Geo. 2. c. 17. Fund for their annuity supplied, 2 Geo. 2. c. 3. f. 60. The company continued till the annuities shall be redeemed, 24 Geo. 2. c. 2. f. 31. The company's annuity reduced, 24 Geo. 2. c. 11. The first and second subscribed South-Sea annuities to be consolidated, 25 Geo. 2. c. 27. f. 26. See Black. Com. 1 V. 328.

Southwark, King Edward 3d by charter granted to the city of London, the village of Southwark, paying at the Exchequer the farms thereof due: Also the manor and Borough were granted; except the capital messuage called Southwark-place, by chart. Ed. 6. The inhabitants of the Jews there, not to be returned on juries. 11 Hen. 6. c. 1. No market to be held in the high-street of Southwark, nor hackney coaches, &c. to ply there. 28 Geo. 2. c. 9. Instead thereof a market to be held in a place called the Triangle. 28 Geo. 2. c. 23. 30 Geo. 2. c. 31.

Sowlegrove, Is an old name of the month of February, so called by the inhabitants of South Wales.

Sowne, From the Fr. Souvenus, i. e. remembered, is a word of art used in the Exchequer, where estreats that sowne not, are those that the sheriff cannot levy. etc. Such estreats and casualties as are not be remembered, and run not in demand; and estreats that sowne, are such as he may gather and are leviable. Stat. 4 Hen. 5. c. 7. 4 Inst. 107.

Spatharius, for Spatharius, Is a sword-bearer. Blount.

Spata Placitum, A court for the speedy execution of justice on military delinquents. Brad. Append. Hist. Engl. 45.

Spatularia, Is numbered among the holy vestments, &c. in Mon. Ang. Tbm. 3. p. 331.

Spaton and Fry of Fish. See Fish.

Speaker of the Parliament, The chief officer in that high and august court, who is as it were the common mouth of the rest: And as that Honourable Assembly contains two Houses, the Lords and Commons; so there are two speakers, the one termed the Lord Speaker of the House of Peers, and is most commonly the Lord Chancellor or Lord Keeper of the Great Seal of England; the other (being a member of that House) is called The Speaker of the House of Commons, both whose duties consist in managing debates, putting questions, and thereby collecting the sense of the houses, the passing of bills, seeing the orders of each House observed, &c. See Parliament.

Speaking with prosecutor. It is not uncommon when a person is convicted of a misdemeanor, which principally and more immediately affects some individual, as a battery, imprisonment, or the like, for the court to permit the defendant to speak with the prosecutor, before any judgment is pronounced; and, if the prosecutor declares himself satisfied, to inflict but a trivial punishment. Black. Com. 4 V. 356. 7. 'tis usual, on satisfaction made to the prosecutor, for him to give the person convicted, a release, the execution of which being proved, is tantamount to the prosecutor's acknowledgement of being satisfied.

Special matter in evidence, Is what is specially alleged, and comes not into the General Issue.

Specialty. (Specialitas) A bond, bill, or such like instrument; a writing or deed, under the hand and seal of the parties. Litt. See Black. Com. 2 V. 465.

Species. A relative term, expressing an idea which is comprised under some general one, called a genus. The idea of a species is formed by adding a new idea to the genus. This superadded idea is called the specific difference.

In law, when we treat of action on the case, generally, we may call it the genus, as we may call an action of assumpsit, of trover, &c. a species of that genus.

Specific legacies. A specific legacy, is a legacy left, or a bequest of any particular thing, as a piece of plate, a watch, a horse, &c. and cannot be taken by the devise without the consent of the executor. Co. Lit. 111. Meyn 39. Black. Com. 2 V. 512.

Specific relief in equity. The want of a more specific remedy than can be obtained in the courts of law, gives a concurrent jurisdiction to a court of equity in a great variety of cases. To instance in executory agreements, a court of equity will compel them to be carried into strict execution, unless where it is improper, or impossible, instead of giving damages for their non-performance. 1 Equ. Caf. Abr. 16. Black. Com. 3 V. 438.

Spelcum, The cell of a monk, mentioned in Matth. lib. 3.

Spices, For garbling spices 1 Jac. c. 19. Repealed, 6 Ann. c. 16.

Duty on spices imported, 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 7. made perpetual by 7 Ann. c. 7. and part of bank fund: And the surplus part of the aggregate fund, 1 Geo. 1. c. 12. Licences to import spices shall specify the quantity and place of landing, 6 Geo. 1. c. 21. f. 45. Spices packed in small parcels forfeited, 6 Geo. 1. cap. 21. f. 47. Duties on spices ascertained, 8 Geo. 1. c. 15. sect. Licences to import spices shall be delivered up at entering the ship, 8 Geo. 1. c. 18. f. 21. See Customs, Funds, Grocery Warr.

Spigurnet, (Spigurnellus) Is the sealer of the King's writs; from the Sax. Spicurnan, to shut up or inclose: but the following original has been given of this word, that Gulfridus Spigurnel being by King Hen. 3. appointed to be sealer of his writs, was the first in that office; and therefore in after-times the persons that enjoyed the office were called Spigurnels. Pat. 11 H. 3. 4 Edw. 1. This office was also known by the name of Spicurnantia or Espicurnantia; and Oliver de Standford held lands in Nasled in Com. Oxon. per Serjeantiam Spicurnantiz in Cancellaria Domini Regis. 27 Ed. 1.

Spitariatum, A sort of vessel which we now call a spit-mace. Knight. Ann. 4339.

Spindite,

Spindule, Were those three golden pins which were used about the archiepiscopal pall; and from thence Spindulatus signified to be adorned with the pall. De Gange.

Spinner, Is an addition in law proceedings usually given to all unmarried women; and it is a good addition for the estate and degree of a woman. But it is said a gentlewoman is to be named generosa, and not spinner, or it will be ill. Dyer 46, 88. 2 Co. Inst. 668. but 'tis immaterial.

Spirits and Strong waters. See Brandy.

Spiriting away men and children. This offence is commonly called Kidnapping. It is a very heinous crime, which the Common law of England, hath punished by fine, imprisonment, and pillory. Raym. 474. 2 Show. 221. Skin. 47. Comb. 10. By statute 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 7. If any captain of a merchant vessel, shall (during his being abroad) force any person on shore, or wilfully leave him behind, or refuse to bring home all such men as he carried out, if able and desirous to return, he shall suffer three months imprisonment.

Spiritual Corporations. Spiritual or Ecclesiastical Corporations are where the members that compose it, are entirely spiritual persons, such as bishops, &c. Black. Com. 1 V. 470.

Spiritual Courts, Have jurisdiction in causes matrimonial, and for probate of wills of goods, and granting administrations; and for tithes, where there is no modus; in cases of defamation, &c. Their jurisdictions are set forth in the Stat. Articuli Cleri, 9 E. 2. And in the Stat. de Circumspelle agatis, the 23 H. 8. c. 9. &c. See Courts Ecclesiastical, and Black. Com. 3 V. 61.

Spiritualties of a Bishop, Are those profits which he receives as a bishop, and not as a baron of parliament; such as the duties of his visitation, prebend-money, his benefit growing from ordinations and institutions of priests, the income of his jurisdiction, &c. Staundf. P. C. 132. The Archbishop of the Province is Guardian of Spiritualities when a see is vacant, and hath the jurisdiction of courts, &c. Vide Custos Spiritualitatis, and Black. Com. 1 V. 380.

Spirituality, As containing the Clergy of England, statutes made for preserving their privileges, &c. 4 H. 4. c. 2 & 3.

Spittle-house, Is a corruption from Hospital, and signifies the same thing; or it may be taken from the Teuton. Spital, an hospital or alms-house: It is mentioned in the 15 Ed. c. 9.

Spoliation, (spoliatio) A writ or suit for the fruits of a church, or the church itself, to be sued in the Spiritual court, and not in the temporal, that lies for one incumbent against another, where they both claim by one patron, and the right of patronage doth not come in question: As if a parson be created a Bishop, and hath dispensation to hold his benefice, and afterwards the patron presents another incumbent, who is instituted and inducted; now the bishop may have a spoliation in the Spiritual court against the new incumbent, because they both claim by one patron, and the right of patronage doth not come in debate; and for that the other incumbent came to the possession of the benefice, by the course of the Spiritual law, viz. by institution and induction; for otherwise, if he be not instituted and inducted, a spoliation lies not against him, but writ of trespass, or assise of Novel disseisin. F. N. B. 36, 37. So it is where a parson that hath a plurality accepts of another benefice, by reason whereof the patron presents another clerk, who is instituted and inducted; in this case one of them may have spoliation against the other, and then shall come in question, whether he hath a sufficient plurality, or not: And it is the same of deprivation, &c. Terms de Ley See Black. Com. 3 V. 91.

Sponsa oblata, A free gift or present to the King anciently so called.

Sportula, Signifies gifts and gratuities, forbidden to be received by the clergy: And St. Cyprian calls those clergymen Sportulantes Fratres, who accepted such gifts for their maintenance. St. Cyp. Epist. 20, 71.

Sponsals, The betrothing of a man or woman before full marriage. Litt. Dig. See Sponsals.

Spoils-breach, Is adultery opposed to simple fornication: The Lady Katharine was accused to the King of incontinent living before her marriage, and of Spoils-breach after the marriage. Fox Art. Mon. Vol. 2. pag. 540.

Springing uses, or contingent uses, They differ from an executory devise; in that there must be a person seized to such uses at the time when the contingency happens, else they can never be executed by the statute. See Black. Com. 2 V. 334. and Resulting use, &c.

Spillers of Yarn, Are persons that work at the Spole or wheel; or triers of yarn to see that it be well spun, and fit for the loom. 1 Mar. c. 7.

Sporus-Royal, (Sporarium aureum) An ancient gold coin—Pro hac recognitione dedit Johan. H. unum Spurarium aureum, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 321.

Squalley, Is a note of faultiness in the making of cloth. 43 Elix. c. 10. See Rauy.

Squibs, The making, selling, or exposing to sale of Squibs, serpents and other fire works; or throwing, casting or firing any Squibs, &c. is declared a common nuisance: And such persons who make or sell Squibs, shall forfeit 5 l. Also the persons throwing them, or assisting therein, incur a forfeiture of 20 s. leviable by a justice of peace's warrant; and not being paid, the offender is to be sent to the house of correction for any time not exceeding a month. Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 7. If any persons shall permit Squibs to be cast or thrown from out of their houses into the street, they shall forfeit 20 s. to be levied by distress and sale of goods, &c.

Notwithstanding the statute, if any person receives an injury by throwing of Squibs, the person injured, may maintain an action at law, for recovery of damages.

Stabbing Of persons is made felony without benefit of clergy, and punished as murder, by stat. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 8. See Homicide, Manlaughter. And Black. Com. 4 V. 193.

Stabilia, A writ called by that name, on a custom in Normandy, that where a man in power claimed lands in the possession of an inferior, he petitioned the Prince that it might be put into his hands 'till the right was decided; whereupon he had this writ, Brevs de Stabilia: To this a charter of King Hen. 1. alludes in Pryn's Lib. Angl. tom. 1. pag. 1204.

Stabilitio venationis, The driving deer to a stand. Omnis burgenses de B. debent invenire unum hominem ter per annum ad stabiliamentum pro venatione capienda, &c. Lib. niger Herf. And, In venatione si quis ad stabilitatem non venit, i. e. He who doth not come to the place where he ought to stand. Leg. H. 1. c. 17.

Stable-stand, (Stabilis statio, vel stans in stabulo) Is where a man is found at his standing in the forest, with a cross or long bow bent, ready to shoot at any deer; or standing close by a tree, with greyhounds in a leash, ready to slip: And it is one of the four evidences or presumptions, whereby a person is convicted of intending to steal the King's deer in the forest: the other three are dog-draw, back-bear, and bloody hand. Manwood par. 2. cap. 18.

Stack, A quantity of wood three foot long, as many feet broad, and twelve feet high. Merch. Dig.

Stadium, Is accounted a furlong of land; which is the eighth part of a mile. Domesday.

Staff-herding, Is a right to follow cattle within a forest: And where persons claim common in any forest, it must be inquired by the ministers whether they use staff-herding, for it is not allowable of common right; because by that means the deer which would otherwise come and feed with the cattle, are frightened away, and the keeper or follower will drive the cattle into the best grounds, so that the deer shall only have their leavings: Therefore if any man who hath right of common, under colour thereof use staff-herding, it is a cause of seizing his common till he pay a fine for the abuse. 1 Jon. Rep. 48.

Stage-Coaches. See Coaches.

Stage-plays. See Plays. And Black. Com. 4 V. 168.

Stagarius, Signifies a resident; as J. B. Canonicus & Stagarius Sancti Pauli, is a canon residentiary of St. Paul's church. Hist. Eccl. S. Paul. But this distinction was made between residentarius, and Stagarius: Every canon installed to the privileges and profits of residence, was residentarius; and while he actually kept such stated residence, he was Stagarius. Statut. Eccles. Paulin. MS. 44. Stagaria, the residence to which he was obliged; Stagari, to keep residence. Hence an old Stager.

Stagnes, (Stagno) Are pools of standing water. 5 Eliz. c. 21. A pool consists of water and land; and therefore by the name of Stagnum, the water and land shall pass also. Inst. 5.

Stake driven through the Body, This is part of the punishment of Suicide. See Self-murder.

Stal-boat, Is a kind of fishing boat, mentioned in the 27 Eliz. c. 21.

Stalkers, The going gently step by step, to take game; none shall stalk with bush or beast to any deer, except in his own forest or park, under the penalty of 10 l. Stat. 19 H. 7. c. 11.

Stalkers, Certain fishing-nets, by the statute 13 R. 2. c. 20.

Stallage, (Stallagium, from the Sax. stal. i. e. stabulum, statio) The liberty or right of pitching and erecting stalls in fairs or markets: or the money paid for the same. Kennet's Gloss.

Stallarius, Is mentioned in our historians, and signifies profectum stabuli; it was the same officer which we now call master of the horse:—Eadnothus qui fuit Haroldi Regis stallarius, &c. Spelm. Sometimes it hath been used for him who hath a stall in a market. Flota, lib. 4. c. 28.

Stamp-Duties. There are certain duties imposed by parliament on all vellum, parchment and paper, whereon deeds, grants, commissions, or any writings, or process in the law are ingrossed or written; which duties are as follow, viz. For all letters patent, grants of offices, presentations, dispensations, admittances of fellows of the college of physicians, and of attornies, pardons of crimes, &c. 40 s. All conveyances inrolled, writs of covenant for levying fines, habeas corpus's, &c. Decrees in Chancery, licences of marriage, probates of wills, &c. 5 s. Warrants under the sign manual, commissions out of ecclesiastical courts, judgments, &c. 2 s. 6 d. For admissions into any company, bills, answers, &c. in Chancery 1 s. All parchment and paper, upon which common deeds, bonds, writs, &c. are written, 6 d. And for every sheet of any declaration, or pleading, &c. 1 d. Stat. 5 & 6 W. & M. c. 21. And by 9 & 10 W. 3. and 12 Ann. These duties are doubled, and trebled: The common stamp is treble sixpenny, &c. Commissioners are appointed by virtue of these acts, to provide stamps or marks; and inferior officers for the stamping of parchment and paper, and for levying and collecting the duties: If any commissioner or officer, shall fix the mark or stamp to parchment or paper before the duty thereon is paid or secured, he shall forfeit 100 l. And persons ingrossing or writing upon any paper, &c. any thing for which the same is charged with the duty, before it shall be stamped, or writing upon any paper or parchment marked or stamped, for any lower duty than that which is required, shall incur a forfeiture of 5 l. and no deed or writing shall be good in law till the 5 l. is paid, and the same is stamped. Vide Printing. See 30 Geo. 2. c. 19. and 32 Geo. 2. c. 35. And Black. Com. 1 V. 323. And see the Table to the Statutes, tit. Stamps.

Stamps, forging of. Capital punishment is inflicted for this offence. See the several Stamp Acts.

Stand, Is a weight from two hundred and a half to three hundred of pitch. Merch. Dict.

Standard, (From the Fr. Estandart, &c. signum, vexillum) In the general signification, is an Ensign in War: And it is used for the standing measure of the King, to the scantling whereof all the measures in the land are or ought to be framed, by the clerks of markets, aulgners, or other officers, according to Magna Charta and divers other statutes: And it is not without good reason called a Standard, because it standeth constant and immoveable, having all measures coming towards it for their conformity; even soldiers in the field have their Standard of colours, for their direction in their march; &c. to repair to. Britton, c. 30. There is a standard of money, directing what quantity of fine silver and gold, and how much alloy, are to be contained in coin of old sterling, &c. And standard of plate, and silver manufactures. Stat. 6 Geo. 3. c. 11. See Alloy.

Standardum Londini. Vobis mandamus quod standardum Londini de hujusmodi mensuris diligenter asservari & probari, ac alias mensuras per dictum standardum fieri ad singulos comitatus regni, &c. Claus. 14 Edw. 2.

Standardus, True standard, or legal weight or measure. Cartular. S. Edmund. MS. 268.

Standel, A young store oak tree, which in time may make timber; and twelve such young trees are to be set standing in every acre of wood, at the felling thereof, by Stat. 35 H. 8.

Standing-army, Not to be kept in time of peace, without consent of parliament. 1 W. & M. sess. 2. c. 2.

Stanes. For maintaining the bridge of Stanes, and Egbam causeway, a certain toll is appointed by an old statute, 1 H. 8. c. 9. There is a turnpike now erected across this bridge; and tolls are taken for all coaches, carts, horses, cattle, &c. going over, and lighters or vessels passing under the said bridge; but the inhabitants of Stanes are free for their horses, &c. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. c. 25.

Stanlam, A word anciently used for a stony hill. Domesd.

Stannaries, (Stannaria, from the Lat. stannum, i. e. tin) Are the mines and works where tin metal is got and purified; as in Cornwall and Devonshire, &c. Camden Brit. 199. The tanners are called Stannary-men; who had great liberties granted them by King Edw. 1. before they were abridged by the Stat. 50 Edw. 3. by which statute the privileges of the tanners are limited and expounded; and the jurisdiction of the Stannary courts is settled by the 16 & 17 Car. 1. c. 15. All labourers in and about the Stannaries, are to have the privilege of the Stannary court while they work there; and may not be impleaded in any other court, for any cause arising within the Stannaries; except for pleas of land, life or member: The jurisdiction of this court is guided by special laws and customs, and by prescriptions; and no writ of error lieth upon a judgment in the Stannary court, but it shall be reversed, where wrong, by appeal to the steward of the court where the matter lieth; or from the steward to the deputy-warden of the Stannaries; from the under-warden to the lord-warden of the Stannaries; and from him to the King's privy-council. 4 Inst. 230, 232. Plowd 327. 12 Rep. 9. 1 Roll. Abr. 745. Transitory actions between tinner and tinner, &c. though not concerning the Stannaries, or arising therein, if the defendant be found within the Stannaries, may be brought into these courts, or at Common law; but if one party alone is a tinner, such transitory actions which concern not the Stannaries, nor arise therein, cannot be brought in the Stannary-courts. 4 Inst. 231. Labourers in the Stannaries may recover their wages before justices of peace. 27 Geo. 2. c. 6. See Black. Com. 3 V. 80.

Stannarius, A jeweller or dealer in tin; of or belonging to tin. Litt. Dict.

Staple. (Stapulum) Comes from the Fr. estape, forum vinarium, a market or staple for wines, which was the principal commodity of France; or rather from the Germ. sta;ulen, which signifieth to gather, or heap any thing together: In an old French book it is written à Calais Estape de la Laine, &c. i. e. The staple for wool: And with us, it hath been a public mart appointed by law to be kept at the following places, viz. Westminster, York, Lincoln, Newcastle, Norwich, Canterbury, Chichester, Winchester, Exeter and Bristol, &c. A Staple court was held at the Wool Staple in Westminster, the bounds whereof began at Temple-Bar and reached to Tusbill; in other cities and towns, the bounds are within the walls; and where there are no walls, they extend through all the towns; and the court of the mayor of the Staple is governed by the law merchant in a summary way, which is the Law of the Staple. 4 Inst. 235. See Stat. 27 Ed. 3. The staple goods of England are wool, woollens, leather, lead, tin, cloth, butter, cheese, &c. as appears by the statute 14 R. 2. c. 1. Though some allow only the five first; and yet yet of late Staple goods are generally understood to be such as are vendible, and not subject to perill, of any kind. Vide Statute Staple. And Black. Com. 1 V. 314.

Star, (Starrum, a contraction from the Hebr. stetar, a deed or contract) All the deeds, obligations, &c. of the Jews, were anciently called stars, and writ for the most part in Hebrew alone, or in Hebrew or Latin; one of which yet remains in the treasury of the Exchequer, written in Hebrew, without points, the substance whereof is expressed in Latin just under it, like an English condition under a Latin obligation; This bears date in the reign of King John; and many stars, as well of grant and release, as obligatory, and by way of mortgage, are pleaded and recited at large in the plea-rolls. Rasch. 9 Edw. 1. See Black. Com. 2 V. 343. 4 V. 262.

Star and Bent, Penalty on cutting star and bent on sand-hills. 15 Geo. 2. c. 33. sect. 6.

Star-Chamber, (Camera stellata, otherwise called Chamber des estuylls;) Was a chamber at Westminster so called (as Sir Thomas Smith, de Rep. Anglor. lib. 2. c. 4. conjectures,) because at first the ceiling thereof was adorned with images of gilded Stars. And in the 25 Hen. 8. cap. 1. it is written the starred chamber. Henry the Seventh, and Henry the Eighth, ordained by the statutes, viz. 3 Hen. 7. cap. 1. and 21 Hen. 8. cap. 2. That the Chancellor, assisted by others there named, should have power to punish rauts, riots, forgeries, maintenances, embraceries, perjuries, and other such misdemeanors as were not sufficiently provided for by the Common law, and for which the inferior judges were not so proper to give correction: And because that place was before set apart to the like service, it was still used accordingly. Touching the officers belonging to this court, see Camd. p. 112, 113. But by the statute 16 Car. 1. c. 10. This court, commonly called the Star-chamber, and all jurisdiction, power and authority thereto belonging, are abolished. Cowell.

Molloy and Blackstone seem to think it was called the Star-chamber, because the recognizances which the Jews formerly entered into, to the crown, and which were called Stars, were kept in that chamber. See Black. Com. 1 V. 230. 4 V. 263, 422, 426. 430.

Starch and Starch Powder. By a late act starch-makers are to make use of square or oblong boxes only, for boxing and draining green starch, before it is dried in the stove, under the penalty of 10 l. and shall give notice to the officers for the duties, when they box and dry their starch; and not remove the starch made before it is weighed, and an account taken thereof, on pain of forfeiting 50 l. Officers may search for starch concealed, by virtue of a justice's warrant, and seize the same, &c. A penalty is likewise inflicted on makers of hair-powder, perfumers, peruke-makers, barbers, &c. mixing any powder of alabaster, chalk, lime, &c. with starch powder, or making hair-powder of any other materials than powder of starch. And makers of powder for hair, are to make entries of their workhouses at the office of Excise; and any officer may enter warehouses and shops, and examine the powder, which being mixed, shall be forfeited, and the sum of 20 l. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 14.

Statens damages. A court of equity cannot, any more than a court of law, relieve against a penalty, in the nature of statens damages; as a rent of 5 l. an acre for ploughing up ancient meadow: Nor against a lapse of time, where the time is material to the contract; as in covenants for renewal of leases. Both courts will equitably construe, but neither pretends to controul of change, a lawful stipulation or engagement. 2 Atk. 139. Black. Com. 3 435.

Statitics, (Statites, Stantia ponderum) Knowledge of weights and measures; or the art of balancing or weighing in scales. Morris Dic.

Stationarius, (From Stans, residence) Is the same with Stagiarus. Or, a common residentary in a cathedral church. See Stagiarus.

Staturium, A comb adorned with Statues.—de quo sacra corpora terra illi statu munita sunt Romani statuarum commendatary, &c. English Dic.

Statute de Mortuore, The Statute of a manor: All the tenants within the manor, meet in the court of their lord, to do their customary suit, and enjoy their right and use ges; which was termed omnis status de manerio. Paroch. Antiq. 456.

Statute, (Statutum) Has divers significations: First, It signifies an act of parliament made by the King, and the three estates of the realm; and Secondly, it is a short writing called a Statute Merchant, or Statute Staple, which are in the nature of bonds, &c. and called Statutes, as they are made according to the form expressly provided in certain statutes. 5 H. 4. c. 12. To statutes enacted in parliament, there must be the assent of the King, Lords, and Commons, without which there can be no good act of parliament; but there are many acts in force, though these three assents are not mentioned therein, as Dominus Rex statuit in parlamento, and Dominus Rex in parlamento suo statuta edit, and de communi concilio statuit, &c. Plowd. 79. 2 Bulst. 186. And Sir Edw. Coke says, that several statutes are penned like charters in the King's name only; though they were made by lawful authority. 4 Inst. 25. Before the invention of printing, all statutes were proclaimed by the sheriff in every county, by virtue of the King's writ. 2 Inst. 526; 644.

Some statutes are general, and some are special: And they are called general from the genus, and special from the species; as for instance: The whole body of the spirituality is the genus, but a bishop, dean, and chapter, &c. is the species: Therefore statutes which concern all the clergy, are general laws; but those which concern bishops only are special. 4 Rep. 76. The statute 21 H. 8. c. 13. which makes the acceptance of a second living by clergymen, an avoidance of the first, is a general law, because it concerns all spiritual persons.

All statutes concerning mysteries and trades in general, are general or publick acts; though an act which relates to one particular trade is a private statute. Dyer 75. A statute which concerns the King is a publick act; and yet the stat. 23 Hen. 8. concerning sheriffs, &c. is a private act. Plowd. 38. Dyer 119. 'Tis a rule in law, that the courts at Westminster ought to take notice of a general statute, without pleading it: but they are not bound to take notice of particular or private statutes unless they are pleaded. 1 Inst. 98.

Statutes against the power of subsequent parliaments are not binding; notwithstanding the statute 42 Ed. 3. c. 3. declares that any statute made against Magna Charta shall be void: And this is evident, seeing many parts of Magna Charta have been repealed and altered by subsequent acts. Read. on Stat. Vol. 4. p. 340. And the law has been mistaken in this point; for the statutes which intervene between the 9 Hen. 3. and 42 E. 3. are not repealed, though they vary from, and are contrary to Magna Charta. Jenk. Cent. 2. Statutes continue in force although the records of them are destroyed, by the injury of time, &c. But if a statute is against reason, or impossible to be performed, it is void. 4 Rep. 76. 2 Inst. 587.

Old statutes must give place to new, where they are contrary; but when there is a seeming variance between two statutes, and no clause of non obstantia in the latter, such construction shall be made that both may stand. 11 Rep. 56. Dyer 347. By repealing of a repealing statute, the first statute is revived: And where one statute is repealed by another, the acts done in the mean time are valid. 4 Vol. Read. Stat. Jenk. Cent. 233.

Statutes consist of two parts, the words, and the sense; and 'tis the office of an expositor, to put such a sense upon the words of the statute, as is agreeable to equity and right reason: Equity must necessarily take place in the exposition of statutes; but explanatory acts are to be construed according to the words, and not by any manner of intendment; for it is incongruous for an explanation to be explained. Plowd. 363, 465. Cro. Car. 23.

The preamble of a statute, which is the beginning thereof, going before, is as it were a key to the knowledge of it, and to open the intent of the makers of the act; it shall be deemed true, and therefore good arguments may be drawn from the same. 1 Inst. 11. It is the most natural and genuine exposition of a statute, to construe one part by another part of the same statute, for that best expresses the meaning of the makers: The words of an act of parliament are to be taken in a lawful and rightful sense, sense, and the construction of statutes in general must be made in suppression of the mischief, and for the advancement of the remedy intended by the statute; but so that no innocent person by a literal construction shall receive any damage. 1 Inst. 24, 381.

The best way to expound a statute, is to consider what answer the law-givers would probably have given to the question made, if proposed to them. Plowd. 465. 3 Nels. Abr. 245.

In the usual exposition of statutes, these things are to be observed, viz. 1. What was the Common law before the making of the statute? 2. The mischief and defect which the Common law did not provide against. 3. What remedy the statute hath appointed to cure this mischief. 4. The true reason of the remedy. 3 Rep. 5.

Where a statute gives a remedy for any thing, it shall be presumed there was no remedy before at Common law. And the rules to construe acts of parliament, are different from the strict rules of the Common law; though in the construction of a statute, the reason of the Common law gives great light. Raym. 191, 355. 2 Inst. 301. If an act of parliament is dubious, long usage may be good to expound it by; and the meaning of things spoken and written, must be as hath been constantly received; but where usage is against the obvious meaning of a statute, by the vulgar and common acceptance of words, then it is rather an oppression than an exposition of the statute. Vaugh. 169, 170.

A statute which alters the Common law, shall not be strained beyond the words, except in cases of publick utility, when the end and design of the act appears to be larger than the words themselves. Ibid. 179. Relative words in any statute, may make a thing pass as well as if particularly expressed: And cases of the same nature shall be within the same remedy. Raym. 54.

Such statutes as are beneficial to the people, shall be expounded largely, and not with restriction. Style 302. The exposition of statutes concerning the ecclesiastical courts, belongs to the common law courts: And a statute made in imitation of the common law, is to be expounded by it. Hob. 83, 97. An affirmative act, does not repeal a precedent affirmative statute. The affirmative words of statutes do not change the common law, without negative words added therein. And the statute of wills, being in the affirmative, doth not take away the custom to devise land in places where it is. Jenk. Cent. 212. Dyer 155. 1 Inst. 111. If a statute be made only in affirmance of the ancient common law, and doth not enact any thing new, but what was before provided for; it is nevertheless a statute, and may be pleaded: But the defendant hath a plea at common law. Style's Reg. 301. An act of parliament in affirmance of the common law, extends to all times after, though it mentions only to give remedy for the present; and where a thing is granted by statute, all necessary incidents are granted with it. 1 Inst. 235.

Wherever a statute gives or provides a thing, the common law supplies all manner of requisites. Hard. 62. Every statute made against an injury, gives a remedy by action, expressly or implicitly. 2 Inst. 55, 74. And besides an action upon the statute, as the subjects private remedy; the offender may be punished for contempt at the king's suit, by fine, &c. 2 Co. Inst. 131, 163. Things for necessity sake, or to prevent failure of justice, are excepted out of statutes. Ibid. 118.

Statutes made for the public good are to be expounded, so as to attain their end. 1 Strange 253, 258. Kebble's Statutes and Rassal's differed, and they who were for adhering to Kebble proved they had examined him with the parliament roll. The chief justice ruled it was enough, and Kebble was read. 1 Strange 446. Where an act of parliament only gives a remedy to the party grieved, it shall not be considered as a penal statute. Willson par. 1. fo. 412. How statutes are to be recited, and indictments drawn on them, see Indictment. And 4 New Abr. & 19 Vin. Abr. tit. Statutes. Also vide Black. Com. 1. v. 35.

Statute Merchant. A Statute Merchant is a bond of record, acknowledged before the Clerk of the Statute Merchant, and lord mayor of the city of London, or two merchants assigned for that purpose; and before the mayors of other cities and towns, or the bailiff of any borough, &c. sealed with the seal of the debtor and the king, upon condition that if the obligor pays not the debt at the day, execution may be awarded against his body, lands, and goods, and the obligee shall hold the lands to him, his heirs and assigns, till the debt is levied. Terms de Ley. Stat. 13. Edw. 1. The Statute of Abon Burnel, 13 Edw. 1. enacts, That the merchant is to cause his debtor to come before the mayor of London, &c. to acknowledge the debt due, and day of payment; and the recognizance is to be entered in a roll: Then the clerk is to make out a bill obligatory, whereunto the seal of the debtor shall be affixed, together with the king's seal in the custody of the mayor, &c. And if the debtor fail in payment at the day, upon notice thereof to the mayor and clerk, they are to cause his goods and chattels to be sold by appraisement, to satisfy the creditor what his debt amounts unto, and the money without delay is to be paid to such creditor; or in case they cannot sell the goods, they shall cause so much of the goods to be delivered to the creditor as will answer his debt. If the debtor have no goods within the mayor's jurisdiction, the recognizance is to be sent to the Lord Chancellor under the king's seal, and he shall thereupon direct a writ to the sheriff in whose bailiwick the goods of the debtor are, who is to proceed therein as the mayor might have done if the said goods had been in his jurisdiction: And if the debtor have no goods whereupon the debt may be levied, he shall be imprisoned, and there remain until he agree with the creditor, &c. If the debtor have sureties, they shall be proceeded against in like manner as the debtor; but so long as the debt may be levied of the goods of the debtor, the sureties are to be without damage. Also a merchant stranger, to whom a debt is due by Statute Merchant, shall besides the payment of his debt, be satisfied for his stay and detainer from his business. And by the statute de Mercatoribus, 13 Edw. 1. the merchant shall cause his debtor to appear before the Mayor of the city of London, or other city or town, and there acknowledge the debt, &c. by recognizance, which is to be inrolled, the roll whereof must be double, one part to remain with the mayor, and the other with the clerk appointed by the king; and then one of the clerks is to write the obligation, which shall be sealed with the debtor's seal and that of the king, &c.

If the debt be not paid at the day upon the merchant's account, the mayor is to cause the debtor to be imprisoned, if to be found, and in prison to remain until he hath agreed the debt; and if the debtor cannot be found, the mayor shall send the recognizance into the Chancery, from whence a writ shall issue to the sheriff of the county where the debtor is, to arrest his body, and keep him in prison till he agree the debt; and within a quarter of a year, his lands and goods shall be delivered to him to pay the debt; but if the debtor do not satisfy the debt within that time, all his lands and goods shall be delivered to the merchant by a reasonable extent, to hold till the debt is levied thereby; and in the mean time he shall remain in prison; but when the debt is satisfied, the body of the debtor is to be delivered, together with his lands. If the sheriff return a non est inventus, &c. the merchant may have writ to all the sheriffs where he hath any land; and they shall deliver all the goods and lands of the debtor by extent, and the merchant shall be allowed his damage, and all reasonable costs, &c.

All the lands in the hands of the debtor, at the time of the recognizance, acknowledged, are chargeable; though after the debt is paid, they shall return to Grantees, if they are granted away, as shall the rest to the debtor: the debtor or his sureties dying, the merchant shall not take the body of the heir, &c. but shall have his lands until the debt is levied. In London, out of the commonalty, two merchants are to be chosen (and sworn by this statute); and the seal shall be opened before them, whereof one piece is to be delivered to the said merchants, and the other remain with the clerk; and before these merchants, merchants, &c. recognizances may be taken; a fee of 1 s. per pound is allowed to the clerk for fixing the King's seal; and a seal is to be provided that shall serve for fairs, &c. but the statute extends not to Jews. Stat. ibid. Cro. Car. 440, 457. Statute Merchant were contrived for the security of merchants only, to provide a speedy remedy to recover their debts; but at this day they are used by others who follow not merchandize, and become one of the common assurances of the kingdom. Bridg. 21. Owen 82. And all obligations made to the king, are of the nature of these Statute Merchants. 12 Rep. 2, 3.

The form of a Statute Merchant bond, according to Flesay is as follows, viz.—Noverint universi per presentis me A. B. de, &c. Teneri C. D. in centum libr. solvand. eidem C. D. ad festum, &c. Anno Regni, Regis, &c. Et nisi fecero, concedo quod currant super me & heredibus meis discretio & pena provisiva in Statuto Domini Regis edit. apud Westm. Datum London, tali die, &c. See 3 Shep. Abr. 318. 2 New Abr. 331. Cro. Eliz. 233, 319. & Black. Com. 2 v. 160. 4 v. 419.

Statute Staple, is a bond of record, acknowledged before the mayor of the staple, in the presence of all or one of the constables; to this end, says the statute, there shall be a seal ordained, which shall be affixed to all obligations made on such recognizances acknowledged in the staple; this seal of the staple is the only seal the statute requires to attest this contract; but it is no more under the power or disposal of the mayor, than that appointed by the Statute Merchant; for though the statute appoints him the custody of it, yet it is in such a manner, that he cannot affix it to any obligation without their consent, it being to remain in the mayor's hands, under the security of their own seals. 2 Rol. Abr. 466. Stat. 27 Ed. 3. c. 9.

To understand a little of the original and constitution of the staple, and the advantage the nation had by this establishment, we must observe, that the place of residence, whither the merchants resorted with their staple commodities, was antiently called Estaple, which signifies no more than mart or market; and this was formerly appointed out of the realm, as at Calais, Antwerp, &c. and other ports on the continent, which were nearest to us, and whither the merchants might with safety coast it. 4 Inst. 238.

But besides these staple ports appointed abroad, there were others appointed at home, whither all the staple commodities were carried in order to their exportation, such as London, Westminster, Hull, &c. this was found to be of great use and consequence to the prince in particular, and to the interest and credit of the nation in general; for at these staple ports were the King's customs easily collected, and were by the officers of the staple, at two several payments, returned into the Exchequer; besides, at these staples, all merchants goods were carefully viewed and marked by the proper officers of the staple; and this necessarily avoided the exportation of decayed goods, or ill wrought manufactures, and consequently fixed a stamp of credit on the merchandizes exported, which, upon the view, always answered the expectation of the buyer. Maline's Lex Merc. 337—338. See the 27 Ed. 3. cap. 1.

The staple merchandizes, according to Lord Coke, are only wool, woollens, leather, lead and tin; others butter, cheese and cloths; but whatever they were, the mayor and constables had not only cognizance of all contracts and debts relating to them, but they had likewise jurisdiction over the people, and all manner of things touching the staple; this power was given them, lest the merchants should be diverted and drawn from their business and trade, by applying to the Common law, and running through the tedious forms of it, for a determination of their differences; and for the greater encouragement of merchants, that they might have all imaginable security in their contracts and dealings, and the most expeditious method of recovering their debts, without going out of the bounds of the staple. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 1. Maline's Lex Merc. 337. 27 Ed. 3. c. 1.

By this it appears, that this security was only designed for the merchants of the staple, and for debts only on the sale of merchandizes brought thither; yet in time others began to apply it to their own ends, and the mayor and constable would take recognizances from strangers, surmising it was made for the payment of money for merchandizes brought to the staple; to prevent this mischief, the parliament in 23 H. 8. reduced the statute staple to its former channel, and laid a penalty of 40 l. on the mayor and constables who should extend the benefit of the statute to any but those of the staple; but though the statute of 23 H. 8. cap. 6. deprived them of this benefit; yet it framed a new sort of security, to be used ad libitum by all men, known by the name of a recognizance on 23 H. 8. or a recognizance in the nature of a statute staple, so called, because this act limits and appoints the same process, execution and advantage in every particular, as is set down in the statute staple. Co. Lit. 290.

A recognizance therefore in nature of a statute staple, as the words of the act declare, is the same with the former, only acknowledged under other persons; for as the statute runs, the chief justices of the King's bench and Common pleas, or in their absence, out of term, the mayor of the staple at Westminster, and the recorder of London jointly together, shall have power to take recognizances for payment of debt in the form set down in the statute; in this, as in the former cases, the King appoints a seal to attest the contract. Co. Lit. 290. a. 4 Inst. 238. 2 Rol. Abr. 466. Co. Ent. 12.

Debt lies as well upon a Statute Staple as upon a bond: And a statute acknowledged on lands, is a present duty, and ought to be satisfied before an obligation; a debt due on an obligation being but a chose in action, and recoverable by law, and not a present duty by law, as a debt upon a statute, judgment, or recognizance is, upon which present execution is to be taken without farther suit. Cro. Eliz. 355, 461, 494. 2 Lill. Abr. 536. But a judgment in a court of record, shall be preferred in case of execution before a Statute: Though if one acknowledge a Statute, and afterwards confess judgment; if the land be extended thereon, the cognisee shall have a Scire facias to avoid the extent upon the judgment. 6 Rep. 45. 1 Brough. 37. It is otherwise as to goods, for there he that comes first, shall be first served. Ibid. The cognisor of a Statute grants his estate to the cognisee; by this the execution of the Statute will be suspended. 2 Cro. 424. But if the cognisee before execution of a Statute, release to the cognisor all his right to the land; it will not be a discharge of the whole execution: For notwithstanding, he may sue execution of his body and goods. 3 Shep. Abr. 326. Upon a Statute Staple, a Capias and extent of lands, goods, and chattels are contained in one writ; but it is not so on a Statute Merchant. Jenk. Gent. 163. In Chancery the proceedings on a Statute Staple, are in the petty bag office; and Statute Staple are sueable in the King's Bench or Common pleas, as well as in Chancery. Cro. Eliz. 208. On a Statute's being satisfied, it is to be vacated by entering satisfaction, &c. Statute Staple and Statute Merchant are to be entered within six months, or shall not be good against purchasers. 27 Ed. 3. c. 4. See the Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 1. for preventing delays in extending Statutes. Vide Recognizance. Statutes Merchant and Staple, Tenants thereof. He that is in possession of lands on a Statute Merchant, or Staple, is called tenant by Statute Merchant, and Statute Staple, during the time of his possession: And creditors shall have freehold in the lands of debtors, and recovery by novel disseisin, if put out; but if tenant by Statute Merchant, or Statute Staple, hold over his term, he that hath right may sue out a novus facias ad compellendum, or enter, as upon an assize. 27 Ed. 3. c. 4.

As to recognizance in nature of a Statute Staple, see Stat. 23 H. 8. c. 6. Black. Com. 2 v. 160, 342. 4 F. 424. & 2d Recognizance.

Statute of a Corporation. An incident to a Corporation as soon as it is duly erected, and which is annexed of course, is to make by-laws, or private statutes for the better government of the Corporation; which are binding upon themselves, unless contrary to the laws of the land, and then they are void. This is included by law in the very act of Incorporation. Black. Com. 1 v. 179.

Statuto Stapulae. Is a writ that lies to take the body to prison, and seise upon the lands and goods of one who hath forfeited the bond called statute staple. Reg. Orig. 151.

Statuto Mercatorio. The writ for imprisoning him that hath forfeited a statute merchant bond, until the debt is satisfied: And of these writs, there is one against laypersons, and another against persons ecclesiastical. Reg. Orig. 146, 148.

Statutum de Laborantibus. An ancient writ for the apprehending of such labourers as refused to work according to statute. Reg. Judic. 27.

Statutum Sessionem. The statute sessions. A meeting in every hundred of constables and householders, by custom, for the ordering of servants, and debating of differences between the masters and servants, rating of servants wages, &c. 5 Elix. cap. 4.

Staurum. Any store or standing stock of cattle, provision, &c. Matt. Westm. Anno 1259.

Stealing. Is the fraudulent taking away of another man's goods, with an intent to steal them, against, or without the will of him whose goods they are. The Civil law judges open theft to be satisfied by the recompence of four-fold; and privy theft, by the recompence of double; but the law of England adjudges both those offences to be death, if the value of the thing stolen be above twelve-pence. Cowell. See Larceny.

Stealing an Heiress. This is the forcible abduction and marriage of an Heiress. It is made felony in the principal and his accessaries by 3 H. 7. c. 2. and by 39 Elix. c. 9. The benefit of clergy is taken away from all such felons, except accessaries after the offence.

Steel. See Iron.

Steepsmann. The same with the stirmannus, or sturmmanus.

Stephens (Joanna) 5000 l. reward granted to her for the discovery of her medicines for dissolving the stone, 12 Geo. 2. cap. 23.

Stepney. The rector of every church and chapel, converted into a parochial church in the parish of Stepney, to be nominated by Brasen nose college, 12 Ann. B. 1. cap. 17.

Sterling. (Sterlingum) Was the epithet for silver money current within this kingdom, and took name from this; that there was a pure coin stamped first in England by the Easterlings, or merchants of East Germany, by the command of King John; and Houedon writes it Esterling. Instead of the pound sterling, we now say so many pounds of lawful English money; but the word is not wholly disused, for though we ordinarily say lawful money of England, yet in the mint they call it sterling money; and when it was found convenient in the fabrication of monies, to have a certain quantity of baser metal to be mixed with the pure gold and silver, the word sterling was then introduced; and it has ever since been used to denote the certain proportion or degree of fineness, which ought to be retained in the respective coins. Lownd's Essay upon coins 14.

Steward. (Senescallus, compounded of the Sax. Steda, i. e. Room, or Stead, and Ward, a wardor keeper) Is as much as to say a man appointed in my place or stead, and hath many applications, but always denotes an officer of chief account within his jurisdiction. The greatest of these officers is, The Lord High Steward of England, who anciently had the supervising and regulating, next under the king, the administration of justice, and all other affairs of the realm, whether civil or military; and the office was hereditary, belonging to the Baron of Leicester, till forfeited to King Hen. 3. But the power of this officer being very great, of late the office of High Steward of England hath not been granted to any one, only pro hac vice, either for the trial of a peer of the realm on an indictment for a capital offence; or for the determination of the pretensions of those who claim to hold by grand serjeanty, to do certain honourable services to the King at his coronation, &c. for both which purposes he holds a court, and proceeds according to the laws and customs of England; and he to whom this office is granted must be of nobility and a Lord of parliament. 4 Inst. 58, 59. Crompt. Jurisd. 84. 13 Hen.

8. 11. 2 Habck. P. C. 5. Of the nine great officers of the crown, the Lord High Steward is the first; but when the special business for which he is appointed is over-ended, his commission expires. The first Lord High Steward that was created for the solemnizing of a Coronation, was Thomas second son of Hen. 4th; and the first Lord Steward for the trial of a peer, was Edward Earl of Devon, on the arraignment of John Holderne Earl of Huntingdon in the same reign, Lex Constitution. 170.

There is a Lord Steward of the Household, mentioned Stat. 24 H. 8. cap. 13, whose name was changed to that of Great Master of the Household, Anno 32 H. 8. But this statute was repealed by 1 Mar. cap. 4. and the office of Lord Steward of the household revived. He is the chief officer of the king's court, to whom is committed the care of the king's house; he has authority over all officers and servants of the household, except those belonging to the chapel, chamber, and stable; and the palace royal is exempted from all jurisdiction of any court, but only of the Lord Steward, or in his absence, of the Treasurer and Comptroller of the household, with the Steward of the Marshalsea, who by virtue of their offices, without any commission, hear and determine all treasons, murders, felonies, breaches of the peace, &c. committed in the King's palace: Besides the Treasurer and Comptroller, the Lord Steward hath under him a Cofferer, several Clerks of the Green Cloth, &c. He attends the King's person at the beginning of parliaments; and is a white staff officer, which he breaks over the hearse on the death of the King, and thereby discharges all officers under him: Of this officer's ancient power, read Fleta, lib. 2. and F. N. B. 241. In the liberty of Westminster, an officer is chosen and appointed, called High Steward; and there is a Deputy Steward of Westminster; and the word Steward is of to great diversity, that in most corporations, and all houses of honour, an officer is found of this name and authority. Stewards of Manors, see Coppyhold. See Black. Com. 4 V. 258, 260. As to the Lord High Steward, and as to Steward of the Household, Id. 3 V. 76. 4 V. 273.

Stewards of Courts. See, Coppyhold, Manor, Leet.

Stews. (from the Fr. Estuon, i. e. Thermae, Balnearum) Are those places which were permitted in England to women of professed incontinency, and that for hire would prostitute their bodies to all comers; so called, because dissolute persons are wont to prepare themselves for venereous acts by batting; and hot baths were by Homer reckoned among the effeminate sort of pleasures. These stews were suppressed by King Hen. 8. about the year 1546.

Stica. A brass Saxon coin, of the value of half a farthing four of them making a belfing.

Stick of Cels. A quantity or measure of twenty-five. A bind of cels contains ten sticks, and each stick 25 cels. Stat. of Weights and Measures.

Stichtler. An inferior officer who cuts wood within the King's parks of Clarendon. Rot. Parl. 1 H. 6.

Stiltpard, Strectyard. Otherwise called the Sylebust, in the parish of Albhallows in London, was by authority of parliament assigned to the merchants of the Hanse and Almaine or Easterling merchants, to have their abode in forever, with other tenements, rendering to the Mayor of London a certain yearly rent. Stat. 14 Edw. 4. In some records it is called Gildhalda Tentonicorum; and it was at first denominated stijyard, of a broad place or court where stee was sold, upon which that house was founded. See 19 H. 7. c. 32. 22 H. 8. c. 9. 1 Edw. 6. c. 13.

Stint, common without stint. There are commons without stint, and which last all the year. By the statute of Merton however, and other subsequent statutes, the lord of the manor may enclose so much of the waste as he pleases, for tillage or wood-ground, provided he leaves common sufficient for such as are entitled thereto. Black. Com. 2 V. 24. Not any commoner hath a right to surcharge the common to the prejudice of the other commoners. See Second Surcharge.

Stipula. Stipula left standing in the field after the corn is reaped and carried away. Verbi gratia carac- rum, frugis, & dum sacra stipula, &c. Cart. 2 Edw. 2.
Stipu-

Sequestration in the Admiralty Courts. The first process in these courts is frequently by arrest of the defendant's person; when they take recognizances or stipulation of certain fidejussors in the nature of bail, and in case of default, may imprison both them and their principal. Black. Com. 3 V. 108, 109.

Steuermannus. (Steuermannus, Sax. steer-man) A pilot of a ship, or steers-man. Domest.

Stirpes, distribution per. Under the statute of distributions it will sometimes happen that personal estates are divided per capita, and sometimes per stirpes; whereas the Common law knows no other rule of succession but that per stirpes only. They are divided per capita to every man an equal share, when all the claimants claim in their own rights, as in equal degree of kindred, and not jure representationis, in the right of another person. As if the next of kin be the intestate's three brothers A. B. and C. here his estate is divided into three equal portions, and distributed per capita, one to each: But if one of these brothers, (A.) had been dead, leaving three children, and another, (B.) leaving two; then the distribution must have been per stirpes, viz. one third to A.'s three children, another third to B.'s two children, and the remaining third to C. the surviving brother: Yet if C. had also been dead, without issue, then A.'s and B.'s five children being all in equal degree to the intestate, would take in their own rights per capita, viz. each of them one fifth part. Prec. Chan. 54. Black. Com. 2 V. 517. 'Tis otherwise as to real estates. See the next title, or head.

Stirpes, succession in. The lineal descendants, in infinitum, of any person deceased, shall represent their ancestor; that is, shall stand in the same place as the person himself would have done, had he been living.

Thus the child, grandchild, or great-grandchild (either male or female) of the eldest son succeeds before the younger son, and so in infinitum. And these representatives shall take neither more nor less, but just so much as their principals would have done. As if there be two sisters, Margaret and Charlotte, and Margaret dies leaving six daughters; and then John Stiles, the father of the two sisters, dies, without other issue: These six daughters shall take among them exactly the same as their mother Margaret would have done, had she been living; that is, a moiety of the lands of John Stiles in coparcenary. This taking by representation is called a succession by stirpes, according to the roots. Black. Com. 2 V. 217. So if Charlotte had died leaving three children, her three children would be intitled to the moiety the mother would have had, if living: Contrary to the case of distribution of personal estates under the statute.

Stock and Stobel. A forfeiture where any one is taken carrying stipites & pabulum out of the woods; for stoc signifies sticks, and stovel pabulum. Antiq. Chart.

Stock or Stroke. Syllables added to the names of places, from the Sax. Stocce, i. e. Stipes, Truncus; as Woodstock, Basingstoke, &c.

Stock and Family. If lands were devised generally to a stock or family; it shall be understood of the heir principal of the house. Hob. 33. See Tylwinch.

Stocks and Stocks, in Exchange Alley. All stocks are authorized by act of parliament, or by charter, or used by obsolete charters, shall be void, and the undertakings are declared null and void, by Stat. 6 Geo. 1. cap. 18. All premiums to deliver or receive, accept of refuse any public stock, or share therein, and contracts in nature of wagers, patts and assumps relating to the value of the stock, shall be void; and the premiums returned, or may be recovered by action with double costs; and the persons entering into or executing any such contract, shall forfeit 100*l.* No money shall be given to compound any difference, for not delivering or transferring stock, or not performing contracts; but the whole money agreed, is to be paid, and the stock transferred on pain of 100*l.* Persons buying, on refusal or neglect to transfer at the day, may buy the like quantity of stock, of any other person, and recover the damage of the first contractor: And contracts for sale of any stock, where contractors are not actually possessed of or intitled unto the same, to be void; and the parties agreeing to sell, &c. incur a penalty of 500*l.* Brokers making agreements, &c. and doing contrary, are also liable to penalties: But this act not to hinder lending money on Stocks, or contracts for re-delivering or transferring thereon, so, as no premium be paid for the loan more than legal interest. Stat. 7 Geo. 2. c. 8. Made perpetual by 10 Geo. 2. As to Stocks sold, it is held, that an actual transfer is not necessary, unless the person to whom it ought to be made, was at the place and time ready to accept it; and then the time of tender is the last hour of the day on which the Stock was to be transferred. Mod. Caf. in L. and E. 106, 219. If the plaintiff doth not set forth in his declaration that he was at the South-Sea House, &c. on the day, at such a time, and staid till the last hour, to transfer his Stock, he cannot maintain his action. Pagb. 8 Geo. 1. In equity it has been adjudged, if a trustee, or executor, with the trust money buys stocks, and thereby gains considerably, he shall have the advantage of it to himself; in respect of the hazard he ran of being a loser by it, which he must have borne, if able. Abr. Caf. Eq. 398. But in a like case, where money laid out on Stocks was greatly improved; it was decreed, that as if the Stock had fallen, the trust must have suffered; so its accidental rise shall be for the benefit of it. 1 P. Williams 649. See Brokers and Felony.

Stocks, (cippus) A wooden engine to put the legs of offenders in, for the securing of disorderly persons, and by way of punishment in divers cases ordained by statute, &c. And it is said that every vill within the precinct of a town is indictable for not having a pair of Stocks, and shall forfeit 5*l.* Kitch. 13.

Stockland and Bondland. In the manor of Wadhurst in Suffex, there are two sorts of copyhold estates, viz. Stockland and Bondland, descendable by custom in several manors: As if a man be first admitted to Stockland, and afterwards to Bondland, and dies seised of both, his eldest son and heir shall inherit both estates; but if he be admitted first to Bondland, and after to the other, and of these die th seised, his youngest son shall inherit: And Bondland held alone, descends to the youngest son. 2 Leon 55.

Stola. Was a garment formerly worn by priests, like unto those which we now call hoods. And sometimes it is taken for the archiepiscopal pall. Badmer. cap. 188: Also a settlement which matrons wore. Cowell.

Stolen Goods. To help people to stolen goods for reward, without apprehending the felon, is felony. 4 Geo. 1. cap. 11. Prosecutors of such offenders how rewarded, 6 Geo. 1. c. 25. Persons buying or receiving lead, iron, copper, brass, bell-metal or solder, knowing it to be stolen, to be transported. 29 Geo. 2. c. 30. Stat. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 9. & 5 Ann. c. 31. makes the person receiving stolen goods knowing them to be stolen, accessory to the theft and felony. And by 1 Ann. c. 9. and 5 Ann. c. 31. the receivers may be prosecuted for a misdemeanor, tho' the principal felon be not taken.

Trover for goods stolen from the plaintiff, and sold to defendant, not in a market overt; but in his shop (not in London) it appeared in evidence that the defendant did not know they were stolen goods, and Lord Hardwicke said in such case, tho' the property was not (strictly speaking) altered, yet as it was a fair transaction, he would hold the plaintiff to strict proof, that these were the identical goods stolen, and he not being able to prove that was nonsuited. Rep. Temp. Hardwicke per Annotat. 349. If the owner of the goods knew or had reasonable cause to suspect they were stolen; he shall not have restitution, unless he prosecutes the thief to conviction. Id. 350. A bill in a shop in London (dealing in such goods) which is by custom a market overt, will alter the property. Id. 350.

Stone. A weight of 14 pounds, used for weighing of wool, &c. The stone of wool ought to weigh 14 pounds; but in some places, by custom, it is less, as 12 pounds and a half. A stone of wax is 8 pounds; and in London the stone of beef is no more. 11 Hen. 7. c. 4. Rot. Parl. 27 Ed. 1.

Stones of War. Are not to be imbellied; and none to make marks of war with the King's marks, but contractors with the principal officers or commissioners of the navy, 10 L.

havy, &c. under the penalty of 200*l.* Stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. Plantation pitch and tar to be clean, 5 Geo. 1. c. 11. 24 Geo. 2. cap. 52. 25 Geo. 2. cap. 35. Stow, (Sax. i. e. locus) A place, and is often joined to other words; as Godstow is a place dedicated to God.

Stowage, Is the room where goods are laid, or 'tis the money paid for such places. See Housage.

Straits, A narrow sea between two lands, or an arm of the sea. Also there is a narrow coarse cloth antiently so called. 18 Hen. 6. c. 16.

Strand, (Sax.) Any shore or bank of a sea or great river. Hence the street in the west suburbs of London, which lay next the shore or bank of the Thames, is called the Strand. An impunity from custom, and all impositions upon goods or vessels, by land or water, was usually expressed by strand and stream; as King Hen. 2. in his charter to the town of Rochester.—Concedo & confirmo in perpetuum cum socne & soke, & strand & stream. Mon. Stranded, (from the Sax. strand) Is when a ship is by tempest or ill steerage run on ground, and so perishes. 17 Car. 1. c. 14. Where a vessel is stranded, justices of the peace, &c. shall command constables near the sea-coasts to call assistance for the preservation of the ship; and officers of men of war are to be aiding and assisting. 12 Ann. c. 18.

Stranger, (derived from the Fr. estranger, alienus) Signifies generally in our language, a man born out of the realm, or unknown. In the law it hath a special signification, for him that is not privy to an act: As a stranger to a judgment, is he to whom a judgment doth not belong; and in this sense it is directly contrary to party or privy. Old Nat. Br. 128. Strangers to deeds shall not take advantage of conditions of entry, &c. as parties and privies may; but they are not obliged to make their claims on a fine levied till five years; whereas privies, such as the heirs of the party that passed the fine, are barred presently. 1 Inst. 214. 2 Inst. 516. 3 Rep. 79. Strangers have either a present or future right; or an apparent possibility of right, growing afterwards; &c. Wood's Inst. 245. See Black. Com. 2 V. 356.

Stray, or going astray of beasts and cattle, see Estray.

Stream-works, A kind of works in the Stannaries, mentioned in the Stat. 27 H. 8. c. 23.

Streemau, (Sax.) Robustus, vel potens vir. Leland, vol. 2. p. 183.

Streets. If streets in London are not well paved, the mayor and aldermen, or any three justices there, may set fines upon persons, to be levied by distress or action, &c. 32 & 35 H. 8. c. 10. And for nuisances, disturbances, revelling, &c. in streets, certain penalties are inflicted by the city laws. Lex Lond. 194. It is made felony maliciously to assault persons in the streets, with intent to tear their clothes, &c. Stat. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. s. 11. Vide Rabbery.

Strepitus, Intestinis. The circumstances of noise and crowd, and other turbulent formalities at a process or trial in a publick court of justice. And therefore our wise ancestors did in many cases provide, that right and justice should be done in a more private and quiet manner. Cowell. Paroch. Antiq. p. 344.

Streetward, Was an officer of the streets, like our surveyor of the highways, or rather a scavenger. Mon. Angl. tom. 2. p. 187.

Striking in the King's superior courts of justice, in Westminster-hall, or at the assizes, subjects the offender to the loss of the right-hand, imprisonment for life, and forfeiture of goods and chattels, and of the profits of his lands during life. Stauf. P. C. 38. 3 Inst. 440, 1. 1. Maliciously striking in the King's palace, wherein his royal person resides, whereby blood is drawn, is punishable by perpetual imprisonment, and fine at the King's pleasure; and also with loss of the offender's right-hand, the solemn execution of which sentence is described at length in the Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 12. See Black. Com. 4 V. 125, 273. And see Church, Palace.

Strip, (strepitus) Destruction, mutilation, from the Fr. estropier: Strepitum & vestium facere, i. e. to make strip and waste, or strip and waste. See Estreperment.

Strond, An old Saxon word signifying the same as strand.

Strumpet, (meretrix) A whore, harlot, or courtesan: This word was heretofore used for an addition. Plac. apud Cestr. 6 Hen. 5.

Strype, The eighth part of a seam or quarter of corn, a stryke or bushel. Cartular. Rading. MS. 116.

Strub of mares, Is a company of mares kept for breeding of colts; from the Sax. stodmare, i. e. equa ad partum.

Stultifying one's self. It hath been said, that a man who compasses himself, tho' he be afterwards brought to a right mind, shall not be permitted to alledge his own insanity, in order to avoid his grant; for that no man shall be allowed to stultify himself, or plead his own disability: But late opinions, feeling the inconvenience of this rule, have in many points endeavoured to restrain it. Comb. 469. 3 Mod. 310, 311. 1 Equ. Cas. Abr. 279. And it seems to be settled, that their acts are only binding, in case they be afterwards agreed to, when their imbecillity ceases. Vide Black. Com. 2 V. 291, 292.

Sturgeon, May be imported, 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 24. The King, where intitled to sturgeon, 17 Ed. 2. Stat. 1. c. 11.

Style, (appellus) Is to call, name, or intitle one; as the style of the King of England is George the Third, by the Grace of God King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. There is also an Old and New style, used in the dates of things abroad; the latter being eleven days before the former.

Subarrare. Florence of Worcester tells us, that King Alfred subarravit & duxit a noblewoman of Mercia, anno 868.

Sub-deacon, An antient officer in the church, made by the delivery of an empty platter and cup by the bishop, and of a pitcher, basin and towel by the archdeacon: His office was to wait on the deacons with the linen on which the body, &c. was consecrated, and to receive and carry away the plate with the offerings at sacraments, the cup with the wine and water in it, &c. He is often mentioned by the monkish historians, and particularly in the Apostolical Canons, 42, 43.

Subjection, civil. Civil subjection is the obligation, whereby the inferior is constrained by the superior to act contrary to what his own reason and inclination would suggest. Obedience to the laws in being is undoubtedly a sufficient extenuation of civil guilt before the municipal tribunal. Black. Com. 4 V. 28.

Subjects, (subditi) Are the members of the Commonwealth under the King their head. Wood's Inst. 22.

Subinfeudation, Was where the inferior lords, in imitation of their superiors, began to carve out and grant to others smaller estates than their own, to be held of themselves, and were so proceeding downwards in infinitum, till the superior lords observed, that by this method of subinfeudation they lost all their feudal profits, of wardships, marriages, and escheats, which fell into the hands of these meane or middle lords, who were the immediate superiors of the vassals, or him who occupied the land. This occasioned the Stat. of Westm. 3. of quia emptores, 18 Ed. 1. to be made; which directs, that, upon all sales or feoffments of lands, the feoffee shall hold the same, not of his immediate feoffor, but of the chief lord of the fee of whom such feoffor himself held it. And from hence it is held, that all manners existing at this day must have existed by immemorial prescription; or at least ever since the 18 Ed. 1. when the statute of quia emptores was made. Black. Com. 2 P. 91, 92.

Subjugalis, Is any beast carrying the yoke. Matt. Paris. 1249.

Sublegerius, (from the Sax. sublegeth, i. e. incestus) One who is guilty of incestuous whoredom.

Sub-marshal, An officer in the Marches, who is deputy to the Chief Marshal of the King's House, commonly called the Knight Marshal, and hath the custody of the prisoners there. He is otherwise termed Under Marshal. Comp. Jurif. 104.

Submissio, Of matters to arbitrament, by bond or covenant, &c. upon which an action may be brought on non-performance of the award, if it is made for payment of money. 10 Rep. 131. See Arbitrament.

Subnervare, To cut the sinews of the legs or thighs; to ham-string: And it was an old custom in England, meretricious & impudicæ mulieres subnervare.

Subornation, (subornatio) A secret under-hand preparing, intruding, or bringing in a false witness; and from hence subornation of perjury is the preparing or corrupt allying to perjury. Subornation of witnesses we read of in the 32 Hen. 8. c. 9. And procuring or suborning a witness to give false testimony in any court of record concerning lands or goods, the offender shall forfeit 10 l. or suffer imprisonment for half a year, stand on the pillory, &c. by 6 Eliz. c. 9. See Perjury.

Subpoena Is a writ whereby common persons are called into Chancery, in such cases where the Common law hath provided no ordinary remedy; and the name of it proceeds from the words therein, which charge the party called to appear at the day and place assigned, sub poena centum librarum, &c. West. Symb. par. 2. Comp. Juridict. 33. The subpoena is the leading process in the courts of equity; and by statute, when a bill is filed against any person, process of subpoena shall be taken out to oblige the defendant to appear and answer the bill, &c. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. Where a defendant absconds, or goes beyond sea, to avoid being served with process of subpoena to appear, &c. see 5 Geo. 2. c. 25. and infra. And there are several of these writs in Chancery; as the subpoena ad respondendum, subpoena ad replicandum & ad rejoicendum, subpoena ad testificandum & ad audiendum judicium, &c. which writs are to be made out by the proper clerks of the subpoena office; and subpoena's to answer must be personally served by being left with the defendant, or at his house with one of the family, on affidavit whereof, if the defendant do not answer, attachment shall be had against him, &c. Pract. Solic. 5, 6. A subpoena ad testificandum lies for the calling in of witnesses to testify in any cause, not only in Chancery, but in all other courts; and in that court, and in the Exchequer, is made use of in law and equity. The two chief writs of subpoena are to appear and to testify; and the latter issues out of the court where the issue is joined, upon which the evidence is to be given. 2 Lill. Abr. 536. In this writ the 100 l. penalty is inserted only in terrorem, being never levied; though if a witness served with a subpoena, refuse to appear, on tender of his charges, the party injured thereby may recover 10 l. damages, and other recompence by action of the case. 5 Eliz. c. 9. See Black. Com. 4 P. 137.

Subpoena ad testificandum. A writ or process, to bring in witnesses to give their testimony. See stat. 5 Eliz. c. 9. If a witness on being served with this process does not appear, the court will take an attachment against him, or a party plaintiff or defendant injured by his non-attendance may maintain an action against the witness. See Black. Com. 3 P. 159.

Subpoena duces tecum. This is a writ or process of the same kind with the preceding, including a clause of requisition, for the witness to bring and produce books and papers, &c. in his hands, belonging to, or wherein the parties are interested. See Black. Com. 3 P. 158.

Subpoena in equitate. A process in Equity, calling on a defendant to appear and answer to the complainant's bill. See Black. Com. 3 P. 144. and the stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 25. Which enacts that where the party cannot be found to be served with subpoena, and absconds (as believed) to avoid being served, a day shall be appointed him to appear to the bill of the plaintiff; which is to be inserted in the London Gazette, read in the parish church where the defendant last lived, and fixed up at the royal exchange; And if the defendant doth not appear upon that day, the bill shall be taken pro confesso. As to the original of this subpoena, see Black. Com. 3 P. 51. And see supra subpoena.

Subscription of witnesses. A will of lands must by stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. § 5. be attested or subscribed by three credible witnesses at least: In other conveyances, the actual subscription of the witnesses is not required by law, though it is prudent for them so to do. Black. Com. 2 P. 378.

Subsequent Conditions. These are such by the failure or nonperformance of which an estate already vested may be defeated. Black. Com. 2 P. 254. which vide.

Subsequent Evidence. In attain, he that brings the attain can give no other evidence to the grand jury, than what was originally given to the petit. Black. Com. 3 P. 403. The proceeding by attain is now out of use, as the courts of law will grant a new trial, where cause sufficient can be shewn, on an application in due time.

On a re-hearing in equity, all the evidence taken in the cause, whether read before or not, is admitted to be read: Because it is the decree of the Chancellor himself, who only now sits to hear reasons why the decree should not be enrolled and perfected; at which time all the omissions of either evidence or argument may be supplied. Gill. Rep. 151, 152. Black. Com. 3 P. 454, 455.

Subsidy, (subsidium) Signifies an aid, tax, or tribute, granted to the King for the urgent occasions of the kingdom; to be levied on every subject of ability according to the value of his lands or goods. Some persons have held, that the subsidy of tonnage, &c. might be taken by the King of his own prerogative; especially in a case of necessity, and for the publick good, as to make an equality of trade: And that the precedents of the Exchequer make the law herein. But the law was adjudged otherwise, by both houses of parliament. Jenk. Cent. 208. Dyer 165. Lam 24. Gro. Car. 601. Vide Customs, and Tax.

History does not mention that the Saxons Kings had any subsidies after the manner of ours at present; but they had both levies of money and personal services towards the building and repairing of cities, castles, bridges, military expeditions, &c. which they called Bargbote, Brigbote, Harafare, Haregeld, &c. But when the Danes harried the land, King Ethelred submitted to pay them for redemption of peace several great sums of money yearly. This was called Danegeld, for the levying of which every hide of land was taxed yearly at twelve pence, lands of the church only excepted, and thereupon it was after called hydagium, and that name remained afterwards upon all taxes and subsidies imposed upon lands; but sometimes it was laid upon cattle; and then was termed borngeld. The Normans called these sometimes taxes, sometimes tallages, otherwise auxillia & subsidia. The Conqueror had these taxes, and made a law for the manner of their levying, as appears in Enchiridionibus ejus, pag. 125. feft. Polonus & Germani, &c. Many years after the conquest they were levied otherwise than now, as every ninth lamb, every ninth hide, and every ninth sheaf. 14 E. 3. stat. 1. cap. 26. Of which you may find great variety in Rastall's Abridgement, tit. Taxes, Tenures, Extentibus, Subsidibus, &c. and 4 Inst. fol. 26 and 33. Whence we may gather there is no certain rate, but as the parliament shall think fit. Subsidy is in our Statute sometimes confounded with customs. 12 H. 4. cap. 2. Council. See Black. Com. 1 P. 307, 310, 311, 312, 313, 314.

As aid to be taken but by assent of parliament. 14 Ed. 3. stat. 2. cap. 1.

Substance. The substance of the law is not to be regarded; and therefore our law doth not consist of substantia, before matters of circumstance, &c. as in the Statutes 36 E. 3. c. 15. 33 H. 6. c. 10. and 1 H. 7. c. 24. 23 Eliz. c. 4.

Sub-

Substitute, (Substitutus) One placed under another person to transact some business, &c. See Attorney.

Subtraction of conjugal Rights. This is when either husband or wife, lives separate from the other without any sufficient reason; in which case the ecclesiastical jurisdiction (on a suit for restitution of conjugal rights) will compel them to come together again, if either party be weak enough to desire it, contrary to the inclination of the other. Black. Com. 3 V. 94.

Subtraction of Legacies. This is the withholding or detaining of Legacies: As a consequential part of testamentary jurisdiction, the spiritual court administers redress herein, by compelling the executor to pay them. In this case the courts of equity exercise a concurrent jurisdiction with the ecclesiastical courts, as incident to some other species of relief prayed by the complainant; as to compel the executor to account for the testator's effects, or assent to the legacy, or the like. For, as it is beneath the dignity of the king's courts to be merely ancillary to other inferior jurisdictions, the cause, when once brought there, receives there also its full determination. Black. Com. 3 V. 98.

Subtraction of Rents and Services, &c. This happens, when any person who owes any suit, duty, custom, rent, or service to another, withdraws or neglects to perform or pay it, &c. See Black. Com. 3 V. 230.

Subtraction of Tithes. This is the withholding of tithes, from the parson or vicar, whether the former be a clergyman, or a lay appropriator. See stat. 27 H. 8. c. 20. 32 H. 8. c. 7. And Black. Com. 3 V. 88, 102. also vide Tithes.

Suburban, Are husbandmen, according to the Monasticon. Tom. 2. p. 468.

Succession to the Crown, see King.

Succession ab intestato. The statute of distributions bears some resemblance to the Roman law, of successions ab intestato. See Black. Com. 2 V. 516.

Succession to Goods and Chattels. The gaining a property in chattels, either personal or real, by succession, is in strictness of law, only applicable to corporations aggregate of many, as dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, master and fellows, and the like; in which one set of men may, by succeeding another set, acquire a property in all the goods, moveables, and other chattels of the corporation. Black. Com. 2 V. 430.

Succession to the Crown. The succession to the crown, hath already been noticed under Settlement. See farther Black. Com. 1 V. 197. 4 V. 433.

Successor, (Lat.) Is he that followeth or cometh in another's place. Sole corporations may take a fee-simple estate to them and their successors; but not without the word successors: And such a corporation cannot regularly take in succession goods and chattels; and therefore if a lease for a hundred years be made to a person and his successors, it hath been adjudged only an estate for life: Nor may a sole corporation bind the successors. 4 Rep. 65. 1 Inst. 8, 46, 94. 4 Inst. 249. An aggregate corporation may have a fee-simple estate in succession without the word successors; and take goods and chattels in action or possession, and they shall go to the successors. Wood's Inst. 111. Vide Corporation, and Supra.

Sufferance. Tenant at sufferance, is he who holdeth over his term at first lawfully granted. Terms de Ley. A person is tenant at sufferance that continues after his estate is ended, and wrongfully holdeth against another. Sec. 1 Co. Inst. 57. See stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 28. and Black. Com. 2 V. 150.

Sufferentia pacis, A grant or sufferance of peace or truce. — Pro quadam Sufferentia pacis cum illis habenda, per annum unum duratura. Claus. 16 Ed. 3.

Suffragan, (Suffraganeus, Chorepiscopus, Episcopi vicarius) Is a Vicar Bishop ordained to aid and assist the bishop of the diocese in his spiritual function; or one who supplieth the place instead of the bishop. Some writers call these Suffragani by the name of Subsidiary Bishops, whose number is limited by the stat. 26 H. 8. cap. 14. By which statute it was enacted, That it should be lawful for every bishop, at his pleasure, to elect two honest and discreet spiritual persons within his diocese, and to present them to the King, that he might give to one of them such title, stile and dignity of such of the Sees in the said statute mentioned, as he should think fit: And that every such person should be called a Bishop Suffragan of the same See, &c. This act sets forth at large for what places such Suffragani were to be nominated by the King; and if any one exercise the jurisdiction of a Suffragan, without the appointment of the bishop of the diocese, &c. he shall be guilty of a Premunire. Stat. Ibid. See Chorepiscopi.

Suggestion, (sugessio) Is in law a surmise, or representing of a thing; and by magna charta no person shall be put to his law on the suggestion of another, but by lawful witnesses. 9 H. 3. c. 28. Suggestion are grounds to move for prohibitions to suits in the spiritual courts, &c. when they meddle with matters out of their jurisdictions. 2 Lill. Abn. 536. Though matters of record ought not to be stayed upon the bare suggestion of the party; there ought to be an affidavit made of the matter suggested, to induce the court to grant a rule for staying the proceedings upon the record. 2 Lill. 537. There are suggestions in replevin, for a retorno habendo; which it is said are not traversable, as there are for prohibitions to the spiritual or admiralty courts. 1 Plowd. 76. Breaches of covenants and deaths of persons must be suggested upon record, &c. 8 & 9 W. 3. cap. 10. See Black. Com. 3 V. 113. 4 V. 305.

Suicide. See Self Murder, and Black. Com. 4 V. 189.

Suit, (Sua, Fr. suis, i. e. consecutio, sequela) signifies a following another; but in divers senses. The first is a suit in law, and is divided into suit real and personal; which is all one with action real and personal. 2. Suit of court, an attendance which the tenant owes to the court of his lord. 3. Suit covenants, when a man hath covenanted to do suit in the Lord's court. 4. Suit custom, where I and my ancestors owe suit time out of mind. 5. Suit is the following one in chase, as fresh suit: And this word is used for a petition made to the King, or any great personage. See Black. Com. 3 V. 295.

Suit and Service. When the tenant had professed himself to be the man of his superior or lord, the next consideration was concerning the service, which, as such, he was bound to render for the land he held. This, in pore, proper, and original feuds, was only twofold: To follow, or do suit to, the lord in his courts in time of peace; and in his armies or warlike retinue, when necessity called him to the field. Black. Com. 2 V. 54.

Suit of Court, That is, suit to the lord's court, is that service which the feudary tenant was bound to do at the Lord's court. At first it was expressly mentioned in the grant how often these courts should be held. This appears by Flota, l. 2. c. 71. par. 14. Qui faciant sedas ad curiam domini & quot sedas per annum. Sometimes one or more, but never exceeding three. Thorn mentions two, viz. Et faciant sedas ad curiam Cantuarie bis per annum, scilicet, in festo Michaelis & Pasche. But all the lord's tenants were not bound to attend his courts, but only those to whom their estates were granted upon that condition; But every man was bound to attend the Sheriff's court twice in every year; which see in form regalis. And if the inheritance, by reason whereof the tenant was bound to attend only at one court, did descend to co-heirs, he who had capitulum partem, was bound to attend the lord's court both for himself and all the co-heirs. Conell.

None to be distrained for suit of court, but they who are bound to it by charter or prescription, 31 Mod. 51. 2. 3. c. 9. Joint-tenants and parceners shall make but one suit, 32 H. 3. c. 9. The remedy against the lord distraining for it, where it is not due, and against the tenant withholding it, where it is due, 32 H. 3. c. 9. It is not taken away, by 22 Car. 2. 12 Car. 2. cap. 24. s. 5.

Suits at law, Are to be prosecuted in certain times limited by the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 16. Sec. Those persons who acted as libetarians, deputy lieutenants, justices of peace, &c. not authorized, at the bringing in of King William, were indemnified from vexatious suits, by 1 W. & M. c. 8. So persons that acted for security of the government, during the rebellion in the late reign. 1 Geo. 1. c. 39. Persons desiring to end any suits or controversies, for which there is no remedy but by personal action or bill in equity, may agree that their submission to the award of arbitrators, shall be made a rule of court, &c. 9 G. 10 W. 3. c. 15. See Black. Com. 3 V. 116.

Suit in equity, The first commencement (in Chancery) is by preferring a bill to the Lord Chancellor in the stile of a petition, setting forth the circumstances of the case at length, as some fraud, trust, or hardship, and praying relief, and also process of subpoena against the defendant. The defendant is to answer upon oath, to all the matter charged in the bill. Or the defendant may plead and demur, or demur alone, as advised by counsel. If the defendant answers, and the plaintiff finds sufficient matter confessed in the defendant's answer to ground a decree upon, he may proceed to the hearing of the cause on bill and answer only. But in that case, he must take the defendant's answer to be true in every point. Otherwise the course is for the plaintiff to reply generally to the answer, averring his bill to be true, certain, and sufficient, and the defendant's answer to be directly the reverse; which he is ready to prove as the court shall award: upon which the defendant rejoins, averring the like on his side; which is joining issue upon the facts in dispute. See Black. Com. 3 V. 442, Sec. 448, 9.

Suit of the King's Peace, Is the pursuing a man for the breach of the peace. 6 R. 2. c. 1. 3 H. 4. c. 15.

Suit-Silver, A small rent or sum of money paid in some manors to excuse the appearance of freeholders at the courts of their lords.

Sutcus-Aqua, A little brook or stream of water; otherwise called Sty, and in Essex Stoke. Paroch. Antiq. 537.

Suttry, (From Stro Sax. Suth, i. e. Aratum) A plough-land. 1 Inst. 55.

Suttinga, Sullingata Terra, Is the same with Sutling. Thon. pag. 1931.

Summary, (Summarium) Or an abridgement. Law Lat. Dic.

Summary conditions, A summary proceeding is such as is directed by several acts of parliament (for the Common law is a stranger to it) unless in the case of contempt) for the conviction of offenders, and the inflicting of certain penalties created by those acts of parliament. In these cases there is no intervention of a jury, but the party accused is acquitted or condemned by the suffrage of such person only, as the statute hath appointed for his judges, as one or more justice of the peace, &c. See Black. Com. 4 V. 277, Sec.

Summitter-Silver, A payment to the lords of the wood in the Woods of Kent, who used to visit those places in summer-time, when their under-tenants were bound to prepare little summer-houses for their reception, or else pay a composition in money. Custom of Greenwich, MS.

Summons, Is a writ judicial of great diversity according to the divers cases wherein it is used. Just. Rep.

Summoners, (Summonarii) Are petty officers that cite and warn men to appear in any court; and these ought to be sworn summoners, &c. Plur. Reg. The summoners were properly the apparitors, who warned the delinquents at a certain time and place to answer any charge or complaint exhibited against them. And in citations from a superior court, they were to be equals of the party cited, at least the latter were to be summoned by none under the degree of knight. Black. Com. 1 V. 177. See Black. Com. 3 V. 177.

Summonitores scaccarii, Officers who assisted in collecting the King's revenues, by citing the defaulters there in, into the court of Exchequer.

Summons, (Summons) Is with us as much as eccellu in jus, or citatio among the Civilians. Fleta, lib. 6. cap. 6. In general, it is a writ to the sheriff to warn one to appear at a day; and must be by certain summoners on the tenant's land, not his goods, &c. And if against an heir, shall be on the lands that did descend; or making default, at the grand cape he may wage his law of non summons. 6 Rep. 54. 37 H. 6. c. 26. There is a summons in writs of formedon, &c. And on every summons upon the land in a real action, fourteen days before the return, proclamation is to be made thereof on a Sunday, at or near the door of the church or chapel of the place where the land lies, which must be returned with the names of the summoners: And if such proclamation shall not be had, then no grand cape shall issue, but an alias and a pluries summons, until a summons and proclamation be truly made and returned. Cro. Eliz. 44. 2 Lill. Abr. 538. In a præcipe quod reddat, no man shall lose his land without being summoned. Jenk. Cent. 98. See Black. Com. 3 V. 279.

Summons and severance, This title is distinguished in the books by the name of summons and severance; but the proper name of it is severance; for the summons is only a process, which must, in certain cases, issue before judgment of severance can be given. 4 New Abr. 660. Severance is a judgment, by which, where two or more are joined in an action, one or more of these is enabled to proceed in such action without the other or others. 4 New Abr. 660.

It is a principle of law, where two or more have a joint right to a thing, they must join in an action for the recovery thereof. 4 New Abr. 660. Joint-tenants must implead jointly; for they claim under one and the same title. 1 Inst. 180. So parceners, who make but one heir, must in order to recover the possession of their ancestor, be joined in præcipe. 1 Inst. 163, 164. Executors, because the right of their testator devolves on all of them, must likewise all join in an action for the recovery thereof. Gudolph. Orph. Leg. 134. Salk. 3. Garbis 61.

And, wherever the right of action is in two or more persons, and they have not all joined in one that is brought, the defendant may plead in abatement: for, if one could recover in such case singly, every other might do the same; and by this means a defendant would be liable to answer in divers actions for the same thing. Cro. Eliz. 554. Deuring v. Moor. 19 Rep. 577. Salk. 3. 32. 2 Inst. 113. 3 Lev. 354. 1 Mod. 102.

It is indeed in the power of any one or more, where two or more have a joint right of action, to commence a suit in the name of all whose such right is: but, notwithstanding that a plea in abatement would be thereby prevented, it would still be in the power of any one of them, by neglecting to appear, or refusing to proceed afterwards in such suit, to render it fruitless. 1 Inst. 139. Bro. Summ. and Sev. pl. 17. For if two or more join in bringing an action, and one makes default, the nonsuit of him is the nonsuit of them all. Bro. Summ. and Sev. pl. 5. 7. So if divers join in a writ of error, the assignment of errors cannot be by one without the others. Cro. Eliz. 192. Madgery v. Ed. Cromwell.

To prevent the great inconvenience, and the failure of justice, which would befall us, when there is a joint right of action, should be proceeded by the negligence or collusion of any one of them, from having the effect of a suit for the recovery of such right; the law has provided, that if any one of these persons, in whose name a joint action is commenced, does not appear, or after appearance makes default, the other or others may have judgment ad recuperandum, or in other words a judgment of severance. Black. 48. Manly v. Louck Bro. Summ. and Sev. pl. 4, 16. And see ib. Manly 7. 2 Inst. 199.

The consequence of this judgment is, that notwithstanding the severance of one or more who did not appear, the suit shall continue against the others who did appear.

Pear or who made default, the other plaintiff or plaintiffs in the action may proceed in the suit. 4 New Abr. 661.

Where two or more are plaintiffs in an action, and one of these has not appeared, he must be summoned before judgment of severance can be given against him: for it is a general rule, that a nonsuit is in no case peremptory before appearance, because a writ may have been purchased in the plaintiff's name without his privity. 1 Inst. 139. Bro. Summ. and Sey. pl. 10. 2 Roll. Abr. 488.

But if two joint plaintiffs have both appeared, and afterwards one makes default, the court may, without issuing any summons, immediately give judgment of severance. Bro. Summ. and Sey. pl. 10. 10 Rep. 135. Hard. 317. No judgment of severance can be given in a writ of error, unless it is prayed before the defendant has pleaded nullo est erratum. Cro. Jac. 117. Blunt v. Sandstone. But such judgment may be after joinder in the assignment of error. 2 Lill. Pr. Reg. 663.

Summons to parliament. According to Blackstone, in the main the constitution of parliament, as it now stands, was marked out so long ago as the seventeenth year of King John, A. D. 1215, in the great charter granted by that prince, wherein he promises to summons all archbishops, bishops, abbots, earls, and greater barons personally; and all other tenants in chief under the crown, by the sheriff and bailiffs, to meet at a certain place, with forty days notice, to assess aids and scotages when necessary. Black. Com. 1 V. 449.

Summons ad warrantizandum, Summoneas ad warrantizand. The process whereby the vouches in a common recovery is called. Co. Litt. 103.

Sumptuary laws, (Sumptuaria Lex, from Sumptuarius, of or belonging to expences) Are laws made to restrain excess in apparel, and prohibit costly clothes, of which heretofore we had many in England, but they are all repealed by 1 Jac. 1. 3 Inst. 199. See Black. Com. 4 V. 170.

Sunday, (Dies Dominicus) Is the Lord's Day set apart for the service of God, to be kept religiously, and not be profaned. Persons using bull-baiting or bear-baiting, or such like sports on a Sunday, shall forfeit 3 s. 4 d. and 5 s. for wrestling, bowling, &c. Stat. 1 Car. 1. c. 1. And if any butchers shall kill or sell meat on a Sunday, they are liable to a penalty of 6 s. 8 d. Carriers, drovers, &c. travelling on the Lord's Day, incur a forfeiture of 20 s. Stat. 3 Car. 1. c. 2. No person shall do any worldly labour on a Sunday, (except works of necessity and charity) on pain of 5 s. And crying and exposing to sale any wares or goods on a Sunday, the goods to be forfeited to the poor, &c. on conviction before a justice of peace, who may order the penalties and forfeitures to be levied by distress: But this is not to extend to dressing meat in families, inns, cook-shops, or victualling-houses; nor to crying of milk on a Sunday in the morning or evening. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. An indictment for exercising the trade of a butcher must be laid to be contra formam statuti; for it was no offence at Common law. 1 Strange 702. Law processes are not to be served on Sunday, unless it be in cases of treason or felony; or on an escape, by virtue of 5 Ann. c. 9. Sunday is not a day in law for proceedings, contracts, &c. And hence it is, that a sale of goods on this day in a market overt is not good: And if any part of the proceedings of a suit in any court of justice, be entered and recorded to be done on a Sunday, it makes it all void. 2 Inst. 264. 3 Shep. Abr. 181. The service of a citation on a Sunday is good, and not restrained by the Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 7. And by two judges, the delivery of a declaration upon a Sunday may be well enough, it not being a process, but Hall C. I thought it all, because the act intended to restrain all sorts of legal proceedings. 1 Ld. Raym. 706. A writ of inquiry cannot be executed on a Sunday. 1 Strange 387.

Supercargo. A person employed by merchants to go a voyage, and oversee their cargo, and dispose of it, to the best advantage. Merch. Dic.

Super-institution, (super-institutio) Is one institution upon another, as where A. B. is admitted and instituted to a benefice upon one title, and C. D. is admitted and instituted on the title or presentment of another, 2 Cro. 463. See Institution.

Super-jurare. A term used in our ancient law, when a criminal endeavoured to excuse himself by his own oath, or the oath of one or two witnesses, and the crime objected against him was so plain and notorious, that he was convicted by the oaths of many more witnesses: This was called super-jurare. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 74. Leg. Athelstan. c. 15.

Superoneratione Pastura. Is a judicial writ that lies against him who is impleaded in the county-court for the furcharging or overburthening a common with his cattle, in a case where he was formerly impleaded for it in the same court, and the cause is removed into one of the courts at Westminster. Reg. Judic.

Super Prærogativa Regis. A writ which formerly lay against the King's widow for marrying without his licence. F. N. B. 173.

Superseas. Is a writ that lies in a great many cases; and signifies in general a command to stay some ordinary proceedings at law, on good cause shewn, which ought otherwise to proceed. F. N. B. 236. A superseas is used for the staying of an execution, after a writ of error is allowed, and bail put in: but no superseas can be made out on bringing writ of error, till bail is given, where there are judgments upon verdicts, or by default, in debt, &c. though in case and trespass, where damages only are recovered, on the bringing and allowing of the writ, the clerk of the errors will make out a superseas without bail. 2 Lill. Abr. 543.

A writ of error is said to be in judgment of law a superseas, until the errors are examined, &c. that is to the execution; not to action of debt on the judgment at law: from the time of the allowance, a writ of error is a superseas; and if the party had notice of it before the allowance, it is a superseas from the time of such notice; but this must be where execution is not executed, or begun to be executed. Cro. Jac. 534. Raym. 100. Mod. Ca. 130. 1 Salk. 321.

If before execution, the defendant bring a writ of error, and the sheriff will execute a fi. fac. and levy the money, the court will award a superseas, quia erronee emanavit, and to have restitution of the money. Stile 14. After an execution, there was a superseas, quia executio improvide emanavit, &c. issued; and there being no clause of restitution in the superseas, it was insisted that the execution was executed before the superseas awarded, and that a faulty superseas is no superseas; but the court ordered another superseas, with a clause of restitution. Moor 466. 3 Nalf. Abr. 556.

The superseas, quia erronee emanavit, lies to restore a possession, after an habere facias seisinam, when sued out erroneously; so of a superseas after execution upon a capias ad satisfaciend. if it be immediately delivered to the sheriff. Jenk. Cent. 58. 92. It appearing upon affidavit, that there were two writs of execution executed upon one judgment: the party moved for a superseas, because there cannot be two such executions, but where the plaintiff is hindered either by the death of the defendant, or by some act in law, that he can have no benefit of the first; and so it was adjudged. Stile 255. A superseas is grantable to a sheriff to stay the return of an habeas corpora; and if he return it afterwards, and the parties proceed to trial of the error; and so are all the proceedings in an inferior court, after an habeas corpora delivered, unless a procedendo is awarded, in which case a superseas is not to be granted. Cro. Car. 43. 350.

When a certiorari is delivered, it is a superseas to inferior courts below; and being allowed, all their proceedings afterwards are erroneous; and they may be punished. The justices, &c. to whom a certiorari is sent, are to issue a superseas to the sheriff to stop execution of any award, &c. 2 Hawk. P. C. 293. If a sheriff holds plea of 40 s. debt in his county-court, the defendant may sue forth a superseas, that he do not proceed, &c. Or after judgment he may have a superseas directed to the sheriff, requiring him not to award execution upon such judgment; and upon that an alias, a pluries, and an att. executione, &c. New Nat. Br. 413.

Superseas may be granted by the court for setting aside an erroneous judicial process, &c. Also a prisoner may may be discharged by superfedeas; as a person is imprisoned by the King's writ, so he is to be set at liberty; and a superfedeas is as good a cause to discharge a person, as the first process is to arrest him. Fitch 453. Cro. Jac. 379. If a privileged person is sued in any jurisdiction foreign to his privilege, he may bring his superfedeas. Vaugh. 155. But a peer being arrested by a bill of Middlesex, was ordered to plead his privilege; and not allowed a superfedeas. Stile 177. It is false imprisonment to detain a man in custody after a superfedeas delivered; for the superfedeas is to be obeyed; and in such case it is a new caption without any cause. 2 Cro. 379. 3 Nels. 256. There is a superfedeas where an audita querela is sued; and out of the Chancery, to set a person at liberty taken upon an exigent, on giving security to appear, &c. And in cases of surety of the peace and good behaviour, where a person is already bound to the peace in the Chancery, &c. New Nat. Br. 524, 529, 532. See farther, 4 New Abr. and 26 Vin. Abr. tit. Superfedeas.

Superfeding a commission of bankrupt. If a commission of bankrupt issues, and there is sufficient to pay all the creditors, and the charges, and satisfaction is made to all the creditors, the commission may be superseded. 2 Ch. Ca. 144. A commission is also sometimes superseded, on the creditors agreeing with the bankrupt, and consenting to a superfedeas.

Super Statuto 1 Ed. 3. cap. 13, 13. Is a writ that lay against the King's tenants holding in chief, who aliened the King's land without his licence. F. N. B. fol. 175.

Super Statuto de Vicariis Cleri. Cap. 6. A writ lying against the sheriff or other officer that distrains in the King's highway, or in the lands anciently belonging to the church. F. N. B. 173.

Super Statuto tunc pour Beneschal & Marshal de Roy, &c. Is a writ that lieth against the Steward or Marshal, for holding plea in his court of freshhold, or for trespass or contracts not made and arising within the King's household. F. N. B. 241.

Super Statuto de fuis Servantes & Laboratores. A writ against him who keeps servants departed out of their services contrary to law. F. N. B. 167.

Super Statuto de Pork, quo null terra meller, &c. Is a writ lying against a person that uses victualling, either in gross, or by retail, in a city or borough-town, during the time he is mayor, &c. F. N. B. 172.

Superstitious Uses. Causing forfeiture of lands and goods to the King, by Stat. 1 Hen. 6. c. 14. See Uses, and Black. Com. 3 P. 428.

Supervisor, (Lat.) A surveyor or overseer: And it was formerly and still is a custom among the better sort of people, to make a supervisor of a will, to supervise and oversee the executors that they punctually perform the will of the testator; but this office is of late very carelessly executed, so as to be of little purpose or use. Supervisor (now surveyor) of the highways, is mentioned in the Stat. 5 Eliz. c. 13.

Supplemental bill in equity. If a plaintiff hath replied to a defendant's answer whereby the cause is at issue, and afterwards new matter arises, which did not exist before, he must set it forth by a supplemental bill. Black. Com. 3 P. 448.

Suppletory oath. The Civil law universally requires the testimony of two. To extricate itself out of this absurdity, the modern practice of the Civil courts has plunged itself into another. Where there is only one witness, to make up the necessary complement of two, they admit the party himself (plaintiff or defendant) to be examined in his own behalf; and administer to him what is called the suppletory oath; and, if his evidence happens to be in his own favour, this immediately converts the half proof into a whole one. Black. Com. 3 P. 270, 271.

Supplicavit. Is a writ issuing out of Chancery, for taking surety of the peace, when one is in danger of being hurt in his body by another; it is directed to the justices of peace and sheriff of the county, and is grounded upon the Stat. 1 Ed. 3. c. 15. which ordains, That certain persons shall be assigned by the Chancellor to take care of the peace, &c. F. N. B. 80, 81. When a man hath purchased a writ of supplicavit, directed to the justices of the peace, against any person, then he, against whom the writ is sued, may come into the Chancery, and there find sureties that he will not do hurt or damage unto him that sueth the writ; and upon that he shall have a writ of superfedeas directed to the justices, &c. reciting his having found sureties in Chancery, according to the writ of supplicavit; and also reciting that writ, and the manner of the security that he hath found, &c. commanding the justices, that they cease to arrest him, or to compel him to find sureties, &c. And if the party who ought to find sureties, cannot come into the Chancery to find sureties; his friend may sue a superfedeas in Chancery for him; reciting the writ of supplicavit, and that such a one and such a one are bound for him in the Chancery in such a sum, that he shall keep the peace according to it; and the writ shall be directed to the justices, that they take surety of the party himself according to the Supplicavit, to keep the peace, &c. and that they do not arrest him; or if they have arrested him for that cause, that they deliver him. New Nat. Br. 180.

Sometimes the writ of supplicavit is made returnable into the Chancery at a certain day; and if so, and the justices do not certify the writ, nor the recognisance, and the security taken, the party who sued the supplicavit shall have a writ of certiorari directed unto the justices of peace to certify the writ of supplicavit, and what they have done thereupon, and the security found, &c. Ibid. If a recognisance of the peace be taken in pursuance of a writ of supplicavit, it must be wholly governed by the directions of such writ; but if it be taken before a justice of peace below, the recognisance may be at the discretion of such justice. Lamb. 100. Dalt. c. 70. To sue the writ of supplicavit, the party that desires it must go before one of the Masters in Chancery, and make oath that he does not desire the same through any malice, but for his own safety; upon which the master makes out a warrant, and the writ is made by it by one of the clerks in the six clerks office; and when made, the supplicavit is to be delivered to the sheriff to have his warrant thereupon for arresting the party, &c. and then having sued out a certiorari, it is to be delivered to them that took bail thereon; and they are required to certify it, &c. Pract. Solic. 130. See Surety of the Peace, and Black. Com. 4 P. 250.

Supplies. Extraordinary grants to government, by parliament, to supply the exigencies of the state. See on this subject, Black. Com. 1 P. 307.

Supremacy. Signifies sovereign dominion, authority and preeminence, the highest estate. King Hen. 8. was the first prince that shook off the yoke of Rome here in England, and settled the supremacy in himself, after it had been long held by the Pope. Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 12, 20. And by 1 Eliz. c. 1. all ecclesiastical jurisdiction was annexed to the crown; and it was ordained that no foreign potentate should exercise any power or authority in this kingdom: Also the oath of supremacy was appointed, &c. By these laws, the great power of Rome was suppressed; and the act of 1 Eliz. Sir Edward Coke says, was an act of restitution of the ancient jurisdiction ecclesiastical, which always belonged of right to the crown of England; and that it was not introductory of a new law, but declaratory of the old, and that which was of right ought to be, by the fundamental laws of this realm; parcel of the King's jurisdiction; by which laws, the King as supreme head, had full and entire power in all causes ecclesiastical as well as temporal: And as in temporal causes, the King doth judge by his judges in the courts of justice, by the temporal laws of England; so in causes ecclesiastical, they are to be determined by the judges thereof, according to the King's ecclesiastical laws. 5 Rep. 10. Cowdry's case. And in this case it was resolved by all the judges, that by our ancient laws, this kingdom is an absolute empire and monarchy; consisting of one head, which is the King, and of a body politic, made up of many well agreeing members, all which the law divides into two several parts, the clergy and the laity, both of them immediately under the subject and obedient to the head. And the king's head of this political body, is furnished with prerogative and jurisdiction, to render justice and right to every part and member of this body, of what estate or degree soever, otherwise he would not be at the head of the whole. 5 Co. Rep. 8.

There are several instances of ecclesiastical jurisdiction exercised by the King of England in former ages; and in this respect the King is said to be persona mixta & unita cum sacerdotibus. The King is the supreme ordinary, and by the ancient laws of the land, might without any act of parliament, make ordinances for the government of the clergy; and if there be a controversy between spiritual persons concerning jurisdiction, the King is arbitrator, and 'tis a right of his crown to declare their bounds, &c. Moor 755. 1043. Hob. 17. See Appeals to Rome, Pope, and Præmunire, and Black. Com. 1 V. 49, 146, 368. 4 V. 115, 423.

Surcharge, An over-charge, beyond what is just and right. Merch. Dic.

Surcharge of common. This is a disturbance of common of pasture, by any one who hath right of common putting more cattle therein than the pasture and herbage will sustain, or the party hath a right to do. This surcharging can, properly speaking, only happen where the common is appendant or appurtenant, and of course limitable by law; or where, when in gross, it is expressly limited and certain: for where a man hath common in gross, sans nombre, or without stint, he cannot be a surcharger. But even in this case there must be sufficient for the lord's own beasts; for the law will not suppose that, at the original grant of the common, the lord meant to exclude himself. The remedy for surcharging common, is by the lord's distraining the surplus number, or by his bringing trespass, or by action on the case, in which any commoner may be plaintiff. Black. Com. 3 V. 237, 238.

Surcharge of the forest, (Superoneratio forestæ.) Is when a commoner puts on more beasts in the forest than he has a right to. Manwood, part 2. cap. 14. num. 7. And is taken from the writ De secunda superoneratione Pasturæ, in the same sense when the commoner surcharge his. 3 Inst. fol. 293.

Sur Cui in vita, Is a writ that lies for the heir of a woman, whose husband hath aliened her land in fee, and she neglected to bring the writ Cui in vita for recovery thereof; in this case, her heir may bring this writ against the tenant after her decease. F. N. B. 193.

Surety, (Vas Vadis) A bail that undertakes for another man in a criminal case, or action of trespass, &c. And there is a surety of the peace, so called, because the party that was in fear is thereby secured, by bond or recognizance of the other, and his bail bound for him. Lamb. Eiren. lib. 2. Vide Good Behaviour, and 20 Vin. Abr. 101. See infra.

Surety of the Peace, (Securitas Pacis, so called, because the party that was in fear, is thereby secured,) Is an acknowledging of a bond to the prince, taken by a competent judge of record, for the keeping of the peace. This peace may a justice of the peace command, either as a minister, when he is commanded thereto by a higher authority; or as a judge, when he doth it of his own power, derived from his commission. Of both these, see Lamb. Eiren. lib. 2. cap. 2. p. 77. Cowell.

A justice of peace may, according to his discretion, bind all those to keep the peace, who in his presence, shall make any affray, or shall threaten to kill or beat any person, or shall contend together with hot words, and all those who shall go about with unusual weapons or attendance, to the terror of the people; and all such persons as shall be known by him to be common brawlers; and all who shall be brought before him by a constable, for a breach of the peace in the presence of such constable; and all such persons, who, having been before bound to keep the peace shall be convicted of having forfeited their recognizance. Lamb. 77, 78. Bra. Peace, pl. 7, 8. 1 Hawk. 126.

A wife may demand surety of the peace against her husband, if he threatens to beat her outrageously, or to kill her. Fitz. N. B. 80. Lamb. 8. 2 Lea. 128. 1 Hawk. 127. V. 2 Stra. 1231. Articles of the peace may be exhibited by a husband against his wife. Sir. 1207. Spari's case. 1 Hawk. 127. See Pult. 18. Lamb.

81, 83. Bra. Peace, pl. 22. 1 Hawk. 127. Infants and feme coverts ought to find surety by their friends, and not to be bound themselves. 1 Hawk. 127.

When ever a person has just cause to fear that another will burn his house; or do him some corporal hurt, as by killing or beating him; or that he will procure others to do him such mischief, he may demand the surety of the peace against such person. Lamb. 82. 1 Hawk. 127. Sir. 473. Surety of the peace may be demanded by a wife, if her husband gives her unreasonable correction. Mo. 874. Sir Thomas Symth's case, Godb. 215. Fitz. N. B. 80. Surety of the peace ought not to be granted to a man for fear of danger to his servant or cattle. Lamb. 83. It hath however been said, that a man may have the surety of the peace against one who threatens to hurt his wife or child. Dalt. 266. The surety of the peace ought not to be granted for any past battery, unless there is a fear of some present or future danger: But the offender must in such case be punished by action or indictment. Dalt. 266. The demand of the surety of the peace ought to be soon after the cause of fear; for the suffering much time to pass, before it is demanded, shews that the party has been under no great terror. 6 Mod. 132. The Queen v. Lane.

1. Of granting surety of the peace by the court of Chancery.
2. Of granting surety of peace by the court of King's Bench.
3. Of granting surety of the peace by a justice of the peace.
4. Of forfeiting a recognizance for keeping the peace, and how such recognizance may be discharged.

1. Of granting surety of the peace by the court of Chancery.

At the common law it was sufficient, in order to obtain process for surety of the peace from the court of Chancery, if the party who demanded it made oath, that he was in fear of some corporal hurt, and that he did not crave the same out of malice, and for the safety of his body. Fitz. N. B. 79, 80.

But by the 21st J. 1. c. 8. All process of the peace shall be void, unless granted on motion in open court on affidavit in writing.

When articles of the peace are exhibited in the court of Chancery, and oath is made that the surety of the peace is not craved by the party through malice, but for the safety of his life, a writ of supplicavit issues, directed to the justices of the peace generally, or to some one justice of the peace, or to the sheriff, commanding them or him to take security in the sum thereon indorsed, and, if the party refuses to find such security, to commit him to the next gaol, until he does find such security. Fitz. N. B. 80. Vide Bra. Off. pl. 39. F. N. B. 81. Bra. Peace pl. 9. Lamb. 101, 107. 1 Hawk. 129.

If no return is made to the writ of supplicavit, the party who sued it out may have a certiorari, directed to the person who ought to make a return, commanding him to certify the writ of supplicavit, and what has been done thereupon. Fitz. N. B. 81. 1 Hawk. 129. Lamb. 109.

When a writ of supplicavit has issued from the court of Chancery against any person, he may by himself, or some friend, come into the court of Chancery, and find sureties there, that he will not do any harm to him who hath sued out the writ, and thereupon he shall have a writ of superfideas, reciting the writ of supplicavit, and the security given, directed to the justice or justices of the peace, or to the sheriff, commanding that they surcease to arrest him, or compel him to find sureties, and if they have arrested him for that cause and no other, that they deliver him. Fitz. N. B. 81, 238.

2. Of granting surety of the peace by the court of King's Bench.

At the Common law the oath of the party was a sufficient ground for the court of King's Bench to grant the surety surety of the peace; but this cannot, since the statute made in the 21 year of the reign of King James the First, c. 8. be done, unless articles of the peace are exhibited in this court upon motion in open court. Fitz. N. B. 79, 80.

Where articles of the peace are exhibited in the court of King's Bench, and oath is made, that the party does not crave the security of the peace out of hatred or malice, but merely for the preservation of his life and person from danger, an attachment of the peace issues to the sheriff commanding him to take a bond for the appearance of the party at the return of the writ to put in bail to the articles in this court; and, if such bond is not given, to commit the party to the next gaol. Comb. 427. Ruffel's case. Fitz. N. B. 79. Where the party against whom articles of the peace are exhibited, comes into court to put in bail, the articles must be read to him. 6 Mod 132. The Queen v. Lane.

Robert Parnel having exhibited articles of the peace against Sir Thomas Allen, Bart. and three others, an attachment of the peace issued against them. Before bail was put in, Parnel, in a petition to the court recited some of the facts sworn to in the articles; and endeavoured to explain them. Hereupon the counsel for the defendants moved for a rule to review the articles, and some affidavits were read to contradict the facts therein charged. Upon reading the petition, and these affidavits, in which the fact were flatly contradicted by five or six persons, a rule was made to shew-cause, why the articles should not be reviewed, and that Parnel should attend upon the day for shewing cause. He did attend, and the court was, upon the whole, so satisfied of his having been guilty of perjury that he was immediately committed for wilful and corrupt perjury; and a rule was made, that all farther proceedings upon the articles should stay. The rule was pronounced in these terms, "and not to take the articles off the file, in order to give the defendants an opportunity, which could not otherwise have been done, of prosecuting Parnel for perjury." MS. Rep. Rex v. Sir Thomas Allen, Bart. and others, Hil. 32 Geo. 2. See Lord Vane's case, Stra. 1202.

Articles of the peace having been exhibited; by John Brown, against Hannah Bennett and three others, a rule was made, upon reading the affidavits of the defendants, to shew cause, why these articles should not be reviewed. In these affidavits it was sworn, that the defendants did not know any such person as Brown the articulant, and, besides other strong facts sworn to, it was suggested, that this was a contrivance of the defendant Bennett's husband to oppress her. No cause being shewn, the articles were ordered to be taken off the file. MS. Rep. Rex v. Bennett and others, East. 32 Geo. 2.

As to articles of the peace against persons living in the country. See Stra. 835. Comb. 427. 4 New Abr. 691.

It has not of late years been the practice of the court of King's Bench, to refuse the receiving of articles of the peace, where the articles contained in them is sufficient for craving the surety of the peace: But it seems, as if that court is now come to a resolution of putting a stop to this vexation of the subject; for in a very late case, where a motion was made by Borough, to exhibit articles of the peace against Wait, the court, it appearing that Wait lived at the Devinces, and that Borough had not endeavoured to obtain surety of the peace in the county, unanimously refused the motion: and Lord Mansfield, Chief-Justice, Apply to the magistrates of the county, and if surety of the peace is not granted you, come here again. MS. Rep. Borough's case, East. 32 Geo. 2.

When surety of the peace is granted by the court of King's Bench, if a superfedeas comes from the court of Chancery, to the justices of that court, their power is at an end; and the party as to them discharged. Bro. Peace, pl. 17. See qu.

3. Of granting surety of the peace, by a justice of the peace.

A justice of the peace may grant the surety of the peace, under the authority of the commission of the peace, by which he is empowered to cause to come before him all those, who to any one or more of our people, concerning their bodies or the firing of their houses have used threats, to find sufficient security for the peace, or their good behaviour, towards us and our people; and if they shall refuse to find such security, then them in our prisons, until they shall find such security, to cause to be safely kept. Lamb. 36.

Whenever oath is made before a justice of peace by any person, that he is actually under fear that another will burn his house, or do or procure to be done to him some corporal hurt, and that he does not crave the surety of the peace through malice, but for the safety of his life, the justice is bound to grant it. Lamb. 83. F. N. B. 79. 1 Hawk. 127. But if the security of the peace is desired against a peer, the safest way is to apply to the court of Chancery or King's Bench. 1 Hawk. 127. Lamb. 81.

If the person against whom it is demanded, be present, the justice of the peace may commit him immediately, unless he offers sureties; and a fortiori he may be commanded to find sureties, and be committed for not doing it. Bro. Mainp. pl. 39. 1 Hawk. 127. But if he is absent, a warrant for committing him cannot be granted till a warrant is issued commanding him to find sureties; and this warrant, which must be under seal, ought to shew the cause for which it is granted, and at whose suit. Lamb. 85. 1 Hawk. 128.

The justice of the peace, who grants this last mentioned warrant, may in this case make it special for bringing the party before himself only, for, as he has most knowledge of the matter, he is best qualified to do justice in it. 5 Co. 59. Foster's case. 1 Hawk. 128. But if the warrant be in general terms to carry the party before any justice of the peace, the officer, who executes it, has his election to carry him before what justice he pleases, and may carry him to gaol, by virtue of the same warrant, if he refuses to find sureties before such justice; for the warrant has these words in it, if he shall refuse to find surety, &c. Bro. False Impris. pl. 11. 1 Hawk. 128. 5 Co. 59.

If one, however, who apprehends that the surety of the peace will be demanded against him, finds sureties before any justice of the peace of the same county, either before or after a warrant is issued against him, he may have a superfedeas from such justice; and this shall prevent or discharge him from an arrest, under the warrant of any other justice, at the suit of the same party, for whose security he has found such securities. Lamb. 95, 96. 1 Hawk. 128.

The recognizance for keeping the peace, which a justice of the peace takes upon complaint below, is to be regulated, as to the number and sufficiency of the sureties, the largeness of the sum, and the time it is to continue in force, by the discretion of such justice. Lamb. 100. 1 Hawk. 129. It has been said that a recognizance taken by a justice of peace, to keep the peace as to A. B. for a year, or for life, or without expressing any certain time, which shall be intended to be for life, altho' no time or place is fixed for the party's appearance, or he is not bound to keep the peace as to all the King's liege people, is good. 1 Hawk. 129. Lamb. 100. But it seems to be the safest way, to bind the party to appear at the next sessions of the peace, and in the mean time to keep the peace as to the King, and all his liege people, and especially as to the party, who has demanded the surety of the peace. Lamb. 105. 1 Hawk. 129.

By the 3 H. 7. c. 1. it is enacted, "That every justice of the peace within this realm, that shall take any recognizance for keeping of the peace, shall certify, send, or bring the same recognizance at the next sessions of the peace, where he is or hath been justice, that the party so bound may be called." If one of the sureties of a man who is bound to keep the peace dies, he shall not be obliged to find a new surety; for the executors or administrators, of him who is dead are bound by the recognizance. Lamb. 113. Bro. Peace, pl. 1. 1 Hawk. 129.

4. Of forfeiting a recognizance for keeping the peace, and how such recognizance may be discharged.

By the 3 H. 7. c. 1. it is enacted, "That if the party, who is called at a sessions of the peace, upon a recognizance for keeping the peace, makes default, his default shall be then and there recorded, and the same recognizance, with the record of the default, be sent and certified into the chancery, or before the King in his Bench, or into the King's Exchequer."

He who is bound to keep the peace, and to appear at the sessions, must appear there, and record his appearance, otherwise his recognizance is forfeited. And altho' the party, who craved the surety of the peace, comes not to pray that it may be continued, the justices may in their discretion order it to be continued till another sessions. Bro. Peace, pl. 17. Lamb. 109.

But if an excuse, which is judged by the court to be a reasonable one, is given for the non-appearance of a party, it seems that the court is not bound peremptorily to record his default, but may discharge the recognizance, or respite it till the next sessions. 1 Hawk. 130. A recognizance for keeping the peace may be forfeited by any actual violence to the person of another, whether it be done by the party bound, or others by his procurement. Lamb. 115, 127. Bro. Peace pl. 2. 1 Hawk. 130. In support of a rule to stay proceedings in a scire facias, upon a recognizance for keeping the peace, it was said, that the assault, which had been made was not upon him at whose request the surety of the peace was granted, but upon another person. It was held that this makes no difference; and the rule was discharged. MS. Rep. Rex. v. Stanly and his bail, Trin. 27 Geo. 2. But a recognizance for keeping the peace, is not forfeited, where an officer, having a warrant against one who will not suffer himself to be arrested, beats or wounds him in the attempt to take him. Lamb. 128. 1 Hawk. 130.

So it is not forfeited, if a parent in a reasonable manner chastises his child; a master his servant, being actually in his service at the time; a schoolmaster his scholar; a gaoler his prisoner; a husband his wife. 1 Sid. 176, 177. Lamb. 127, 128. Heil. 149, 150. 1 Hawk. 130. F. N. B. 80.

And, without enumerating all the actual assaults, which a man may make upon the person of another, and not forfeit his recognizance for keeping the peace, it may be laid down as a principle, that such a recognizance is not forfeited by any assault which could have been justified in an action, or upon an indictment, for the assault. 4 New Abr. 694.

It has been held that a recognizance for the keeping the peace may be forfeited by any treason against the person of the King, or by any unlawful assembly in terrorum populi. Lamb. 115. 1 Hawk. 130. Words which tend directly to a breach of the peace, as challenging a man to fight, or threatening to beat one who is present, amount to a forfeiture of such recognizance. Lamb. 115. 1 Hawk. 130. Cro. Eliz. 86. A recognizance is likewise forfeited by threatening to beat a person who is absent, if the party, who has so threatened, does afterward lie in wait to beat him. Lamb. 115. But it is not forfeited by words of heat or choler, as the calling a man knave, liar, or rascal: For, although such words may provoke a hasty man to break the peace, they do not directly challenge him to do it; nor does it appear, that the speaker intended to carry his resentment any farther. Cro. Car. 198. Rex. v. Heyward, and his bail. 1 Hawk. 130. Nay, it has been held, that a recognizance for being of good behaviour shall not be forfeited for such words; and a fortiori one for keeping the peace shall not. Cro. Eliz. 86. King's case. Mo. 249. 1 Hawk. 130.

Such recognizance shall not be forfeited by a trespass on the lands or goods of another, unless it is with force. Cro. Jac. 598. 1 Hawk. 193. A man shall not forfeit a recognizance for keeping the peace, who does a hurt to another in playing at cudgels, or such like sport, by consent; for these sports, which tend to promote activity and courage, are lawful. Dalt. 284. 1 Hawk. 131. But he who wounds another in fighting with naked swords, forfeits his recognizance, because no consent, nor even the command of the King can make so dangerous a diversion lawful. Bro. Cor. 229. 1 Hawk. 131. If a soldier hurts another soldier, by discharging his gun in exercising without sufficient caution, it is no forfeiture of a recognizance for keeping the peace: For altho' he would be liable in an action for the damage occasioned by his negligence, this, it not being a wilful breach of the peace, is not within the purport of the recognizance. 1 Hawk. 131. Job. 134. 2 Roll. Abr. 548.

A court of quarter-sessions cannot in any case proceed against the parties, for a forfeiture of a recognizance for keeping the peace; but the recognizance must be sent into some of the King's courts in Westminster Hall. 1 Hawk. 130. All proceedings upon a forfeited recognizance must be by scire facias, and not by indictment; because where a scire facias is brought, the parties have an opportunity of pleading any matter in their discharge. 1 Roll. Abr. 900. Perrow's case. Cro. Jac. 598. 1 Hawk. 130.

The demise of the King is a discharge of a recognizance for keeping the peace; for the condition being servare pacem nostram, his successor cannot take advantage of a breach thereof. Bro. Peace, pl. 15. 1 Hawk. 129. sed qu.

After such a recognizance is forfeited, the King may pardon the forfeiture: But he cannot release the condition before it is broken; because the party, at whose complaint it was taken, has an interest therein. Bro. Recogn. pl. 22. Bro. Chart. de Pard. pl. 24.

It is no time for the continuance of a recognizance for keeping the peace, is therein mentioned, it is perhaps in the power of the court, in which it was taken, or to whom it has been certified, to discharge it at their discretion. 4 New Abr. 695.

The usual practice of a court of quarter-sessions is to continue a recognizance for keeping the peace from sessions to sessions, until the court thinks proper to discharge it. It is the constant course of the court of King's Bench, to take a recognizance for twelve months, and, if no indictment is within that time preferred against the party bound to keep the peace, it may at the expiration thereof be discharged. 12 Mod. 251. Anon. Str. 835. This seems also to be the practice of the court of Chancery; for, upon a motion to discharge a writ of supplicavit, it was refused; and by my Lord Macclesfield, Chancellor: This application is too early; let the party stay till the year is out, and then have himself quietly all that time. 2 Will. 202. Clavering's case. See farther, Sav. 53. 1 Lev. 235. 1 Hawk. 129. *Bro. Surgeon, (Chirurgus) May be deduced from the Fr. Chirurgus, signifying him that dealeth in the mechanical part of physick, and the outward cures performed with the hand; and therefore is compounded of the two Greek words Xip, manus "Egyon, opus, and for this cause surgeons are not allowed to administer any inward medicine. By the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 42. the barbers and surgeons of London are incorporated and made one company; and shall be chosen yearly four masters for the said company, of which two must be expert in surgery, and the other two in barbery, who shall have power to punish and correct all defaults; and the company and their successors are to have the oversight and correction as well of freemen as foreigners, for such offences as they shall commit against the good order of barbery and surgery: They shall be exempted from bearing of arms, serving on juries, and all manner of parish offices, &c. but are to pay scot and lot, and other charges as formerly; and the said company shall have free liberty to take four persons condemned for felony, for anatomies yearly. No barber in London, or within one mile thereof shall practise surgery, letting of blood, or any other thing relating thereto, except drawing of teeth; nor shall any person who practises surgery within those limits, exercise the craft of a barber: Though any man not being a barber or surgeon, may retain in his house as a servant, a barber or surgeon, who may exercise his art in his master's house, or elsewhere, &c. All persons practising surgery in London, shall have an open sign in the street where they dwell, that people may know where to resort to them when wanted: And every person offending in any of the articles contained in this statute shall forfeit 5 l. a month, one moiety to the the King, and the other to him who will sue for the same, &c. By the stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 15. the surgeons of London, and the barbers of London are made two separate and distinct corporations. See Physicians.

Surmise, Is something offered to a court to move it to grant a prohibition, Auditu Querela, or other writ grantable thereon; and what shall be allowed to be a good surmise, or not so, see 2 Cro. 219, 501, 669. Vide suggestion.

Surplusage, (Fr. Surplus, Lat. Surplusagium, Corollarium) Is a superfluity or addition more than needful, which sometimes is the cause that a writ abates; but in pleading many times it is absolutely void, and the residue of the plea shall stand good. Broke. Plowd. 63. And on a writ of inquiry or damages in waste, in which the sheriff was commanded to go to the place wasted, and there to inquire of the waste done and damages, who returned the inquisition, without mentioning that he went to the place wasted; this was held to be surplusage in the writ that would not hurt, because by the plea in the action the waste was acknowledged, so that he need not go to the place wasted to view it. Poph. 24. A disstringas was returnable Tres Trin. Nisi prius venerit Matthæus Hale Mil. Capital. Baro, &c. on such a day ejusdem Mensis Junii; whereas the month of June was not mentioned before; and this was moved in arrest of judgment as a discontinuance; but adjudged that the word ejusdem shall be rejected as surplusage and void, and then the word Junii shall be intended June next; as a covenant to pay money at Michaelmas, shall be intended Michaelmas next ensuing. Hard. 330.

In a declaration for debt, upon demurrer, it was objected against the declaration, for that the plaintiff averred the defendant had not paid præd. sexaginta Libras, &c. when the word sexaginta was not before-mentioned: And it was resolved that it shall be surplusage, when 'tis that the defendant had not paid præd. Libras, which must be the pounds for which the plaintiff had declared. 1 Lutw. 445. Cro. Eliz. 647. 3 Nels. Abr. 262. A plaintiff being right named through all the proceedings, but in the last place, where it was said that a Capias Utlagatum was prosecuted against prædict Johanne Fowler, and his true name was George: It was ruled that the word Johannes shall be surplusage and be rejected; and then the plea will be that a Capias Utlagatum was prosecuted against prædict Fowler. 2 Lutw. 919. 1 Lev. 428. If a jury find the substance of the issue before them to be tried, other superfluous matter is but surplusage. 6 Rep. 46. And where a verdict or judgment is complete, if there be any other matter repugnant or uncertain, &c. it shall be rejected as surplus. 3 Nels. 262. 2 Hawk. P. C. 441.

Surplusage in an issue helped after verdict, where plaintiff to a plea of plene administravit replied that defendant had sufficient to satisfy the damages aforesaid, and it should have been the debt and damages. The court rejected damages as surplusage, and then it stood sufficient to satisfy, &c. which was held good, Wilson, par. 1. fo. 238. See Pleading.

Surplusage of Accounts, Signifies a greater disbursement than the charge of the accountant amounts unto. In another sense, surplusage is the remainder or overplus of money left. Litt. Dist.

Surplusage of Intestates Effects. By the stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 10. the surplusage of intestates estates (29 Car. 2. c. 3. s. 25.) shall, after the expiration of one full year from the death of the intestate, be distributed, one third to the widow, and the residue in equal proportions to his children, or, if dead, to their representatives; that is, their lineal descendants: If there are no children, or legal representatives, then a moiety to the widow, a moiety to the next of kindred in an equal degree, and their representatives: If no widow, the whole shall go to the children: If neither widow nor children, the whole shall be distributed among the next of kin in equal degree, and their representatives: But no representatives are admitted among collaterals, further than the children of the intestate, brothers and sisters. Black. Com. 2 V. 515. See Succession, the several heads.

Surrebutter, A second Rebutter; or more properly it is the replication or answer of the plaintiff to the defendant's Rebutter. See Rebutter.

Surrejoinder, Is a second defence of the plaintiff's declaration in a cause, and answers the rejoinder of the defendant. West. Symb. par. 2. As a rejoinder is the defendant's answer to the replication of the plaintiff; so a surrejoinder is the plaintiff's answer to the defendant's rejoinder. Wood's Inst. 586. Where a plaintiff in his surrejoinder is to conclude to the country, and not with an averment. See Raym. 94. After rejoinder and surrejoinder, and rebutter, &c. there may be a demurrer. Pract. Attorn. Edit. 1. p. 86.

Surrender, (Sarsum Redditio) Is a deed or instrument testifying that the particular tenant for life or years, of lands and tenements, doth yield up his estate to him that hath the immediate estate in remainder or reversion, that he may have the present possession thereof; and wherein the estate for life or years may merge or drown by the mutual agreement of the parties. Co. Litt. 337. And of surrenders there are three kinds; a surrender properly taken at common law; a surrender of copyhold or customary estates; and a surrender improperly taken, as of a deed, a patent, rent newly created, &c. The surrender at common law is the usual surrender, and is of two sorts, viz. A surrender in deed, or by express words in writing; where the words of the lessee to the lessor prove a sufficient assent to give him his estate back again: And a surrender in law being that which is wrought by operation of law, and not actual; as if a lessee for life or years, take a new lease of the same land during the term; this will be a surrender in law of the first lease. 1 Inst. 338. 5 Rep. 11. Perk. 601. And in some cases a surrender in law is of greater force than a surrender in deed; for if a man makes a lease for years to begin at a day to come, this future interest cannot be surrendered by deed, because there is no reversion wherein it may drown; but if the lessee before the day, take a new lease of the same land, it is a good surrender in law of the former lease: And this surrender in law, by taking a new lease, holds good, though the second lease is for a less term than the first; and 'tis said, though the second lease is a voidable lease, &c. 5 Rep. 11. 6 Rep. 69. 10 Rep. 67. 1 Inst. 218. Cro. Eliz. 873.

If lessee for life do accept of a Lease for years, this is a surrender in law of his lease for life; if it should be otherwise the lease for years would be made to no purpose, and both the leases cannot stand together in one person. 2 Lill. Abr. 544. Lessee for twenty-one years takes a lease of the same lands for forty years to commence after the death of A. B. it is not any present surrender of the first term; but if A. B. dies within the term it is. 4 Leon. 83. A lessee for years took a second lease to commence at Michaelmas next; adjudged this was an immediate surrender in law of the first, and that the lessor might enter and take the profits from the time of the acceptance of the second lease, until Michaelmas following. Cro. Eliz. 605. If the lessor make, and lessee accept a new lease, and it is upon condition; this shall be a surrender in law: And if an assignee of tenant for years take a new lease, &c. the first lease will be by law surrendered. 1 Inst. 218, 338. If a woman lessee for years marries, and afterwards she takes a new lease for life without her husband, this is a surrender and extinguishment of the term; but if the husband disagree, then 'tis revived: Though if the new lease had been made to the husband and wife, then by acceptance thereof, the first lease had been gone. Hutt. 7. A lessor takes the lessee to wife, then the term is not drowned or surrendered; but he is possessed of the term in her right, during the coverture. Wood's Inst. 285. A surrender may be of any thing grantable, either absolute or conditional; and may be made to an use, being a conveyance tied and charged with the limitation of a use: But it may not be of an estate in fee; nor of rights and titles only to other estates for life or years; or for part of such an estate; nor may one term regularly surrender to another term; nor can a tenant at will surrender any more than he can grant. Perk. 615. Noy's Max. 773. Cro. Eliz. 688. 1 Leon. 303. Where things will not pass by surrender, the deed may enure to other purposes, and take effect by way of grant, having sufficient words. Perk. 624, 588. And a surrender may be made by these words: Have surrendered, granted, yielded up, and confirmed, &c.

To the making of a good surrender in deed of lands the following things are requisite; the surrenderor is to be a person able to grant and make a surrender, and the surrenderer a person able to receive and take it; the surrenderor must have an estate in possession of the thing surrendered, and not a future right; and the surrender is to be made to him that hath the next estate in remainder or reversion, without any estate coming between; the surrenderer must have a higher or greater estate in his own right, and not in the right of his wife, &c. in the thing surrendered, than the surrenderor hath, so that the estate of the surrenderor may be drowned therein; (for if lessee for life surrender to him in remainder for years, &c. it is a void surrender) there is to be a privy of estate between the surrenderor and surrenderer; and the surrenderer must be sole seized of his estate in remainder or reversion, and not in jointenancy; and the surrenderer agree to the surrender, &c. 1 Inst. 338. Perk. 584. 588. 2 Roll. Abr. 494. Noy's Max. 73.

A man who hath a fee-simple estate cannot surrender it, because it cannot be drowned in another estate. 12 H. 4. 21. And if a lease be made for life or years to A. the remainder for life to B. remainder in fee-tail to C. and the first tenant surrenders to C. this will not take effect as a surrender, by reason of the intervening estate. Dyer 112. The lessee for life or years may surrender to him that is next in remainder in fee-simple or fee-tail: And if lessee for life surrenders his estate to one in remainder, that is tenant for his own life; it is a good surrender, for a man's estate for his own life in judgment of law, is greater than that for another's. And where an estate is surrendered for life, there needs no livery and seisin, as in a grant. 1 Inst. 338. Dyer 251, 280.

Yet in some cases an estate, &c. may have continuance, though it be surrendered; as where lessee for life makes a lease for years, and after doth surrender, the term for years doth continue; and so of a rent charge granted by such lessee, &c. Bro. 47. 1 Inst. 338. If the lessee for years rendering rent, surrenders his estate to the lessor, hereby the rent is extinct: But if the rent were granted away before the surrender, it would be otherwise. 8 Rep. 145. Bro. Surrend. 42. Tenant for life is disseised, or for years ousted, and before entry, or possession gained, he surrenders to him in reversion; this surrender is void: And yet if lessee for years, after his term is begun, before he enters, and when no-body doth keep from him the profits, surrenders, it will be good. Perk. Sect. 600.

If there be lessee for years, the remainder for life, remainder in fee; the lessee for years may surrender to the lessee during life, and so may he to him in the remainder in fee: But if there is tenant for life, the remainder for life, and such remainder in fee; here the second tenant for life cannot surrender to him in remainder. Ibid. 605. Sed qu. See Supra, and infra. In case of tenant for life, the remainder for life, reversion in fee; it was a question formerly, whether the remainder man for life, by and with the consent of the tenant for life, could surrender to him in reversion without deed, only by coming on the land and saying, that he did surrender to him in reversion; the court were divided; but two judges held, that if tenant for life and he in remainder for life, surrendered to the reversioner, it should pass as several surrenders, viz. First of him in remainder to the tenant for life, and then by the tenant for life to him in reversion. Popb. 137. If tenant for life grant his estate to him in reversion, this is a surrender; and it must be pleaded according to the operation it hath in law, or it will not be good. 4 Mod. 151. Though if lessees for life or years, grant their estates to him in remainder or reversion and a stranger; it shall enure as a surrender of the one half to him in reversion, and as a grant of the other moiety to the stranger. 1 Inst. 335. And by statute, no estates of freehold, or of terms for years, shall be granted or surrendered but by deed in writing, signed by the parties, or unless by operation in law, &c. 29 Car. 2. c. 2. See Leases, and 4 Geo. 2. Surrenders of Copyhold Estates, see Copyhold. A surrender of a prebendary's lease upon condition, that if the then prebendary did not within a week after grant a new lease for three lives; the surrender shall be void: Held to be a good surrender within the statute. 2 Strangers

1201. See 20 Vin. Abr. 119—146. And Blak. Com. 2 V. 326.

Surrender of a Bankrupt. The bankrupt, at the third meeting of the commissioners, at farthest, which must be on the 42d day after the advertisement in the Gazette, upon notice personally served upon him, or left at his usual place of abode, must surrender himself personally to the commissioners, and must thenceforth in all respects conform to the directions of the statutes of bankruptcy; or, in default thereof, shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy, and shall suffer death, and his goods and estate shall be distributed among his creditors. See Blak. Com. 2 V. 481. and Stat. 5 Geo. 2. c. 30.

Surrender of Copyholds. It is the yielding up of the estate by the tenant into the hands of the lord, for such purposes as in the surrender are expressed. This method of conveyance is so essential to the nature of a copyhold estate, that it cannot possibly be transferred by any other assurance. See Blak. Com. 2 V. 365, &c. 367, 8. — N. B. The law will in some particular cases supply the want of a surrender. See Copyhold.

Surrender of Letters Patent, and Offices. A surrender may be made of letters patent to the king, to the end he may grant the estate to whom he pleases, &c. and a second patent for years, to the same person, for the same thing is a surrender in law of the first patent. 10 R. p. 66. Letters patent for years were delivered into Chancery to be cancelled, and new letters patent made for years; but the first were not cancelled: It was held that the second were good, because they were a surrender in law of the first, and the not cancelling was the fault of the Chancery, which ought to have done it. 10 Rep. 66, 67. 2 Lill. Abr. 545. If an officer for life accepts of another grant of the same office, it is in law a surrender of the first grant: But if such an officer takes another grant of the same office to himself and another, it may be otherwise. 1 Ventr. 297. 3 Cro. 198. See Dyer 167, 198. Godb. 415.

Surrogate, (Surrogatus) Is one that is substituted or appointed in the room of another; as the bishop or chancellor's surrogate, &c.

Surfise, (Superfisa) A word specially used in the castle of Dover for penalties and forfeitures laid upon those that pay not the duties or rent of Castle-ward, at their days limited. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 40. It probably comes from the Fr. Surfist, i. e. forbore or neglected. Brit. 52. And Bracton hath it so in a general signification. Bract. lib. 5.

Survey, Is to measure, lay out, or particularly describe a manor, or estate in lands; and to ascertain not only the bounds and royalties thereof, but the tenure of the respective tenants, the rent and value of the same, &c. In this last signification, which is according to our law; it is also understood to be a court; for on the falling of an estate to a new lord, consisting of manors, where there are tenants by lease, and copyholders, a survey of survey is generally held; and sometimes at other times, to apprise the lord of the present terms and interests of the tenants, and as a direction on making further grants, as well as in order to improvements, &c. See Comp. Court-Keep.

A survey of the manor of D. in the county of G. belonging to the honourable W. B. esq; Taken this — day of, &c. in the year, &c.

A. B. of, &c. holds by lease for his life, and the lives of T. B. and C. B. his sons, one messuage, and twenty acres of land, meadow and pasture, situate in, &c. within the said manor, under the yearly rent of 20 s. — 20 l.
per Ann.

C. D. holds by copy of court-roll for his own life and the lives of M. his wife and C. his son (all of them living) one messuage or tenement with the appurtenances within the said manor, called, &c. quit rent 30 s. heriot 3 l. — 30 l.
per Ann.

E. F. holds by copy for the lives of K. his wife and T. his son one tenement within the said manor, rent 10 s. heriot;
&c. — 15 l. per ann.

G. H. holds for the term of his own life, one cottage with the appurtenances, quit-rent 5 s. — 10 l. per ann.

J. K. holds for her widowhood, a piece of ground called,
&c.

L. M. holds, &c.
 Examined by G. J. gent.
 Steward of the said manor.

Surbeyor, (Compounded of two Fr. words, Sur. i. e. Super & Voir, Cohere) Signifies one that has the overseeing or care of some great person's lands or works: And there was a court of surveyors erected by 33 H. 8. c. 39.

Surbeyor of the King's Exchange, An ancient officer belonging to the mint and coinage, mentioned in the statute 9 H. 5. c. 4.

Surbeyor General of the King's Manors and Lands, We read of in Crompt. Jurisd. 106.

Surbeyors of the Highways. Every parish is bound of common right to keep the high roads that go through it, in good and sufficient repair; unless by reason of the tenure of lands, or otherwise, this care is assigned to some particular private person. As it was not (formerly) incumbent on any particular officer to call the parish together, and set them upon this work; therefore, by Stat. 2 & 3 Ph. & M. c. 8. Surveyors of the highways were ordered to be chosen in every parish. According to that statute they were originally appointed by the constable and churchwardens, but afterwards by Stat. 3 W. & M. c. 12. They were constituted by two neighbouring justices out of such substantial inhabitants as had either 10*l.* per ann. of their own, or rented 30*l.* a year, or were worth 100*l.* — Now by the late highway act (an abstract of which see under highway) a list of ten persons, so qualified, is to be made out by the parish officers and principal inhabitants, from whence the justices in sessions are to take one or more. — See Highways, & Stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 42.

Surbeyor of the Navy, An officer appointed over all stores; and to survey hulls and masts of ships, &c. Chamberl.

Surbeyor of the King's Ordnance, This officer surveys the ordnance and provisions of war, allows bills of debt, and keeps the checks on labourers works, &c.

Surbeyors of the Wards and Liveries, Taken away with the court of wards and liveries. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

Survivor, (From the Fr. Survivre, and Lat. Supervivere) Is the longer liver of two jointenants, or of any two persons joined in the right of a thing: He that remaineth alive, after others be dead, &c. Brake 33. Where there are jointenants in any thing, when one dies, (if but two only) the whole goes to his survivor; but if there be more than two, then the part of him who is dead goes among all the survivors. 2 Lill. Abr. 546. Jointenants take by survivorship, unless they do any act whereby the jointure is severed; for then there can be no survivorship. Wood's Inst. 147. See Jointenant and Black. Com. 2 V. 183, 399.

Susana Terra, Is said to be land worn out with ploughing. Thorn.

Susceptor, (Lat.) An undertaker or godfather, also a receiver of tribute in the Roman provinces. Lit. Dist.

Suspense, (Suspensio) Is a temporal stop, or hanging up, as it were, of a man's right, for a time; and in legal understanding, is taken to be where a rent, or other profit out of lands, by reason of the unity or possession of the rent, &c. and the land out of which it issues, is not in effect for a certain time, Et tunc dormiunt, but may be revived or awaked: And it differs from extinguishment, which is when it dies or is gone for ever. Co. Lit. 213. A suspension of rent is, when either the rent or land are to be conveyed, not absolutely and finally, but for a time, after which the rent will be revived again. Faugh. 109. A rent may be suspended by unity for a time; and if a lessor does any thing which amounts to an entry on the land, though he presently depart, yet the possession is in him sufficient to suspend the rent, until the lessee do some act which amounts to a re-entry. Faugh. 39. 1 Leon. 110. As rent is not issuing out of a common, the lessor's inclosing the common cannot suspend his rent. Cro. Jac. 679. If part of a condition is suspended, the whole condition, as well for payment of the rent, as doing a collateral act, is suspended. 4 Rep. 52. And a thing or action personal once suspended, is for ever suspended, &c. Cro. Car. 373. See Extinguishment.

Suspension, A censure whereby ecclesiastical persons are forbidden to exercise their office, or take the profits of their benefices: or where they are prohibited for a certain time in both of them in the whole or in part: Hence is suspensio ab officio, or suspensio à beneficio, and ab officio & beneficio. Wood's Inst. 510. There is likewise a suspension which relates to the laity, i. e. suspensio ab ingressu & clericiæ; or from the hearing of divine service, &c. In which case it is used, as in the Canon law, pro minore excommunicatione. Stat. 24 Hen. 8. cap. 12.

Suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act. This is a measure that hath been thought necessary — But, (as observed by Blackstone 1 V. 136.) The happiness of our constitution is, that it is not left to the executive power to determine when the danger of the state is so great, as to render this measure expedient. For the parliament only, or legislative power, can authorize the crown, by suspending the habeas corpus act for a short and limited time, to imprison suspected persons without giving any reason for so doing. This ought to be done; only in cases of great emergency.

See what the great Montesquieu saith, alluding to the habeas corpus act, and a temporary suspension of it. "If the legislature leaves the executive power in possession of a right to imprison those subjects who can give security for their good behaviour, there is an end of liberty; unless they are taken up in order to answer without delay to a capital crime; in this case they are really free, being subject only to the power of the law."

But should the legislature think itself in danger by some secret conspiracy against the state, or by a correspondence with a foreign enemy; it might authorize the executive power, for a short and limited time, to imprison suspected persons, who in that case would lose their liberty only for a while, to preserve it for ever." L. 11. c. 6: 1 V. 210, 211. 4*to Ed. a Londres.*

In L. 12. c. 19. fo. 273. The author says, "I acknowledge that the practice of the freest nation that ever existed, induces me to think that there are cases in which a veil should be drawn for a while over liberty, as it was customary to veil the statues of the gods."

Suf. per Coll. On the trial of criminals, the usage now is for the judge to sign the calendar, or list of all the prisoner's names, with their separate judgments in the margin, which is left with the sheriff. As for a capital felony, it is written opposite to the prisoner's name, "Hanged by the neck;" formerly in the days of Latin, and abbreviation, "Suf. per coll." for "suspendatur per collum." N. B. This is at the assizes. Black. Com. 4 V. 396.

Suspicion, A person may be taken up on suspicion, where a felony is done, &c. but those who are imprisoned for a light suspicion of larceny or robbery, are bailable by statute 2 Hawk. P. C. 101. And the party being a private person, that takes up one on suspicion of felony, must do it of his own suspicion, not upon that of another; and he must have reasonable cause of it, &c. Hale's Hist. P. C. 78.

Suspiral, (From the Lat. Suspirare, i. e. ducere Suspiria) Is used for a spring of water, passing under ground towards a conduit or cistern. 35 H. 8. cap. 10.

Sussex, Its shire court, where to be held. 19 H. 7. cap. 24.

Suthdure, (Sax.) i. e. The south door of a church; it was the place where canonical purgation was performed, that is, where the fact charged upon a person could not be proved by sufficient evidence, and the party accused came to the south door of the church, and there in the presence of the people made oath, that he was innocent: And plaints, &c. were heard and determined at the suthdure; for which reason large porches were anciently built at the south doors of churches. Garraf. Drob. de Reparation. Ecclesiæ Cantuar.

Swan, (Cygnus) Is a noble bird of game; and a person may prescribe to have game of swans within his manor, as well as a warren, or park, 7 Rep. 17, 18. A swan is a bird royal; and all white swans not marked, which have gained their natural liberty, and are swimming in an open and common river, may be seized to the use of the the king, by his prerogative: But a subject may have a property in white swans not marked; as any man may have such swans in his private waters, and the property of them belongs to him, and not to the King; and if they escape out of his private waters, into an open and common river, he may retake them; though it is otherwise if they have gained their natural liberty, and swim in open rivers without such pursuit. Game Law, par. 2. p. 152. Stealing swans marked and pinioned, or unmarked, if kept in a mote, pond, or private river, and reduced to tameness, is felony. II. P. C. 68. And he that steals the eggs of swans out of their nests, shall be imprisoned a year and a day, and be fined at the King's pleasure. 11 Hen. 7. c. 17. No fowl can be a stray, but a swan. 4 Inst. 280. See Black. Com. 4 V. 235.

Swanherd. The King's swanherd, magister deductus cygnorum. Pat. 16 R. 2. See King's Swanherd.

Swan-mark. No person may have a swan-mark, except he have lands of the yearly value of five marks, and unless it be by grant of the King, or his officers lawfully authorised, or by prescription. Stat. 22. E. 4. c. 6. See Game.

Swainmote, or Swainmote. (swainmote, from the Sax. swang, i. e. a country swain, and gemote, i. e. convencus) signifies a court touching matters of the forest, held by the charter of the forest thrice in the year, before the verderors as judges. Crompt. Jurisd. 108. 3 Hen. 8. c. 18. The swainmote is a court unto which all the freeholders in the forest do owe suit and service; and all the officers of the forest are to appear at every swainmote, also out of every town and village in the forest four men and a reeve; or on default, shall be amerced and distrained. Game Law, par. 2. 19, 20. A court of swainmote is incident to a forest, as the court of pie-powder to a fair, &c. Chart. Forest. Hen. 3. See Forest.

Swarf-Money Is mentioned among customs and services: And this swarf-money is one penny half-penny, paid before the rising of the sun; the party must go three times about the cross, and say the swarf-money, and then take witness and lay it in the hole; and he is to look well that his witness do not deceive him; for if it be not so paid, he shall pay a great forfeiture, viz. xxx s. and a white bull. This account was found in an old MS. containing the rents due to the Catebys in Lodbroke, and other places in Warwickshire. See Wartb Money.

Swath. (Sax. swatba) A swathe, or as in Kent a sweth, and in some parts a sworth, is a strait row of cut grass or corn, as it lies after the scythe at the first mowing of it. Paroch. Antiq. 399.

Swearing (Imprecatio) Is an offence against God and religion, and a sin of all others the most extravagant and unaccountable, as having no benefit or advantage attending it. There are several good laws and statutes for punishing this crime: The 21 Jas. 1. c. 20. enacts, That if any person shall profanely swear or curse in the presence of a justice of peace, or the same shall be proved before a justice, he shall forfeit 1 s. for every offence, to the use of the poor, to be levied by distress; and for want of a distress, the offender to be set in the stocks, &c. By the stat. 19 Geo. 2. c. 21. If any person shall profanely curse or swear, and be convicted by the oath of any one witness before any justice of peace, &c. he shall forfeit as follows, viz. Every day-labourer, common soldier, common sailor, and common seaman 1 s. Every other person under the degree of a gentleman 2 s. Every person of or above the degree of a gentleman 5 s. a second offence double, and every other offence treble. If the offence be committed in the hearing of a magistrate, he may convict without further proof. If the offence be committed in the hearing of a constable, if the offender be unknown to him, he shall secure him and carry him before a justice of peace; but if the offender be known to the constable, he shall make information against him before a justice of peace.

On information a justice is to order the offender to appear, and if on conviction he do not pay or give security for the penalty, he shall be sent to the house of correction for ten days; or being a common soldier or sailor, be set in the stocks. On default of duty, justices to forfeit 5 l. and constables 40 s. All convictions are to be written on parchment, and returned to the next sessions. Penalties for profane cursing to go to the poor of the parish, and offender to pay all charges of conviction, or be committed to the house of correction for six days extraordinary. All prosecutions to be within eight days. This act to be read in all churches four times a year, under the penalty of 5 l. The justice's clerk may take for the information, summons and conviction 1 s. and no more. Mod. Just. 432. A conviction on the stat. 6 & 7 W. 3. c. 11. against profane swearing, and setting forth that the defendant was not a servant, labourer, &c. and the oaths, that the court might judge of the nature of them, for these reasons the same was quashed; though the counsel for the plaintiff insisted that the information was good; for if the defendant was a servant, &c. he ought to have given it in evidence at the trial. Mish. 8. Geo. 1. Mod. Cas. in L. & E. 58, 59. See Black. Com. 4 V. 59.

Swearing the Peace. If any man hath just cause to fear that another will burn his house, or do him a corporal injury, by killing, imprisoning or beating him; or that he will procure others so to do; he may demand sureties of the peace against such person: And every justice of the peace is bound to grant it, if he who demands it will make oath, that he is actually under fear of death or bodily harm, and will shew that he has just cause to be so, by reason of the other's menaces, attempts, or having lain in wait for him; and will also farther swear, that he does not require such surety out of malice or for mere vexation. 1 Hawk. P. C. 127. This is called swearing the peace against another: and, if the party does not find such sureties, as the justice in his discretion shall require, he may be immediately committed till he does. Ibid. 128. Black. Com. 4 V. 252. See Surety of the Peace.

Swearpage. Is the crop of hay got in a meadow, called also the swape in some parts of England. Co. Lit. fol. 4.

Sweets. Made in Great Britain for sale are liable to a duty of excise, &c. See Excise.

Swainmote, Court of. The court of swainmote is one of the forest courts, and is to be holden before the verderors as judges, by the steward of the swainmote thrice in every year, the swains and freeholders within the forest composing the jury. The principal jurisdiction of this court is, first, to enquire into the oppressions and grievances committed by the officers of the forest; "de suis per-one ratione forestariorum, et aliorum ministrorum so-ressa; et de eorum oppressiombus populo regis illatis." And secondly, to receive and try presentments certified from the court of attachments against offenders in vert and venison. Stat. 34. Ed. 1. c. 1. And this court may not only enquire, but convict also, which conviction shall be certified to the court of justice-seat under the seals of the jury; for this court cannot proceed to judgment. 4 Inst. 289. Black. Com. 3. V. 72. See Swainmote.

Swine or Hogs. Shall not go unringed in woods, 35 Hen. 8. c. 17. s. 17.

Forfeiture for keeping swine in London, &c. 2 W. & M. sess. 2. c. 8. sess. 20. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 37. sess. 4. See Cattle.

Swoling of Land. (Solinga vel Swolinga Terra, in Sax. Sulung, from Sul) aratrum, (as to this day in the west country a plough is called a Sul) is as much as one plough can till in a year: A hide of land; though some writers say it is an uncertain quantity. — Terram Trium Aratrorum, quum Cantiani Anglice dicunt three Swolings. Chart. Eccles. Cantuar.

Sword Hilts. Silver sword hilts may be exported. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 28.

Sworn Brothers. (Frates Jurati) Persons who by mutual oath, covenanted to share each others fortune: And formerly in any notable expedition, to invade and conquer an enemy's country, it was the custom for the more eminent soldiers to ingage themselves by reciprocal oaths to share the reward of their service: so in the expedition of William duke of Normandy into England, Robert de Oily, and Roger de Ivery, were sworn brothers and copartners in the estate, which the conqueror allotted them. — Robertus de Oileio & Rogerus de Iverio Frates jurati, & per fidem & sacramentum confederati venerunt ad conquestum Angliæ. Paroch. antiq. 57. This practice gave occasion to our proverb of sworn brothers or Brethren in Iniquity; because of their dividing plunder and spoil.

Sylva Cædun, Wood under twenty years growth: coppice-wood. See the statute 45 E. 3. cap. 3. It is otherwise called in law-french subbois. 2 Inst. fol. 642. See Tæbes.

Symbolum, Is a symbol, or sign in the sacrament; and the creed of the apostles is often called by this name by our historians.

Syncope, A Word used in several ecclesiastical council and synods, signifying to cut short or pronounce things so as not to be understood. Synod. Wigorn. c. 10.

Syndicus, An advocate or patron; a burges or recorder of a town, &c. Mat. Paris. Anno 1245.

Syngraph, (syngraphus) A deed, bond or Writing, under the hand and seal of all the parties; and it was the custom for both the debtor and creditor in writings obligatory to write their names and the sum borrowed on a piece of paper, with the words syngraphus in large letters in the middle; which being cut through, one part of the paper was delivered to each party, for their better security, &c. See Chirograph. and Black. Com. 2 V. 296.

Synod, (synodus) A meeting or assembly of ecclesiastical persons concerning religion; being the same thing in greek, as convocation in latin: And of synods there are four kinds, 1st, A general or universal synod or council, where bishops of all nations meet. 2dly, A national synod, of the clergy of one nation only. 3dly, A provincial synod, where ecclesiastical persons of a province only assemble. 4thly, A diocesan synod, of those of one diocese, &c. And our Saxon King's usually called a synod or mixed council, consisting of ecclesiasticks and the nobility, three times a year; which is said to have been the same with our parliament. See Black. Com. 1 V. 279.

Synodical, (synodale) Is a tribute or payment in money, paid to the bishop or archdeacon, by the inferior clergy, at Easter visitation; and it is called synodale or synodaticum, quia in synodo frequentius debatur. Right. Clerg. 59. They are likewise termed synodites, in the stat. 34 H. 8. cap. 16. And sometimes synodale is used for the synod itself; and synodals provincial, the canons or constitutions of a provincial synod. 25 Hen. 8. c. 19.

Synodals Cestres, Where the urban and rural deans, whose office at first was to inform of and attest the disorders of the clergy and people in the episcopal synod; and for which a solemn oath was given them to make their presentments, &c. But when they sunk in their authority, the synodical witnesses were a sort of impanelled grand jury, composed of a priest and two or three laymen of every parish, for the informing of or presenting offenders; and at length two principal persons for each diocese were annually chosen, till by degrees this office of inquest and information was devolved upon the churchwardens. Paroch. Antiq. 649.

Synonymous, A thing of the same name; or of the like signification. Litt. Diæ.

T.

EVERY person convict of any other felony (save murder) and admitted to the benefit of his clergy, shall be marked with a T. upon the brawn of his thumb. Stat. 4 H. 7. c. 13.

Tabacum, Herba ab insula Tobaco, ubi copiose provenit; qui primus eam ex India ad nos adduxit, see Tobacco.

Tabard, Tabarder; The bachelor scholars on the foundation of Queen's college Oxford, are called tabitars or tabarders; and these scholars were named tabitars, from a gown wore by them, called a tabert, tabarr, or tabard: For Verstegan tells us, that tabert anciently signified a short gown that reached not farther than the middle of the leg; and it remains for the name of such in Germany and other countries, which with the Teutonic and Saxon taber, signify all a kind of garment, &c.

Tabardum, A garment like a gown; and used for a herald's coat, but generally taken for the gown of ecclesiasticks. — Frater sacerdos de &c. habebat unam Ro-

Tactare, for confirmare. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 61.

Tail, (Fr. taille, from tailler, to cut or limit, Lat. feodum talliatum) Is a limited fee, opposed to fee-simple: It is that inheritance whereof a man is seised to him and the heirs of his body begotten or to be begotten: And he that giveth the lands in tail, is called the donor, and he to whom the gift is made, the donee. Litt. 18. All estates of inheritance were originally fee-simple by the common law; but by the statute de donis conditionalibus the inheritance was divided, and a particular estate created by statute in the donee, which is what is called an Estate-tail, i. e. an estate cut and divided from the fee-simple; which estate is to return to the donor or his heirs after the determination of the tail. 3 Nelf. Abr. 266.

Before the statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. If lands were given to a man and the heirs of his body, it was interpreted to be a fee-simple presently by the gift upon condition that he had issue; and if he had issue, the condition was supposed to be performed for three purposes, viz. to alien and disinherit the issue; and by the alienation to bar the donor or his heirs of all possibility of the reversion; to forfeit the estate for treason or felony; and to charge it with rent, &c. But by this statute, the will and intention of the donor is to be observed; as that the tenant in tail shall not alien after issue had or before, or forfeit or charge the lands longer than for his own life, &c. and the estate shall remain to the issue of the donee, or to the donor or his heirs where there is no issue; so that whereas the donee had a fee-simple before, now he has but an estate-tail, and the donor a reversion in fee expectant upon that estate-tail. Co. Lit. 19. In this manner it continued some time, though daily experience shewed that much mischief had crept into the law by intailed inheritances, as frauds to creditors, &c. and sons became disobedient when they found they could not be disinherited; wherefore the judges found out a way to bar an estate-tail, with remainders over, by a feigned recovery. Ann. 12 Ed. 4. And since by a fine to bar the issue, by 4 Hen. 7. cap. 20. and 32 Hen. 8. cap. 33. And for that owners of land held in tail were less fearful to commit treason on account of the easy forfeiture; therefore the stat. 26 Hen. 8. cap. 13. was made; and men that had intailed lands, could not make improvements, their estate being only for life ; for this reason the stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 18. gave them power to make leases for twenty-one years, or three lives, &c.

The statute de donis creates no entail, but of such an estate which was fee-simple at the common law ; and defendible as a fee-simple. 1 Inst. 19. Lands of inheritance, and all inheritances favouring of the realty may be entailed ; so rents, profits, offices, dignities, &c. which concern lands, or certain places : But if the grant of an inheritance be merely personal, or exercised with chattels only ; it cannot be entailed. 4 Inst. 87. 7 Rep. A grant of an annuity, to a man and the heirs of his body, is void ; and a lease for years to a person and the heirs of his body is also void ; though an assignment may be made of a lease for years, in trust to permit the issue in tail to receive the profits ; which is in effect an estate tail. 10 Rep. 87.

Estate-tail of lands, are general or special : General tail is where lands or tenements are given to a man and the heirs of his body begotten ; or to a woman and the heirs of her body begotten : In this case, it is called a general tail, because whatever woman the man taketh to wife, the issue may inherit the lands ; and whatsoever man the woman takes to husband, the issue may inherit ; or if she have divers husbands, and have issue by every of them, they shall inherit one after another, as heir of her body.

Special tail is when lands and tenements are given to a man and his wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies begotten ; in which case, no other persons can inherit but the issue that are begotten by him on that particular wife ; and it is called special tail, for that if the wife die, and the husband marries a second wife, by whom he hath issue, such issue has no benefit, as they have by the general tail. Litt. 14, 16. Co. Litt. 19, 20. If lands are given to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of their bodies, both of them have an estate in special tail ; by reason of the word heirs, for the inheritance is not limited to one more than the other : Where lands and tenements are given to a man and his wife, and to the heirs of the body of the man, the husband hath an estate in general tail, and the wife an estate for life ; as the word heirs relates generally to the body of the husband : And if the estate is made to the husband and wife ; and to the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband begotten ; there the wife hath an estate in special tail, and the husband for term of life only ; because the word heirs hath relation to the body of the wife, to be begotten by that particular husband : If an estate be limited to a man's heirs which he shall beget on his wife, it creates a special tail in the husband ; but the wife will be intitled to nothing, &c. Litt. 26, 28. Co. Litt. 22, 26.

Lands given to a man and woman unmarried, and to the heirs of their bodies, will be an estate in special tail ; for they may marry. 1 Inst. 25. 10 Rep. 50. And though lands are given to a married man and another man's wife, and the heirs of their two bodies, it may be a good estate-tail, for the possibility of their intermarrying. 15 Hen. 7.

A general tail, and a special tail, may not be created at one and the same time ; if they are, the general, which is greater, will frustrate the special. 1 Inst. 28. There are other estate-tails within the equity of the statute ; as if lands are given to a man and his heirs males or females, of his body begotten, the issue male or female shall only inherit according to the limitation : By virtue of the statute, here the daughter may be heir by descent, though there be a son : But in the case of a purchase, there cannot be an heir female where there is a son, who is right heir at law. 1 Inst. 24, 164. And whoever will make claim, as heir per formam doni to an estate-tail, must make his descent by such heirs to whom it is limited ; if it is to heirs males of the body, there the pedigree is to be derived by heirs males ; and if it be to heirs female, he must derive it by heirs female one after another. 1 Inst. 376. If a gift is to one, and the heirs males of his body, and he hath issue a daughter, who hath a son, and dies ; in this case the son shall not inherit the estate-tail, for he cannot make his descent by heirs male. Ibid. And where there is no heir to take according to the gift ; as when issue fails, the land shall revert to the donor or descend to him that is to have it after the estate-tail is spent. 1 Inst. 25.

It is the word body, or other words amounting to it, make the entail : And a gift to the heirs male, or heirs female, without anything farther, is a fee-simple estate, because it is not limited of what body : And hence a corporation cannot be seised in tail. 1 Inst. 13, 26, 27. In a devise or last will, an estate-tail may be created without the word body ; also begotten shall be supplied and necessarily intended. Noy's Max. 101. 1 Inst. 26. If one gives lands to a man and his issue, or children of his body, without the words, his heirs, to convey the inheritance, he has but an estate for life : Though such words may be good enough to convey the inheritance in a will ; as estate-tail by devise are always more favoured in law, than estate-tail created by deeds. 1 Inst. 20.

It has been held, that if the word issue is a limitation, 'tis an entail ; but if 'tis by way of description who shall take, 'tis only an estate for life. Mod. Caf. in L. & E. 263. The word heirs is necessary to create an estate-tail and inheritance by deed ; and where an use was limited to A. B. and to his heirs males, lawfully to be begotten ; these last words imply that it must be heirs males of his body, because no other heir male can inherit by virtue of his grant, but such who are lawfully begotten by the grantor. 7 Rep. 41. If a man makes a feoffment to the use of himself for life, remainder to the heirs males of his body, this is an estate-tail executed in him ; and so it is if he covenanted to stand seised in the same manner. 1 Mod. 159.

By a marriage settlement and fine levied, &c. to the use of the husband and wife, for their joint lives ; remainder to the heirs of the body of the wife by the husband to be begotten, remainder (the wife surviving the husband) to her for life, remainder to the right heirs of the husband ; this was held to be an estate-tail, executed in the wife. Raym. 127. 3 Salk. 338. Land is conveyed to the use of a man and his wife for their lives, and after to their next issue male in tail, then to the use of the husband and wife, and of the heirs of their bodies begotten, they having no male issue ; by this husband and wife are tenants in special tail executed, and when they have issue male, they will be tenants for life, remainder to their son in tail, the remainder to them in special tail. 1 Inst. 28.

Where a person having an estate in fee, conveys it by lease and release to the use of himself for life, with remainder to trustees for their lives, and remainder to the heirs of his body ; he hath an estate-tail in him ; but he is only tenant for life in possession : It would be otherwise, if there had been no intermediate estate in the trustees for their lives. 2 Ld. Raym. 855. A man seised of land in fee, makes a gift of it in tail, or lease for life, remainder to the right heirs male of the body of the donor, this remainder it is said will be a fee-simple, and not an estate-tail. Dyer 156. If the gift or grant of the land be to J. S. and his heirs, to hold to him and the heirs of his body, &c. here he will have an estate in tail, and a fee-simple upon it. Litt. ch. 2. 1 Inst. 21. Lands are given to two brothers, &c. and to the heirs of their bodies begotten ; during their lives they shall have joint estates, so that the survivor will have all for his life ; and after their deaths, their heirs have estates in general tail, by moieties in common one with another. 1 Inst. 25. 1 Rep. 140.

When a remainder is limited to two, and the heirs male of their bodies, they have not joint but several estate-tails. And between baron and feme, 'tis said several moieties may be of an estate-tail, as well as of a fee-simple. Cro. Eliz. 210. Moor 228. 3 Lill. Abr. 551. A feoffment was made to the use of the feoffor for life, remainder to W. R. his son, and his heirs ; and for want of issue of him, remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor ; adjudged W. R. hath only an estate in tail ; for though the first words of the sentence, viz. to his son and heirs, make a fee-simple, the subsequent words in the same sentence, i. e. and for want of issue of him, make an estate-tail, by qualifying and abridging the same. 5 Mod. 266. 3 Salk. 337. See Hall. 57. Dyer 534.

If a person gives lands to A. for life, and after his death without issue, then to another person ; though here is an express estate for life given to A. the subsequent words make an estate-tail: But where lands are devised to A. during life, the remainder to trustees, remainder to his first son, &c. and if A. dies without issue, then, &c. The limitation upon the devisee's death, 'tis said will not give an estate in tail to A. but it shall be here intended, that if he died without having a son. 1 P. Williams, 605. A father having two sons, devised his lands to his youngest son, and if he died without heirs, then to his eldest son and his heirs; the youngest son had an estate-tail, because the devise to him, and if he died without heirs, is the same as if the testator had devised it in these words, viz. If he die without heirs of his body; for otherwise the remainder limited to the eldest son had been void, as the youngest son cannot die without heirs, so long as the eldest is living. 1 Roll. Abr. 836.

In ejectment the case was, the father having three sons, devised his lands to his second son, and his heirs for ever; and for want of such heirs, then to the right heirs of the father; then the father died, and his second son entered, and died without issue, leaving the eldest son: It was resolved, that the second son had but an estate-tail, and that the devise over by these words, and for want of such heirs, is void in point of limitation, for the testator's intent was that the lands should descend from himself, and not from his second son; and the words, want of such heirs, could import no other than want of issue, &c. so that the eldest son takes by descent in this case, and not by the will. 1 Salk. 233.

A person devised land to his wife for life, remainder to his son, and his heirs for ever; and if he died without heirs, the same to remain to his two daughters: In this case it was held in equity, that the rule is, where a remainder over is to one, who may be the devisee's heir at law, such limitation will be good, and the first construed an estate-tail; for the generality of the word heirs, shall be restrained to heirs of the body, since the testator could not but know that the devisee would not die without an heir, while the remainder man, or any of his issue continued: But where the second limitation is to a stranger, 'tis merely void, and the first is a fee-simple. Talbot's Chan. Caf. 2.

An estate-tail cannot merge by the accession of the fee-simple to it: But it has been adjudged, that two fees immediately expectant upon one another, (as where a man is tenant in tail, and remainder in fee to the tenant in tail) cannot subsist in the same person; and the statute of Westm. having made estates-tail a kind of particular estates, they must like all other such estates be subject to merger and extinguishment, when united with the absolute fee. 8 Rep. 74. 1 Salk. 338. If there be tenant in tail, remainder in tail, and tenant in tail entails the reversioner in fee; it is a discontinuance: And tenants in tail can make no greater estate than for their own lives; unless it be by lease, &c. according to the stat. 32 H. 8. c. 28. 1 Rep. 140.

If tenant in tail bargain and sell lands to another and his heirs, or make a lease and release to the use of himself for life, with remainder over to another, &c. These estates may be avoided by entry of the issue in tail. Farrington, Mo. Ca. 23, 28. Estates-tail are usually created upon settlements: Though an agreement to entail, is no entail; for no agreement shall bind the issue in tail, where there is a first entail, without a fine. Chanc. Rep. 236. It is incident to an estate-tail, to be disposable of in waste; that the wife of the donee shall be entailed; the husband of a feme donee, be tenant by the curtesy; and that the tenant in tail may suffer a common recovery, &c. and therefore conditions to restrain any of these, are void. 1 Inst. 284. 10 Rep. 38.

As by statute it is incident to estates-tail to make leases; so by custom, it is to grant lands by copy of court roll, &c. Tenant in tail of a trust may bind his heir by articles in equity. See Elliot, Recovery, 20 P. Abr. tit. Tails and Bails, Case 17. 112, 113, 114.

Tail after Possibility of Issue extinct. Is where lands and tenements are given to a man and his wife in special tail, and either of them dies without issue had between them; the survivor hath an estate in tail after possibility of issue, &c. Also if they have issue, and the issue dies without issue, whereby there is none left who may inherit by force of the intail, the survivor of the donees hath an estate-tail after possibility. Litt. 32. The estate of this tenant must be created by the act of God, viz. by the death of either party without issue; none can have this estate but one of the donees, or a donee in special tail; for a donee in general tail may by possibility have issue. Litt. 32. 1 Inst. 28. 11 Rep. 80. And if one gives lands to a man and his wife, and the heirs of their two bodies in special tail, and they live till each of them are one hundred years old, and have no issue; yet doth the law see no impossibility of having children, and they continue tenants in tail: But if the wife die without issue, there the law seeth an apparent impossibility. 1 Inst. 28.

Tenants in tail after possibility of issue extinct, are not punishable for waste; as are tenants for life: but such tenants, or tenants by the curtesy, &c. may not suffer a recovery. And though they have more privileges than tenants for life hath; as if they alien the land, he in reversion cannot have a writ of entry in casu consimili; and they need not require aid, &c. Yet as to the quantity of their estates, they have no privilege above estates for life: For if such tenant in tail after such possibility, make a feoffment of his land, he in reversion may enter for the forfeiture, &c. 1 Inst. 27, 28. 9 Rep. 139. Litt. Sect. 34. A tenant in tail cannot be seized to any use expressed; for his estate is so fixed, that none can execute the use: And where tenants in tail general or special, &c. die without issue, the donor or his heirs may enter. Jenk. Cent. 195. Litt. 18. If tenant in tail in remainder, be attainted of treason, &c. the King shall have the land; for it may not be in abeyance, nor in any other, he not being dead, but in law: The chief lord cannot have it, by reason the tenant for life is alive; so neither he that is in reversion, &c. and it cannot revert, before the tenant in tail die without issue. 2 Leon. 123. Vide stat. 10 Geo. 2. cap. 26. See Black. Com. 2 V. 124.

Taking, (Fr. trinh, i. e. infensus, tinus) Is taken substantially for a conviction; or adjectively for a person convicted of treason or felony. See Attaints.

Taking, felonious. A felonious taking must be done, animus furandi: Or, as the civil law expresses it lucris causa, i. e. with an intent to steal. The circumstances must be left to the due and attentive consideration of the court and jury. Black. Com. 4 V. 230, 232.

Taking, unlawful. When I once have gained a rightful possession of any goods or chattels, either by a just occupancy, or by a legal transfer, whoever either by fraud or force, dispossesses me of them is guilty of a transgression against the laws of society, which is a kind of secondary law of nature, Black. Com. 3 V. 145.

Tale, or count. The first of pleadings or mutual allegations between the plaintiff and defendant, is the declaration, narratio, or count, antiently called the Tale; in which the plaintiff sets forth the cause of his complaint at length. Black. Com. 3 V. 293.

Talent. A weight of sixty-two pounds; also a sum of money among the Greeks, of about 100 l. value. Merch. Dig.

Tales, (Lat.) Is used in the law for a supply of men impanelled on a jury and not appearing, or on their appearance challenged as not indifferent; when the judge upon motion orders a supply to be made by the sheriff, &c. of one or more such persons present in court, equal in reputation to those that were impanelled, to make up a full jury, which he could do by the common law; and this is by the statutes 35 H. 8. c. 6. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 32. 14 Eliz. c. 9. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 32, &c. Tales are of two sorts, i. e. tales de circumstantibus, and a decem tales; a tales de circumstantibus is where a full jury do not appear at the first assize, or so many are challenged that there is not a full jury; then on the prayer of the plaintiff's counsel or attorney, the judge will grant this Tales, which the sheriff returns immediately in court; A decem tales is when a full jury doth not appear at a trial at law, and is a writ to the sheriff, appone decem Tales. 10 Rep. 102. Finch 414. 2 Roll. Abr. 67.

Upon a trial at bar, if the jury do not appear full, the court cannot grant a Tales de circumstantibus, but will grant a decem Tales, returnable in some convenient time the same term, to try the cause. 2 Lill. Abr. 552. And a Tales de circumstantibus ought not to be in an assise, only at nisi prius; the decem Tales must be awarded in an assise. Cro. Car. 341. A plaintiff or defendant may have a Tales de circumstantibus; and the statutes which authorize justices of nisi prius to award a Tales de circumstantibus, extend as well to capital cases as to others; but such a Tales cannot be prayed for the King upon an indictment, or criminal information, without a warrant from the attorney general, or an express assignment from the court before which the inquest is taken; though it may be awarded on an information qui tam, &c. because of the interest which the prosecutor hath in such prosecutions. 2 Hawk. P. C. 409. 3 Salk. 339. A Tales is not to be granted where the whole jury is challenged, &c. but the whole panel, if the challenge be made good, is to be quashed, and a new jury returned; for a Tales consists but of some persons to supply the places of such of the jurors as were wanting of the number of twelve, and is not to make a new jury. 2 Lill. Abr. 552.

If but one juror appears on the principal panel, the court may order a tales by the statute: 35 H. 8. c. 6. 10 Rep. 102. And if upon a habeas corpora, or a disfringas jur. none of the jury appear, it is said a decem tales shall be awarded: But it shall not be had upon a venire fac. Cro. Eliz. 502. Moor 528. See Dyer 245. 2 Roll. Rep. 75. At the assizes, one of the principal panel appeared, and no more, and a tales was awarded, the title whereof was Nomina decem talium, and under it eleven were returned; this was notwithstanding held good; for it is only a misprision of the clerk, and decem was struck out, and then the title was Nomina talium, &c. And it was adjudged, that if after a tales granted, the principal panel should be quashed, the tales should stand good, and more be added, &c. 4 Rep. 103. 2 Cro. 316. 3 Nels. Abr. 275.

No person shall take any reward or fee upon the account of any tales returned; on pain of forfeiting 10 l. one moiety to the informer, and the other to the king. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 24. s. 20. And by this act the qualification of talesmen is to be 5 l. per annum freehold estate, &c. The tales de circumstantibus, is in some measure taken away, or rendered useless, by the late statute for regulating of juries. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. See Black. Com. 3 V. 365. xi. 4 V. 348. And see the writ, 3 V. 364.

Talley, (Tallea, Fr. Taille, Ital. Tagliare, i. e. Scindere,) Is a stick cut in two parts, on each whereof is marked with notches, or otherwise, what is due between debtor and creditor; as now used by brewers, &c. And this was the ancient way of keeping all accounts, one part being kept by the creditor, the other by the debtor, &c. Hence the tallier of the Exchequer, whom we now call the teller. But there are two kinds of tallies mentioned in our statutes to have been long used in the Exchequer; the one is termed tallies of debt, which are in the nature of an acquittance for debts paid to the king, on the payment whereof these tallies are delivered to the debtors, who carrying them to the clerk of the pipe office, have there an acquittance in parchment for their full discharge. 1 R. 2. c. 5. The other are tallies of reward or allowance, being made to sheriffs of counties as a recompence for such matters as they have performed to their charge, or such money as is call upon them in their accounts of course, but not leviable, &c. 27 Hen. 8. c. 11. 33 & 34 H. 8. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 4. In the Exchequer there is a talley court, where attend the two deputy chamberlains of the Exchequer, and the talley cutter: And a talley is generally the king's acquittance for money paid or lent, and has written on it words proper to express on what occasion the money is received. Lex Consuet. 205.

Tam Quam. Is in nature of a qui tam, being where a man prosecutes as well for the king as for himself, on an information for breach of some penal law, whereby any penalty is given to the party that sues. Terms de Ley. In every case where the statute prohibits a thing, and doth not annex a penalty to the committing thereof, the party offending may be indicted for a contempt against the statute; or action lies against him for breach of it, which must be brought tam pro domino rege, quam pro seipso, as there is a fine to be paid to the king. 2 Inst. 118. *Cro. Tax, (Taxa, from the Gr. Taxe, i. e. Ordo, Tributum) A tribute or imposition laid upon the subject, which being certainly and orderly rated, was wont to be yearly paid into the king's Exchequer: And it differs from what is commonly called a subsidy, in this, That it is always certain as it is set down in the Exchequer-book, and levied in general of every town, and not particularly of every man, &c. See Subsidy and Rastall's Abridgment, Tit. Taxes, Tenbs, Fifteenths, Subsidies, &c. and 4 Inst. 26, 33.

It is said that in ancient times, taxes were imposed by the king at his pleasure; but king Edward 1. bound himself and his successors in the 25th year of his reign, that from that time forward no tax should be laid upon the subject, without the assent of the lords and commons in parliament. Stat. 25 Edw. 1. c. 5. But although taxes which are for the defence of the realm, cannot be imposed but by act of parliament; yet the crown has a right to ask them upon any emergency, and therefore it is held they have a virtual existence always, tho' no actual one. In the 14th year of Edward 1. an aid was granted to the king, by the parliament; and anno 2. 2. a royal aid for keeping the sea, and preserving of rights: And also a subsidy of 1s. in 20s. on goods, and aliens to pay 2s. &c.

was granted by 3 & 4 Edw. 6. Besides fifteenths and tenbs, payable by the temporality and clergy in two or three years, &c. And the way of taxing was formerly by tenbs and fifteenths; then by subsidies, afterwards by royal aids, and at last by a pound rate; the former were all upon the person and personal estate, and were much the same; but the pound-rate was upon lands and rents. Anno 18 Ed. 3. a valuation was made of all the towns in England; and returned into the Exchequer, and this became the standing rule for taxing every town (viz.) When a tax was given the officers of the Exchequer presently knew to how much it amounted for every town, and the inhabitants taxed the landlords, and occupiers of lands, and they were charged and paid their proportion, &c.

A subsidy was granted anno 32 H. 8. and this was a tax upon the person, both for lands and goods, and payable where the persons lived; and this continued till the 15 Car. 1. and about two years afterwards the first assessment was made upon lands and rents, according to a pound-rate. 2 Inst. 76, 77. 3 Salk. 340. In the 16 & 17 Car. 1. Taxes were granted for relief of, and disbanding the army, &c. And 13 Car. 2. c. 3 & 4. The sum of 1,260,000 l. was granted for eighteen months at 70,000 l. per month, charged on the several counties by lieutenants, for ammunition for the militia, and several aids were granted, one of 2,477,000 l. for fitting out a navy and maintenance of wars, &c. in the years 16, 17, 18, 19 & 25 Car. 2. Also a free and voluntary present was granted to king Charles 2. but it was ordained that the same should not be drawn into example.

King James 2. had aids and taxes granted him by parliament; and after the Revolution, heavy taxes were necessarily laid on lands and personal estate, in the reigns of King Will. 3. and Queen Anne, to defend the crown and kingdom against the efforts of the King of France, in favour of the pretended Prince of Wales, and secure the protestant succession in the line of his Majesty King George. Since this necessity, joined to others, land taxes have been annually granted of 1s. 2s. 3s. and 4s. in the pound, as the present exigencies have required; enacted to be levied by commissioners on the several counties, cities, towns, &c. And in respect of this tax, it is not the quantity but the yearly value of lands that must be observed; the farmers or occupiers of the land, are to be charged; and deduct it out of their rents to the landlords; and a man may be rated for goods as well as lands, but not for both; and in case of a rate on goods, the charge must be on the person: The commissioners are to ascertain the several proportions of the tax, to be charged on every hundred or division; and appoint fit persons to be assessors and collectors in every parish to assess and levy the money, which when received is to be paid to Receivers General, and by them returned to the Exchequer, &c.

If any person refuse to pay the tax, the collectors may levy it by distress and sale of their goods; but if they are over-rated, they shall be relieved on appeal to the commissioners, who have power to charge the same on others, as they shall see cause, and in case of deficiency to make a re-assessment: assessors neglecting their duty, are to be fined not exceeding 40 l. And collectors detaining the money, shall be imprisoned, and their estates seized and sold, &c. If a general receiver neglects to return the money by him received, he is liable to the penalty of 500 l. And where there is any failure in raising and paying the sums of money charged on any county, process may issue against the commissioners for their neglect, &c. By other later statutes, when lands &c. are assessed at more than an equal pound rate, the commissioners upon complaint made in twenty days, shall abate it; and reassess such abatements within the whole hundred, &c. or on persons under-rated, so as the sum charged be fully paid. And where assessors have omitted to charge themselves to the land-tax for their own estates, commissioners by statute have been empowered to summon and examine them or others on oath, and upon discovery thereof, to award satisfaction to be made to the collectors. If lands or houses are unoccupied, whereby the parish is obliged to make good the tax, the collectors at any time after, may enter enter and distrain, and sell the distress in four days, and the money shall be distributed proportionably to the parties who paid for such lands, &c.

In case any persons by changing their residence, escape the taxation, on proof before two of the commissioners, or a justice of peace, within one year, they are to be charged at treble the value, to be levied by distress, &c. And in the taking these distresses, collectors may break open houses, chests, &c. in the day-time, upon a warrant under the hands of two commissioners, and calling constables to their assistance: Also if any person refuse to pay the tax, by the space of ten days after demand, or convey away his goods, &c. the commissioners may commit him to the common gaol, till payment. Papists are doubly taxed; but the colleges in the universities are exempted from paying any thing to this tax: There is a poundage fee for collecting the tax, of 3 d. per pound to the collectors, 2 d. per pound to the general receiver, and 1 d. half-penny per pound to the commissioners clerks. Stat. 1 Geo. 1, &c. See 12, 13, & 15 Geo. 2. The above statutes, or land-tax acts, where 2 s. in the pound is granted, have generally clauses of loan of one million, and when the tax is 4 s. a pound, two millions for public uses; likewise in the malt tax acts, there is such clause of loan for 750,000 l. at 3 or 4 per cent. interest, the loans to be allowed by the commissioners of the treasury, &c.

Although an exciseman exercise his office in two counties, yet he shall be taxed for his salary in that county where he lives. 1 Strange 417. Lands were let at 120 l. per annum, but by improvements were worth 150 l. per annum, and taxed accordingly; the tenant shall not deduct the whole land-tax, but only in proportion, as 120 l. bears to 150 l. 2 Strange 1191. See Black. Com. 1 V. 139, 169, 307. 4 V. 419, 432. 1 V. 331.

Taxatio Bladozum, Is a tax or imposition laid upon corn, according to Cowell.

Taxatio Pontificensis, The valuation of ecclesiastical benefices made through every diocese in England, on occasion of the pope's granting to the King the tenth of all spirituals for three years. Which taxation was made by Walter Bishop of Norwich, delegated by the pope to this office in 38 Hen. 3. and obtained till the 19th of Edw. 1. when a new taxation advancing the value, was made by the bishops of Winchester and Lincoln. Cowell.

Taxers, Are two officers yearly chosen in Cambridge to see the true gauge of all weights and measures; though the name took rise from taxing or rating the rents of houses, which was anciently the duty of their offices.

Taylor's, Shall not make or set upon cloaths any button or button-holes of cloth, stuff, &c. nor shall any person wear clothes with such buttons, &c. on pain of forfeiting 40 s. per dozen. 4 Geo. 1. Contracts entered into with journeymen taylor's, for advancing their wages, are declared void; and taylor's giving greater wages than allowed, shall forfeit 5 l. and journeymen accepting the same, or refusing to work for the settled stated wages the hours appointed, may be sent to the house of correction for two months, &c. by Stat. 7 Geo. 1. c. 13.

By 8 Geo. 3. c. 17. Certain new regulations are established as to master taylor's and their journeymen. Their hours and price for working are limited within London and five miles thereof. The justices are empowered to call witnesses before them on suspicion that the regulation is broken through, and on conviction to commit the offenders. Also the quarter-sessions in London, are enabled to make new regulations, if requisite, as to wages and hours of work. Masters within the limits employing men out of the limits, to evade the act, are to forfeit 500 l. a moiety to the King, the other to the informer. See the Act.

Tea, Is a pleasant sort of liquor, of late much used in England, and introduced from China and the East-Indies, being made of the product of a shrub growing in those parts: It is mentioned in the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 15. And persons mixing with tea leaves, the leaves of other trees and shrubs, are liable to a penalty of 10 l. &c. by 4 Geo. 2. c. 14. The East-India company are to have allowance and drawback, on exporting tea. Stat. 6 Geo. 2. c. 38. By the Stat. 18 Geo. 2. c. 26. The duty of 4 s. per pound weight of tea given by the Stat. 10 Geo.

1. is taken off, and by this act is given a duty of 1 s. per pound weight Averdupois, and 25 l. per cent. on the price on all teas sold by the East-India company. And by the Stat. 21 Geo. 2. cap. 14. Tea is permitted to be exported to Ireland and his Majesty's plantations in America without paying the inland duties charged by the last act. See Stat. 28 Geo. 2. c. 21.

Team and Team, (From the Sax. Tyman, i. e. pro-pagare, to team or bring forth) Signifies a royalty or privilege granted by the King's charter to the lord of a manor, for the having, restraining and judging of bondmen and villeins, with their children, goods and chattels, &c. Glanvil, lib. 5. c. 2.

Technical words in indictments. In some cases particular words of art must be used, which are so appropriated by the law to express the precise idea which it entertains of the offence, that no other words, however synonymous they may seem, are capable of doing it. Thus, in treason, the facts must be laid to be done, "treasonably, and against his allegiance," else the indictment is void. In indictments for murder, it is necessary to say, that the party indicted "murdered," not "killed" or "slew" the other. In all indictments for felonies, the adverb "feloniously" must be used; and for burglaries, "burglariously;" and all these to ascertain the intent. In rapes, the word "ravished" is necessary, and must not be expressed by any periphrasis; in order to render the crime certain. So in larcenies also, the words "feloniously took and carried away," are necessary to every indictment; for these only can express the very offence. Black. Com. 4 V. 302.

Tithing-penny, Tithing-penny, Tithing-penny, A small duty or payment to the sheriff from each tithing, towards the charge of keeping courts, &c. for which some of the religious were exempted by charter from the King. Chart. Hen. 1.

Tennage, From the Sax. Tynan, to inclose or shut, is used in many parts of England for wood for fences and inclosures.

Tainland, Tainland, or T'ainland, The land of a Thaine, or noble person. See Thane-Land.

Teller, Is a considerable officer in the Exchequer, of which officers there are four; whose office is to receive all money due to the King, and to give the Clerk of the Pells a bill to charge him therewith: They also pay to all persons any money payable by the King, by warrant from the Auditor of the Receipt; and make weekly and yearly books of their receipts and payments, which they deliver to the Lord Treasurer.

Telligraphæ, (From the Sax. Tellan, i. e. dicere, and the Gr. Γράφω, Scribo, quasi a telling any thing by writing) Are written evidences of things past. Blount.

Tellwork, Is that work or labour which the tenant was bound to do for his lord, for a certain number of days; from the Saxon word Tellan, numerare, & werc, opus. Thorn. Ann. 1364.

Tementale or Tementale, A tax of two shillings upon every plough-land. How. Hist. f. 419.

Templars, or Knights of the Temple, (Templarii) Was a religious order of knighthood, instituted about the year 1119, and so called because they dwelt in part of the buildings belonging to the Temple at Jerusalem, and not far from the sepulchre of our Lord. They entertained christian strangers and pilgrims charitably, and in their armour led them through the Holy Land, to view the sacred monuments of christianity, without fear of infidels; for at first their profession was to defend travellers from highwaymen and robbers. This order continuing and increasing for near two hundred years, was far spread in Christendom, and particularly here in England. But at length some of them at Jerusalem, falling away (as some authors report) to the Saracens from christianity, or rather because they grew too potent and rich, the whole order was suppressed by Clement Quintus, anno 1307, by the council of Vienne 1312, and their substance given partly to the knights of St. John of Jerusalem, and partly to other religious. Cassan. de gloria mundi, par. 9. Cap. 4. And see Ann. 1 Edw. 1. cap. 24. These flourished here in England from Henry the Second's days, till they were suppressed. They had in every nation a particular particular governor, whom Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 10. calls Magistrum Militie Templi. The Master of the Temple here was summoned to parliament, 49 H. 3. m. 11. in Schedula. And the chief minister of the Temple church in London, is still called Master of the Temple. Of these knights read Mr. Dugdale's Antiquities of Warwickshire, fol. 706. In ancient records they were also called Fratres Militie Templi Solomonis. Mon. Angl. 2. par. fol. 554. b. About nine years after their institution, they were ordered by a council held at Triers, to wear a white garment, and afterwards in the pontificate of pope Eugenius, they wore a red cross on their garments. The Temple, which we now call the Inns of Court, was the place where they dwelt, and in the Middle Temple the King's treasure was kept. Cowell. Templars land shall be forfeit for erecting their crosses, St. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 33. The jurisdiction of the conservators of their privileges restrained, St. Westm. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 43. The lands of the Templars given to the hospitals of Jerusalem. St. de lair Temp. 17 Ed. 2. p. 3.

Temple. Dugdale and Stow both tell us that the Temple in London is a place of privilege from arrests, by the grant of the King; but this hath been denied by the court of B. R. Dugd. 317, 320. 3 Salk. Rep. 45. In the Middle Temple the King's treasure was anciently kept.

Temporalities of Bishops. Are the revenues, lands, tenements, and lay-sec, belonging to bishops, as they are barons and lords of parliament; all things as a bishop hath by livery from the King, as manors, lands, tithes, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 881. It was a custom formerly, that when bishops received from the King their temporalities, they did by a solemn form in writing renounce all right to the same by virtue of any provision from the Pope, and acknowledged the receipt of them only from the King; which custom continued from the reign of Edw. 1. to the time of the reformation: And this practice began by occasion of a Bull of Pope Gregory 8. wherein he conferred the see of Worcester on a certain bishop, and committed to him administrationem spiritualium & temporalium episcopatus predicti. Anno 31 Edw. 1. The custody of the temporalities of every bishop and bishop, during the vacancy of the sees, belong to the King; and no subject can claim them by grant or concession. F. N. B. 32, 34. 2 Inst. 15. And the King may commit the temporalities during the vacation of the sees; also he may present to a void advowson, while the temporalities are in his hands. 1 Inst. 90, 388. Mag. Chart. c. 5. 14 Edw. 3. c. 14. See Black. Com. 1 V. 282, 380. 4 V. 414.

Temporatio or Tentatio, Is used in ancient records for a trial, or proof. Chart. 20 Ed. 1.

Tempus Pessionis, Mast time in the forest, which is from about Michaelmas to St. Martin's Day, November 11.

Tempus pinguedinis & firmationis; The season of killing the Buck and the Doe. MS. Temp. H. 3.

Tena, Was that which we now call a coif, worn by ecclesiastick:—Tene coronas abscondunt quasi calices radios repellentes, &c. Counc. Lambeth. Anno 1281.

Tenancies, Are houses or places for habitation, held of another. 23 Eliz. c. 4.

Tenant, (Tenus, from the Latin tenere, to hold,) Signifies one that holds or possesses lands or tenements by any kind of right, either in fee, for life, years, or at will. The word in law is used with divers additions, as tenant in dower, which is he that possesses land by virtue of her dower. Kitchin, fol. 160. Tenant per statum-merchant, that holds land by virtue of a statute forfeited to him. Ibid. fol. 173. Tenant in frank marriage. Ib. fol. 158. He that holds lands or tenements by virtue of a gift thereof made to him upon marriage between him and his wife. Tenant by the curtesy, Id. fol. 195. He that holds for his life, by reason of a child begotten by him of his wife, being an inheritrix, and born alive. Tenant by elegit, that holds by virtue of the writ called an elegit. Tenant in mortgage, that holds by means of a mortgage. Tenant by the gift in ancient demesne (Id. fol. 81) is he that is admitted by the rod in the court of ancient demesne. Tenant by copy of right-tail is one admitted tenant of any lands, &c. within a manor, which time out of mind have been demisable, according to the custom of the manor. West. Symbol. part. 1. lib. 2. fol. 646. Tenant by charter is he that holdeth by feoffment in writing, or other deed. Kitchin, fol. 57. There was also tenant by knights-service, tenant in burgage, tenant in socage, tenant in frank fee, tenant in villenage. So there is tenant in fee-simple. *Kitchin, fol. 150. Tenant in fee-tail. Id. fol. 153. Tenant at the will of the lord, according to the custom of the manor, Id. fol. 132, & 165. Tenant at will by the Common law, Ibid. Tenant upon sufferance, Ibid. Tenant of estate of inheritance, Staundf. Prærog. fol. 6. Tenant in chief, that holdeth of the King in right of his crown. F. N. B. fol. 5. Tenant of the King is he that holds of the person of the King, Ibid. or as some honour. Ibid. Very tenant, that holds immediately of his lord. Kitchin, fol. 99. For if there be lord, mesne and tenant; the tenant is very tenant of the mesne, but not to the lord above: Tenant per avail. See Peravail. Pl. Cor. 197. and F. N. B. fol. 136. See Dyer's Com. fol. 25. num. 156.*

So there are also joint-tenants, that have equal right in lands and tenements by virtue of one title. Lit. lib. 3. cap. 3. Tenants in common, that have equal right, but hold by divers titles, Ibid. cap. 4. Particular tenant. Staundf. Prærog. fol. 13, that holds only for his term. See Coke in Sir Will. Pellham's case, l. 1. fol. 15. called term for life or years. See Plowd. Cotbir's case, fol. 23. Sole tenant, Kitchin, fol. 134. He that hath no other joined with him. Several tenant is opposite to joint-tenant, or tenants in common. Tenant to the præcipe is he against whom the writ præcipe is to be brought. Co. Rep. lib. 3. case of fines, fol. 88. Tenant in demesne, 13 Ed. 1. cap. 9. 32 H. 8. cap. 37. is he that holdeth the demesne of a manor for a rent without service. Tenant on service, 20 Ed. 1. stat. 1. is he that holdeth by service. See Britton, cap. 79. in principio & cap. 96. Car. fealty, &c. Tenant by execution. 32 H. 8. cap. 5. that hold lands by virtue of an execution upon any statute, recognizance, &c. with divers others. Cowell. See Joint-tenants, Curtesy, Dower, Life-estate, Estate-tail, Recovery, and Black. Com. 2 V. 59.

Tenants in common, Are such as hold lands for life or years, by several titles, or by one title and several rights; and as jointtenants have one joint freehold, so tenants in common have divers freeholds. 1 Inst. 188. If a conveyance is made to two persons, habendum the one moiety to one and his heirs, and the other moiety to the other, &c. it is a tenancy in common, and the heirs and executors of tenants in common, shall have their parts or shares, and not the survivors, as in case of jointtenants. 2 Lill. Abr. 559. Tenants in common know not their own part, but take the profits in common: One tenant in common cannot bring action of trespass against another tenant in common; but one such tenant may bring waste against his partner, &c. 3 Leon. 307. 2 Lill. 561. At Common law tenants in common were not compellable to make partition; though they are by the Stat. 31 H. 8. c. 1. See Jointtenant.

Tenant to the præcipe, Is he against whom the writ of præcipe is to be brought in suing out a recovery. 3 Rep.

Tender Seems to signify as much as tender, or offer; it is mentioned in our old books, as to tend a traverse, an averment, &c. Britton, c. 76. Staundf. Prærog. 16.

Tender, (Fr. Tendre) is the offering of money, or any other thing in satisfaction, or circumspetly to endeavour the performance of a thing; as a tender of rent is to offer it at the time and place when and where it ought to be paid: And it is an act done to save the penalty of a bond before action brought, &c. Term. de Ley 557. Tender of rent on any part of the land, or at any time of the last day of payment, will save the condition for that time, though the landlord refuse it: But when rent is tendered, the lessor may after bring debt; though he cannot recover any damages; the lessee's being ready to pay excuses the damages, but doth not debar the other of his rent. 1 Inst. 200. Law. Rep. 33, 34. 3 Salk. 344. A tender of rent to save the forfeiture must be of the whole rent due, without without any deduction of taxes or other payments; unless it be so agreed, &c. stoppage being no payment. 1 Inst. 202.

Tender of money on a bond, is to be made to the person of the obligee at the day appointed, to save the penalty and forfeiture of the bond, and it ought to be done before witnesses; though if the obligor be sued afterwards, he must still pay it: But if the obligor be to do any collateral thing, or which is not part of the obligation, as to deliver a horse, &c. and the obligor offer to do his part, and the obligee refuseth it, the condition is performed and the obligation discharged for ever. 1 Inst. 207, 208. A sum awarded by an award, was lost by the tender; it being a collateral thing. 3 Lev. 277. On award, that the defendant should pay money on such a day, and at such place; the defendant pleaded, that he tendered the money at the day and place, and because he did not set forth that he continued there ready to pay it at the last instant of the day till after sun-setting, &c. It was held ill. 2 Cro. 243.

Where time and place of doing an act is made certain by agreement of the parties, and they both meet accordingly; he who pleads a tender, must also plead a refusal of the other party to accept; otherwise such plea will be ill upon a demurrer, but not after verdict; and if the plaintiff be absent, that is to be set forth, and that the defendant was at the time and place, & obtulit solvere, &c. 2 Salk. 623.

On a tender being pleaded, and the money paid into court, plaintiff replied a subsequent demand and refusal, whereupon issue being joined and tried, a verdict was found for defendant. Whereupon he moved to have the money paid into court, returned, in part of his costs, but the court was of opinion it could not be done. Rep. Temp. Hardw. per Annals, 206.

Tender and refusal said to be considered in some cases as payment. See Wilson, par. 1. fo. 117.

There is a difference in pleading a tender in action of debt, and in action on the case; in debt, the damages are but accessory, so that in pleading a tender to such action, the defendant must pray judgment de damnis; but in assumpsit, the damages are principal, and he is to plead semper paratus, with a proferet hic in curia, and pray judgment de ulterioribus damnis. Salk. 622. 3 Salk. 344, 345.

Tender may be of money in bags, without shewing or telling it, if it can be proved there was the sum to be tendered; it being the duty of him that is to receive the money, to put out and tell it. 5 Rep. 115. Though where a person held the money on his arm in a bag, at the time of offering it; this was adjudged no good tender, for it might be counters or base money. Noy 74. 3 Nell. Abr. 281. If a tender is made of more than is due, it is good; and the party to whom tendered ought to take out what belongs to him. 5 Rep. 114. Tender of the money is requisite on contracts for goods sold, &c. to intitle action of trover: And a tender of stock sold for so much money, if it be well made though not accepted, will intitle the party to the sum agreed to be paid. 3 Salk. 343. See Bond, &c. 5 New Abr. and 20 Vin. Abr. tit. Tender, and Black. Com. 3 V. 16, 303.

Tenement, (Tenementum.) Signifies properly a house or home-stall; but more largely it comprehends not only house, but all corporeal inheritances which are holden of another, and all inheritances issuing out of, or exercisable with the same. Co. Litt. 6, 19, 154. A tenement may be said to be any house, land, rent, or other such like thing, that is any way held, or possessed; but being a word of a large and ambiguous meaning, and not so certain as messuage, therefore it is not fit to be used to express any thing which requires a particular description. 2 Lill. Abr. 566. The word tenement is joined with the adjective frank, to denote an estate in lands, offices, &c. for life or in fee. Kitch. 41. See Black. Com. 2 V. 16, 59.

Tenementary Land, Was the outland of manors granted out to tenants by the Saxon Thanes, under arbitrary rents and services. Spalm.

Tenementis legatis, An ancient writ lying to the city of London, or any other corporation; (where the old custom was, that men might devise by will, lands and tenements as well as goods and chattels) for the hearing and determining any controversy touching the same. Reg. Orig. 244.

Tenendum, Is a clause in a deed wherein the tenure of the land is created and limited: The office of a tenendum in a deed, is to limit and appoint the tenure of the land which is held, and how, and of whom it is to be held. Before the statute called Quia emptores terrarum, (18 Ed. 1.) the tenendum was usually from the feoffor and his heirs, and not of the chief lord of the fee, whereby lords lost their escheats, forfeitures, &c. But since the said statute the tenendum, where the fee-simple passes, must be of the chief lord of the fee, by the customs and services, whereby the feoffor held; yet this statute does not extend to a gift in tail; for the donee shall hold of the donor. Co. Lit. 6. a. 2 Inst. 66, 67, 500, 501, 502, 505.

The tenendum most commonly and properly succeeds the habendum, and was usually in these words, tenendum per servitium, &c. By the stat. of Quia emptores terrarum, when the fee-simple doth pass, the tenure is always of the chief lord, and is thus set forth, Tenendum de capitalibus dominis, &c. But this clause at this day is for the most part left out of deeds, and altogether omitted. Shep. Com. Aff. 391. The tenendum seems now to be incorporated with the habendum, for we say, To have and to hold, in which clause the estate is limited, &c. See Black. Com. 2 V. 298.

Tenenribus in villa non Onerandis, Is a writ that lies for him to whom a disseisor hath alienated the land whereof he disseised another, that he be not molested in assise for the damages, if the disseisor have wherewith to satisfy them. Reg. Orig. 214.

Tenhebed, or Tienheofed, A Saxon word signifying Decanus, Caput vel Princeps Decaniæ sive Decuriæ. Leg. Edw. Conf. c. 29.

Tenmentale, (Sax. Tienmantale, i. e. decem virorum numerus) Decennaria, Tithinga. Leg. Edw. Conf. Also an ancient tax or tribute paid to the King. Hoveden 737.

Tenor, (Lat.) Of writs, records, &c. is the substance or purport of them; or a transcript or copy. Tenor of a libel hath been held to be a transcript, which it cannot be if it differs from the libel; and juxta tenorem imports it, but not ad effectum, &c. for that may import an identity in sense, but not in words. 2 Salk. 417. In action of debt brought upon a judgment in an inferior court, if the defendant pleads Nul tiel record, a tenorem recordi only shall be certified; and by Hale Chief Justice it may be the same on certiorari's. 3 Salk. 296. A return of the tenor of an indictment from London, on a certiorari to remove the indictment, is good by the city charter; but in other cases it is usual to certify the record itself. 2 Haruk. P. C. 295.

Tenore inditamenti mittendo, Is a writ whereby the record of an indictment, and the process thereupon, is called out of another court into the King's Bench. Reg. Orig. 69.

Tenore presentium, The tenor of these presents, is the matter contained therein, or rather the intent and meaning thereof; as to do such a thing according to the tenor, is to do the same according to the true intent of the deed or writing.

Tentates panis, The essay or assay of bread. Blount.

Center, A stretcher or trier of cloth, used by dyers and clothiers, &c. mentioned in the statutes 1 R. 3. c. 8. 39 Eliz. c. 20.

Tenths, (Decimæ) Are the tenth part of the annual value of every spiritual benefice, being that yearly portion or tribute which all ecclesiastical livings pay to the King. They were anciently claimed by the Pope, to be due to him Jure divino, as High Priest, by the example of the High Priest among the Jews, who had tenths from the Levites: But they have been often granted to the King by the Pope upon divers occasions, sometimes for one year, and sometimes for more; and were annexed perpetually to the crown by Stat. 26 H. 8. c. 3. 1 Eliz. c. 4. And at last granted with the first fruits, towards the augmentation of the maintenance of poor clergymen. 1 Ann. c. 11. Collectors of this revenue are to be appointed by the King by letters patent, instead of the bishops; and an office is to be kept for management of the same, in some part of London or Westminster. 3 Geo. 1. c. 10. Tenets signify likewise a tax on the temporality. See the statutes of King Edw. 6. Queen Eliz. and King James. And vide tax and Black. Com. 1 V. 284, 308. 4 V. 106.

Tents, Robbing of, in fairs and markets, is felony, and punished as burglary. 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 9.

Tenure, (Tenura, from the Lat. Tenere) Is the manner whereby lands or tenements are holden; or the service that the tenant owes to his lord: And there can be no tenure without some service, because the service makes the tenure. 1 Inst. 1, 93. A tenure may be of houses, and land or tenements; but not of a rent, common, &c. All lands in the hands of a subject are held of some lord or landlord, by tenure or service: And all the lands and tenements in England are said to be holden either mediately or immediately of the King; and therefore he is summus dominus supra omnes. 2 Inst. 531.

Under the word tenure is included every holding of an inheritance; but the signification of this word, which is a very extensive one, is usually restrained by coupling other words with it; this is, sometimes, done by words which denote the duration of the tenant's estate: As if a man holds to himself and his heirs, it is called tenure in fee-simple. At other times the tenure is coupled with words pointing out the instrument by which an inheritance is held; thus, if the holding is by copy of court-roll, it is called tenure by copy of court-roll. At other times, this word is coupled with words that shew the principal service by which an inheritance is held: As where a man holds by knight's service, it is called tenure by knight's service. 5 New Abr. 34.

Tenure signifies the estate in the land; and tenures were anciently divided into the following, viz. Escuage, which was land held by the service of the shield, and by which the tenant was obliged to follow his lord into the wars at his own charge. Knight's service and chivalry, where lands were held of the King or mesne lord, to perform service in war, and which drew after it homage, escuage, wardship, &c. Burgage tenure, where land was holden of the lord of the borough, at a certain rent. Villengage a base tenure of lands, whereby the tenant was bound to do all inferior villanous services commanded by the lord. Grand serjeanty, a tenure of lands by honourary services at the King's coronation, &c. And petit serjeanty, where lands were held of the King to contribute yearly some small thing towards his wars. Frankalmoinage, a tenure by which land is held by ecclesiastical persons in free and perpetual alms. And foage tenure, where lands are holden by tenants to plough the land of their lord, and do other services of husbandry at their own expence; but this hath been turned into an yearly rent, for all manner of services, when it is called free foage.

Of these general ancient tenures, knight service, chivalry, escuage, petit serjeanty, villengage, &c. are taken away by stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. The common tenures at this day, are fee-simple, which is an absolute tenure of lands, to a man and his heirs for ever. Fee-tail, a limited fee to a person and the heirs of his body begotten, &c. By the Curtesy, where a man marries a woman seised of lands in fee-simple, &c. and hath issue by her born alive, after her death he shall hold the land during life. In dower, where a widow holds for her life the third part of her husband's land, whereof he was seised in fee. For life and years, where lands are held by tenants for those terms, on rents reserved. And copyhold tenure, a holding for lives or in fee, at the will of the lord, according to the custom of the manor, under divers services, &c. Vide the Heads, and see Fee and Soage. See farther as to ancient tenures Black. Com. 2 V. 59. and as to modern tenures, id. 78. and as to the feudal tenures, see Lord Lytt. Hist. Hen. 2. V. 2. 179—188.

Term, (Terminus) Signifies commonly the limitation of time or estate; as a lease for term of life, or years, &c. Bract. lib. 2.

Terminus qui Preterit, Writ of Entry ad. This is a writ for the reversioner, when the possession is withheld by the lessee or a stranger, after the determination of a lease for years. F. N. B. 201. Black. Com. 3 V. 183.

This writ is now disused, since the invention of ejectments.

Termor, (Tenens ex Termino) Is he that holds lands or tenements for term of years or life. Litt. 100. A termor for years cannot plead in assise like tenant of the freehold; but the special matter, viz. his lease for years, the reversion in the plaintiff, and that he is in possession, &c. Dyer 246. Jenk. Cent. 142. See Black. Com. 2 V. 142.

Terms, Are those spaces of time, wherein the courts of justice are open, for all that complain of wrongs or injuries, and seek their rights by course of law or action, in order to their redress; and during which, the courts in Westminster-hall sit and give judgments, &c. But the high court of parliament, the Chancery, and inferior courts, do not observe the terms; only the courts of King's Bench, the Common Pleas, and Exchequer, the highest courts at Common law. Of these terms there are four in every year, viz. Hilary Term, which begins the 23d of January, and ends the 12th of February; Easter-Term, that begins the Wednesday fortnight after Easter-Day, and ends the Monday next after Ascension-Day; Trinity-Term, which begins the Friday after Trinity Sunday, and ends the Wednesday fortnight after; and Michaelmas-Term, that begins the 6th of Nov. (if a week day) and ends the 28th of Nov. Each term has certain returns; as Hilary-Term has four, Easter hath five, Trinity four, and Michaelmas four: And by statute, Trinity-Term was abridged four returns; and Michaelmas-Term two returns; for those terms were formerly longer than now, till contracted by the statutes 32 H. 8. c. 21. and 16 Car. 1. c. 16.

There are four days in term, called the Effoin-Day; the day of exceptions; the day of returns of writs; and the day of appearance, called the Quarto die post: The term is said to begin on the Effoin Day, when one judge sits in each court of law at Westminster, to take and enter effoins; but the third day afterwards is the first day of the term, at which time the judges in all the courts sit to do the business of the term. 2 Lill. Abr. 569. All the terms in construction of law is accounted but as one day to many purposes; for a plea that is put in the last day of a term, is a plea of the first day of the term; and a judgment on the last day of term is as effectual as on the first day. Trin. 23 Car. B. R. See Wilson, Par. 1. fo. 37. And for this reason, the judges may alter and amend their judgments in the same term, &c. It has been held, that the courts sit not but in term, as to the giving of judgments: And the judges of B. R. and C. B. before Trinity Term 1651, did not sit longer in court than till one a clock upon the last day of term; because they would not encourage attorneys to neglect their client's business till the last day of term, as too commonly they do, to the toil of the court, and too much hurry in dispatch. Mich. 22 Car. 2. Lill. 91.

Terms have been adjourned, and returns of writs and process confirmed. 1 W. & M. Sess. 1. c. 4. Where there is a term intervening between the teste and return of a writ of Capias, &c. or when the term to which a suit is continued is adjourned, and the suit is not adjourned, it is a discontinuance, &c. 2 Hawk. 298.

The issuable terms are Hilary and Trinity-terms only; so called, because in them the issues are joined and records made up of causes, to be tried at the Lent and summer assizes, which immediately follow. 2 Lill. Abr. 568. By the Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 48. After Michaelmas day 1752, there shall only be four returns in Michaelmas-term, viz. The morrow of All Souls, the morrow of St. Martin, in eight days of St. Martin, and in fifteen days of St. Martin. And Michaelmas-term shall begin on the said morrow of All Souls, (except it be Sunday, and then on the morrow next after) for the keeping of effoins, &c. And full term shall begin on the fourth day of the said morrow of All Souls, (except it be Sunday, and then on the morrow next after.) And that for the more speedy proceedings in writs of dower unde nihil habet, and by writs of entry for common recoveries to be sued and prosecuted by writs of entry, or by writs of right of advowson, and in all other real actions, after Michaelmas 1752.

If any writ in any such action come in and be returnable in the Common Pleas on the morrow of All Souls, then day shall be given in fifteen days of St. Martin; if on on the morrow of St. Martin, then in eight days of St. Hilary; if in eight days of St. Martin, then fifteen days of St. Hilary; if in fifteen days of St. Martin, then on the morrow of the Purification; if in eight days of St. Hilary, then in eight days of the Purification; if in fifteen days of St. Hilary, then in fifteen days of Easter; if on the morrow of the Purification, then in three weeks from the day of Easter; if in eight days of the Purification, then in one month from the day of Easter; if in fifteen days of Easter, then in five weeks from the day of Easter; if in three weeks from the day of Easter, then on the morrow of the Ascension; if in one month from the day of Easter, then on the morrow of the Holy Trinity; if in five weeks from the day of Easter, then in eight days of the Holy Trinity; if on the morrow of the Ascension, then in fifteen days of the Holy Trinity; if on the morrow of the Holy Trinity, then in three weeks from the day of the Holy Trinity; if in eight days of the Holy Trinity, then on the morrow of all All Souls; if in fifteen days of the Holy Trinity, then on the morrow of St. Martin; if in three weeks of the Holy Trinity, then in eight days of St. Martin.

In writs of dower unde nihil habet after issue joined, fifteen days between the teste and return of the venire facias, and any other process for the trial shall be sufficient. And all writs having day from the fourth day of the morrow of the Ascension, to the morrow of the Holy Trinity shall be good, though there be no fifteen days between the teste and return. Special days and returns may be appointed by the judges in such cases as have been usual. The days of Assize in darrein presentment, and in a plea of quare impedit appointed by the Stat. of Marlebridge; and the days to be given in attain by Stat. 5 E. 3. and also in Stat. 23 H. 8. not being contrary to this act, shall be in force. Day for swearing the mayor of London ninth November, unless it be Sunday, and then the next day. The morrow of St. Martin yearly, appointed for nominating sheriffs in the Exchequer.

The terms in Scotland are Martinmas, Candlemas, Whitsuntide and Lanmas, at which times the court of Exchequer, &c. there is to be kept. Stat. 6 Ann. c. 6. And the terms of our universities for students, are different in time from the terms of the courts of law. See farther as to the original of our law terms, Black. Com. 3 V. 275. As to the essoign-day, id. 278. As to the first day of the term, Id. ibid. And as to the returns. Id. 277.

Terms of the Law, Are artificial or technical words and terms of art, particularly used in and adapted to the profession of the law. 2 Hawk. P. C. 239.

Terms for Payment of Rent, Or rent terms, the four quarterly feasts, upon which rent is usually paid. Cartular. Sti. Edmund. 238.

Terra, In all the surveys in Domesday register, is taken for arable land, and always so distinguished from the Praetium, &c. Kennet's Gloss.

Terra affirmata, Signifies land let to farm.

Terra Boscatia, Woody lands, according to an inquisition. 8 Car. 1.

Terra Culta, Land that is tilled or manured; as terra inculta is the contrary. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. pag. 500.

Terra debilis, Weak or barren ground. Inq. 22. R. 2.

Terra dominica vel indominicata, The demesne land of a manor. Cowell.

Terra Excultabilis, Such land as may be ploughed. Mon. Ang. tom. 1. p. 426.

Terra extendenda, Is a writ directed to the escheator, &c. willing him to enquire and find out the true yearly value of any land, &c. by the oath of twelve men, and to certify the extent into the Chancery, &c. Reg. of Writs, fo. 293.

Terra frusta, Fresh-land, or such as hath not been lately ploughed; likewise written Terra frisca. Mon. Ang. 2. par. f. 327.

Terra hydata, Was land subject to the payment of hydage, and the contrary was terra non hydata. Selden.

Terra lucrabilis, Land that may be gained from the sea, or inclosed out of a waste, to a particular use. Mon. Ang. 1 Par. f. 406.

Terra Normannorum, In the beginning of H. 3. such land in England as had been lately held by some noble Norman, who by adhering to the French King, or Dauphin, had forfeited his estate in this kingdom, which by this means became an escheat to the crown, was called Terra Normannorum, and restored, or otherwise disposed at the King's pleasure. Paroch. Anti. p. 197.

Terra nova, Is land newly allotted and converted from wood ground to arable, vel terra noviter concessa. Spelm.

Terra Putura, Land in forests held by the tenure of furnishing man's meat, hortic-meat, &c. to the keepers therein. See Putura.

Terra sabulosa, Gravelly or sandy ground. Inq. 10 Ed. 3. n. 3.

Terra bestia, Is used in old charters for land sown with corn. Cowell.

Terra watuabilis, Tillable land. Id. ib.

Terra warennata, Land that has the liberty of free warren. Rot. Parl. 21 Ed. 1.

Terrae boscales, Woody lands. Inq. 2. par. 8 Car. 1. num. 71.

Terrae testamentales, Lands that were held free from feudal services, in allodio, in socage, descendible to all the sons, and therefore called Gavel-kind, were devisable by will, and thereupon called Terrae testamentales, as the Thane who possessed them was said to be testamento dignus. See Sir Henry Spelman of Feuds, cap. 5.

Terrage, (Terragium.) Edward the third granted to John of Gaunt, and Blanch his wife, for their lives, quod sint quieti de thelonio, passagio, succagio, lastagio, tallagio, caruagio, priscagio, tichagio & terragio, which seems to be an exemption a precariis, viz. Boons of ploughing, reaping, &c. and perhaps from all land-taxes, or from money paid for digging and breaking the earth in fairs and markets. Cowell.

Terrat, Or Terrarium, (Terrarium, catalogus Terrarum) Is a land-roll, or survey of lands, either of a single person, or of a town; containing the quantity of acres, tenants names, and such like; and in the Exchequer, there is a terra of all the glebe-lands in England, made about 11 E. 3. Stat. 18 Eliz. cap. 17.

Terrarius, A Land holder, or one who possesses many farms of land. Leg. W. 1.

Terrarius Coenobialis, An officer in religious houses, whose office was to keep a terrier of all their estates, and to have the lands belonging to the houses exactly surveyed and registered; and one part of his office was to entertain the better sort of convent-tenants, when they came to pay their rents, &c. Hist. Dunelm.

Terre-tenant, Tertenant, (Terra Tenens.) Is he who hath the actual possession of the land: For example, a lord of a manor has a freeholder, who letteth out his freehold to another, to be possessed and occupied by him, such other is called the Tertenant. Wast. Symb. par. 2. Briton, cap. 29. In the case of a recognizance, statute or judgment, the heir is chargeable as tertenant, and not as heir; because by the recognizance or judgment, the heir is not bound, but the ancestor concedit that the money de terris, &c. levetur. 3 Rep. 12. Plea of tertenancy, in a Scire fac. &c. Vide Cro. Eliz. 872. Cro. Jac. 506. See Scire facias and Black. Com. 2 V. 91, 328.

Terris, Bonis & Catallis recuperandis post Purge-tionem, A writ for a clerk to recover his lands, goods and chattels formerly seized, after he had cleared himself of the felony of which he was accused, and delivered to his ordinary to be purged. Reg. Orig. 68.

Terris & Catallis tentis ultra debitum levatum, Is a judicial writ for the restoring of lands or goods to a debtor, that is distrained above the quantity of the debt. Reg. Judic. 38.

Terris libertandis, A writ lying for a man convicted by attain, to bring the record and process before the King, and take a fine for his imprisonment, and then to deliver him his lands and tenements again, and release him of the Strip and Waste. Reg. Orig. 232. It is also a writ for the delivery of lands to the heir, after homage and relief performed; or upon security taken that he shall perform them. Ibid. 293, 313.

Terran

Tertian, A measure of eighty-four gallons; so called because it is a third part of a tun. 1 R. 3. 13. 2 H. 6. c. 11.

Test. As to bring one to the test, is to bring him to a trial and examination, &c. By the act of King Cha. 2. commonly called the Test-act, all officers civil and military are to take the oaths and test; and if they neglect it, and execute any office within the words of that statute, being legally convicted thereof upon information, presentment, or indictment, in any of the courts at Westminster, or at the assizes, they shall forfeit 500 l. to be recovered by him who will sue for the same in any action of debt, &c. 25 Car. 2. c. 2. See Black. Com. 4 V. 57, 432.

Testa de Nevil, Is an ancient record in the custody of the King's remembrancer in the Exchequer, compiled by John de Nevil, a justice itinerant in the 18 & 24 of King Hien. 3. containing an account of lands held in grand serjeanty, with fees and escheats to the King, &c.

Testament, (Testamentum) Is thus defined by Plowden, Testamentum est testatio mentis, a testament is a witness of the mind: But Aulus Gellius, lib. 6. cap. 12. denies it to be a compound word, and saith, It is verbum simplex, as Calceamentum, Plaudamentum, &c. And therefore it may be thus better defined, Testamentum est ultime voluntatis iusta sententia, de eo quod quis post mortem suam fieri vult, &c. Of testaments there are two sorts, viz. a testament in writing, and a testament in words, which is called a Nuncupative testament, which is, when a man being sick, and for fear, lest death, want of memory, or speech, should come so suddenly upon him, that he should be prevented if he laid the writing of his testament, desires his neighbours and friends to bear witness of his last will, and then declares the same before them by words, which after his decease is proved by witnesses, and put in writing by the ordinary, and then stands in as good force as if it had at the first, in the life of the testator, been put in writing, except only for lands, which are only deviseable by a testament put in writing in the life of the testator. See Co. on Lit. lib. 2. c. 10. f. 167. Plowd. fol. 541. Paramore and Jurdley's case. Co. 6 Rep. Marquis of Winchester's case. Testament was anciently used (according to Spelman) pro scripto charta vel instrumento, quo prædictum rerumve aliarum transactio persequitur, sic dictum quod de ea re vel testimonium ferret vel testium nomina contineret. — Si quis contra hoc max. auctoritatis testamentum aliquod machinari impedimentum præsumpsit. Charta Croylandiæ ab Æthelbaldo Rege. Anno Domini 716. Covell. See Wills and Testaments, and Black. Com. 2 V. 10, 12, 373, 489, 499. 4 V. 417, 423.

Testamentary Causes. A species of causes belonging to the ecclesiastical jurisdiction. They were originally cognizable in the King's courts of Common-law, viz. the county courts, and afterwards transferred to the jurisdiction of the church by the favor of the crown, as a natural consequence of granting to the bishops the administration of intestate effects.

As observed by Lindewode, the ablest canonist of the fifteenth century, testamentary causes belong to the ecclesiastical courts "de consuetudine Angliæ, & suæ per consensu regio & suorum procerum in talibus ab antiquo concessio." Provincial, l. 3. c. 13. fol. 176. Black. Com. 3 V. 95, which vide.

Testamentary Guardian. By 12 Car. 2. c. 24. any father may by deed or will, dispose of the custody of his child, either born or unborn, to any person, except a popish recusant, either in possession or reversion, until such child attains the age of one and twenty years. The guardians so appointed are called guardians by statute or testamentary guardians. N. B. The power and reciprocal duty of a guardian and ward are the same, pro tempore, as that of a father and a child. Black. Com. 1 V. 462.

Testamentary Jurisdiction in Equity. For want of a power of discovering, at law, what rests only in the private knowledge of the party, courts of equity have acquired a concurrent jurisdiction with every other court, in all matters of account. As incident to accounts, they take a concurrent cognizance of the administration of the personal assets, consequently of debts, legacies, the distribution of the residue, and the conduct of executors and administrators. Black. Com. 3 V. 437.

Testamentary Jurisdiction in Spiritual Courts, See Testamentary Causes, and vide farther, Black. Com. 3 V. 97. 4 V. 414.

Testamento annexo, Administration cum. If a testator makes his will, without naming any executors, or if he names incapable persons, or if the executors named refuse to act; in any of these cases, the ordinary must grant administration cum testamento annexo, to some other person. Black. Com. 2 V. 503, 504.

Testator, (Lat.) He that makes a testament. See Swinburn of Wills and Testaments. And especially see a Dissertation of the probate of wills or testaments by the learned Sir Henry Spelman among his late remains, pag. 127.

Testatum, Is a writ in personal actions; where the defendant cannot be arrested upon a capias in the county where the action is laid, but is returned non est inventus by the sheriff; then this writ shall be sent out into any other county where such person is thought to be, or to have wherewith to satisfy: And this is termed a Testatum, by reason the sheriff hath testified that the defendant was not to be found in his bailiwick. Kitch. Ret. Writs, 287.

Teste. A word generally used in the last part of all writs; wherein the date is contained; which begin with these words, Teste meipso, &c. if it be an original writ; or teste the lord chief justice, &c. if judicial. There must be at least fifteen days between the teste and return of every process awarded from the King's Bench into any foreign county. Co. Litt. 134. See Writs.

Testimonial, Is a certificate under the hand of a justice of peace, testifying the place and time, when and where a soldier or mariner landed, and the place of his dwelling and birth unto which he is to pass. 39 Eliz. cap. 17. And formerly testimonials were to be given by mayors and constables to servants quitting their services, &c. 5 Eliz. cap. 4.

Testimonials of Clergy, Are necessary to be made by persons present, that a clergyman inducted to a benefice hath performed all things according to the act of uniformity; to evidence that the clerk hath complied with what the law requires on his institution and induction, which in some cases he shall be put to do. Count. Parf. Comp. 24, 26.

Testimoignes, Is French for Witnesses, and Testimoigne, Testimony. Law Fr. Dic.

Teston or Testoon, Commonly called Tester, a sort of money, which among the French did bear the value of 18d. but being made of brass lightly gilt with silver, in the reign of K. Hen. 8. it was reduced to 12d. and afterwards to 6d. Lownd's Ess. on Coins, pag. 22.

Textus, A text or subject of a discourse, and is mentioned by several authors to signify the New Testament; it was written in golden letters, and carefully preserved in the churches.

Hen. 8. And no fisherman shall cast any foil, gravel, or rubbish in the Thames; nor drive any piles in the said river whereby the common passage may be hindred, on the penalty of 10 l. Ord. 10 July 1763. And there are several ordinances of the Lord Mayor of London, &c. for regulating the fishing in the river Thames. Cit. Lib. 148. See Watermen, &c. Shares in the Thames water-works, how taxable. 30 Geo. 2. c. 3. sect. 53.

Thangage of the King, (Thanagium Regis,) Signified a certain part of the King's land or property, whereof the ruler or governor was called Thane. Covell.

Thane, (From the Sax. Thenian, ministrare,) Was the title of those who attended the English Saxon Kings in their courts, and who held their lands immediately of those Kings, and therefore in Domesday, they were promiscuously called thani & servientes Regis, though not long after the conquest the word was disused, and instead thereof, those men were called Barones Regis, who as to their dignity, were inferior to earls, and took place next after Bishops, Abbots, Barons and Knights. There were also thani minores, and those were likewise called barons: They were lords of manors, and had a particular jurisdiction within their limits, and over their own tenants in their courts, which to this day are called court-barons: But the word signifies sometimes a nobleman, sometimes a freeman, sometimes a magistrate, but more properly an officer or minister of the King. Edward King grete mine Biscoeps, and mine Eorles, and all mine Thegnes on that soiren, wber mine Prestes in Paulus minister habband land. Charta Edw. Conf. Pat. 18. H. 6. m. 9. per Inspect. Lamb. in his Exposition of Saxon words, verb. Thanus. And Skene de verbor. signif. saith, That it is a name of dignity, equal with the son of an earl. This appellation was in use among us after the Norman conquest, as appears by Domesday, and by a certain writ of William the First: Willielmus Rex salutet Hermannum episcopum, & Sterwinum, & Britwi, & omnes Thanos meos in Dorsetrensi pago amicaliter. MSS. de Abbotsbury. Camden says, They were enobled only by the office which they administered. Thanus Regis is taken for a baron. 1 Inst. fol. 5. 1. And in Domesday tenens, qui est caput manerii. See Mills de Nobilitate, fol. 132. The Saxon Thane was so called from Thenian, service; and in Latin minister, a ministrando. So that a Thane at first (in like manner as an earl) was not properly a title of dignity, but of service. But according to the degrees of service, some of greater estimation, some of less: So those that served the King in places of eminence, either in court, or commonwealth, were called Thani majores and Thani Regis. Those that served under them as they did under the King were called Thani minores, or the lesser Thanes. Corwell. See Spelman of Feuds, cap. 7.

Thane-Lands, Such lands as were granted by charter of the Saxon Kings to their Thanes; which were held with all immunities, except the threefold necessity of expeditions, repairs of castles, and mending of bridges. — Thanas signified also land under the government of a Thane. Skene.

Thascia, A certain sum of money or tribute imposed by the Romans on the Britons and their lands. Leg. H. 1. c. 78.

Theft, (Furtum) Is an unlawful felonious taking away of another man's moveable and personal goods, against the will of the owner; And this is divided into Theft simply so called, and Petit Theft; whereof the one is of goods above the value of twelve pence, and is felony; and the other under that value, called Larceny. Theft is also from the person, and in the presence of the owner, and in his absence, and either open or private Theft; the civil law judges open Theft to be satisfied in its punishment by the recompence of double: But the law of England adjudges both these offences felony. West. Sym. par. 2. Vide Larceny. Robbery. And Black. Com. 4 V. 229, 237, 413.

Theft-bote, (From the Sax. Theof, i. e. Fur, & Bote, compensatio) Is the receiving of a man's goods again from a Thief, after stolen, or other amends not to prosecute the felon, and to the intent the Thief may escape; which is an offence punishable with fine and imprisonment, &c. H. P. C. 130. See Compounding of Felony, Misprison of Felony, and Black. Com. 4 V. 133.

Thelonium, or Wyebe essendi quieti de Thelonio, Is a writ lying for the citizens of any city, or burghesses of any town, that have a charter or prescription to free them from toll, against the officers of any town or market, who would constrain them to pay toll of their merchandize contrary to their said grant or prescription. F. N. B. fol. 226.

Thelonmannus, The toll-man, or officer who received toll. Cartular Abbat. Glasfow. MS. 446.

Thelonio rationabili habendo pro dominiis habentibus dominica Regis ad armam, Is a writ that lies for him that hath of the King's demesne in fee-farm to recover reasonable toll of the King's tenants there, if his demesne hath been accustomed to be tolled. Reg. Orig. fol. 87.

Third Night Awn-hinde, (trium noctium hospes) By the laws of St. Edward the Confessor, if any man lay a Third Night in an inn, he was called a Third Night Awn-hinde, for whom his best was answerable, if he committed an offence: The first night Forman-Night or Uncuth, he was reckoned a stranger; the second night, Twa-Night, a guest; and the third night, an Agen-hinde, or Awn-hinde, a domestick. BraB. lib. 3.

Third-penny, (Denarius Tertius) See Denarius Tertius Comitatus.

Thistle-take. It was a custom within the manor of Halton, in the county palatine of Chester, that if in driving beasts over the common, the driver permits them to graze or take but a thistle, he shall pay a half-penny a beast to the lord of the fee. And at Fiskerton in Nottinghamshire, by ancient custom, if a native or a cottager killed a swine above a year old, he paid to the lord a penny, which purchase of leave to kill a hog was also called thistle-take. Reg. Priogat. de Thurgarton. Cowell.

Thokes, Fish with broken bellies, 22 E. 4. cap. 2. which by the said statute are not to be mixt or packed with sale-fish.

Thorp, Threp, Trop, Either in the beginning or end of names of places, signifies a street or village, as Aldeftrop: From the Sax. Thorpa, villa, vicus.

Thrave of Corn, (Trava bladi, from the Saxon Thrauv, i. e. a bundle, or the British drava, i. e. twenty-four) In most parts of England consists of twenty-four sheaves, or four shocks, six sheaves to every shock 2 H. 6. cap. 2. yet in some counties they reckon but twelve twelve sheaves to the thraue. King Athelstan, anno 923, gave by his charter to St. John of Bowerly's church, four thraues of corn from every plough-land in the East-Riding of Yorkshire. Cowell.

Thread, Thread, outneal, to what duties liable on importation, 4 Will. & M. c. 5. Sisters thread exempt from the two third subsidies, 7 Ann. c. 7.

Threatening Letters. By 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. Amended by 27 Geo. 2. c. 15. Knowingly to send any Letter without a name, or with a fictitious name, demanding money, venison, or any other valuable thing, or threatening (without any demand) to kill or fire the house of any person, is made felony without benefit of clergy. This offence was formerly high treason, by the stat. 8 Hen. 5. c. 6.

Threats. Threats and menaces of bodily hurt, through fear of which a man's business is interrupted, a species of injury to individuals. A menace alone, without a consequent inconvenience, makes not the injury; but to complete the wrong, there must be both of them together. The remedy for this is in pecuniary damages, to be recovered by action of trespass vi et armis, this being an inchoate, though not an absolute violence. Black. Com. 3 V. 120. As to threats or menaces where bodily harm is justly feared. See Security for the Peace, &c.

Threats of Accusation, to extort Money. Sending letters, threatening to accuse any person of a crime punishable with death, transportation, pillory, or other infamous punishment, with a view to extort from him any money or other valuable chattels, is punishable by statute 30 Geo. 2. c. 24. at the discretion of the court, with fine, imprisonment, pillory, whipping, or transportation for seven years.

Threngus. See Drenches. Quia vero non erant ad hoc tempore Regis Willielmi milites in Anglia, sed Threngus, præcipit Rex ut de eis milites fierent ad defendendam terram, fecit autem Lanfrancus Threngos suos milites, &c. Somner's Gavelk. pag. 123, 210. They were vassals, but not of the lowest degree of those who held lands of the chief lord; the name was imposed by the conqueror; for when one Edward Sharnbourn of Norfolk, and others, were ejected out of their lands, they complained to the Conqueror, insisting that they were always on his side, and never opposed him, which upon enquiry he found to be true, and therefore he commanded that they should be restored to their lands, and for ever after be called drenches. Spelm.

Thrimfa, (Sax. Thrim. Three) Was an old piece of money of three shillings, according to Lambard, or the third part of a shilling, being a German coin passing for 4 d. Selden's Tit. Hon. p. 604.

Ticat, A piece of money in China, of two pounds, sixteen shillings, and three pence value. March. Dist.

Tidesmen, Are certain officers of the custom-house, appointed to watch or attend upon ships, till the customs are paid; and they are so called, because they go aboard the ships at their arrival in the mouth of the Thames, and come up with the tide.

Tierce, (Fr. Tiers, i. e. a third) Is a measure of wine, oil, &c. containing the third part of a pipe, or forty-two gallons. Stat. 32 H. 8. c. 14.

Tigh, (Sax. Teag) A close or inclosure mentioned in ancient charters; which word is still used in Kent in the same sense. Chart. Becl. Cant.

Titha, (Sax.) Signifies an accusation in the laws of K. Canutus.

Tiles. The earth for tiles is to be digged and cast up before the first of November yearly, and to be stirred and turned before the first of February following, and be wrought before the first of March: And every common tile must be in length ten inches and a half, in breadth, six inches and a quarter, and thickness half an inch and half a quarter; roof tiles are to be thirteen inches in length, and of the same thickness as the common tiles, &c. And if any persons put to sale any tiles contrary hereto, they shall forfeit double value, and be fined. Stat. 17 Ed. 4. c. 4. By a late statute, pan tiles must be thirteen inches and a half long, nine inches and a half broad, and half an inch thick, &c. and the penalty for making faulty bricks and tiles is 20 s. for every thousand so made. Stat. 12 Geo. 1. c. 35. See Bricks.

Tillage, (Agricultura) Is of great account in law, as being very profitable to the commonwealth; and therefore arable land hath the preference before meadows, pastures, and all other ground whatsoever: And so careful is our law to preserve it, that a bond or condition to restrain tillage, or sowing of lands, &c. is void. 11 Rep. 53. There are divers ancient statutes for encouragement of tillage and husbandry, as the 4 Hen. 7. 25 Hen. 8. 33 Hen. 8. 5 & 35 Eliz. 21 Jac. 1. 15 Car. 2.

Tilting. Where one kills another in fighting at tilting, by the King's command, the accident is excusable: But if it be by tilting without the command of the King; or by parrying with naked swords, covered with buttons at the points, &c. which cannot be used without manifest hazard of life, it will be felony of manslaughter. H. P. C. 31.

Timber, Is wood fitted for building, or other such like use; and in a legal sense extends to oak, ash and elm, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 649. Lessees of land may not take timber trees felled by the wind; for thereby their special property ceases. 1 Keb. 691. Timber, &c. stolen, is to be severed from the soil to make it criminal. See Yelv. 152.

As to the importation, &c. of timber, see the several statutes of 12 Car. 2. c. 18. 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. 2 W. & M. sess. 2. c. 4. 6 Geo. 1. c. 15.

Against cutting up, barking or destroying of timber: 1 Geo. 1. stat. 2. c. 48. 6 Geo. 1. c. 16.

Oak timber, (except for building) to be felled in April, May and June, 1 Jac. 1. c. 22. s. 20.

By 6 Geo. 3. c. 36. Any one who shall, in the night-time, lop, top, cut down, break, throw down, bark, burn, or otherwise spoil or destroy, or carry away, any oak, beech, ash, elm, fir, chestnut, or asp, timber-tree, or other tree or trees standing for timber, or likely to become timber, without the consent of the owner; or shall, in the night-time, pluck up, dig up, break, spoil or destroy, or carry away, any root, shrub, or plant, roots, shrubs, or plants, of the value of five shillings, and which shall be growing, standing, or being in the garden ground, nursery ground, or other inclosed ground, of any person or persons whomsoever; shall be deemed and construed to be guilty of felony, and the offenders may be transported. Those who are assisting, and purchasers, knowing the things to be stolen, shall be liable to the same punishment, as if they had stolen the same.

By 6 Geo. 3. c. 48. Every person convicted of damaging, destroying, or carrying away any timber-tree or trees, or trees likely to become timber, without consent of the owner, &c. shall forfeit for the first offence not exceeding 20 l. with the charges attending: and on non-payment, are to be committed for not more than 12, nor less than 6 months; for the second offence, a sum not exceeding 30 l. and on non-payment, are to be committed for not more than 18, nor less than 12 months; and for the third offence are to be transported for 7 years.

All oak, beech, chestnut, wallnut, ash, elm, cedar, fir, asp, lime, sycamore, and birch trees, shall be deemed and taken to be timber-trees within the meaning of the act. Persons convicted of plucking up, spoiling, or taking away, any root, shrub, or plant, out of private cultivated cultivated ground, shall forfeit for the first offence, any sum not exceeding 40 s. with the charges; for the second offence a sum not exceeding 5 l. with the charges; and for the third offence are to be transported for seven years. Persons hindering, or attempting to prevent seizing offenders, forfeit 10 l. to the person convicting them; and if not paid down, to be committed to hard labour, not exceeding six months. Vide the statute, and Black. Com. 2 V. 281. 4 V. 233.

Timberlode. A service by which tenants were to carry timber felled from the woods to the lord's house. Thorn's Chron.

Time and Place. Are to be set forth with certainty in a declaration; but time may be only a circumstance when a thing was done, and not be made part of the issue, &c. 5 Mod. 286. It has been held, that an impossible time is no time; and where a day or time is appointed for the payment of money, and there is no such, the money may be due presently. Hob. 189. 5 Rep. 22. If no certain time is implied by law for the doing of any thing, and there is no time agreed upon by the parties, then the law doth allow a convenient time to the party for the doing thereof, i. e. as much as shall be adjudged reasonable, without prejudice to the doer of it. 2 Lill. Abr. 572. In some Cases one hath time during his life for the performance of a thing agreed, if he be not hastened to do it by request of the party for whom it is to be done; but if in such case he be hastened by request, he is obliged to do it in convenient time, after such request made. Hil. 22 Car. 1 B. R. Time taken generally, hath also its time: And what is done in time of peace, the law doth more countenance than in time of war; in case of bar of an entry, or claim by fine, and of descents, &c. 1 Inst. 249. 10 Rep. 82. 4 Shep. Abr. 6. Regularly, there cannot be any fraction in a day, and therefore the proceedings were set aside, where it appeared the principal surrendered on the day of the return of the scire facias. Time limited, For the prosecution of actions. Vide Limitation.

Tincl ic Roy, (Fr.) the King's hall, wherein his servants used to dine and sup. 13 R. 2. c. 3.

Tineman, or Tienman, Was a prtty officer in the forest, who had the nocturnal care of vert and venison, and other servile employments. Constitut. Forestæ Canuti Regis, cap. 4.

Tinet, (Tinettum) is used for brushwood and thorns, to make and repair hedges: In Heresfordshire to tine a gap in a hedge is to fill it up with thorns, that cattle may not pass through it. Chart. 21 Hen. 6.

Tinewald, The parliament or annual convention of the people of the Isle of Man, of which this account is given: The governor and officers of that island, do usually call the twenty-four keys, being the chief commons thereof, especially once every year, viz. upon Midsummer-day at St. John's Chapel to the court kept there, called the Tinewald Court; where, upon a hill near the said chapel, all the inhabitants of the island stand round about, and in the plain adjoining, and hear the laws and ordinances agreed upon in the chapel of St. John, which are published and declared unto them; and at this solemnity the lord of the island sits in a chair of state with a royal canopy over his head, and a sword held before him, attended by the several degrees of the people, who sit on each side of him, &c. King's Descript. Is. of Man.

Tinkermen, Those fishermen who destroyed the young fry on the river Thames, by nets and unlawful engines, till suppressed by the mayor and citizens of London. Of which, see Stow's Survey of London, p. 18.

Tinpeny, A tribute so called, usually paid for the liberty of digging in tin mines, from the Sax. Tinnen, Stannus, & Penig. Denarius, according to Du Fresne: But some writers say it is a customary payment to the tithingman from the several friburghs, as tidingpeny signified the money paid the sheriff by the several tithings; for that tin is only a contraction of ten, and means the number ten. It is mentioned in several places in the Monasticon.——Non tributa, non tethingpeny, non tinpeny, exigat. Mon. Angl. Tom. 1. p. 419.

Tipstuffs, Officers appointed by the Marshal of the King's Bench, to attend upon the judges with a kind of rod or staff tipped with silver, who take into their custody all prisoners either committed, or turned over by the judges at their chambers, &c. See Baſon. Stat. 1 R. 2.

Tithes, (Decimæ, from the Sax. Teotba, i. e. tenth,) In some of our law books are briefly defined to be an ecclesiastical inheritance, or property in the church, collateral to the estate of the lands thereof: But in others they are more fully defined to be a certain part of the fruit, or lawful increase of the earth, beasts, men's labours, which in most places, and of most things, is the tenth part, which by the law, hath been given to the ministers of the gospel, in recompence of their attending their office. 11 Co. Rep. 13. Dyer 84.

1. Of the origin of tithes.
2. Of what tithes are in general due; and where personal tithes are due.
3. Of what predial tithes are due; and of the tithes of agistment, corn, hay, and wood.
4. Of what mixed tithes are due.
5. Of recovering small tithes in a summary way; and of recovering tithes due from quakers.
6. Of particular things for which tithes are paid, and for which not, in alphabetical order, for the ease of the reader.

1. Of the origin of tithes.

Bishop Barlow, Selden, father Paul, and others have observed, that neither tithes nor ecclesiastical benefices, (which are correlative in their nature) were ever heard of for many ages in the christian church, or pretended to be due to the christian priesthood; and, as that bishop affirms, no mention is made of tithes in the grand codex of canons, ending in the year 451, which, next to the bible, is the most authentick book in the world; and that it thereby appears, during all that time, both churches and churchmen were maintained by free gifts and oblations only. Barlow's Remains, p. 169. Selden of Tithes 82. See Watson's Compleat Incumbent. p. 3, 4, &c.

And Mr. Selden has shewn us, that tithes were not introduced here in England, till towards the end of the eighth Centery, i. e. about the year 786, when parishes and ecclesiastical benefices came to be settled, for, as is said, tithes and ecclesiastical benefices being correlative, the one could not exist without the other; for whenever any ecclesiastical person had any portion of tithes granted to him out of certain lands, this naturally constituted the benefice; the granting of the tithes of such a manor or parish, being in fact, a grant of the benefice; as a grant of the benefice did imply a grant of the tithes: And thus the relation between patrons and incumbents was analogous to that of lord and tenant by the feudal law. Selden of Tithes, 86, &c.

About the year, 794, Offa, King of Merria, (the most potent of all the Saxon Kings of his time in this island,) made a law, whereby he gave unto the church the tithes of all his kingdom, which the historians tell us was done to expiate for the death of Ethelbert, King of the East Angles, who in the year preceding he had caused basely to be murdered. But that tithes were before paid in England by way of offerings, according to the ancient usage and decrees of the church, appears from the canons of Egbert, archbishop of York, about the year 750. And from an epistle of Boniface, archbishop of Mentz, which he wrote to Cuthbert, archbishop of Canterbury about the same time; and from the seventeenth canon of the general council held for the whole kingdom at Chalcuth, in the year 787. But this law of Offa, was that which first gave the church a civil right in them in this land, by way of property and inheritance, and enabled the clergy clergy to gather and recover them as their legal due, by the coercion of the civil power. Yet this establishment of Offa reached no further than the kingdom of Mercia, over which Offa reigned, until Ethelwulf, about sixty years after, enlarged it for the whole realm of England. Prideaux on Tithes 166, 167.

It is said, tithes, oblations, &c. were originally the voluntary gifts of christians, and that there was not any canon before that of the fourth council of Lateran, anno Dom. 1215, that even supposed tithes to be due of common right. Wilson par. 2. fo. 182.

2. Of what tithes are in general due; and where personal tithes are due.

Tithes are due either de jure, or by custom: All tithes, which are due de jure, arise from such fruits of the earth as renew annually; or from the profit that accrues from the labour of a man. Hence it follows, that such tithes can never be part of, but must always be collateral to, the land from which they arise. 11 Rep. 13, 14. Priddle v. Napier.

Nay, tithes due de jure are so collateral to every kind of land, that if a lease is made of the glebe belonging to a rectory, with all the profits and advantages thereof; and there is besides a covenant, that the rent to be paid shall be in full satisfaction of every kind of exaction, and demand, belonging to the rectory; yet, as the glebe is not expressly discharged of tithes, the lessee shall be liable to the payment thereof. 11 Rep. 13, 14. Priddle v. Napier. 1 Roll. Abr. 655. pl. 1. Cro. Eliz. 162, 261. Cro. Car. 362.

No tithe is de jure of the produce of a mine, or of a quarry; because this is not a fruit of the earth renewing annually; but is the substance of the earth, and has perhaps been so for a great number of years. F. N. B. 53. Bro. Dism. pl. 18. 2 Inst. 651. 1 Roll. Abr. 637. Cro. Eliz. 277.

No tithe is due de jure of any thing (generally) which is part of the soil, and does not renew annually, but may by custom. Vide 2 Vern. 46. 1 Roll. Abr. 637. pl. 5. 2 Mod. 77. 1 Mod. 35. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. S. pl. 7. 8.

No tithes are due de jure of houses; for tithes are only due de jure of such things as renew from year to year. 11 Rep. 16. Graunt's case. But houses in London are, by decree, which was confirmed by an act of parliament, made liable to the payment of tithes, 2 Inst. 659. 37 H. 8. c. 2. And before this decree, houses in London were by custom liable to pay tithes; the quantum to be paid being thereby only settled, as to such houses for which there was no customary payment. 2 Inst. 659. Hard. 116. Gilb. Eq. Rep. 193, 194. There is likewise in most ancient cities, and boroughs, a custom to pay tithes for houses; without which there would be no maintenance in many parishes for clergy. 11 Rep. 16. Graunt's case. Bunb. 102.

It was held by three barons of the Exchequer, Pries, Montague, and Page, contrary to the opinion of Bury Chief Baron, that two tithes may be due of the same thing, one de jure, the other by custom. Bunb. 43. Earl of Scarborough v. Hunter.

Tithes are of three kinds, personal, predial, and mixt. Such tithes as arise from the profit of the personal labour of a man, in the exercise of any art, trade or employment, are called personal tithes. 2 Inst. 649.

By the stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13 par. 7. Common day labourers are exempted from the payment of personal tithes. No personal tithes are due from servants in husbandry; for by their labour the tithes of many other things are increased. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 1. It is now settled, by a decree of the house of Lords, upon an appeal from a decree of the court of Exchequer, that only personal tithes are due from the occupier of a corn mill. 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 366. Newt. v. Chamberlain, 2 Will. Rep. 463.

The stat. 9 Ed. 2. stat. 1. c. 5. (as to occupiers of mills, paying tithes,) provides, that new erected mills shall be liable to the payment of tithes: But, as nothing therein is said concerning ancient mills there can be no doubt, that such ancient mills as before the making of this statute were liable to pay tithes, continued afterwards to be liable, 12 Mod. 243. Hart. v. Hale. 3 Bulst. 212.

No personal tithe is due of the profit which a man receives without personal labour, or of the profit which one man receives from the labour of another. 1 Roll. Abr. 656. pl. 1. pl. 2. 2 Inst. 621, 639. If a man lets a ship to a fisherman, no personal tithe is due of the money received for the use of such ship; because this is a profit without personal labour. 1 Roll. Abr. 656. n. pl. 2. Vide 1 Roll. Abr. 656. n. pl. 3. 2 Bulst. 141.

3. Of what predial tithes are due; and of the tithes of agistment, corn, hay, and wood.

Such tithes, as arise immediately from the fruits of the earth, as from corn, hay, hemp, hops; and all kinds of fruits, seeds and herbs, are called predial tithes. 2 Inst. 649. They are so called, because they arise immediately from the fruits of the farm, or earth. 2 Inst. 647. By the ecclesiastical law many things are liable to the payment of predial tithes, which by the Common law are not so. 2 Inst. 621. 4 Mod. 344.

The design under this head, is to shew what things are liable by the Common law to pay predial tithes.

In doing this, it will appear, that some things, which are in the general exempted therefrom, become by custom liable to the payment of predial tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 637. E. pl. 2. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. S. pl. 7. pl. 8.

It will also appear, that divers things, which are in the general liable thereto, are under particular circumstances exempted from the payment of such tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl. 11. Cro. Eliz. 475. Freem. 335. 12 Mod. 235.

But wherever any fraud is used, to bring a thing under those circumstances, by reason of which it would, if it had come fairly under them, have been exempted from the payment of predial tithes, it is by such fraud rendered liable thereto. Cro. Eliz. 475. Freem. 335.

As it would be tedious, to enumerate all the things which are liable to predial tithes, only those shall be mentioned, concerning the tithes of which some question has arisen; but, from such as will be mentioned, it may be easily collected of what other things predial tithes are due.

Agistment. Agisting, in the strict sense of the word, means the depasturing of a beast the property of a stranger: But this word is constantly used, in the books, for depasturing the beast of an occupier of land, as well as that of a stranger. 5 New Abr. 53. An occupier of land is not liable to pay tithe for the pasture of horses, or other beasts, which are used in husbandry in the parish, in which they are depastured: Because the tithe of corn is by their labour increased. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 2. pl. 3. pl. 6. pl. 7. Cro. Eliz. 446. Ld. Raym. 130. But if horses or other beasts are used in husbandry out of the the parish, in which they are depastured, an agistment tithe is due for them. 7 Mod. 114. Harrow's case. Ld. Raym. 130.

It seems to be the better opinion, that no tithe is due for the pasture of a saddle horse, which an occupier of land keeps for himself or servants to ride upon. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. pl. 4. Cro. Jac. 430. Bulst. 171. Bunb. 3. No tithe is due for the pasture of milk cattle, which are milked in the parish, in which they are depastured; because tithe is paid of the milk of such cattle. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 2. Ld. Raym. 130. Cro. Eliz. 446.

Milk cattle, which are reserved for calving, shall pay no tithe for their pasture whilst they are dry: But, if they are afterwards sold, or milked in another parish, an agistment is due for the time they were dry. Hart. 100. Ld. Raym. 130. No tithe is due, from an occupier of land; for the pasture of young cattle, reared to be used in husbandry, or for the pail. Cro. Eliz. 476. Sheringb v. Fleetwood. But, if such young beasts are sold, before they come to such perfection as to be fit for husbandry, or before they give milk, an agistment tithe must be paid for them. Hart. 86. Woolmerston's case.

An occupier of land is liable to an agistment tithe, for all such cattle as he keeps for sale. Cro. Eliz. 446, 476. Jenk.

Jenk. 28. pl. 6. Cro. Car. 237. Shew. P. C. 192. Vide Cro. Jac. 430. 1 Roll. Abr. 647. pl. 14.

But if any cattle, which have neither been used in husbandry, nor for the pail, are, after being kept some time, killed, to be spent in the family of the occupier of the land on which they were depastured, no tithe is due for their pasture. Jenk. 281. pl. 6. Cro. Eliz. 446, 476. Cro. Car. 237. It is in general true, that an agistment tithe is due, for depasturing any sort of cattle the property of a stranger. Cro. Eliz. 276. Cro. Jac. 276. Bunb. 1. Freem. 329. No tithe is due for the cattle, either of a stranger or an occupier, which are depastured in grounds, that have in the same year paid tithe of hay. Bunb. 10, 79. Poph. 142. 2 Roll. Rep. 191.

No agistment tithe is due for such beasts, either of a stranger or an occupier, as are depastured on the head lands of ploughed fields: Provided that these are not wider than is sufficient to turn the plough and horses upon. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 19. No tithe is due for such cattle as are depastured upon land, that has the same year paid tithes of corn. Bro. Dism. 18. 1 Mod. 216. If land, which has paid tithe of corn in one year, is left unsown the next year, no agistment is due for such land; because, by this lying fresh, the tithe of the next crop of corn is increased. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. pl. 9. But if land, which has paid tithe of corn, is suffered to lie fallow longer than by the course of husbandry is usual, an agistment tithe is due for the beasts depastured upon such land. Shew. Abr. 1008.

As the question, whether an agistment tithe is due for sheep, does not seem to be quite settled, it will not be amiss to refer to the principal cases, in which this has been agitated, which are, 1 Roll. Rep. 63. pl. 7. Mascul v. Price, Mich. 12. Jac. 1. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. pl. 8. Poph. 197. Cro. Car. 207. 1 Roll. Abr. 647. pl. 13. Bunb. 90. Gilb. Rep. in Equity 231. Bunb. 313.

Agistment tithe, is a small tithe. Wilson, par. 1. fo. 170.

Corn. It is laid down in some books, that no tithe is due of the rakings of corn involuntarily scattered. 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl. 11. Cro. Eliz. 278. Freem. 335. Moor 278. But, if more of any sort of corn is fraudulently scattered, than, if proper care had been taken, would have been scattered, tithe is due of the rakings of such corn. Cro. Eliz. 475. Freem. 335. And it has been said by Holt, Chief Justice, that tithe is due of the rakings of all corn, except such as is bound up in sheaves. 12 Mod. 235. No tithes are due of the stubbles left in corn fields, after mowing or reaping the corn. 2 Inst. 261. 1 Roll. Abr. 640. pl. 14.

Hay. Tithe of hay is to be paid, although beasts of the plough or pail, or sheep are to be foddered with such hay. Cro. Jac. 47. Webb v. Warner. 1 Roll. Abr. 650. pl. 12. 12 Mod. 497. But no tithe is due of hay grown upon the headlands of ploughed grounds, provided that such headlands are not wider than is sufficient to turn the plough and horses upon. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 19. It is laid down in one old case, that if a man cuts down grass, and, while it is in the swathes, carries it away and gives it to his plough cattle, not having sufficient sustenance for them otherwise, no tithe is due thereof. 1 Roll. Abr. 645. Crawley v. Wells, Mich. 9 Car. 1. And in a modern case, the court of Exchequer seemed to be of opinion, that no tithe is due of vetches or clover, cut green, and given to cattle in husbandry. Bunb. 279. Hayes v. Dowse, Hil. 3 Geo. 2. But in another case, some years before this last case, it was held, that the right to tithe of hay accrues upon mowing the grass, and that the subsequent application of this, while it is in grass, or when it is made into hay, shall not, although beasts of the plough or pail are fed with it, take away this right. 12 Mod. 498. And the doctrine of this last case coincides with that of an old case; in which it was held, that tares cut green, and given to beasts of the plough, may by special custom be exempted from the payment of tithes; from whence it follows, that such tares are not exempted de jure. 12 Mod. 498. Selby v. Bank, Pasch. 13 W. 3.

It is laid down in some books, that no tithe is due of aftermowth hay; because tithe can only be due once in the same year from the same land. F. N. B. 53. Bro.

Dism. pl. 16. 2 Inst. 262. 11 Rep. 16. Cro. Jac. 42. Ld. Raym. 243. But it is held in other books, that tithe is due of aftermowth hay. 1 Roll. Abr. 64. pl. 11. Cro. Eliz. 660. Cro. Jac. 116. Cro. Car. 403. 12 Mod. 498. Bunb. 10. And the principle, upon which the doctrine that no tithe is due of aftermowth hay is founded, is denied in some modern cases.

In some of these it is laid down, that tithes shall be paid of divers crops grown upon the same land in the same year. Bunb. 19. Benson v. Watkins, Hil. 3 Geo. 1. Bunb. 314. Swansea v. Digby, Hil. 5. eo. 2.

In others it is held, wherever there is in the same year a new increase from the same thing, tithe is due. Bunb. 9. Baker v. Sweet, Mich. 8 Geo. 1. Gilb. Rep. in Eq. 231. Coleman v. Baker, Pasch. 12 Geo. 1.

Wood. Tithe of wood is not due of common right; because wood does not renew annually: But it was, in very ancient times, paid in many places by custom. 2 Inst. 642. 12 Mod. 111. Salk. 656. Comb. 404. Bunb. 61.

A constitution was made, in the seventeenth year of the reign of Edward the Third, by John Stratford, archbishop of Canterbury, that tithes shall be paid, within this province, of silva cadua. 2 Inst. 642. Palm. 37, 38.

Several petitions having been presented to the King, complaining of the clergy for taking tithe of grofs wood and underwood, by virtue of this constitution; at length, a statute was made in these words: "At the complaint of the Great men and Commoners, shewing by their petition, that when they sell their grofs wood, of the age of 20 or 40 years, and of a greater age, to merchants, to their own profit, and to the aid of the King in his wars, the parsons and vicars of Holy church do implead and trouble the said merchants, in court christian, for the tithe of the said wood, under the denomination of silva cadua, by the reason of which they cannot sell their wood for the real value, to the great damage of themselves and the realm; it is ordained and established, that a prohibition in this case shall be granted, and upon the same an attachment, as it hath hitherto been." 45 Ed. 3. c. 3.

From the petitions and answers, from this statute, and from books of the best authority, it appears plainly, that no tithe of grofs wood was due de jure at the Common law; and that the demand thereof as such by virtue of the constitution made by the archbishop, was an encroachment. 2 Inst. 642. 45 Ed. 3. c. 3. Plowd. 470. Bro. Paroch. pl. 1. Cro. Jac. 100.

After the making of this statute, prohibitions were constantly granted to suits instituted in spiritual courts for tithes of grofs wood. But two questions often arose, What is grofs wood? And of what age grofs wood must be before it is exempted from the payment of tithe? 2 Inst. 643, 644, 645.

For the putting an end to these, it hath been long settled, that by grofs wood is not meant small wood, nor large wood, but such wood as is generally, or by the custom of a particular part of the country, used as timber; and that all such wood, if of the age of 20 years, is exempt from the payment of tithe. 2 Inst. 642, 643. Cro. Eliz. 1. 12 Mod. 524. Bunb. 127. Oaks, alders, and elms, being universally used as timber, it has been always held, that such trees, if of the age of 20 years, are grofs wood. 2 Inst. 642. It hath been held, upon great deliberation, notwithstanding what is laid down to the contrary in Plowd. 470, that a horn-beam tree, if of the age of 20 years, is grofs wood; because this is used in building and repairing. 2 Inst. 643. It has for the same reason been held, that an aspen tree, of the age of 20 years, is grofs wood. Ibid.

Tithes are not in the general due of beach, birch, hazel, willow, fallow, alder, maple, or white-thorn trees, or of any fruit trees, of whatsoever age they are: Because these are not timber. Plowd. 470. Cro. Eliz. 477. 1 Cro. Jac. 190. 1 Roll. Abr. 640. pl. 5. pl. 6. Brownl. 94. But, if the wood of any of these trees is used in a particular part of the country, where timber is scarce, in building and repairing, no tithe is due of such wood, if of the age of 20 years, in that part of the country. Hob. 219. Brownl. 94. It is laid down in several old books, that, if a timber tree, after it is of the age of 20 years, decays so as to be unfit to be used in building, no tithe is due due of the wood of this tree; because it was once privileged. 11 Rep. 48. Cro. Eliz. 477. Cro. Jac. 100. 1 Roll. Abr. 640. pl. 2.

But the contrary is laid down in some other books.

In two of these it is laid down, that, if the wood of a coppice has been usually felled for firing, such wood shall pay tithe, altho' it stand till it be 40 years of age. Sid. 300. 1 Lev. 189. And in another it is laid down, that, if the wood of a timber-tree is sold for firing, it is, altho' the tree was of the age of 20 years, liable to pay tithe. Bunb. 99. Greenaway v. The Earl of Kent. The reporter of this last case mentions four others, in which the same had been held; and says, that it was in one of them laid down, that the wood of timber-trees is only exempted from the payment of tithe, on the account of its being used in building. Buckle v. Vanacre.

The doctrine, however, of the old books is confirmed by a very late case in the court of Chancery. A bill being brought for tithe of the loppings of timber-trees, which had been sold for firing, it was insisted that this wood, which would otherwise have been exempted from the payment of tithes, was liable thereto, because it was sold to be used for firing; and the cases just now cited were relied upon: But the bill was dismissed; and by Hardwicke Chancellor, in the case in 1 Lev. 189. and Sid. 300. the wood in question was coppice wood, which had been usually felled for firing; and such wood, of of whatever age it is, is always titheable. The case of Greenaway and the earl of Kent, is quite a singular one, and is not law; for in the case of Bibbs and Huxley, Hill. 11 Geo. 1. it was agreed, that no tithe is due of the wood of a timber tree, which has been once privileged from the payment of tithe, altho' such wood is sold to be used for firing. MS. Rep. Walton v. Tryon, Mich. 25 Geo. 2.

It is laid down in divers books, that, if a timber-tree of the age of 20 years is lopped, no tithe shall be paid of the loppings altho' they are not of 20 years growth. for that the tree, which is privileged, shall privilege the loppings. Bro. Dism. pl. 14. 11 Rep. 4. Cro. Eliz. 4. Godb. 175. 1 Roll. Abr. 640. pl. 3. But the doctrine laid down in one old book, is, that such loppings of a timber-tree, as are of the age of 20 years, shall be exempted from the payment of tithe; and it is added as a reason, that branches of that age may be useful in building. Plowd. 470. Soby v. Molins. The former, however, is the better opinion.

In the case just now cited, it appeared, that the loppings of the trees, for the tithe of which the bill was brought, were not of 20 years growth: But it also appeared, that the trees were of the age of 20 years, before they had ever been lopped. It was held by Hardwicke, Chancellor, that no tithe was due of these loppings; for that, if a tree is once privileged from paying tithe, the privilege extends to all future loppings, of whatsoever age they are. MS. Rep. Walton v. Tryon.

It has been said, that, altho' a tree has been once lopped before it was of the age of 20 years, the future loppings of such tree, provided these are of twenty years growth, are not titheable. 1 Roll. Abr. 640. pl. 1. But in the case already cited, it was laid down by Hardwicke Chancellor, that wherever a tree has been lopped before it was of the age of 20 years, all future lopping, altho' ever so old, are liable to pay tithe. MS. Rep. Walton v. Tryon. It has been laid down, that if a tree, which was once privileged from paying tithe, is felled, the germins that spring from the root of such tree, are also privileged. 11 Rep. 48. Liford's case. But, in the case already cited, it was said by Hardwicke Chancellor, that all germins, which spring from the roots of trees that have been felled, are titheable. MS. Rep. Walton v. Tryon.

The wood of a coppice, which has usually been felled for firing, is liable to pay tithe, altho' the same is of the age of 40 years. 1 Lev. 189. Sid. 300. And in the case so often cited, it was said by Hardwicke Chancellor, if, when the wood of coppice is felled, some trees growing therein, which are of the age of 20 years, and have never been lopped, are lopped, and these loppings are promiscuously bound up in faggots with the coppice wood, tithe must be paid of the whole: because it would be very difficult, to separate the titheable wood from that which is not so; and the owner ought to suffer for his folly in mixing them. MS. Rep. Walton v. Tryon.

4. Of what mixed tithes are due.

Such tithes as arise from beasts or fowls, which are fed with the fruits of the earth, are called mixed tithes. 2 Inst. 649. 1 Roll. Abr. 635. Many things are by the ecclesiastical law liable to pay such tithes, which by the Common law are not. 2 Inst. 641. 4 Mod. 344.

The design under this head is to shew, of what mixed tithes are due by the Common law.

In doing this it will appear, that some things, which are in the general exempted therefrom, become by custom liable to the payment of mixed tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 635. c. pl. 3. 636. pl. 7. Cro. Car. 339. 1 Vent. 5. It will also appear, that divers things, which are in the general liable thereto, are under particular circumstances exempted from the payment of mixed tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl. 14. pl. 16. But, wherever any fraud is used, to bring a thing under these circumstances, by reason of which, if it had come fairly under them, it would have been exempted from the payment of a mixed tithe, it is by such fraud rendered liable thereto. 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl. 15, 646. pl. 17.

As it would be tedious, to enumerate all the things, which are liable to pay mixed tithes, only those shall be mentioned concerning the tithe of which some question has arisen: But, from such as will be mentioned, it may be easily collected, of what other things mixed tithes are due.

Tithes are in the general due of the young of all beasts, except such as are feræ naturæ. But none are due of young hounds, apes, or the like, because such beasts are kept only for pleasure. Bro. Dism. pl. 20. No tithe is due of the young of deer; for these are feræ naturæ. 2 Inst. 651. And for the same reason none is due, but by custom, of young conies. 1 Roll. Abr. 635. c. pl. 3. Cro. Car. 339. 1 Vent. 5.

The young of all birds and fowls, except such as are feræ naturæ, are in the general liable to pay tithes; unless the eggs of such birds or fowls have before paid tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. pl. 6. 2 Will. Rep. 463. But no tithes are due either of the eggs or young of any birds or fowls, which are kept only for pleasure. Bro. Dism. pl. 20. No tithes are due of the eggs or young of partridges or pheasants, because these are feræ naturæ. Moor 599. 2 Will. Rep. 463. If a man keeps pheasants in an inclosed wood, whose wings are clipped, and from their eggs hatches and brings up young ones, no tithe is due of these young pheasants, although none was paid for their eggs: Because the old ones are not reclaimed, and would go out of the inclosure, if their wings were not clipped. 1 Roll. Abr. 636. pl. 5.

It was heretofore held, that neither the eggs nor young of turkies are titheable; turkies being feræ naturæ. Moor 599. Hughes v. Price. But it has been held in a modern case, that, as turkies are now as tame as hens or other poultry, tithe is due of their eggs or young. 2 Will. Rep. 463. Charleton v. Brightwell. No tithe is due of such young pigeons as are spent in the house or the person who breeds them. 1 Roll. Abr. 644. Z. pl. 4. pl. 6. 1 Vent. 5. 12 Mod. 77. 12 Mod. 47. But if any young pigeons are sold, tithe is due to them. 1 Roll. Abr. 644. Z. pl. 5. pl. 6.

If a man pays tithe of young lambs at marks-tide, and at midsummer assizes shears the other nine parts of the lambs, tithe is due of the wool: For although there is but two months between the time of paying tithe lambs, which were not shorn, and the shearing of the residue, there is in this case a new increase. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. R. pl. 7. Bunb. 90. If a man shears his sheep about their necks at Michaelmas time, to preserve their fleeces from the brambles, no tithe is due of this wool: For it appears, that this, which is done before their wool is much grown, can never be for the sake of the wool. 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl. 16. If a man, after their wool is well well grown, shear his sheep about their necks, to preserve them from vermin, no tithe is due of the wool. 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl. 14.

If a man, a little before shearing time, cuts dirty locks of wool from his sheep to preserve them from vermin, no tithe is due of such wool. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 17. But in either of these cases, if more wool than ought to have been cut off is fraudulently cut off, tithe must be paid of the wool. 1 Roll. Abr. 645. pl. 15. 646. pl. 17. Tithe is due of the wool of such sheep as are killed to be spent in the house. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. pl. 18. Dent. v. Salvin. Pasch. 14. Car. Cont. Litt. Rep. 31. Civil v. Scott.

Fish taken in a pond, or in any inclosed river, are liable to pay tithe. 1 Roll. Abr. 636. pl. 4. pl. 6. pl. 7. But no tithe is due, except by custom, of fish taken in the sea, or in any open river, although they are taken by a person who has a several fishery; because such fish are feræ naturæ. Noy 108. 1 Roll. Abr. 636. pl. 4. pl. 6. pl. 7. Cro. Car. 332. 1 Lev. 179. Sid. 278. Honey and bees-wax are both tithable. Fitzb. N. B. 51. 1 Roll. Abr. 635. C. pl. 1. Cro. Car. 559. But, where the tithe of their honey and wax has been paid, no tithe is due of the bees. Cro. Car. 404. Anon. No tithe is due of the milk spent in the house of a farmer; provided such house stands in that parish in which the cows are milked. L. Raym. 129. Scoles v. Lowther.

5. Of recovering small tithes in a summary way; and of recovering tithes due from quakers.

By the 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 6. f. 1. It is, for the more easy recovery of small tithes, where the same do not amount to above the yearly value of forty shillings, from any one person, enacted, 'That if any person shall fail in payment for twenty days after demand, the parson may make complaint in writing to two justices of the peace, neither being patron, nor interested, who after summoning the party, are to hear and determine the complaint, give a reasonable allowance for the tithes and costs not exceeding ten shillings.'

If the person complained against insists on any prescription, composition, modus decimandi, or other title, delivers the same in writing to the justices, and gives to the party complaining sufficient security to pay costs at law, if the title is not allowed, the justices not to give judgment. The justices have power to give costs, not exceeding ten shillings, to the party prosecuted, if they find the complaint false and vexatious. The act not to extend to tithes within the city of London, or in any other place, where the same are settled by any act of parliament. An appeal is given to the sessions, and no proceedings, or judgments, had by virtue of this act, to be removed, or superseded, by any writ of certiorari, or other writ whatsoever, unless the title of such tithes shall be in question.

By the 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 34. par. 4. Where any quaker shall refuse to pay, or compound, for his great or small tithes, it shall be lawful for the two next justices of the peace of the same county, other than such justice of the peace as is patron of the church, or chapel, to which the tithes belong, or any ways interested, upon the complaint, to convene before them such quaker, and to examine upon oath the truth of the complaint, and to ascertain what is due from such quaker, and by order under their hands and seals to direct the payment thereof, so as the sum ordered do not exceed ten pounds; and upon refusal of quaker to pay, to levy the money. Any person aggrieved, may appeal to the next general quarter-sessions.

No proceedings, or judgment, had by virtue of this act, shall be removed or superseded by any writ of certiorari, or other writ out of his majesty's courts at Westminster, or any other court whatsoever, unless the title to such tithes shall be in question.

By the 1 Geo. 1. f. 2. cap. 6. par. 2. The like remedy is given for the recovery of all tithes and all other ecclesiastical dues from quakers, as by the 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 34. is given for tithes to the value of ten pounds.

And such justices of the peace, upon complaint of any parson, vicar, curate, farmer or proprietor of such tithes, or other person who ought to have, receive or collect, any such tithes or dues, may proceed in a similar manner as directed by the former act, touching quakers. Vide the Statutes.

6. Of particular things for which tithes are paid, and for which not, in alphabetical order, for the ease of the reader.

The particular things for which tithes are paid, and for which not, according to our law, are the following, viz.

Acorns, as they yearly increase, are liable to the payment of tithes; but this is where they are gathered and sold, and reduced to a certain profit; not when they drop, and the hogs eat them. 2 Inst. 643. Hell. 27. After-math, or after-pasture pays no tithes, except by custom; being the remains of what was before tithed. 2 Inst. 652. 2 Danv. Abr. 589. Tit. Dismes. Agistment of cattle upon pasture-land, which hath paid no other tithes that year, pays tithe for the cattle; and if a man breeds or buys barren unprofitable cattle and sells them, he shall pay for the agistment; but if he depastures his land with his own saddle-horses, he shall pay no tithes. If ground is eat up with unprofitable cattle of a man's own, or others, a tenth part of the yearly value of the rent of the land, i. e. the sum of 2 s. per pound, is payable by the owner of the land, or his tenant; though the twentieth part is usually accepted. 1 Roll. Abr. 646. Hard. 184. Alder trees pay tithes, notwithstanding they are above twenty years growth, not being timber. Asp is timber, and therefore, if these trees are above twenty years growth, they are tithe free. Asp or aspin trees are exempted, if beyond that growth, in places where they are used for timber, 2 Cro. 199. 2 Inst. 643.

Bark of trees is not tithable, if the trees whereon produced were timber. 11 Rep. 49. Barren land, which is so of its own nature, pays no tithe; where land is barren, and not manurable without some extraordinary charge, in respect of such charge, and for the advancement of husbandry, such land being converted to tillage, shall for the first seven years after the improvement, be discharged from tithes, by the act 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 13. But the barren land during the seven years of improvement, shall pay such small tithes as have been accustomedly paid before; and afterwards to pay the full tithe according to the improvement: And if land is over-run with bushes, or become unprofitable by bad husbandry, it cannot properly be called barren land; for if it be grubbed, or ploughed and sowed, it immediately pays tithes. 2 Inst. 656. Cro. Eliz. 475. Beech trees, where timber is scarce, and these trees are used for building, if above twenty years growth to be timber, are privileged from tithes, by the stat. 45 Ed. 3. c. 3. though this tree is not naturally timber, for it is necessity makes it so. 2 Danv. Abr. 589. Bees are tithable for their honey and wax, by the tenth measure, and tenth pound: It has been a question whether the tenth swarm can be demanded for tithes of bees, because bees are feræ naturæ; but when the bees are gathered into the hives, they are then under custody, and may pay tithe by the hive or swarm; but the tithe is generally paid in the tenth part of the honey or wax. 1 Roll. Abr. 651. 3 Cro. 404, 559. Birch wood is tithable, though of above twenty years growth. 2 Inst. 643. Bricks pay not tithes, for they are made of parcel of the freehold, and are of the substance of the earth, not an annual increase. 1 Cro. 1. Broom shall pay tithes; But it may be discharged by custom, if burnt in the owner's house, or kept for husbandry. 2 Danv. Abr. 597.

Calves are tithable, and the tenth calf is due to the parson when weaned, and he is not obliged to take it before; but if in one year a person hath not the number of ten calves, the parson is not intitled to tithes in kind for that year, without a special custom for it, though he may take it the next year, throwing both years together; and it is a good custom to pay one calf in seven, where there hath been no more in one year; and where a man sells a calf to pay the tenth of the value, or for the parson to have the right shoulder, &c. 1 Roll. Abr. 648. Raym. 277. Cattle sold pay tithe; but not cattle kept for the plough or pail, which shall pay no tithe for their pasture, by reason the parson hath the benefit of the labour of plough cattle in tilling the ground, by the tithe of corn, and tithe milk for those kept for the pail; yet if such cattle bought are sold before used, or if being past their labour, the cows are barren, and afterwards fattened in order to sell, tithe shall be paid for them; though if the owner kill and spend the cattle in his own house, no tithe is due for them, being for his provision to support him in his labour about other affairs, for which the parson hath tithe. Cattle feeding on large commons, where the bounds of the parish are not certainly known, shall pay tithe to the parson of the parish where the owner lives; and if fed in several parishes, and they continue above a month in each parish, tithe shall be paid the two parsons proportionably. 1 Roll. Abr. 635, 646, 647. Hardr. 35. Chalk and chalk-pits are not titheable; nor is clay or coal, as they are part of the freehold, and not annual, to pay tithe. 2 Inst. 651. Cheese pays tithe by custom, where tithe is not paid for the milk; but if the milk pays a tithe, the cheese pays none: And it may be a good custom to pay the tenth cheese made in such a month, for all tithe milk in that year. 1 Roll. Abr. 651. Chickens are not titheable, because tithe is paid for the eggs. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. Colts pay tithe in the same manner as calves. Ibid. Conies are titheable only by custom, for those that are sold, not for such as are spent in the house. 2 Danv. Abr. 583. Corn pays a predial tithe; it is *tithe*d by the tenth cock, heap, or sheaf, which if the owner do not set out, he may be sued in an action upon the statute 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 13. And if the parishioner will not sow his land usually sown, the parson may bring his action against him. When tithe corn is set forth, the law gives the parson a reasonable time to carry it away; and if he suffer the same to lie too long on the land to the prejudice of the owner thereof, he may be liable to an action: But the parson may not set out the tithe himself, or take them away without leave. 1 Roll. Abr. 644. 1 Sid. 283. 2 Vent. 48. Ley 70.

Deer are not titheable, for they are feræ naturæ; though in parks, &c. they pay tithe by custom. 2 Inst. 651. Doves kept in a dove-house, if they are not spent in the owner's house, are titheable. 1 Vent. 5.

Eggs pay tithe when tithe is not paid for the young. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. Elm trees being timber are discharged from the payment of tithe, but not if under twenty years growth. 2 Inst. 643.

Fallow Ground is not titheable for the pasture in that year in which it lies fallow, unless it remain beyond the course of husbandry; because it improves and renders the land more fertile by lying fresh. 1 Roll. Abr. 642. Fens being drain'd and made manurable, or converted into pasture, are subject to the payment of tithe. 1 Roll. Rep. 354.

Fish taken in the sea or common rivers, are titheable only by custom, and the tithe is to be paid in money, and not the tenth fish; but fish in ponds and rivers inclosed, ought to be set forth as a tithe in kind. 2 Danv. Abr. 583, 584. Flax pays tithe; every acre of flax or hemp sown shall pay yearly 5 s. for tithe, and no more. 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 16. Forest lands shall pay no tithe while in the hands of the King, though such lands in the hands of a subject shall pay tithe; and if a forest shall be disafforested, and within a parish, it shall pay tithe. 1 Roll. Abr. 655. 3 Cro. 94. Fowls, as hens, geese, ducks, are to pay tithe, either in eggs or the young, according to custom, but not in both: Turkeys are said to be exempt from tithe. 2 Danv. Abr. 583. qu. Fruit, apples, pears, plums, cherries, &c. pay tithe in kind when gathered; and ought to be set out according to the statute. 2 Inst. 621. Fruit-trees cut down and sold, are not titheable, if they have paid tithe fruit that year before cut. Ibid. 652. Furnes, if sold, pay tithe, not if used for fuel in the house, or to make pens for sheep, &c. Wood's Inst. 166.

Gardens are titheable as lands, and therefore tithe in kind are due for all herbs, plants, and seeds sowed in them; but money is generally paid by custom or agreement. Ibid. Grass mowed is titheable by payment of the tenth cock, or according to custom; but for grass cut in swarths for sustenance of plough cattle only, not made into hay, no tithe is to be paid. Grass or corn, &c. when sold standing, the buyer shall pay the tithe; and if sold after cut and severed, the seller must pay it. The parson is not obliged to take tithe of grass the day it is cut, but may let it lie long enough to make it into hay. 1 Strange 245. 1 Roll. Abr. 644, 645. Wood's Inst. 166.

Hazel, Holly, and Maple trees, &c. are regularly titheable, although of 20 years growth. 2 Danv. Abr. 589. Hay pays a predial tithe; the tenth cock is to be set out and paid, after made into hay, by the custom of most places, and the parishioners shall make the grass cocks into hay for the parson's tithe; but if they are not obliged to make the tithe into hay, they may leave it in cocks, and the parson must make it, for which purpose he may come on the ground, &c. A prescription to measure out and pay the tenth acre, or part of grass standing, in lieu of all tithe hay, may be good: And if meadow ground is so rich, that there are two crops of hay in one year, the parson by special custom may have tithe of both. 1 Roll. Abr. 643, 647, 950. Headlands are not titheable, if only large enough for turning the plough; but if larger, tithe may be payable. 2 Inst. 653. Herbage of ground is titheable for barren cattle kept for sale, which yield no profit to the parson. Wood's Inst. 167. Honey pays a tithe, as under Bees. Hops are titheable, and the tenth part may be set out after they are picked: There are several ways of *tithe*ing hops, viz. by the hills, pole, or pound; in some places they set forth the tenth pole for tithe; but my Lord Chief Just. Roll tells us, they ought not to be *tithe*d before dried. 1 Roll. Abr. 644. Horses kept to sell, and afterwards sold, tithe shall be paid for their pasture; though not where horses are kept for work and labour. Hutt. 77. Houses for dwelling are not properly titheable: A modus may be paid for houses in lieu of tithe of the land upon which they are built, and a great many cities and boroughs have a custom to pay a modus for their houses; as it may be reasonably supposed that it was usual to pay so much for the land, before the houses were erected on it. 11 Rep. 16. 2 Inst. 659. Kids pay a tithe as calves, the tenth is due to the parson. Wood 167.

Lambs are titheable in like manner as calves; but if they are yeaned in one parish, and do not tarry there thirty days, no tithe is due to the parson of that place: If there be a custom that the parishioner having six lambs or under, shall pay so much for every lamb; and if he have above that number, then to pay the seventh, it is good. 3 Cro. 403. Lead may pay tithe by custom, as it does in some counties; but it doth not without it. 2 Inst. 651. By custom only, Lime and Lime-kilns are titheable. 1 Roll. Abr. 642.

Mast of Oak and Beach pays tithe, as under Acorns. Milk is titheable when no tithe is paid for cheese, all the year round, except custom over-rules; and it is payable by every tenth meal, not tenth quart or part of every meal; and is to be brought to the house of the parson, &c. by custom, in which particular this tithe differs from all others, which must be fetched by the receiver. In some places they pay tithe cheese for milk, and in others some small rate according to custom. Cro. Eliz. 609. 2 Danv. Abr. 596. Mills, as there are several sorts of them, the tithe is different; the tithe of corn-mills driven by wind or water, are paid in kind, every tenth toll-dish of corn to the parson of the parish wherein the mills are standing: But ancient corn-mills are tithe-free, being suggested that they are very ancient, and never paid tithe, &c. And it is questioned whether tithe is due for any corn-mills, unless by custom, because the corn hath before paid tithe; and it seems rather a personal tithe where due: The tithe of fulling-mills, paper-mills, powder-mills, &c. are personal, charged in respect to the labour of men, by custom only; and are regarded more as engines of several trades than as mills. 1 Roll. Abr. 656. 2 Inst. 621. Mines pay no tithe but by custom, custom, being of the substance of the earth, and not annually increasing. 2 Inst. 651.

Nurseries of trees shall pay tithes, if the owner dig them up and makes profit of them by selling. 2 Danv. Abr. 585.

Oak trees are privileged as timber from the payment of tithes by the statute of Sylva Cadua, 45 Edw. 3. c. 3. if of or above twenty years growth; and if oaks are under that age, it is the same when they are apt for timber. Moor 541. Offerings, &c. are in the nature of personal tithes. 2 Inst. 659, 661. Orchards pay tithes both for the fruit they produce, and the grass or grain, if any be sown or cut therein. 2 Inst. 652.

Parks are titheable by custom, for the deer and the herbage; and when disparked and converted into tillage they shall pay tithes in kind: The tithes of parks may be in part certain, and part casual; and 2 s. a year, and a shoulder of every third deer, hath been paid as tithe for a park. 1 Roll. Rep. 176. Hob. 37, 40. Partridges and Pheasants, &c. as they are feræ naturæ, yield no tithes of eggs or young. 1 Roll. Abr. 636. Pease, if gathered for sale, or to feed hogs, pay tithes; but not green pease spent in the house. 1 Roll. Abr. 647. Pigeons ought to pay tithes when sold; and this holds good if they lodge in holes about an house, as well as in a dove-house; and by custom if spent in the house, they may be titheable, though not of common right. 2 Danv. Abr. 583, 597. Pigs are titheable, as calves. Ibid. Pollard trees, such as are usually lopped, and distinguished from timber-trees, pay tithes. Plowd. 470.

Quarries of stone, &c. are not subject to pay tithes; because they are part of the inheritance, and tithes ought to be collateral to the land, and distinct from it. 1 Roll. 644.

Rakings of corn are not titheable, for they are left for the poor, and are properly the scatterings of the corn whereof the tithes have been paid, left after the cocks set out are taken away. Cro. Eliz. 660.

Saffron pays a predial and small tithe. 1 Cro. 467. Salt is not titheable, but by custom only. 1 Bunb. 10. Sheep, a tithe is paid for, of lambs and wool; and therefore they pay no tithe for their feeding. If sheep are in the parish all the year, they are to pay tithe wool to the parson; but if removed from one parish to another, the parsons of each parish to have tithe pro rata, where they remain thirty days in a parish; and if they are fed in one parish, and brought into another to be shorn, the same tithe is to be observed. 1 Roll. Abr. 642, 647. 3 Cro. 237. Stubble pays no tithe under aftermath. 2 Inst. 652.

Tares, vetches, &c. are titheable; but if they are cut down green, and given to the cattle of the plough, where there is not a sufficient pasture in the parish, no tithe shall be paid for them. 1 Cro. 139. Trees are no yearly increase, and not titheable. 2 Inst. 651. Timber trees, such as oaks, alders, and elms, and in some places beech, &c. above the age of twenty years, were discharged of tithes by the Common law, before the statute 45 Ed. 3. c. 3. and the reason of it is, because such trees are employed to build houses, and houses when built are not only fixed to, but part of the freehold; and if those trees stand so long till they become rotten and fit for firing only, no tithes is due for them, because they were once privileged; and loppings of timber-trees above twenty years growth, pay no tithes, for the branch is privileged as well as the body of the tree; and the roots of such trees are exempted as parcel of the inheritance. Trees cut for plough-boot, cart-boot, &c. shall not pay tithes, although they are no timber; but all trees not fit for timber, and not put to those uses, pay tithes. 1 Roll. Abr. 650. Cro. Eliz. 477, 499. Turfs used for fuel are part of the soil, and tithe-free. 2 Inst. 651.

Underwood is titheable, though the tithe is not of annual payment; and is set out while standing, by the tenth acre, pole, or perch, or when cut down, by tenth faggot or billet, as custom directs; and if he that sells the wood doth not set out the tithe, he is liable to the treble damages by 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 13. But if the underwood is used for firing in a house of husbandry, or to burn brick to repair the house, or for hedging and fencing the lands in the same parish, it may be discharged from tithe. 2 Inst. 642, 643, 652. Hb. 250. 2 Danv. Abr. 597.

Warrens where titheable, see Conies. Waste ground, whereon cattle feed, is liable to the payment of tithes 2 Danv. Abr. Wood growing in the nature of an herb is a predial and small tithe. 2 Danv. 594. Wood is generally esteemed to be a great tithe. If wood grounds have likewise timber trees growing on them, and consist for the most part of such trees, the timber-trees shall privilege the other wood; but if the wood is the greatest part, then it must pay tithes for the whole. 13 Rep. 13. If wood be cut to make hop-poles, where the parson hath tithe hops, no tithe shall be paid for it. Hugber's Abr. 689. Wool is a mixed small tithe, paid when clipped; one fleece in ten, or in some places one in seven is given to the parson. If there is under ten pounds of wool at the shearing, a reasonable consideration shall be paid, because the tithes are due of common right; and if less than ten fleeces, they shall be divided into ten parts, or an allowance be otherwise made. All sheep killed, and sheep which die, pay tithe wool; and neck wool cut off for the benefit of the wool, but not if it is to preserve the sheep from vermin, &c. Also the wool of lambs shorn at Midsummer, though tithe was paid for the lambs at Mark-tide, is titheable. 1 Roll. Abr. 646, 647. 2 Inst. 652. Vide tithe of Sheep.

When any thing is titheable only by custom, it may be exempted from tithe by custom; but custom to exempt corn, &c. from tithe will not be allowed, because for that tithes are due de jure. Count Parf. Compan. 155. See Modus and Prescription.

Tithes Extraparochial, which do not lie in any parish, belong to the King. 2 Rep. 2, 44.

Great tithes generally belong to the rector; and small tithes to the vicar. Cro. Car. 20.

Great tithes are corn, hay, and wood; small tithes comprehend all other predial tithes besides corn and hay, &c. as also those tithes which are personal and mixed; some things may be great or small tithes, in regard of the place; as hops in gardens are small tithes, and in fields may be great tithes; and 'tis said the quantity will turn a small tithe into a great one, if the parish is generally sown with it. 1 Roll. Abr. 643. 1 Cro. 578. Wood's Inst. 162.

For more learning on this subject, see 5 New Abr. tit. Tithes, 8 Vin. Abr. tit. Dismes, and a new treatise on the laws concerning Tithes. See also, Black. Com. 1 V. 384, 388. 2 V. 24. 3 V. 48, 88, 102, 384, 437.

Tithing, (Tithinga, from the Sax. Teothunge, i. e. Decuriam) Is in its first appointment the number or company of ten men with their families, held together in a society, all being bound for the peaceable behaviour of each other: And of these companies there was one chief person who was called teothung-man, at this day tithing-man; but the old discipline of tithings is long since left off. In the Saxon times, for the better conservation of the peace, and more easy administration of justice, every hundred was divided into ten districts or tithings; and within every tithing, the tithing-men were to examine and determine all lesser causes between villages and neighbours; but to refer greater matters to the then superior courts, which had a jurisdiction over the whole hundred. Paroch. Antiq. 633. See Black. Com. 1 V. 113. 4 V. 404.

Tithing-men, Are now a kind of petty constables, elected by parishes, and sworn in their offices in the court-leet, and sometimes by justices of peace, &c. There is frequently a tithing-man in the same town with a constable, who is as it were a deputy to execute the office in the constable's absence; but there are some things which a constable has power to do, that tithing-men and headboroughs cannot intermeddle with. Dalt. 3. When there is no constable of a parish, the office and authority of a tithing-man seems to be all one under another name, Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 12. See Constable, and Black. Com. 1 V. 114, 406.

Tithe, (Titulus) Is when a man hath lawful cause of entry into lands whereof another is seized; and it signifies ties also the means whereby a man comes to lands or tenements, as by feoffment, fine, last will and testament, &c. The word title, includeth a right; but is the more general word: Every right is a title, though every title is not such a right for which an action lies; so that titulus est justa causa possidendi quod nostrum est, and is the means of holding the lands. Co. Litt. 345. A man may plead in trespass, &c. without particularly setting forth his title, where his justification is collateral to the title of the land; so if damages are to be recovered, and the title of the land is not in question; and in actions on real contracts, where the plaintiff shews enough to entitle him to the action, &c. 2 Mod. 70. 1 Roll Rep. 13. Cro Car. 571. 3 Nelf. Abr. 325. But in trespass for cutting corn on lands, the party must set forth the title which he hath to the corn, or on demurrer it will be judged ill; for the shewing that he is possessed thereof, is not sufficient without a title, because the property shall be intended to be in the owner of the soil. 2 Sand. 401. 3 Salk. 361. When a person will recover any thing from another, he must make out and prove a better title than the other hath; or it will not be enough to destroy his title, &c. Hob. 103. It is not allowed for the party to forsake his own title, and fly upon the other's; for he must recover by his own strength, not the other's weakness. Ibid. 104. If by the record it appears that the plaintiff in the cause hath no title, he shall not have judgment. Lutw. 1631. The law will not permit titles and things in entry, &c. to be granted over; and the buying or selling any pretended rights or titles to lands, is prohibited by statute as Maintenance. 32 H. 8. c. 9. See 20 Vin. Abr. 278—288. and Black. Com. 2 V. 195.

Title of Acts of Parliament. After the House of Commons hath finally agreed (on a third reading) that a bill pass, the title to it is then settled; which used to be a general one, for all the acts passed in the session, 'till in the 5th year of Hen. 8. distinct titles were introduced for each chapter. Black. Com. 1 V. 182, 3.

Title to Lands, pretended, buying or selling. By stat. 32 H. 8. c. 9. it is provided that no one shall sell or purchase any pretended right or title to land, unless the vender hath received the profits thereof for one whole year before such grant, or hath been in actual possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder; on pain that both purchaser and vender shall each forfeit the value of such land to the King and the prosecutor.

Title to the Crown. In the opinion of Blackstone, the grand fundamental maxim upon which the ius coronæ, or right of succession to the throne of these kingdoms, depend, is, "That the Crown is, by Common law" and constitutional custom, hereditary; and this in a manner peculiar to itself: But that the right of inheritance may from time to time be changed or limited "by act of parliament; under which limitations the "Crown still continues hereditary." Black. Com. 1 V. 191. which Vide, the proposition being there fully proved at large.

Title to Things personal. As to the title to things personal, or the various means of acquiring, and of losing such property as may be had therein—The methods of acquisition or loss are principally twelve; 1. By occupancy. 2. By prerogative. 3. By forfeiture. 4. By custom. 5. By succession. 6. By marriage. 7. By judgment. 8. By gift. 9. By contract. 10. By bankruptcy. 11. By testament. 12. By administration. Black. Com. 2 V. 400. which Vide.

Titles of Clergymen, Signify some certain place where they may exercise their functions. A title in this sense, is the church to which a priest was ordained and constantly to reside: And there are many reasons why a church is called titulus; one is because in former days the name of the saint to whom the church is dedicated was engraved on the porch, as a sign that the saint had a title to that church; from whence the church itself was afterwards denominated titulus. Concil. London. Anno 1125. No person shall be ordained without a title; and this is required to keep out those from the ministry who might otherwise for want of maintenance bring disgrace upon the church, And if a bishop shall admit any person into the ministry without any title, he shall maintain him till he prefers him to some ecclesiastical living; or if he refuses so to do, he shall be suspended from giving orders for one year. Can. 31. Anciently a title of clergy was no more than entering their names in the bishop's roll, and then they had not only authority to assist in the ministerial function, but had a right to the share of the common stock or treasury of the church; but since a title is an assurance of being preferred to some ecclesiastical benefice, a certificate that the clerk is provided of some church, or place, &c. or where the bishop who ordains him, intends shortly afterwards to admit him to a benefice or curacy then void. Count. Parf. Comp. 2, 3.

Title of Entry, Is when one seized of land in fee, makes a feoffment thereof on condition, and the condition is broken; after which the feoffor hath title to enter into the land, and may do so at his pleasure, and by his entry the freehold shall be said to be in him presently. And it is called Title of entry, because he cannot have a writ of right against his feoffee upon condition, for his right was out of him by the feoffment, which cannot be reduced into entry; and the entry must be for the breach of the condition. Corwell.

Titinylls, An old word for tale-bearers. — In all realms the popish practice hath had confederacy of false, forsworn, factious, and traitorous titinylls, untrue to their sovereign, &c. Letter Secr. State, 28 II. 8. to James 5. King of Scotland.

Toalia, A towel; and there is a tenure of lands by the service of waiting with a towel at the King's coronation: — Petrus Picote tenet unum mesuag. &c. per servientiam serviendi cum una toalia ad coronationem regis. Inq. Ann. 12, 13, K. John.

Tobacco, Is not to be planted in England, on pain of forfeiting 40*s.* for every rod of ground thus planted; but this shall not extend to hinder the planting of tobacco in physick gardens. 12 Car. 2. cap. 34. And justices of peace have power to issue warrants to constables, to search after and examine whether any tobacco be sown or planted, and to destroy the same; which they are to do under penalties &c. 22 & 23 Car. 2. cap. 26. The 5 Geo. 1. c. 11. continues the statute 22 & 23 Car. 2. And by a late act, if any person shall cut walnut-tree leaves, or other leaves, (not being tobacco leaves) or colour them so as to resemble tobacco; or shall sell the same mixed with tobacco, they shall forfeit 5*s.* per pound: And the like penalty is inflicted for exporting such leaves, or engines for cutting, which may be seized by the officers of the customs, &c. Also servants employed therein may be committed to gaol, or the house of correction, for any time not exceeding six months, &c. 1 Geo. 1. cap. 46. See Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 41. No drawback allowed on exportation of tobacco, unless shipped from the port at which it was imported, and in the original package if unmanufactured. Importer within fourteen days after the delivery of tobacco to any purchaser to give to the officer where it was imported an account of the marks, numbers, and weights, &c. of every hoghead sold, and the ship's name, &c. the account to be signed by the importer and purchaser. No tobacco nor tobacco stalks above 24*lb.* nor snuff above 10*lb.* to be carried by land from any port of importation without a certificate from the collector, &c. of the port where, &c. before removal the proprietor to insert on the back of the certificate the package, marks, numbers, weights and species, &c. of the goods, and to subscribe his name, and make oath of the truth thereof; the certificate to accompany the goods, and to be delivered to the officer where the goods shall be conveyed, &c. Tobacco, tobacco stalks and snuff, exceeding the respective weights aforesaid, found removing without such certificates, with the horses and carriage shall be forfeited, and the carrier may be committed to the county gaol for one month. See further in the same act for securing the duties upon tobacco. And Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 13. For other matters, see Customs, Plantations, Snuff.

Toll of Wool. Contains twenty-eight pounds, or two stone; mentioned in the statute 12 Car. 2. cap. 32.

Toll, (Tostum) A messuage or rather a place or piece of ground where an house formerly stood, but is decayed or casually burnt, and not re-edified; it is a word much used in fines, wherein we often read tostum and croftum, &c. West's Symb. par. 2. Stat. 22 & 23 Car. 2.

Tollman (Tostmannus) The owner or possessor of a toll. Reg. Priorat. Lew. pag. 18.

Tote, (Fr. i. e. Tela) A net to encompass or take deer which is forbid to be used unlawfully in parks, on pain of 20*l.* for every deer taken therewith. 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 10.

Tokens False to get money or goods by, from others, &c. See False Tokens.

Toleration. The penalties formerly imposed on protestant dissenters are all of them suspended by the Stat. 1. W. & M. Stat. 2. c. 18. commonly called The Toleration Act; which exempts all dissenters (except papists, and such as deny the Trinity) from all penal laws relating to religion, provided they take the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribe the declaration against popery, and repair to some congregation registered in the bishop's court or at the sessions, the doors whereof must be always open: And dissenting teachers are also to subscribe the thirty-nine articles, except those relating to church government and infant baptism of dissenters, see Nonconformists.

Toll, To bar, defeat, or take away; as to toll the entry, i. e. to deny or take away the right of entry. Stat. 8 Hen. 6. c. 9.

Toll, (Tolnetum, vel Theolonium) Is a Saxon word, and properly a payment in towns, markets, and fairs, for goods and cattle bought and sold. It is a reasonable sum of money due to the owner of the fair or market, upon sale of things tollable within the same. 2 Inst. 220. And it is used for a liberty as well to take, as to be free from toll; of which freedom from toll the city of Coventry boasts an ancient charter granted by Leofrick earl of the Mercians, in the time of King Edw. the Confessor, who at the importunity of Godeva, his virtuous lady, granted this freedom to that city. By the ancient law of this land, the buyers of corn or cattle in fairs or markets ought to pay toll to the lord of the market, in testimony of the contract there lawfully made; for toll was first invented that contracts in markets should be openly made before witnesses; and privy contracts were held unlawful. But the King shall pay no toll for any of his goods; and a man may be discharged from the payment of toll, by the King's grant. Also tenants in ancient demesne are discharged of toll throughout the kingdom, for things which arise out of their lands, or bought for manurance thereof, &c. not for merchandizes. Horn's Mir. lib. 1. 2 Inst. 221. 2 Roll. Abr. 198. Toll doth not of common right belong to a fair; though it hath been held, that some toll is due of common right, as appears from the immunities of several persons not to pay toll, which proves that if it was not for those privileges, they ought to pay toll of common right; therefore where the King grants a market, toll is due, although it is not expressed in the grant what toll is to be paid; and this from the necessity of it, because the property of things sold in a market is not altered without paying toll. Palm. 76. 2 Lutw. 1377. 3 Nels. Abr. 326. But it is said, if the King grants to a man a fair or market, and grants no toll, the patentee shall have no toll; for toll being a matter of private right for the benefit of the lord, is not incident to a fair or market, as a court of piepowder is, which is for the benefit of the publick and advancement of justice, &c. Such a fair or market, is free from toll; and after the grant made, the King cannot grant a toll to such free fair or market, without some proportionable benefit to the subject: And if the toll granted with the fair or market be outrageous, the grant of the toll is void, and the same is a free market, &c. 2 Inst. 220. Cro. Eliz. 559. When the King grants a fair, he may likewise grant that toll shall be paid, though it be a charge upon the subjects; but then it must be of a very small sum. Toll is to be reasonable, for the King cannot grant a burthenfome toll; and one may have toll by prescription for some reasonable cause, but such a prescription to charge the subject with a duty of toll, must import a benefit or recompence for it, or some reason must be shewn why it is claimed. Cro. Eliz. 559. 3 Lew. 424. 2 Mod. 143. 4 Mod. 323. The toll in fairs is generally taken upon the sale of cattle, as horses, &c. but in the markets for grain only; and the lord may seize until satisfaction is made him: It is always to be paid the buyer, unless there be a custom to the contrary; and nothing is tollable before the sale, except it be by custom time out of mind; which custom none can challenge that claims the fair or market by grant since the reign of King Richard 2d; so that it is better to have a market or fair by prescription, than grant. 2 Inst. 220, 221. At this day there is not any one certain toll to be taken in markets; but if that which is taken be unreasonable, it is punishable by the stat. 3 Edw. 1. cap. 31. And what shall be deemed reasonable is to be determined by the judges of the law, when it comes judicially before them: toll may be said to be unreasonable and outrageous, where a reasonable toll is due, and excessive toll is taken; or when no toll is due, and toll is unjustly usurped, &c. 2 Inst. 222. If excessive toll be taken in a market-town, by the lord's consent, the franchise shall be seized; and if by other officers, they shall pay double damages, and suffer imprisonment, &c. Stat. Westm. 1. 3 Edw. 1. Owners of markets and fairs are to appoint toll-takers, where toll is to be taken, under penalties, by the 2 & 3 Ph. & M. cap. 7. And he that hath the toll, or profit of the market where no toll is, ought to provide a lawful measure of brads, and chain it in the publick market-place, or shall forfeit 5*l.* 22 Car. 2. cap. 8. Toll is not incident of common right, to a fair. 2 Strange 1171. See Market, and Wilsen, par. 1. 109.

Port-Toll. A prescription to have port-toll for all goods coming into a man's port may be good; and this it is said without any consideration. 2 Lev. 96. 2 Lut. 1519. And it hath been adjudged, that the liberty of bringing goods into a port for safety, implies a consideration in itself. 3 Lev. 37. Prescription of toll for goods landed in a manor, or to have port-toll for all goods coming into port, is a good prescription; but not to have toll of goods brought into a river, &c. 2 Lev. 96, 97. Toll may be appurtenant to a manor. 2 Mod. 144.

Toll-Travers, Is where one claimeth to have toll for every beast driven over his ground; for which a man may prescribe, and distrain for it in via regia. Cro. Eliz. 710. They who claim these tolls by grant, ought to aver the certainty of the sum mentioned in the grant, &c. Palm. 76. Toll-travers being to pass a nearer way, he that has it is to repair the way, because he receives money for it. 2 Lill. Abr. 585.

Thorough-Toll, Is when a town prescribes to have toll for such a number of beasts, or for every beast that goeth through their town; or over a bridge or ferry, maintained at their cost, which is reasonable, though it be for passing through the King's highway, where every man may lawfully go, as it is for the ease of travellers that go that way. Terms de Ley 561, 562. Persons may have this toll by prescription or grant; but it must be for a reasonable cause, which must be shewn, viz. that they are to repair and maintain a causeway, or a bridge, or such like. Cro. Eliz. 711. The King granted to a man, to take such toll of persons that passed over certain bridges with their cattle, as was taken there and elsewhere in England, &c. and it was held void for incertainty. Bridg. 88.

Turn-Toll, A toll paid for beasts that are driven to market to be sold, and do return unsold. 6 Rep. 46. There is also in-toll; and out-toll, mentioned in ancient charters: But if any one take toll where he ought not, the party grieved shall have an action on the case, or action of trespass, &c. 3 Nels. Abr. 325, 326. Of tolls, and grants, customs and prescriptions for tolls, good, and not so, see 4 Mod. 319. 5 Mod. 361. Lutw. 1380, 1518.

Tollage, Is the same with sallage; signifying generally any manner of custom, or imposition. This word occurs in the statute 17 Car. 1. cap. 15.

Toll-Booth, The place where goods are weighed, &c. Toll-Cozn, Is corn taken for toll ground at a mill: And an indictment lies against a miller for taking too great toll. 5 Mod. 13.

Toll.

Toll-Traders, see ante Toll-Traders. It should have been Toll-Traders, & b being inserted, instead of a b.

Toll Traverſe Is properly when a man pays certain toll for paſſing over the ſoil of another man in a way not a high ſtreet. 22 Aſſ. 58. by Thorpe, M. 41. 42 El. B. R. in Smith v. Shepherd's caſe. The words toll-through and toll-traverſe are uſed promiſcuouſly. Arg. And the court ſeemed to agree. Mod. 232. in caſe of James v. Johnſon. A man cannot preſcribe to have thorough-toll of men paſſing through a vill in the high ſtreet becauſe it is againſt the common law and common right; for the high ſtreet is common to to all. 2 Roll. Abr. 522. 25 Aſſ. 58. by Thorpe, M. 41 & 42 El. B. R. between Smith v. Shepherd, dubitatur without alledging of a ſpecial conſideration as the repairing the way. And the King cannot have ſuch toll for paſſing in the high ſtreet, as in the caſe aforeſaid, for the cauſe aforeſaid. 2 Roll. Abr. 522. 22 Aſſ. 58. by Thorpe.

A man cannot preſcribe to have thorough-toll of men for paſſing through a vill in a place which is not the high ſtreet; for it is more than the law allows to go there. 2 Roll. Abr. 523. 22 Aſſ. 58. A man may preſcribe to have toll-traverſe of men paſſing over his ſoil in a way which is not a high ſtreet, and the preſcription ſhall be good. 2 *Roll. Tongue, cutting out or diſabling. By Stat. 5 Hen. 4. c. 5. to remedy a miſchief that then prevailed, of beating, wounding, or robbing a man, and then cutting out his tongue, or putting out his eyes, to prevent him from being an evidence againſt them, this offence is declared to be felony, if done of malice prepenſe. See Black. Com. 4 V. 206, 207.

Tonnage, (Tonnagium) Is a cuſtom or impoſt paid to the King for merchandize carried out, or brought in ſhips, or ſuch like veſſels, according to a certain rate upon every ton. Corwell. See Cuſtoms. Tonnage.

Torcure, Is a word mentioned in Fleta, 2 lib. c. 75. par. 2. viz. Boves ſtriliare & torcare: Which is to comb and cleanſe his oxen.

Torra, (Sax. Tor) A mount or hill; as Glaſtenbury Torre. Chart. Abbat. Glaſton. MS. pag. 114. So a variety of high hills, in Derbyſhire are called Tor; but generally ſome epithet is prefixed, as Mam-Tor, &c.

Tort (from the Lat. Tortus) Is a French word for injury or wrong; as de ſon tort meſme, in his own wrong. Cro. Rep. fol. 20. White's caſe. Wrong or injury is properly called tort, becauſe it is wreſted or crooked. Co. on Lit. f. 158. See de ſon tort demefne, and 20 Vin. Abr. 305. Alſo Black Com. 3 V. 117.

Tortfeasor, (Fr. Tortſaiſeur) A wrong doer, a trefpaſſer. Co. 2 par. f. 383. numb. 11.

Tortitum, Is mentioned in Fleta, and other books, and ſignifies a tort.

Torture. The Statute law of England doth very ſeldom, and the Common law doth never, inflict any puniſhment extending to life or limb, unleſs upon the higheſt neceſſity: And the conſtitution is an utter ſtranger to any arbitrary power of killing or maiming the ſubject without the expreſs warrant of law. “Nullus liber homo, ſays the great charter (c. 29.) aliquo modo deſtruatur, niſi per legale judicium parium ſuorum aut per legem terræ.” Which words, “Aliquo modo deſtruatur,” according to Sir Edward Coke, (2 Inſt. 48.) include a prohibition not only of killing, and maiming, but alſo of torturing (to which our laws are ſtrangers) and of every oppreſſion by colour of an illegal authority.

But note—on an indictment for high treaſon, or for the loweſt ſpecies of felony, viz. petit larceny, and in all miſdemors, ſtanding mute is equivalent to conviction. But, upon appeals or indictments for other felonies or petit treaſon, the priſoner ſhall not be looked upon as convicted, ſo as to receive judgment for the felony; but ſhall, for his obſtinacy, receive the terrible ſentence of Penance, or Paine forte & dure.

The rack, or queſtion, to extort a confeſſion from criminals, is a practice of a different nature; this being only uſed to compel a man to put himſelf upon his trial; that being a ſpecies of trial in itſelf. And the trial by rack, is utterly unknown to the law of England. See Raſſow. Coll. i. 638. Black. Com. 4 V. 320, 321. Beccaria's Eſſay on Crimes and Puniſhments, c. 16. &c. Tractus, A trace by which horses in their gears draw a cart, plough, or waggon. Paroch. Antiq. 549.

Trade, In general signification is traffick or merchandize: Also a private art, and way of living. All the King's subjects were to have a free trade with France, Spain, &c. Stat. 3 Jac. 1. cap. 6. But by 1 W. & M. cap. 34. all trade with France was prohibited during the war, and importing goods was declared a common nuisance, and the commodities were to be seized and burnt; the vessels with their furniture, &c. to be forfeited; and landing goods, or assisting therein, incurred a penalty of 500*l.* Though the prohibition of trade to France was taken off and repealed by 9 Ann. cap. 8. The King was enabled to prohibit all trade with Sweden, on the intended invasion of this kingdom, by the late King of Sweden, 3 Geo. 1. cap. 1. All trade with Spain, during the late war, was prohibited; and no goods of the growth or manufacture of Old Spain, to be imported into Great Britain or Ireland, &c. from any place, mixt or unmixed with commodities of any other nation, on pain of forfeiting the goods and treble value; and also the ship or vessel, with all her furniture, &c. Stat. 13 Geo. 2. cap. 27. None of the King's subjects may trade to and with a nation of Infidels without the King's leave, because of the danger of relinquishing christianity: And Sir Edward Coke said, That he had seen a licence from one of our Kings, reciting, That he having a special trust and confidence that such a one, his subject, would not decline his faith and religion, licensed him to trade with Infidels, &c. 3 Nell. Abr. 331. As to private trades, at Common law, none was prohibited to exercise any particular trade, wherein he had any skill or knowledge; and if he used it unskillfully, the party grieved might have his remedy against him by action on the case, &c. By the 5 Eliz. a man must serve seven years apprenticeship before he can set up any trade; though it hath been resolved that the statute doth not prohibit the use of a trade for a family, but the publick use of it in general. An indictment on 5 Eliz. c. 4. for exercising a trade used at that time in Great Britain, quashed, it should have been England, there being then no such kingdom as Great Britain. 1 Strange 552. 2 Strange 788. 11 Rep. 53. If a bond or promise restrains the exercise of a trade, though it be to a particular place only, if there was no consideration for it, it is void; if there be a consideration, in such case it may be good: But if the restraint be general throughout England, although there be a consideration, it will be void. 2 Lill. Abr. 179. Lord Raym. 1436. 2 Strange 739. Hence we see how the law favours trade, &c. Vide Black. Com. 1 V. 427. 4 V. 154, 160, 167, 412, 417, 421, 424, 427, 432.

Trade, Companies of, and their privileges and advantages, see Merchant.

Tradescunt, Actions against. There is in law, always, an implied contract with a common taylor, or other workman, that he performs his business in a workman-like manner: in which, if they fail, an action on the case lies to recover damages for such breach of their general undertaking. 11 Rep. 54. 1 Saund. 324. But if I employ a person to transact any of these concerns, whose common profession and business it is not, the law implies no such general undertaking; but in order to charge him with damages, a special agreement is required. *Black. Traitsors. Persons guilty of high-treason. All traitors from the time of conviction, are incapable of making testaments. Black. Com. 2 V. 499. See Treason.

Transcript, Is the copy of any original writing, or deed, &c. where it is written over again, or exemplified. Stat. 34 & 35 Hen. 8. cap. 14.

Transcripto pedes finis levati mittendo in Cancellarium, A writ for certifying the foot of a fine levied before justices in eyre, &c. in the Chancery. Reg. Orig. 669.

Transcripto Recognitionis factæ coram Justiciariis itinerantibus, &c. Is an old writ to certify a recognition taken by justices in eyre. Reg. Orig. 152.

Transgression, A writ or action of trespass, according to Fitzherbert.

Transire, (from Transire) Is used for a warrant from the custom-house, to let pass. 14 Car. 2. cap. 11.

Transitory, Is the opposite to local: Transitory actions are those that may be laid in any county, or place; such as personal action of trespass, &c. See Local, and Black. Com. 3 V. 294.

Translation, (Translatio) In a common sense of the word signifies a version out of one language into another; but in a more confined acceptation, it denotes the setting from one place to another, and the removal of a bishop to another diocese, &c. which is called Translating: And such a bishop writes not anno consecrationis, but anno translationis nostræ, &c. A bishop translated, is not consecrated de novo: for a consecration is like an ordination, 'tis an indelible character, and holds good for ever. 3 Salk. 72. But the bishop is to be a-new elected, &c. 1 Salk. 137. See Possulation.

Transportation, Is the banishing or sending away a criminal into another country. And by statute, if any one convicted of felony, shall in open court pray to be transported, it may be done if the court thinks fit. 31 Car. 2. cap. 2. The 4 Geo. 1. cap. 11. was made for the more effectual transportation of offenders convicted of felony, or larceny, within the benefit of clergy, &c. And all charges in transporting felons, are to be borne by the place for which the court was held, &c. By the 5 Geo. 1. cap. 28. Deer-stealers may be transported to the plantations, &c. And if any persons forcibly hinder officers of the customs, in executing their office, being armed with weapons, and eight in company, they shall be transported, by 6 Geo. 1. So three persons assembled near the sea coasts, with fire-arms, &c. to run uncustomed goods. Stat. 9 Geo. 2. c. 35. Directions for trial of offenders who return from transportation, or do not transport themselves. 16 Geo. 2. c. 15. Reward for convicting such offenders. Ibid.

Returning from transportation, or being seen at large in Great Britain before the expiration of the term, for which the offender was sentenced to be transported, is a capital offence against public justice, and is made felony without benefit of clergy, by statutes 4 Geo. 1. c. 11. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23. & 8 Geo. 3. c. 15.

Transportation, Of goods and merchandise, is allowed and not allowed, in many cases by statute, for the advantage of trade. See Merchant, &c.

Transubstantiation, (Transubstantiatio) Is a converting into another substance: To transubstantiate, i. e. Quidpiam in aliam substantiam convertio. Litt. Dict. A declaration against the doctrine of transubstantiation used in the church of Rome, is required by the Stat. 30 Car. 2. cap. 1.

Travellers. Inn-keepers are to receive travellers, and find them lodgings, victuals, &c. And on refusal, a reasonable price being tendered, they may be indicted and fined; or action of the case lies against them. 2 Hawk. 225.

Traverse, (from the Fr. Traverser) Is used in the law for the denying of some matter of fact, alledged to be done in a declaration or pleadings; upon which the other side comes and affirms that it was done; and this makes a single and good issue for the cause to proceed to trial: And the formal words of a traverse are in our French Sans ceo, in Latin Abque hoc, and in English without that, that such a thing was done or not, &c. Kitch. 217. West. Synb. par. 2. A plea will be ill, which neither *traverse*th, nor confesseth the plaintiff's title, &c. And every matter in fact, alledged by the plaintiff, may be traversed by the defendant, but not matter of law, or where it is part matter of law and part matter of fact; nor may a record be traversed which is not to be tried by a jury. And if a matter be expressly pleaded in the affirmative, which is expressly answered in the negative, no traverse is necessary, there being a sufficient issue joined; also also where the defendant hath given a particular answer in his plea, to all the material matters contained in the declaration, he need not take a traverse; for when the thing is answered, there needs no further denial. Cro. Eliz. 755. Yebu. 173, 193, 195. 2 Mod. 54. If a traverse contain no more than the party hath pleaded before, it will not be good: No traverse ought to be taken but where the thing traversed is issuable: And where one will make a traverse to a declaration, he ought to traverse that part of it, the doing whereof will make an end of the matter, when the point is determined by the jury. 2 Roll. Rep. 37. 2 Lill. Abr. 587. 3 Nelf. Abr. 355.

As one traverse is enough to make a perfect issue, a traverse cannot be regularly taken upon a traverse, if 'tis well taken to the material point, and goes to the substance of the action; but where the first traverse is not well taken, nor pertinent to the matter, there to that which was sufficiently confessed and avoided before, the other party may well take a traverse after such immaterial traverse taken before: And if special matter alledged in a foreign county in the defendant's plea be false, the plaintiff may maintain his action, and traverse that special matter; and in such case a traverse on a traverse hath been adjudged good. 1 Saund. 32. Poph. 101.

These rules are to be observed in traverses: 1. The traverse of a thing not immediately alledged, vitiates a good bar. 2. Nothing must be traversed but what is expressly alledged. 3. Surplusage in a plea doth not inforce a traverse. 4. It must be always made to the substantial part of the title. 5. Where an act may indifferently be intended to be at one day or another, there the day is not traversable. 6. In action of trespass generally the day is not material; though if a matter be to be done upon a particular day, there it is material and traversable. 2 Roll. Rep. 37. 1 Roll. Rep. 235. Yebu. 122. 2 Lill. Abr. 313. If the parties have agreed on the day for a thing to be done, the traverse of the day is material; but where they are not agreed on the day, it is otherwise; and though 'tis proved to be done on another day, 'tis sufficient. Palm. 280. Per Holt Ch. Just. Where a traverse goes to the matter of a plea, &c. all that went before is waved by the traverse; and if the traverse goes to the time only, it is not waved. 2 Salk. 642. In action of trespass, a particular place and time were laid in the declaration, and in the plea there was a traverse as to the place, but not as to the time: On averment that it was eadem transgressio, the plea was held good. 3 Lev. 227. 2 Lutw. 1452. Where a plea in justification of a thing is not local, a traverse of the place is wrong. 2 Mod. 270. The substance and body of a plea must be traversed. Hob. 232. But a traverse that a person died seized of land in fee modo & forma as the defendant had declared, was adjudged good. Hutt. 123. A lord and tenant differ in the services, there the tenure and not the seisin shall be traversed; but if they agree in the services, the seisin and not the tenure is traversable; and it is a general rule, that the tenant shall never traverse the seisin of the services without admitting the tenure. March 116. 3 Nelf. Abr. 361. That which is not material nor traversable, is not admitted when it is alledged, and not traversed. 2 Salk. 361. But the omitting a traverse where it is necessary, is matter of substance. 2 Mod. 60. And a traverse of a debt is ill when a promise is the ground of the action; which ought to be traversed, and not the debt. Leon. 252.

A traverse should have an inducement to make it relate to the foregoing matter. And, 'tis no good plea for the plaintiff to reply, that a man is alive who is alledged to be dead, without traversing that he is not dead. 3 Salk. 357. Qu. It is said that where a traverse absque hoc comprizes the whole matter generally, it may conclude & de hoc pon. se super patriam; but when it traverses a particular matter, the conclusion ought to be with an averment, &c. 1 Salk. 4.

Traverse may be in an answer in Chancery, replication, &c. In an action upon a bail bond the arrest is not traversable. 1 Strange 444. Traverses of a seisin in fee is ill, where a less estate would be sufficient. 2 Strange 818. Where the party confesses and avoids, he ought not to traverse:

And it may be passed over and issue taken upon the traverse. 2 Strange 837. See Chancery, and Black. Com. 3 V. 312.

Traverse of an indictment or presentment, is to take issue upon, and contradict or deny some chief point of it: As in a presentment against a person for a highway overflowed with water, for default of scouring a ditch, &c. he may traverse the matter, that there is no highway, or that the ditch is sufficiently scoured; or otherwise traverse the cause, viz. That he hath not the land, or he and they whose estate, &c. have not used to scour the ditch. Lamb. Eiren. 521. Boek Entr. See Black. Com. 4 V. 345.

Traverse of an Office, is to prove that an inquisition made of lands or goods by the escheator, is defective and untruly made. No person shall traverse an office, unless he can make to himself a good right and title: And if one be admitted to traverse an office, this admission of the party to the traverse, doth suppose the title to be in him, or else he had no cause of traverse. Vaugh. 64. 2 Lill. Abr. 590, 591. The traverse of an inquisition for the King is to be considered as a debt, and the prosecutor may carry down the record. 2 Strange 1208. See Black. Com. 3 V. 260.

Traberium, Signifies a ferry: It is mentioned in the Monasticon. Tom. 2. pag. 1002.

Trawlermen, A kind of fishermen on the river Thames, who used unlawful arts and engines to destroy fish, of which some were termed Tinckermen, others Hobbermen, and Trawlermen, &c. And hence come to trowl or travel for pikes. Stow's Surv. Lond. pag. 19.

Traybaston. See Justices of Traybaston; and see copies of several commissions granted to them by Edward the First, in Spelman's Glossary, verbo Traybaston. The common people in those days called them Traybaston, quod sonat, trabe baculum. Edward the First in his thirty-second year, sends out a new writ of inquisition, called Trailbaston, against intruders on other men's lands, who, to oppress the right owner, would make over their lands to great men; against batterers hired to beat men, breakers of the peace, ravishers, incendiaries, murderers, fighters, false assisors, and other such malefactors: Which inquisition was so strictly executed, and such fines taken, that it brought in exceeding much treasure to the King. Chron. fol. 111. See Plac. parliamentaria, fol. 211, & 280. And 4 Inst. 186. And in a parliament 1 Ric. 2. the commons of England petitioned the King, that no commission of Eyre or Traybaston, might be issued during the wars, or for twenty years to come. Rot. Par. 1 R. 2. Cowell.

Traytoz, (Traditor, Proditor) A state offender, betrayer, &c. See Treason.

Trayterous, (Perfidiosus) Treacherous or full of disloyalty. Lat. Low Dict.

Trayterous position, Of taking arms by the King's authority against his person, and those that are commissioned by him, is condemned by the Statute 14 Car. 2. cap. 3.

T. R. E. Tempore Regis Edwardi. These initial letters have this continual note of time in the domesday register, where the valuation of manors is recounted, what it was in the time of Edward the Confessor; and what since the conquest. As in Oxfordshire—manerium de Burcestre, T. R. E. valuit quindecim libras, modo sexdecim. Cowell.

Treason, (From the Fr. Trahir, to betray, and Trahison, betraying, contracted into treason) is the crime of treachery and infidelity to our lawful sovereign; the Latin word for which used in law is proditio.

Treason is divided into High Treason, Alia proditio, and Petit Treason, Proditio parva.

Mention is also made, in some of our statutes of accumulative and constructive treason. High treason is designed to be an offence committed against the security of the King and kingdom; and as all treasons include felony, the word proditio must be used in the indictment for treason, to distinguish it. 3 Inst. 4, 15. The great-ness ness of this offence of treason and severity of the punishment thereof, is upon two reasons, because the safety, peace and tranquillity of the kingdom, is highly concerned in the preservation of the person and government of the King; and therefore the laws have given all possible security thereto, under the severest penalties: And as the subjects have protection from the King and his laws; so they are bound by their allegiance to be true and faithful to him. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 59.

At Common law there were different opinions concerning high treason; and before the statute 25 Ed. 3. Treason was a very uncertain crime; for the killing of the King's brother, or even of his messenger, was taken to be included in it; so when acts tended to diminish the dignity of the crown, and where a man grew popular, this was construed to be inroaching royal power, and held to be treason; so that by the excess of the times, any crime by aggravating the circumstances of it, was heightened into treason: Wherefore this statute was made to determine what should be treason; and since the making thereof, there can be no constructive treason; i. e. Nothing can be construed to be treason, which is not literally specified in that act; nor may the statute be construed by equity, because it is a declarative law, and one declaration ought not to be the declaration of another; besides it was made to secure the subject in his life, liberty, and estate, which by admitting constructions to be made of it, might destroy all. 1 Hawth. P. C. 34. 3 Salk. 358.

The statute 25 Ed. 3. cap. 2. (reciting that divers opinions having been, what cases should amount to high treason) enacts and declares, That if a person doth compass or imagine the death of the King, Queen, or their eldest son and heir; or if he do violate and deflower the King's wife or companion, or his eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife of the King's eldest son; or if he levy war against the King in his realm, or adhere to his enemies, give them aid and comfort in the realm, or elsewhere, and thereof be probably attainted of open deed; and if a man counterfeit the King's Great or Privy Seal, or his money; or bring false money into the kingdom, like to the money of England, to make payment therewith in deceit of the King and his people; or if he kill the Chancellor, Treasurer, or any of the King's Justices in either Bench, Justices of Assize, &c. being in their places, doing their offices; these cases are to be adjudged treason: And if any other case happen before the justices, supposed to be treason, they shall not proceed to judgment till it be declared by the King and parliament whether it ought to be judged treason or not.

This statute may be considered as one of the greatest bulwarks of English liberty.

But to proceed. It was made high treason to wish or desire, by words or writing, or to imagine the death of the King, Queen, or their heir apparent; or to publish, that the King was an heretick, schismatick, infidel, &c. by 26 H. 8. c. 13. And to endeavour to depose the King, or affirm by writing, that he is an usurper, tyrant, &c. was declared treason by the 1 Edw. 6. c. 12. But these are repealed by 1 Mar. which enacts, That no act, deed or offence, shall be deemed or adjudged treason, but such as are declared and expressed to be so by the 25 Ed. 3. concerning treasons. 1 Mar. Sess. 1. c. 1. All treasons were settled by the Stat. 25 Edw. 3. c. 2. And by 1 Mar. c. 1. that act was re-inforced and confirmed, and made the only standard of treason; the 1 Mar. takes away the power of the King and parliament to adjudge any thing else to be treason; than what is declared to be such therein: So as no crime is at this day high treason, petit treason, or misprision of treason, unless it be declared by 25 Ed. 3. or by some statute since the 1 Mar. cap. 1. All other statutes made between those two acts concerning high treason are abrogated; but since 1 Mar. many offences are made high treason by statute, which were not so before; as relating to the Pope, Papish Priests and Papists, the Protestant Succession, &c. And to say that the King is a Papist, or that he intends to introduce Popery; intending death or bodily harm, or a restraint of the King's person; or to incite an invasion, &c. and such intention: declared by printing, writing or speaking, the offenders shall be adjudged traitors. 13 Car. 2. c. 1. It was declared treason for persons to send any arms, powder, masts, cordage, &c. to France, during the late war, by 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 13. Corresponding with the pretended Prince of Wales, or remitting him money, is made high treason. 13 W. 3. c. 3. And if any one shall maliciously by writing or printing, declare that the King is not lawful King, or that the Pretender hath any title to the crown, he shall be guilty of treason. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 3. Officers or soldiers of this realm, holding correspondence with any rebel, or enemy to the King, or giving them any advice, information by letter, message, &c. is declared treason by the 2 & 3 Ann. c. 20. And if a subject of Great Britain or Ireland shall enlist himself a soldier, with intent to go beyond sea, to serve any foreign prince or state, he shall suffer and forfeit as in treason. See 12 Ann. B. 2. c. 11. and 9 Geo. 2. c. 30.

These are the chief of our statutes ancient and modern, declaring what offences shall be treason; and treason committed out of the realm may be tried in B. R. as if the offence had been done in the county of Middlesex; also they may be inquired of and tried in such county as the King thinks fit, &c. A party within one year after outlawry for treason, may surrender himself to the Chief Justice of England, and traverse the indictment; and none shall be attainted of treason but by the testimony of two witnesses, &c. by Stat. 35 H. 8. c. 2. 5 & 6 Edw. 6. c. 11.

All trials for high treason shall be according to the course of the Common law, and not otherwise. 1 & 2 Ph. & M. cap. 10. And persons indicted for treason, are to have a copy of the indictment five days before trial, to advise with counsel; and shall be admitted to make a full defence by counsel learned in the law, and by lawful witnesses, &c. and there must be two witnesses to the same overt-act, or two acts of the same treason produced face to face, to make out the treason against them. 7 W. 3. cap. 3.

If one witness in high treason be positive, and the other is only by hearsay; these are not two lawful accusers within the statutes: But two witnesses are not required either upon the indictment or trial of treason for counterfeiting money, by the proviso of the statute 1 & 2 P. & M. Offenders guilty of high treason by being concerned in the rebellion in the first year of K. Geo. 1. were to be tried before such commissioners of oyer and terminer and gaol-delivery, and in such county as his Majesty by any commission under the Great Seal should appoint, by lawful men of the same county, as if the fact had been there committed: This extended only to persons actually in arms. 1 Geo. 1. c. 33. All are principals in high treason; and on attainder of treason, the blood of the criminal is corrupted; he shall be drawn, hang'd and quarter'd; and forfeit his lands and goods to the King, &c.

Treason by the Stat. 25 Ed. 3. in compassing and imagining the death of the King, must be manifested by some overt-act; as by providing arms to do it, consulting to levy war against him, writing letters to excite others to join in it, assembling persons in order to imprison or depose the King, or to get him into their power, &c. these acts are sufficient to prove that one compassed or imagined the death of the King, and to make a man guilty of high treason. 3 Inst. 6, 12. It has been a very great question whether words spoken can amount to high treason: But it was resolved in the trial of the regicides, that though a man cannot be indicted of high treason for words only; yet if he be indicted for compassing the King's death, these words may be laid as an overt act, to prove that he compassed the death of the King; and to support this opinion, the case of a person was cited who was indicted of treason, Anno 9 Car. 1. for that he being the King's subject at Lisbon, used these words: I will kill the King, (innuendo King Charles) if I may come to him; and afterwards he came into England for that purpose; and two merchants proving that he spoke the words, for that his traitorous intent and the wicked imagination of his heart was declared by these words, it was held to be high treason by the Common law, and within the statute of the 25 Ed. 3. cap. 2. Cro. Car. 242. 1 Lev. 57.

Deliberate words, which shew a direct purpose against the King's life, will amount to an overt act of compassing or imagining the King's death; as the compassing or imagining the death of the King is the treason, words are the most natural way of expressing the imagination of the heart, and may be good evidence of it: And any external act which may be a manifestation of such imagination, is an overt act; but although words may be an overt-act of treason, they must be so certain and positive, as plainly to denote the intention of the speaker, and be laid with an averment that they were spoken de Rege, &c. 1 Hawk. P. C. 40. 2 Salk. 631. 3 Mod. 52.

The maxim, that no words can amount to treason at this day, is not generally true; and notwithstanding the objection made against words being high treason, from the Stat. 1. M. cap. 1. wherein it is said, that many honourable persons, and others of good reputation, had then of late for words only suffered shameful death, that the severity of such like dangerous and painful laws should be abolished: It was enacted, That no offence made treason by words, writing, cyphering, &c. should be adjudged treason. It appears from the next part of the preamble of the said statute, that it is applicable only to the statutes in the time of King Hen. 8. which made bare words high treason. And in the first edition of Hale's Pleas of the Crown, it is twice said, that it hath been adjudged that words are an overt-act; though in the latter edition it is said, that compassing by bare words is not an overt-act, &c. 1 Hawk. 41.

Ever since the revolution, it has been the constant practice, where a person, by treasonable discourses, has manifested a design to murder or depose the King, to convict him upon such evidence: And Chief Justice Halt was of opinion, That express words were not necessary to convict a man of high treason; but if from the tenor of his discourse, the jury were satisfied he was engaged in a design against the King's life; this was sufficient to convict the prisoner. State Trials, Vol. 4. pag. 172.

Words of persecution to kill the King, are overt-acts of compassing his death; and it hath been adjudged, that he who intended by force to prescribe laws to the King, and to restrain him of his power, doth intend to deprive him of his crown and life; that if a man be ignorant of the intention of those who take up arms against the King, if he join in any action with them, he is guilty of treason; and that the law construesth every rebellion to be a plot against the King's life, and a deposing him, because a rebel would not suffer that King to reign and live, who will punish him for rebellion. Moor 620. 2 Salk. 63. 3 Nels. Abr. 365.

It is said that words spoken to draw away the affection of the people from the King, and to stir them up against him, tend to his death and destruction, and are treason: But the imagination, in high treason, without act or word, is not punishable. Dyer 128. 1 Rep. Jenk. Cent. 88. If words are set down in writing, and kept privately in one's closet, they are not an overt-act of treason, except the words are published. Kil. 20. But it hath been held, that treasonable matter put in writing, scribere est agere; and though it was not published, but sent in a box to the King, it shewed the intent of the party to be high treason. 2 Roll. Rep. 88.

Under the head of compassing and imagining the King's death, intention of treason proved by circumstances, is high treason: The law takes notice of intentions to commit treason, and mens actions are governed by their intentions, &c. 1 Inst. 140. 5 Mod. 206. For a man to say that he will be King after the King's death, hath been adjudged treason: And so to prophesy when the King shall die; for this may imply a knowledge of a conspiracy. Roll Rep. 88.

There must be a compassing, intent or imagination to kill the King, to make the offence treason; the killing him per infortunium, as Sir Wm. Tyrrel killed King Will. 2. by the glance of an arrow in New Forest, is not treason: And though by the ancient law, if a madman killed, or offered to kill the King, it was held to be treason; by the 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 2. by force of the words compass or imagine, he that is non compos mentis, and totally deprived of all compassings and imaginations, cannot commit high treason; but it must be an absolute madness, and total deprivation of memory. 3 Inst. 6.

If the husband of a Queen Regent conspire her death; or a Queen Consort shall conspire the King's death, either of these acts are treason: And though the compassing the death of the Queen Consort be treason, by the 25 Ed. 3. this must be intended during the marriage; and it doth not extend to a Queen Dowager. 3 Inst. 8. And the eldest son and heir of the King, that is living, is intended by the said act, though he was not the first son; but if the heir apparent to the Crown be a collateral heir, he is not within the statute; nor is a conspiracy against such collateral heir, treason by this act. Ibid.

Also violating the Queen Consort is high treason, and her yielding and consenting to it is treason; but this doth not affect a Dowager Queen: So likewise violating the Wife of the Prince is treason only during the coverture. 3 Inst. 9. And the eldest daughter of the King is such a daughter as is eldest not married at the time of the violation, which will be treason, although there was an elder daughter than her, who died without issue: for now the elder alive has a right to the inheritance of the Crown, upon failure of issue male: And violating the Queen's person, &c. was high treason at Common law, by reason it destroyed the certainty of the King's issue, and consequently raised contention about the succession. H. P. C. 16.

A Queen Dowager after the death of her husband, is not a Queen within the statute; for though she bears the title, and hath many prerogatives answering the dignity of her person, yet she is not the King's wife or companion: And a Queen divorced from the King a vinculo matrimonii, is no Queen within this act, although the King be living; which was the case of Q. Katharine, who after twenty years marriage with King Hen. 8. was divorced causa affinitatis. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 124.

At Common law compassing the death of any of the King's children, and declaring it by overt-act, was taken to be treason; though by this statute it is restrained to the eldest son and heir. Ibid. 125.

By the Common law, levying war against the King was treason: But, as in cases of high treason, there must be an overt-act; a conspiracy or compassing to levy war is no overt-act, unless a war is actually levied; though if a war is actually levied, then the conspirators are all traitors, although they are not in arms: And a conspiracy to levy war will be evidence of an overt-act to maintain an indictment for compassing the King's death; but if the indictment be for levying war only, proof must be made that a war was levied, to bring the offender under this clause of the 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 2. 3 Inst. 8, 9. H. P. C. 14. If two or more conspire to levy war, and one of them alone raises forces; this shall be adjudged treason in all. Dyer 98.

Persons raising forces for any publick end or purpose, and putting themselves in a posture of war, by chusing leaders, and opposing constables or guards, &c. is high treason. Formerly there was a great riot in London by the apprentices there, some whereof being imprisoned, the rest conspired to kill the Lord Mayor, and release their comrades; and in order to it, to provide themselves with armour, by breaking open two houses near the Tower; they marched with a cloke on a pole, instead of an ensign, towards the Lord-Mayor's house; and in the way meeting with opposition from the sheriffs, resisted them; this was held levying of war, and treason. Trin. 37. Eliz. Sid. 358.

Those who make an insurrection in order to redress a publick grievance, whether it be a real or pretended one, are said to levy war against the King, although they have no direct design against his person; as they are for doing that by private authority, which he by publick justice ought to do, which manifestly tends to a rebellion: For example; where great numbers by force endeavour to remove certain persons from the King, or to lay violent hands on a privy counsellor, or revenge themselves against a magistrate for executing his office, or to deliver men out of prison, expel foreigners, or to reform the law of religion, religion, to pull down all bawdy-houses, to throw down all inclosures in general, &c. But where a number of men rise to remove a grievance to their private interest, as to pull down a particular inclosure, they are only rioters; for there is a difference between a pretence that is publick and general, and one that is private or particular. 3 Inst. 9. H. P. C. 14. Kel. 75. 1 Harwk. P. C. 37.

It was resolved by all the judges of England in the reign of King Hen. 8. that an insurrection against the statute of labourers, for raising their wages, was a levying of war against the King; because it was generally against the King's law, and the offenders took upon them the reformation thereof. Read. Statutes Vol. 5. pa. 150. Not only such as directly rebel and take up arms against the King; but also those who in a violent manner withstand his lawful authority, or attempt to reform his government, do levy war against him; and therefore to hold a fort or castle against the King's forces, or keep together armed men in great numbers against the King's express command, have been adjudged a levying war, and treason: But those who join themselves to rebels, &c. for fear of death, and return the first opportunity, are not guilty of this offence. 3 Inst. 10. Kel. 76.

A person in arms was sent for by some of the council from the King, and to give in the names of those that were armed with him; but he refused, and continued in arms in his house, and it was held treason: Also where he went with a troop of captains and others into London, to pray help of the city to save his life, and bring him to court to the Queen, though there was no intent of hurt to her, was adjudged treason; and in them who joined with him, though they knew nothing but only a difference between him and some courtiers: So if any man shall attempt to strengthen himself so far, that the Prince cannot resist him. Earl of Essex's Case, Moor 620.

To succour or adhere to the King's enemies, give them comfort or relief, or for any person to be in council with others to levy any seditious wars, are high treason: And the delivery or surrender of the King's castles or forts, by the captains thereof, to the King's enemy, within the realm or without, for reward, &c. is an adhering to the King's enemies, and treason by 25 Ed. 3. st. 5. c. 2. A lieutenant of Ireland let several rebels out of Dublin Castle, and discharged some Irish hostages which had been given for securing the peace; and for this he was attainted of high treason in adhering to the King's enemies. 33 H. 8. Adhering to the King's enemies out of the realm is treason, and one who was beyond sea having solicited a foreign Prince to invade the kingdom, was held guilty of high treason, and triable by the statute 35 Hen. 8. But adherence out of the realm must be alledged in some place in England. 3 Inst. 10. H. P. C. 14. Dyer 298, 310. If there be war between the King of England and France, those Englishmen that live in France before the war, and continue there after, are not merely upon that account adherents to the King's enemies, to be guilty of treason, unless they actually assist in such war; or at least refuse to return into England upon a privy seal, or on proclamation and notice thereof; and this refusal is but evidence of an adherence, and not so in itself. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 165. It has been adjudged, that adhering to the King's enemies is an adhering against him; and that the English subjects joining with rebel subjects of the King's allies, and fighting with them under the command of an alien enemy prince, is treason, in adhering to the King's enemies; and cruising in a ship with intent to destroy the King's ships, without doing any act of hostility, is an overt-act of adhering, comforting and aiding; for where an Englishman lifts himself and marches, this is treason without coming to battle, or actual fighting. 2 Salk. 634.

An indictment for levying of war, or adhering to the King's enemies generally, without shewing some particular instance, is not good; because of these words, quia. And thereof shall be proveably attained by overt deed, which follow and are not connected to the treasons of compassing the King's death, levying war, and adhering to the King's enemies; and as these treasons are several and distinct treasons, one of them cannot be made an overt-act of another. Ibid. There is no necessity expressly to alledge that adherence was against the King; but the special manner of adherence must be set forth: And it is said, that the succouring a rebel fled into another realm, is not within the statute; for a rebel is not properly an enemy, and the statute is strictly taken. 1 Harwk. 38.

Subjects of the King in open war or rebellion, are not the King's enemies, but traitors; and if a subject join with a foreign enemy, and come into England with him, if he be taken prisoner, he shall not be ransomed or proceeded against as an enemy, but as a traitor to the King: On the other hand, an enemy coming in open hostility into England, and taken, shall be either executed by martial law, or ransomed; for he cannot be indicted of treason, because he never was within the ligeance of the King. 3 Inst. 11.

By the word proveably, a person ought to be convicted of the treason on direct and manifest proofs, and not upon presumptions or inferences; and the word attainted, necessarily implies, that the prisoner be proceeded against and attainted according to due course of law; wherefore if a man be killed in open war against the King, or be put to death arbitrarily, or by Martial law, and be not attainted of treason according to the Common law, he forfeits nothing; for which cause some persons killed in open rebellion against the King, have been attainted by act of parliament. Ibid. 12.

If a person be indicted of treason, and will not answer, or if he answers impertinently, judgment shall be given against him as taken pro confesso that he is guilty. Style 104. On a judgment for high treason, error was brought, for that the indictment did not conclude contra ligeantiam, &c. Now though all the particular facts of the treason were fully expressed, so that it appeared that it must be contra ligeantiam suae debitum, yet the judgment was reversed. 3 Lev. 396. Upon a writ of error to reverse an attainder in treason, because the party convicted was not asked what he had to say why judgment should not be given against him, the attainder was reversed; for he might have a pardon, or some matter to move in arrest of judgment. 2 Salk. 630. 3 Mod. 265. And the omission of any necessary part of the judgment for treason, is error sufficient to reverse an attainder, as it is more severe and formidable in treason than for any other crime. 2 Salk. 632.

As to the counterfeiting the King's seal, this was treason by the Common law; and the statute 25 Ed. 3. mentions only the great seal and privy seal; for the counterfeiting of the sign manual or privy signet, is not treason within that act, but by 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 6. Those who aid and consent to the counterfeiting of the King's seal are equally guilty with the actors: But an intent or compassing to counterfeit the great seal, if it be not actually done, is not treason; there must be an actual counterfeiting, and it is to be like the King's great seal. 3 Inst. 15. S. P. C. 3. H. P. C. 18. And this branch of the statute does not extend to the affixing the great seal to a patent, without a warrant for so doing; nor to the raising any thing out of a patent, and adding new matter therein; or to the taking off the wax impressed by the great seal from one patent, and fixing it to another; yet this, though it be not a counterfeiting, has been adjudged a misprison of the highest degree: And a person guilty of an act of this nature, with relation to a commission for levying money, &c. had judgment to be drawn and hang'd. 2 H. 4. 3 Inst. 16. Kel. 80. Till a new great seal is made, the old one of a late King, being used and employed as such, is the King's seal within the statute; notwithstanding its variance in the inscription, portraiture, and other substantial: And when an old great seal is broken, the counterfeiting of that seal, and applying it to an instrument of that date wherein it stood, or to any patent, &c. without date, is treason. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 177. The adding a crown in a counterfeit privy signet, which was not in the true; and omitting some words of the inscription, and inserting others, done purposely to make a little difference, alters not the case, but 'tis high treason; being published on a feigned patent to be true, &c. Ibid. 184.

At Common law forging of the King's money was treason, as counterfeiting it is by the 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. Forging or counterfeiting foreign money made current here by proclamation, is likewise high treason, by 1 Mar. c. 6. And if not current here, it is misprision of treason. Counterfeiting the King's coin, or impairing or lightening it by clipping, &c. is treason; but it shall work no corruption of blood. 18 El. cap. 1. And as those who coin money without the King's authority are guilty of treason; so are those that have authority to do it, if they make it of greater alloy, or less weight than they ought. 3 Inst. 17. 2 Inst. 577. H. P. C. 20. If A. counterfeits money, and another vent the same for his own benefit, he is not guilty of treason; for it is only a cheat and misdemeanor in him, punishable by fine and imprisonment: But if one counterfeits the King's money, though he never vents it, this is a counterfeiting and treason within the statute. And if any man doth counterfeit the lawful coin of this kingdom in a great measure, but with some variation in the impression, &c. yet it is counterfeiting of the King's money; and shall not evade the statute. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 214, 215. Treason in making stamps, dyes, &c. for coining and colouring metal, &c. see 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 26. and Coin.

Bringing false money into this kingdom, counterfeited like the money of England, knowing it to be false, is treason by the 25 Ed. 3. In this case it must be counterfeited, according to the likeness of English money, and is to be knowingly brought over from some foreign nation, not from any place subject to the Crown of England; and must be uttered in payment. 3 Inst. 18.

The killing of the King's chancellor, treasurer, justices of either bench, &c. declared to be treason, relates to no other officers of state besides those expressly named; and to them only when they are in actual execution of their offices, representing the person of the King, and it doth not extend to any attempt to kill, or wounding them, &c. 3 Inst. 18, 38. H. P. C. 17. The places for the justices to do their offices, are the courts themselves, where they usually, or by adjournment, sit for dispatch of the business of their courts. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 232.

By the stat. 17 Geo. 2. c. 39. it is made high treason to hold correspondence with the Pretender's sons. And if they land or attempt to land in his majesty's dominions, they are to be deemed attainted of high treason. By the stat. 20 Geo. 2. c. 39. any person impeached by the Commons of high treason, whereby any corruption of blood, may make his defence by council, not exceeding two, to be assigned him on application at any time after articles exhibited. See Misprision. See farther as to High Treason, Black. Com. 4 V. 75, 431. with respect to trials in high treason, Id. 345, 433. As to Misprision of Treason, Id. 120.

High Treason, Appeal of. It was antiently permitted, that any subject might appeal another subject of high treason, either in the courts of Common law (Britt. c. 22.) or in parliament, or (for treasons committed beyond the seas) in the court of the high constable and marshal. The cognizance of appeals in the latter still continues in force; and so late as 1631 there was a trial by battle awarded in the court of chivalry, on such an appeal of treason: (By Donald Lord Rea against David Ramsay. Rushw. Vol. 2. part 2. pag. 112.) But the first was virtually abolished by the statutes 5 Ed. 3. c. 9. & 25 Ed. 3. c. 24. (1 Hal. P. C. 349.) and the second (i. e. appeals in parliament) expressly by stat. 1 Hen. 4. c. 14. So that the only appeals now in force for things done within the realm, are appeals of Felony and Mayhem. Black. Com. 4 V. 310.

Petit Treason, is where one, out of malice, takes away the life of a subject, to whom he owes special obedience: And it is called petit treason in respect to high treason, which is against the King. 3 Inst. 20. It may be committed where a servant kills his master, a wife her husband, or a secular or religious person killeth his prelate or superior. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2. And aiders, abettors, and procurers, are within the act; but if the killing is upon a sudden falling out, or se defendendo, &c. it is not petit treason; for persons accused of petit treason shall be adjudged Not guilty, or principal and accessory, according to the rules of law in other cases. H. P. C. 24.

Petit treason is committed against the head, though not against the supreme head; and if a servant kills his mistress, or the wife of his master, she is master within the letter of the statute, and it is petit treason: But this statute is so strictly construed, that no case which cannot be brought within the meaning of the words of it, shall be punished by it; and therefore if a son kill his father, he shall not be tried for petit treason, except he served his father for wages, &c. in which case he shall be indicted by the name of a servant; and yet the offence is more heinous by far in a child than a servant. 3 Inst. 20. H. P. C. 23. 11 Rep. 34. A servant procured another to kill his master, who killed him in the servant's presence; this was petit treason, in the servant, and murder in the other; if the servant had been absent, the crime would not have been petit treason, but murder, to which he would have been accessory. 3 Inst. 20. Moor 91. v. infra. Where a servant intended to kill his master, and laid in wait for that purpose while he was his servant, but did not do it till he had been a year out of his service; it was adjudged petit treason. H. P. C. 23. A maid servant and a stranger conspired to rob the mistress, and in the night the servant opened the door and let in the stranger into the house, who killed her mistress, she lighting him to her bed, but neither saying nor doing any thing, only holding the candle; and this was held murder in the stranger, and petit treason in the servant. Dyer 128.

If a wife and a stranger kill the husband, it is petit treason in the wife, and murder in the stranger: And so it is of an ecclesiastick person, killing his prelate, &c. Dalt. 337. If a wife and her servant conspire to kill the husband, and appoint time and place for it, but the servant alone in the absence of the wife killeth him; it shall be petit treason in both: And if the wife procure a servant to kill the husband, both are guilty of petit treason; also if a stranger procures a wife or servant to kill the husband or master, he may be indicted as accessory to petit treason. Dyer 128, 332. Crompt. 41.

Where the wife and another who was not her servant, conspired the death of the husband, the indictment was that the wife proditrice, and the other person feloniae gave him poison, &c. whereof he died; and the wife being acquitted on the indictment, she brought an action against her son-in-law for a malicious prosecution, and recovered damages; but afterwards he brought an appeal of murder against her, upon which she was convicted in B. R. and carried down into the county where the fact was done, and there executed. Crs. Car. 331, 382. Mod. Ca. 217. 3 Nels. Abr. 372. On divorce from the husband for adultery, a woman is a wife within the statute to be guilty of petit treason against her husband; for they may cohabit again: But where a man marries a second wife, the former being alive, she is not within this law. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 381.

If a clergyman be ordained by the bishop of A. and he kills that bishop, it is petit treason, for he hath professed canonical obedience to him: And where a parson hath benefices in two dioceses, if he kill the bishop of either it is petit treason; but in case he kill a bishop out of the diocese where he is beneficed, it is only murder. 1 Hale's Hist. P. C. 381. A parson kills the metropolitan of his province, this will be petit treason, though he be not his immediate superior. Ibid. In petit treason, it is said that there must be two witnesses to the indictment; and need not be to the trial of it, for it is not within the statute 7 W. 3. c. 3. 2 Hawk. P. C. 258. All petit treason implies murder, and it is the highest degree thereof: And an attempt by a wife to kill her husband; piracy by a subject, &c. were petit treason by the Common law. 1 Hawk. 87, 88.

This kind of treason gives forfeiture of lands by escheat to the lord of the fee, &c. and a man is drawn and hanged for it; and a woman burned. 1 Inst. 37. One apprehended by an officer may surrender within the year year in order to reverse an outlawry. 2 Strange 824. Commitment for treason may be general, without expressing the particular species. 1 Strange 3.

On the subject of treason, see farther, 5 New Abr. tit. Treason. See farther to as to petit treason, Black. Com. 4 V. 75, 203.

Treasure. (Tresaurus) Signifies riches and wealth; and as the King's treasure is the honour and safety of the King, for this reason mines of gold and silver belong to the King.

Treasurer. (Treasurarius) Is an officer to whom the treasure of another is committed to be kept, and truly disposed of: The chief of these with us is the Lord Treasurer of England, who is a lord by his office, and one of the greatest men of the kingdom. This great officer holds his place durante bene-placito, and is instituted by the delivery of a white staff to him by the King; and in former times he received his office by delivery of the golden keys of the treasury: He is also treasurer of the Exchequer, by letters patent. And by 31 Edw. 3. Stat. 1. c. 12. In writs of error the lord chancellor and lord treasurer shall cause the record and process of the Exchequer to be brought before them, who are judges; but the writ is to be directed to the treasurer and barons, who have the keeping of the records. Under the charge and government of the lord treasurer, is all the King's wealth contained in the Exchequer; he has the check of all the officers employed in collecting the customs and royal revenues; all the offices of the customs in all parts of England are in his gift and disposition; escheators in every county are nominated by him; and he makes leases of all the lands belonging to the crown, &c.

But the high and important post of lord treasurer has of late years, like some other great offices, been esteemed too great a task for one person, and been generally executed by commissioners. And see more belonging to this office, Stat. 20. Edw. 3. c. 6. 31 H. 6. c. 5. 4 Ed. 4. c. 1. 17 Edw. 4. c. 5. 21 H. 8. c. 20. and 1 Edw. 6. c. 13. 4 Inst. 104. See farther Black. Com. 3 V. 44, 56. If any one kill the treasurer, being in his place, doing his office, it is high-treason per Stat. 25 Ed. 3. c. 2.

Besides the lord treasurer, there is a treasurer of the King's household, who is of the privy council, and with the comptroller, &c. has great power. Stat. Westm. 2. c. 1. A treasurer of the navy or war. 35 Eliz. c. 4. Treasurer of the King's chamber. 33 H. 8. c. 39. A treasurer of the wardrobe. 25 Ed. 3. c. 21. And there are treasurers of corporations, &c.

Treasurer in Cathedral Churches. An officer whose charge was to take care of the vestments, plate, jewels, relics, and other treasure belonging to the said churches; and at the time of the reformation, the office was extinguished as needless in most cathedral churches; but it is still remaining in those of Salisbury, London, &c.

Treasurer of the County. Is he that keeps the county stock: There are two of them in each county, chosen by the major part of the justices of the peace, &c. at Easter sessions; they must have 10*l.* a year in land, or 150*l.* in personal estate, and shall not continue in their office above a year; and they are to account yearly at Easter sessions; or within ten days after to their successors, under penalties: The county stock, of which this officer hath the keeping, is raised by rating every parish yearly; and is disposed to charitable uses, for the relief of maimed soldiers and mariners, prisoners in the county gaols, paying the salaries of governors of houses of correction, and relieving poor alms-houses, &c. And the duty of those treasurers, with the manner of raising the stock, &c. is particularly in the statutes of 43 El. c. 2. 7 Jac. 1. c. 4. 11 & 12 W. 3. c. 18. 5 Ann. c. 32. 6 Geo. 1. c. 23.

Treasure-Trove. (Tresaurus inventus) Is where any money is found hid in the earth, but not lying upon the ground, and no man knows to whom it belongs; then the property thereof belongs to the King, or the lord of the manor by special grant or prescription: But if the owner may any ways be known, it doth not belong to the King or lord of the liberty, but such owner: By the civil law, treasure-trove is given to the finder; but the law of England gives it to the King by his prerogative, or some other claiming under him, &c. Bract. lib. 3. c. 3. Inf. 132. Kirb. 80. Nothing is said to be treasure-trove, but gold and silver; and it is every subject's part as soon as he has found any treasure in the earth, to make it known to the coroners of the county, &c. and concealing treasure found is punished by fine and imprisonment. Briton. cap. 17. S. P. C. 25. Coroners ought to enquire of treasure-trove, being certified thereof by the King's bailiffs or others, and of who were the finders, &c. 4 Edw. 1. And seizure of treasure-trove, may be inquired of in the sheriff's turn. 2 Haw. P. C. 67. See Black. Com. 1 V. 295, 296. 4 V. 121.

Treasury. Signifies sometimes the place where the King's treasure is deposited; and at other times the office of treasurer. Cowell.

Treaties, Leagues and Alliances. It is the King's prerogative to make treaties, leagues, and alliances with foreign states and princes. For it is by the law of nations essential to the goodness of a league, that it be made by the sovereign power; and then it is binding upon the whole community: And in England the sovereign power, quoad hoc, is vested in the person of the King. Whatever contracts therefore he engages in, no other power in the kingdom can legally delay, resist, or annul. And yet, lest this plenitude of authority should be abused to the detriment of the public, the constitution hath here interposed a check, by the means of parliamentary impeachment, for the punishment of such ministers as from criminal motives advise or conclude any treaty, which shall afterwards be judged to derogate from the honour and interest of the nation. Black. Com. 1 V. 257.

Trebuchet, Trebuchet, Tribuch. (Turbicatum) A tumble or cucking stool. Also a great engine to cast stones, to batter walls. 3 Inst. 219. See Castigary. Matt. Paris 1246. and Black. Com. 4 V. 169.

Trees. The proprietors of trees cut down or taken away how recompensed and the offenders punished, 43 El. c. 7. 15 Car. 2. c. 2. f. 2. The houses of persons suspected to have cut or taken them away, to be searched, 15 Car. 2. c. 2. f. 3. Persons destroying plantations punished as trespassers, 23 & 23 Car. 2. c. 7. f. 5. 1 Geo. 1. Stat. 2. c. 48. 6 Geo. 1. c. 16. 29 Geo. 2. c. 36. f. 6. As felons, 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. f. 1. The neighbouring inhabitants, 1 Geo. 1. Stat. 2. c. 48. 6 Geo. 1. c. 16. And the hundred answerable for damages, 9 Geo. 1. c. 22. f. 7. 29 Geo. 2. c. 36. f. 9. See Timber, 20 Vin. Abr. 415—420. and Black. Com. 4 V. 233, 244, 245.

Trett. (Triticum) Fine wheat mentioned in the statute 51 H. 3.

Tremagium, Tremesium, Termisium. The season or time of sowing summer corn, being about March, the third month, to which the word may allude; and corn sowed in March is by the French called Tremes and Tremois: Tremisium was the season for summer-corn, barley, oats, beans, &c. opposed to the season for winter-corn, wheat, and rye, called Hibernagium, and is thus distinguished in old charters. Cartular. Gloucn. MS. 91.

Tremellum. A word used for granary, in Mon. Ang. tom. 1. pag. 470.

Trencher. (From the Fr. Trancher, to cut) A carver of meat at a table; as in the patent rolls mention is made of a pension granted by the King to A. B. uni trencheriarum nostrorum, &c.

Trenchis. A trench, or dike newly cut. Preamb. 33 H. 3.

Trental. (Fr. Trentale) An office for the dead, that continued thirty days, or consisting of thirty masses; from the Ital. Trenta, i. e. Triginta. Stat. 1. Edw. 6. c. 14.

Treppet. A great engine to throw stones against a wall in storming a town. It mentioned in Knighton, anno 1382.

Tresple. The name of a writ, to be sued, on ouster, by abatement, on the death of the grandfather's grandfather—now obsolete.—See Black. Com. 4 V. 186.

Trespals. (Transgressio) Is any transgression of the law under treason, felony, or misprision of either; but it is most constantly used for that wrong or damage, which is done by one private man to another; or to the King

King in his forest, &c. In which signification it is of two sorts: Trespass general, otherwise called trespass vi & armis, and trespass special, or upon the case. Bro. Trespas. Brad. lib. 4.

Trespass supposes a wrong to be done with force; and trespasses against the person of a man are of several kinds, viz. By menacing or threatening to hurt him; assaulting or setting upon one, to beat him; battery being the actual beating of another; maiming of a person so that he loses the use of his limbs; by imprisonment, or restraining him of his lawful liberty, &c. Trespases against a man's property may be committed in divers cases; as against his wife, children, or servants, or his house and goods, &c. and against his land, by carrying away deeds and evidences concerning it, cutting the trees, or spoiling the crops therein, &c. F. N. B. 86, 87. Finch 198, 201. 2 Roll. Abr. 545.

Action of trespass lies where a man makes an entry on the lands of another, and does damage: And trespass vi & armis, may be brought by him that hath the possession of goods, or of a house, or land, if he be disturbed in his possession; for the disturbance besides the private damage, is also a breach of the publick peace. 1 Inst. 57. 2 Roll. Abr. 572. 2 Lill. Abr. 596. There is this difference between an action of trespass vi & armis, and trespass on the case: The one lies where the original act was a wrong in itself, and the other where an injury is consequential to a lawful act; as for instance, it is lawful for a man to make a dam on his own ground; but if by making it, the water overflows his neighbour's land, an action on the case lies against him. Mod. Caf. in L. & E. 275. 1 Strange 634. Entry into a house against a man's will is trespass; but a man may lawfully come into the house of another person, to demand or pay money; and if trespass be brought he may plead it specially. 2 Lill. Abr. Trespass lies generally for breaking a man's close; for chasing cattle, whereby they die or are injured; taking away pales, and breaking of fences, or of doors or windows of a house; for driving a cart and horses over the ground of another, where there is no way for it; Fishing in another person's pond, and for breaking the pond; for eating the corn of another with cattle, and digging in any man's coal mines, and carrying away coals; for taking away so much of the plaintiff's money; tearing a bond, &c. 1 Bro. 338. 1 Saund. 220. 2 Cro. 463. Latch 144. And where a person has only the crop and vesture, or pasture of land, he may maintain trespass. Moor 456.

Trespass lies for an accidental hurt, as if whilst a man is uncocking a gun it goes off and wounds another. 1 Strange 596. But a man shall not be answerable criminally, by way of indictment, for a casual damage done to another. 1 Strange 190. Trespass lies for setting the end of a bridge on another man's soil, though it be a highway. 2 Strange 1004. And for erecting a stall in a market, without agreeing for stallage. Ibid. 1238. And against an officer of the customs for a wrongful seizure, though upon probable cause. Ibid. 820. Laying hold of a horse is no trespass, without particular damage. Ibid. 872.

In trespass for taking goods, the plaintiff must alledge a property in himself; because in such case there may be two intendments, one that they were the defendant's own goods, and then the taking is lawful; and the other that they were the goods of the plaintiff, when the taking will be wrongful; but wherever the construction is indifferent, it shall always be most strong against the plaintiff. 2 Lev. 20. Yelv. 36.

If the defendant makes the place where the trespass was done material by his plea, he must shew it with great certainty; but if it be a trespass quare clausum fregit in B. and the defendant pleads that the place where is his freehold, which is the common bar in this case, so justifies as in his freehold, &c. if issue be taken thereon, the defendant may give in evidence any close in which he hath a freehold; though if the plaintiff had replied and given the close a name, defendant must have a freehold in that very close. 2 Salk. 453. Cartbow's Rep. 176.

A plaintiff may make a new assignment of the place where, &c. and then the defendant may vary from his first justification: As for instance; an action of trespass assigned to be done generally in D. the defendant justified the taking damage feasant; and the plaintiff in his replication made a new assignment, upon which the defendant justified for a heriot; and it was adjudged good. Moor 540. 3 Nelf. Abr. 381. The defendant in his plea may put the plaintiff to the new assignment; and every new assignment is a new declaration, to which the defendant is to give a new answer, and he may not traverse it, but must either plead or demur; yet where trespasses are alledged to be done in several places, and the defendant pleads to some, and agrees to the places wherein the plaintiff alledged the trespasses to be done, there the plaintiff may answer that part of the plea by a traverse, and shew a new assignment as to the rest. Cro. Eliz. 492, 812.

One action of trespass may be brought for a trespass committed in lands which lie in several towns or vills, if they are in one and the same county; for else they cannot receive one trial as they are local causes of action triable in the county where done. 2 Lill. Abr. 595. A man may have one action of trespass for several trespasses: And if divers actions of trespass are brought for one and the same cause, the defendant may get them joined into one, if brought to vex him; but the trespasses must not be of several natures, which may not be tried in one action. Mich. 24 Car. B. R. All persons that are accessory to any trespass, may be charged as principals; and trespasses continued may be laid with a continuando diversis diebus & vicibus; But things must lie in continuance, and not terminate in themselves, or it will not be good: And where a trespass is alledged with a continuance, that cannot be continued, the evidence ought only to be to the first act. 2 Salk. 638, 639.

The best way to declare for such trespasses which lie in continuance, is for the plaintiff to set forth in his declaration, that the defendant between such a day and such a day, cut several trees, &c. and not lay a continuando transgressionem from such a day to such a day; and upon such declaration, the plaintiff may give in evidence a cutting on any day within those days. 3 Salk. 360. When a trespass is done before the day mentioned in the declaration, it is good enough; because being once a trespass, it is always a trespass. Cro. Eliz. 32. The day is not material, whether laid before or after the time when the trespass was committed, if it is laid before the action brought.

In all trespasses there ought to be a voluntary act, and also a damage; and in detinue and trover, where the thing itself is in demand, it should be particularly named; if trespass be laid in a declaration for the taking of goods, without expressing the quantity and quality of them, or the value, &c. it is bad upon a general demurrer; tho' as to the omission of the value, it hath been held to be good after verdict. Latch. 13. Style 170. 230. Lutw. 1384. Sid. 39.

If the defendant in trespass quare clausum fregit, disclaim any title to the land, and the trespass is involuntary or by negligence, he may be admitted to plead a disclaimer and tender of amends before the action brought, &c. And if it be found for the defendant, the plaintiff shall be barred. 21 Jac. c. 16.

Where a defendant justifies for a trespass, he must confess it, or it will be ill: And the defendant shall never be excused in trespass, unless upon an inevitable necessity, &c. 3 Nelf. Abr. 379. In a trespass quare clausum fregit, where there is only a force in law; as if one enters into the ground of another, the party must be required to go out before hands may be laid on him; for every imposition of hands is an assault which cannot be justified upon the account of a force or breaking a close in law, without a request to be gone; but it is otherwise where there is an actual force. 2 Salk. 644.

For any the least beating of a man's wife the husband and wife together may bring action of trespass: And if it be such a beating, as he thereby loses her company, or service, he alone may have this action. 3 Rep. 113. 10 Rep. 130. But he must declare per quod servitium amisit, i. e. that he thereby lost her service, or company, &c.

Trespass for breaking the plaintiff's close, and beating his servant; the plaintiff had a verdict, but could never get judgment, because he did not declare per quod servitium amisit: The servant himself may have an action of trespass for the beating, though his master cannot, unless it be so great that he loses his service; without which, it is no damage to the master. 5 Rep. 10. 9 Rep. 111. Action of trespass may be brought for taking away a man's servant; but not for the taking away of a man generally. 5 Mod. 191.

Trespass quod cepit & abduxit lies not for the father for taking and carrying away any of his children, except for taking of a son or daughter who is heir. Cro. Eliz. 769. A man committed adultery with a woman in Southwark, where they both dwelt, and the woman went to Ratcliff in Middlesex, from whence the man brought her to Richmond in Surrey; the husband brought an action of trespass de uxore rapta & abducta cum bonis viri; and it was a doubt whether upon the matter given in evidence, the defendant could be found guilty in London; but the jury found him guilty generally, and gave the plaintiff 300 l. damages. Dyer 256.

Executors may bring trespass for goods taken out of their possession, or for goods and chattels taken in the life of the testator; also administrators shall have it for goods of intestates; and an ordinary may bring action of trespass for goods in his own possession to administer as ordinary, &c. If a man voluntarily take away my goods or cattle, and keep them till I pay him money, on pretence that they are his heriot, &c. when they are not so, I may have action of trespass. Bro. Tresp. 354. And if the sheriff have a writ against the lands and goods of one man, and he by mistake execute it upon my lands or goods; this action lies against him, and it will be no excuse that the plaintiff or any other informed him they were the goods, &c. of the defendant. Dyer 295. Kelw. 119, 129.

He that is possessed of lands, though he hath no good title, shall have this action for a trespass against one who hath no right to the lands; but not against him that hath right: And yet a man having right or title to land only, by descent, lease, &c. may not bring trespass, before entry made thereon. Plowd. 431, 546. Kelw. 163. The lessee for years after his lease is expired, may have action for a trespass done on the land before his lease was ended. Bro. Tresp. 456. An action of trespass was brought by the lord of a manor, for trespass done in the highway, by a tenant's beasts breaking out of his close into the waste; and it was adjudged it would not lie. 1 Bulst. 157.

If A. is bound to fence his close against B. and he against C. a neighbour; and neither of them inclose against one another, so that the beasts of C. for want of inclosure go out of the ground to that of B. and thence to A's ground: In this case A. shall have trespass against C. for he is bound only to fence against B. and every one ought to keep his cattle as well in open grounds, not inclosed, as in several grounds where there is inclosure. Dyer 366. Jenk. Cent. 161.

One drives my cattle into another man's land, I may go on the land and fetch them out; yet by this I am a trespasser to the owner of the ground, and he may have his action against me for it, and I must take my counter-remedy against him that drove them in. 21 H. 7. 27. 1 Rep. 54. If another man have a horse, or other goods in my house or ground, and he enter to take it away, without my leave, action of trespass lies against him: But if I drive the cattle or carry the goods of another into my land, he may come upon the land and take them, and no action lieth. 4 Shep. Abr. 135, 136.

If a man hunt my beasts, in ground belonging to me, or some other person; he is liable to this action: Though the owner of the land wherein cattle are doing this trespass, may gently by himself, or his dogs, chase them out, and justify the same. Hill. 16 Jac. B. R. Bro. Tresp. 421. 8 Rep. 67. If any person shall maliciously maim, or hurt any cattle, or destroy any plantation of trees, or throw down inclosures, he shall forfeit treble damages in action of trespass. 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 7. But in action of trespass, if the jury give not 40 s. damages, the plaintiff shall have no more costs than damages, except the freehold or title of land come in question, or something of the plaintiff's be carried away, &c. Stat. 23 Car. 2. c. 9. Though the plaintiff, where the trespass is wilful and malicious, upon certificate thereof by the judge on the back of the record, shall recover damages and full costs, by 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 11.

In trespass for putting diseased cattle into a close, the plaintiff shall have full costs, though the damages found be under 40 s. 1 Strange 192. And in trespass for consuming provisions. 2 Strange 1130. And on an issue extra viam. Ibid. 1168. And damages being small under 40 s. in trespass, on motion full costs have been allowed; where entry was made on the freehold, &c. Skin. 100. Carthew 225.

A court which is not a court of record, cannot hold plea of trespass Vi & Armis. F. N. B. 85. Writs of trespass lie either to the sheriff to determine the matter in the county-court, or returnable in B. R. or C. B. And the words Vi & Armis shall be in the returnable writs, but not in the others: Though in writs of trespass upon the case, those words must not be inserted, if returnable in B. R. &c. F. N. B. 86, 190. Trespass quare Vi & Armis clausum fregit, was brought, wherein the plaintiff laid damage to the value of 20 s. and the defendant demurred for that cause, alledging that B. R. could have no cognizance at Common law, or by the statute of Gloucester, to hold plea in an action where the damages are under 40 s. But it was adjudged, that trespass quare vi & armis will lie in this court, be the damages what they will. 3 Mod. 275.

At Common law, in Trespass Vi & Armis, if the defendant was convicted, he was to be fined and imprisoned; but in other trespasses only amerced. Jenk. Cent. 185. In action of trespass against two persons for carrying away goods, &c. one lets judgment go by default, and the other justifies under a licence from the plaintiff, and has a verdict; this goes to the whole, and judgment shall be arrested as to the other defendant. 2 Ld. Raym. 1372, 1374. The process in writ of trespass is an attachment and disfringas, and upon a return of a nihil by the sheriff, a capias, alias, and pluries shall issue; and then exigent and process of out-lawry, &c. New Nat. Br. 193, 203. See Action on the Case, and Traverse.

Of the difference between a positive abuse of an authority or licence in fact, and of an authority or licence in law.

The reason of the difference, between the case of a positive abuse of an authority or licence in fact, and that of a positive abuse of an authority or licence in law, is in one book said to be, that the abuse in the latter case is deemed a trespass with force ab initio: Because the law intends from the subsequent tortious act, that there was from the beginning a design to be guilty thereof. 8 Rep. 146. The six carpenters case.

But this reason, which equally applies to both cases, is by no means conclusive: For it may be as well intended in the former case, from the subsequent tortious act, that there was from the beginning a design of being guilty thereof. Perhaps the difference between the two cases may be better accounted for in the following manner. In the one, where the law has given an authority or licence, it seems reasonable, that the same law should, in order to secure the persons, who are without their direct assent made the objects thereof, from all positive abuses of such authority or licence, whenever either of these is positively abused, make the same void from the beginning; and leave the abuse thereof in the same situation, as if he had acted without any authority or licence. And this agrees perfectly with the maxim Actus legis namini facit injuriam. But in the other case, where a man, who was under no necessity of giving an authority or licence to any person, has thought proper to give one of these to a certain person, who is afterwards guilty of a positive abuse thereof, there is no reason that the law should interpose; and make all that has been done, under the authority or licence by him so voluntarily given, void from the beginning: Because it was his his own folly to place a confidence in a man, who was not fit to be trusted. 5 New Abr. 156.

The interposition of the law in such case would, moreover, be quite contrary to the maxim, Vigilantibus non dormiantibus servit lex. 5 New Abr. 156. For more learning on this subject, see 20 Vin. Trespasants, (Fr.) Is used by Britton, cap. 29. for passengers.

Trespasser, Is one who commits a trespas; and though the law allows a man to enter a tavern, a landlord to distrain on land, &c. yet if he doth abuse it by committing a trespas, the law will adjudge him a trespasser ab initio. 8 Rep. 146. But where persons for any irregularity in taking a distress, &c. shall not be *trespas*ers ab initio; so as they make satisfaction for any special damage, vide Stat. 11 Geo. 2. c. 19. and Distress. With respect to *Trespas*ers, ab initio, see Black. Com. 3 V. 15.

Trespasser viam, To turn or divert another way; as trespasser viam, to turn the road. Cowell. Chart. King John.

Trepts, (Fr.) Signifies, taken out or withdrawn, and is applied to a juror removed or discharged. F. N. B. 159.

Trial, (Triatio) Is the examination of a cause, civil or criminal, before a judge who has jurisdiction of it, according to the laws of the land; it is the trial and examination of the point in issue, and of the question between the parties, whereupon judgment may be given. 1 Inst. 124. Finch 36.

Also 'tis taken for the manner and order of proceeding, in the hearing and determining of matters in difference, being diversely used, according to the nature of the thing to be tried. Ibid.

And there are many kinds of trials; as of matters of fact, which shall be tried by a jury; matters of law that are triable by the court; and matters of record tried by the records themselves (as whether the defendant be an attorney, or not. 1 Strange 76, 532.)

Also some things shall be tried by the bishop's certificate; and some by inspection, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 602.

A lord of parliament, upon an indictment of treason or felony, shall be tried without any oath by his peers upon their honour and allegiance; but in appeal at the suit of any subject, they shall be tried per bonos & legales homines. If ancient demesne be pleaded of a manor, and denied, this shall be tried by the record of domesday. Ballard, excommungement, lawfulness of marriage, and other ecclesiastical matters, shall be tried by the bishop's certificate. Of the ancient manner of trial by combat and great assize, see Combat and Assize. See also Staudf. Pl. Cor. cap. 1, 2, 3. and twelve men. Triatio est evadiffima lris confestae, coram iudice per duodecimvirale sacramentum, & agitatio.

Nothing that is triable by an issue, can be directed to be tried otherwise: Irregularities in suing out a judgment or execution, are tried by reference, &c. But other matters subsequent to the judgment, by an audita querela. Comber. 8, 14.

In criminal cases, it is usual to ask the criminal how he will be tried; which was formerly a very significant question, though it is not so now, because anciently there were trials by battle, by ordeal, and by jury; and when the offender answered the question, By God and his country, it shewed that he made choice to be tried by a jury: But now there is no other way of trial of criminals. Black's Dig.

It is ordained by Magna Charta, that no person shall be condemned on any accusation without trial by lawful judgment of his peers, or by the law. 9 Hen. 3. cap. 29. And the most general rule has been, that every trial shall be out of that town, precinct, &c. within which the matter of fact triable is alleged, or the nearest thereunto, for the better cognizance of the fact committed; and not to have things tried in foreign countries, where the jury are strangers to the parties, to the witnesses, and the point in issue. 1 Inst. 125. But when an indictment is found against a person in the proper county, it may be heard and determined in another county by special commission, &c. 3 Inst. 27.

If a subject of England be killed in a foreign kingdom by an Englishman, he may be tried by the constable and marshal; or by commissioners in any county. Stat. 33 H. 8. If any man die here in one county, of a wound received in another; he shall be tried by a jury of the county where his death was: In appeal in such case, it is to be there brought, and trial be by both counties. Stat. 3 Ed. 6. cap. 24. 3 H. 7. c. 12. And if one be wounded on the sea, or out of England, and die of the same here; or shall be wounded in England, and die on the sea, or at any place abroad; an indictment may be found by jurors of the county in which the death or stroke, &c. happened, and the judges proceed in the trial against the offenders, as if the felony were there done, &c. by Stat. 2 Geo. 2. c. 21.

An issue being joined in B. R. of a matter triable in Ireland; this shall be sent into Ireland to be tried, and after trial be remanded. 2 Qu. Though if an issue be thus joined of a thing in Wales, the record shall not be sent there to be tried; but it shall be tried in the next county of England adjoining thereto. 1 Dawd. Abr. 248.

If a foreign issue which is local, should happen, it may be tried where the action is laid; and for that purpose the plaintiff may enter a suggestion on the roll, that such a place in such a county is next adjacent; and it may be tried in B. R. by a jury from that place, according to the laws of that country, which may be given in evidence: Adjudged in action of debt for rent, upon a lease made in London of lands in Jamaica; and it was held, that where the lessor declares upon the privity of estate, the action must be brought where the lands are; but 'tis otherwise when the action is founded on the privity of contract, the one being local, and the other transitory, as in this case. 2 Salk. 651.

Seizing a house in the East-Indies is not triable here. 1 Strange 646. In covenant the action was laid in London, and issue joined upon a feoffment in Oxfordshire; of lands in that county, and the cause was tried in London; after verdict it was objected that the trial ought to have been in Oxfordshire, but resolved that by the Stat. 17. Car. 2. it was well tried in the county where the action was brought: But though the words of that statute are, that it shall be good, if tried by the county where the action is laid, it hath been adjudged, that must be understood of a trial by the county where the matter in issue doth arise; for otherwise it would destroy the whole law concerning trials by juries. 3 Salk. 364.

In the trial of a grant of lands, if the issue be whether such grant was made or not, the Vifne shall be from that place where that is alleged; so upon dimissit. But 'tis otherwise of a feoffment or lease for life, when livery is made; for there it should be tried where the land lieth. Jenk. Cent. 338. In ejectment the venue ought to come always from the place where the lands lie, and not from the place where the demise is laid to be made: But that fault is helped after a verdict. Mod. Ca. 265. And by the statute 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. the venue for the trial of any issue in a civil cause, shall be awarded of the body of the county where the issue is is. And also in any action, or information upon a penal statute. 24 Geo. 2. c. 18.

On civil causes grown to issue, if they are to be tried in London or Middlesex, and the defendant live not forty miles from London, eight days notice of trial is to be given; and if the defendant lives that distance or further, he must have fourteen days notice from the plaintiff, before he tries his cause; but eight days notice of trial is good at the assizes, let the defendant live where he will, except on an old issue; where a cause hath remained four terms without prosecution; in which case a term's notice is to be given: Upon due notice of trial, the defendant must generally go to trial, or judgment will pass against him by default; and where the plaintiff proceeds not to trial after notice, and there is no countermand, the defendant shall have costs for attendance, &c. or the defendant may give a rule to try the cause by proviso, and on notice given the plaintiff may bring it to trial, that he may discharge himself of the action, action, and herein he may recover costs. 2 Lill. Abr. 609, 613. 23 Hen. 8. cap. 15.

A late statute ordains, that were any issue is joined in the courts at Westminster, &c. if the plaintiff neglects bringing it to be tried, according to the usual practice, the judges on motion made, and due notice given, shall pass the like judgment for the defendant in the action, as in case of a nonsuit, and award him costs; unless a judge find cause to allow further time for the trial: And no cause shall be tried before any justice of assize or nihi prius, or at the sittings in London or Westminster, without ten days notice at least, if the defendant lives above forty miles from the said cities; and when any party gives such notice of trial, if he does not countermand it in writing six days before, he shall pay costs to the defendant, &c. Stat. 14 Geo. 2. c. 17.

If a cause to be tried, be not entered in the judge's book, two days before the time of trial, a ne recipiatur may be entered, that it be not set down to be tried that time; but this will not be admitted in sittings after the term. Hill. 22 Car. B. R.

To proceed to trial, in the courts at Westminster, when the declaration is drawn, and the appearance of the defendant made, it must be delivered to the defendant's attorney; then it is to be entered upon the roll and docketed; then a rule must be given for the defendant to plead by such a day, or the plaintiff to have judgment: The defendant having pleaded, a copy of the issue is to be made out and delivered to the defendant's attorney, giving him notice of trial; in order to which, the venire facias must be had and returned by the sheriff, and then is sued out the habeas corpora, to bring in the jury, the record is made up, and the parties go to trial: But if the defendant neglects to plead, and lets it go by default, on entering a judgment, a writ of enquiry of damages, unless in debt, is to be awarded, of the execution whereof the defendant's attorney shall have notice; which being executed, and the damage inserted in a schedule annexed to the writ returned by the sheriff, a rule is to be given upon it, and costs are taxed; lastly, it is carried to the clerk of the judgments, who on giving him the number roll and term, when the judgment was entered, he will make out a writ of execution, either a capias ad satisfaciend. or fiat facias, &c. for the damages and costs, &c. Practif. Attorn. Edit. 1. pag. 99.

At the assizes, when a cause comes on to trial, first a disfringas of the jury is to be returned by the sheriff, and then the record must be delivered to the judge's marshal; and the record being put into the hands of the marshal, briefs prepared for the counsel, and all parties ready, the marshal delivers the record to the judge, and the crier calls over the jury: The jury are now to be ballotted and sworn, and bid to stand together and hear their charge; after which, the junior counsel for the plaintiff, (if the issue lies on him, otherwise the defendant's counsel) opens the pleadings, the senior counsel states the case. The evidence is given. If plaintiff begins, the defendant's counsel states his case, and if he has any evidence to produce, the same is given; the plaintiff's counsel then replies, making observations on the defendant's evidence, &c. The judge then sums up the whole of the evidence, and gives it in charge to the jury to act impartially. If the jury can't immediately agree on their verdict, and are desirous of going out of court, to consult privately among themselves, a bailiff being sworn to keep them without meat, drink, &c. till they are agreed, they depart from the bar; and when they are all agreed, they return to give in their verdict: Then the plaintiff is called, and if he do not appear, a nonsuit shall be recorded; but if he appears, the clerk asks this jury who they find for, and what damages, if they find for the plaintiff. The jury naming the sum, and what costs, he enters it on the back of the panel, and repeats it to the jury, which finishes the trial: And after the trial is over, the associate delivers to the party recovering the record with the disfringas, and the names of the jury annexed, on the back of which he indorses the substance of the verdict, and the costs given by the jury; and then upon the back of the record is ingrossed the posseu, which is delivered to the clerk of the rule, and he makes out a four days rule for judgment; and when the rule is out, if judgment be not arrested, further costs are taxed, and the judgment is fit to be entered.

But in trials at the assizes, the record and disfringas are usually kept by the associate till the next term, when he is to be called upon for the posseu, and you proceed to have it marked, make out a rule, and sign judgment; and judgment being entered, execution is thereupon awarded, and writs of Ca. fa. Fieri fac. Elegit, &c.

If a trial be had the last day of term, or at the sittings after the term, or the assizes, judgment cannot be given thereon, till the first or 4th day of the next term. When a defendant is not prepared to try his cause, upon petition and affidavit of the reasons, the judge will order the cause to be stayed till another day the same assizes; or in London till the next term, on payment of costs: And in case at a trial, the court sees that one of the parties is surprised, through some casualty, and not by any fault of his own, they may in their discretion, put off the trial to another time, until such party is better prepared. 2 Lill. 609, 610.

If the matters contested are of great value, or the title in question is difficult or intricate, on motion the judges will order a trial at bar, for the better satisfaction of the parties; though it is not usual to grant trials at bar the same term moved for: And these trials are appointed by the statute of Westm. 2. where the cause requires magnam examinationem; also officers of the court, and barristers at law, may insist upon a trial at bar; after which, a new trial is not to be granted. 2 Salk. 648, 651, 653. The court will grant a trial at bar for the importance of the consequence. 1 Strange 52. And where the whole estate is of value, though against several defendants. Ibid. 479. And in case of a great misdemeanor. Ibid. 644. No rule for a trial at bar before issue is joined. Ibid. 606. The crown is not intitled to a trial at bar of course where there is a prosecutor. 2 Strange 816. No trial at bar can be granted in a cause arising in London, for the citizens are not to be brought out of the city. Ibid. 856. It hath been laid down as a rule, that after a trial at bar, no new trial shall be had in any case, except it appear that there hath been some corruption in the jury. Carthw. 507. See vide 1 Strange 584. 2 Strange 1105 contra.

New trials may be granted generally in several cases, viz. where the defendant had not sufficient notice given him of the former trial; if excessive damages are given; a verdict is against evidence; there was any fraud, &c. But a new trial ought not to be allowed for want of evidence at the former trial, which the party might then have produced: And it hath been denied, where the defendant forgot to bring a settlement at the trial; so likewise where very large damages were given, on the report and opinion of the judge who tried the cause, that he believed the jury gave a verdict according to their consciences: And no new trial shall be granted for too small damages; unless where action of covenant is brought for a sum certain, and the jury give damages under the same, &c.

The reason of granting new trials upon verdicts against evidence at the assizes is, because the trials are subordinate to the courts; and such new trials have been anciently granted, as appears from this; that it is a good challenge to a jurymen to say that he hath been a juror before in the same cause.

Adjudged that a new trial cannot be granted in an inferior court. 2 Salk. 648, 649, 650. Anell. Abr. 414, 417. New trial not granted after a verdict for the defendant in a quo warranto. 1 Strange 601. Or in a qui tam. 2 Strange 899, 1238. Nor where the party might have had evidence on the first trial. 1 Strange 691. New trial cannot be had a second time for excessive damages. Ibid. 692. Nor where one of the defendants was rightly acquitted. 2 Strange 814. Defendant convicted of forgery must appear personally when he moves for a new trial. Ibid. 968. No new trial for smallness of damages. Ibid. 1051. Nor where there is evidence on both sides. Ibid. 1142. A new trial denied, where the jury find a matter left to them against the strength of evidence.

evidence. Ibid. 1105. Inferior courts cannot grant a new trial. 1. Strange 113. After a motion in arrest of judgment, the party shall not move for a new trial; but after motion for a new trial he may move in arrest of judgment. 2. Salk. 647. A new trial is never granted in criminal cases, where the defendant is acquitted, if some fraud or trick be not proved in the case. Ibid. But on conviction, a new trial may be granted upon cause; so if a trial on indictment be by a wrong venue; and in cases where appeal may be brought. 2. Litt. 606, 613.

If the issue tried in any cause is not joined, it is not a good trial; except it be an issue in Chancery in the petit bag side, which is to be sent from thence to be tried in R. Hill. 22 Car. It is a mis-trial for a thing to be tried before a judge, who hath interest in the thing in question; and if a cause is tried by a jury out of a wrong county, or there be any error in the process against the jurors, or it is directed to a wrong officer, &c. it is a mis-trial; likewise where matter of record is tried by a jury, it will be a mis-trial; but if the matter of record be mixed with matter of fact, trial by jury is good. Hob. 124. A mis-trial is helped by the statute of jeofails. See Issue, Nisi prius, &c. See farther as to trial, Black. Com. 3 V. 330, 4 V. 336, 407. and with respect to new trial, Id. 3 V. 387. 4 V. 355, 431.

Trials in criminal cases. First the bill of indictment against an offender is prepared; and the party prosecutor and others bound over to give evidence, being ordered to attend, the grand jury consider of the bill; and on examination of the witnesses, either they find the bill of indictment, or bring it in ignoramus: If the jury find the bill, the prisoner is brought to the bar of the court; and the crier says to him, A. B. hold up thy hand, Thou standest indicted by the name of A. B. for such a felony, &c. (reciting the crime laid in the indictment) How sayest thou, art thou Guilty of this felony, &c. whereof thou standest indicted, or Not Guilty? To which the prisoner answers, Not Guilty; whereupon the clerk of the peace says, Culpri, How wilt thou be tried? And the offender answers, By God and my country: When the prisoner has pleaded Not Guilty, (which is the common plea) it is to be recorded; and then the petty jury are called upon the panel, and a full jury appearing, the prisoner is told they are to pass upon his life and death, and that he may challenge any of them before they are sworn; for not being indifferent, but partial, or other defect, &c. Then the jury are sworn well and truly to try the prisoner, and to bring in a true verdict: This being done, the indictment is recited, and the jury are acquainted with the particular crimes of which the prisoner stands indicted; and the clerk of the peace says, To which indictment he hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his trial hath put himself upon God and his country, which country you are: so that you (the jury) are to inquire whether he be guilty of the felony, &c. whereof he stands indicted, or not? If you find him Guilty, you are to make enquiry into what goods and chattels he had at the time that the said felony, &c. was committed, or at any time since: And if you find him Not Guilty, you shall inquire whether he did fly for it; and if he fled for it, what goods, &c. he had at the time of his flight; but if you find him Not Guilty, and that he did not fly, you shall then say no more. Then the clerk of the peace calls the witnesses to give true evidence; to speak the whole truth, and nothing but the truth; and when the evidence is given to the jury concerning the prisoner, the jury (if they go out of the court to consider of their verdict,) are to be kept in a room, by a sworn bailiff appointed, without meat, drink, fire or candle, and without any persons speaking to them, till they bring in their verdict. All things being given in charge, the jury go to their room, and consider of the matter; when they are all agreed, and returned within or near the bar, the prisoner is brought forth, and the jury are called over; who all appearing, and the prisoner set to the bar, the clerk of the peace says to them, Look upon the prisoner, you gentlemen of the jury; How say you, is A. B. Guilty of the felony, &c. of which he stands indicted, or Not guilty? If the jury say Not guilty, it is recorded, and the prisoner taken away; if they say Guilty, he is bid to down upon his knees, &c. and then the clerk of the peace says, My masters of the jury, hearken to your verdict as the court hath recorded it; You say A. B. is guilty of the felony, &c. whereof he stands indicted: To which they answer Yes: Then proclamation is made for all persons to keep silence, on which the prisoner is set to the bar, and sentence passed upon him; after which an order or warrant is made for his execution.

This is the manner of proceeding against common criminals: the court is to be of counsel with the prisoner, and ought to advise him for his good, not taking advantage too strictly against him. Mod. Just. Edit. 3. pag. 402, 403. 2 Hawk. P. C. 910. Rep. 9. And a great author observes, that through the punctuality required by law in the trial of causes, there is as much as art and conscience can contrive against corruption, and in favour of right, liberty, life and reputation: And the greatest criminals here, have privileges which they cannot be debarred of. Tribuch and Trebuchet, (Terbichetum,) A tumbrel, or cucking stool. Cowell. See Trebuchet.

Tricennate, Is the same with Trental. 1 Ed. 6.

Tricenna, An ancient custom in a borough in the county of Hereford, so called, because thirty burgesses paid 1 d. rent for their houses to the bishop, who is lord of the manor. Lib. Niger Heref.

Tridingsmote, The court held for a triding or trithing. Chart. King Hen. 1.

Triennial Elections. The utmost extent of time that the same parliament was allowed to sit, by the stat. 6 W. & M. c. 2. was three years; after the expiration of which, reckoning from the return of the first summons, the parliament was to have no longer continuance. But, by the stat. 1 Geo. 1. c. 38. this term was prolonged to seven years. See Parliament, and Black. Com. 1 V. 153, 189, 430, 432, 433.

Trigintale, See Trental.

Trithing or Trithing, (Sax. Trithinga) Contains the third part of a county, or three or four hundreds: Also it was a court held within that circuit, of the nature of the court-leet, but inferior to the county-court. Cambr. 102. Magn. Chart. cap. 36. The Ridings in Yorkshire are corruptly called by that name, from Tridings or Trithings: And those who anciently governed those Trithings, were termed Trithing-Reves, before whom were brought all causes which could not be decided in the hundreds; for from the hundred-court suits might be removed to the Trithing, and thence to the county-court. Spelm. See Last-reva.

Trillion, A word used by merchants in accounts, to shew that the word million is thrice mentioned. Merch. Dia.

Trimilchi, The English Saxons denominated the month of May Trimilchi; because they milked their cattle three times every day in that month. Beda.

Trinity, (Trinitas) The number of three persons in the Godhead or Deity; and denying any one of the persons in the Trinity to be God, is subject to divers penalties and incapacities by the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. c. 32. See Religion.

Trinity-House, Is a kind of college at Deptford, belonging to a company or corporation of seamen, who have authority by the King's charter to take knowledge of those that destroy sea-marks; also to redress the faults of sailors, and divers other things belonging to navigation. 8 Elix. c. 13. By a late statute, pilots of ships coming up the Thames, are to be examined and approved by the Master and Wardens of Trinity-House, &c. 3 Geo. 1. c. 13. See 5 Geo. 2. c. 20.

Trink, A fishing net, or engine to catch fish. 2 Hen. 6. c. 15.

Trinobantes, The inhabitants of Middlesex, Essex, & Hertfordshire, &c.

Triphida Decemana, Signified a threefold necessary tax, to which all lands were liable in the Saxon times, i. e. for repairing of bridges; the maintaining of castles or garrisons; and for expeditions to repel invasions: And in the King's grants, and conveyances of lands, these three things things were excepted in the immunities from other services, &c.—Exceptis his tribus, expeditione, pontis & arcis constructione. Paroch Antiq. 46. See Black. Com. 1 V. 263, 357. 2 V. 102.

Triers, Triours, or Trifers. Are such as are chosen by the court to examine whether a challenge made to the panel of jurors, or any of them, be just or not. Broks 122.

Triers, lords. On the trial of a peer, in parliament, a precept was formerly issued to summon only eighteen or twenty, selected from the body of the peers: then the number came to be indefinite; and the custom was, for the Lord High Steward to summon as many as he thought proper (but of late years not less than twenty-three) and that those lords only should sit upon the trial, which threw a monstrous weight of power into the hands of the crown, and this it's great officer; of selecting only such peers as the then predominant party should most approve of. But now by stat. 7 W. 3. c. 3. upon all trials of peers for treason or misprision, all the peers who have a right to sit and vote in parliament shall be summoned at least twenty days before such trial, to appear and vote therein; and every lord appearing shall vote in the trial of such peer, first taking the oaths of allegiance and supremacy, and subscribing the declaration against popery. See Black. Com. 4 V. 259, 260.

Triers of Jurors. Jurors may be challenged propter affectum, for suspicion of bias or partiality. This may be either a principal challenge or to the favour. A principal challenge is such, where the cause assigned carries with it, prima facie, evident marks of suspicion, either of malice or favour: as, that a juror is of kin to either party within the ninth degree; that he has been arbitrator, has an interest in the cause, &c. See Challenge. Challenges to the favour, are where the party hath no principal challenge; but objects only some probable circumstances of suspicion, as acquaintance and the like; the validity of which must be left to the determination of triers, whose office it is to decide whether the juror be favourable or unfavourable. The triers, in case the first man called be challenged, are two indifferent persons, named by the court; and, if they try one man and find him indifferent, he shall be sworn; and then he and the two triers shall try the next; and when another is found indifferent and sworn, the two triers shall be superseded, and the two first sworn on the jury shall try the next. Co. Lit. 158. and see Black. Com. 3 V. 363.

Tripodium, Leg. H. 1. cap. 64. In quibus vero causis triplicem ladam haberet, ferat judicium tripodii, i. e. 60 solid. The meaning is, that as for a small offence, or for a trivial cause, the composition was twenty shillings; so for a great offence, which was to be purged triplici lada, the composition was to be three times twenty shillings, viz. tripodio. Cowell.

Triroda terre, A quantity of land, containing three rods or perches. MS. Eliam Ashmole Ar.

Tristega, Was the uppermost room in the house, a garret or room three stories high. 'Tis mentioned in Matt. Paris, anno 1247.

Tristis, (From the Fr. Traist, i. e. Trust) Is an immunity, whereby a man is freed from attendance on the lord of a forest when he is disposed to chase within the forest; and by this privilege, he shall not be compelled to hold a dog, to follow the chase, or stand at any place appointed, which otherwise he is obliged to, on pain of amercement. Manwood, par. 1. pag. 86.

Tristra, A post or station, in hunting. Cowell.

Trithing, Trithing-Reeve, The third part of a county, or three more hundreds or wapentakes, were called a triding or trithing; such sort of portions are the laths in Kent, the rapes in Sussex, and the ridings in Yorkshire, and those who governed these trithings, were thereupon called trithing-reves, before whom were brought all causes that could not be determined in the wapentakes or hundreds. See Spelman of the ancient government of England. p. 52. See Trithing and Black. Com. 1 V. 116.

Trumbur, A trithing-man, or constable of three hundreds. Hist. Elfenf.

Tronage, (Tronagium) Is a customary duty or toll for weighing of wool: According to Fleta, trona is a beam to weigh with, mentioned in the stat. Westm. 2. cap. 25. And tronage was used for the weighing wool in a staple or publick mart, by a common trona or beam; which for the tronage of wool in London, was fixed at Leadens-Hall. Fleta, lib. 2. c. 12. The mayor and commonalty of London, are ordained keepers of the beams and weights for weighing merchants commodities, with power to assign clerks, and porters, &c. of the great beam and balance; which weighing of goods and wares is called Tronage: And no stranger shall buy any goods in London, before they are weighed at the King's beam, on pain of forfeiture. Chart. King Hen. 8.

Tronator, (From Trona, i. e. Statara) An officer in the city of London, who weighs the wool brought thither.

Trope, (Tropus) A rhetorical way of speech. Litt. Dig.

Troper, (Troperium) Is a book of alternate turns or responses in singing mass; called Liber sequentiarum, by Linderwode. Hoved. Hist. p. 283.

Trophy-money, Signifies money yearly raised and collected in the several counties of England, towards providing harness and maintenance for the militia, &c. Stat. 15 Car. 2. 1 Geo. 1. See Militia.

Trover, (From the Fr. Trouver, i. e. invenire) Is an action which a man hath against one, that having found any of his goods, refuseth to deliver them upon demand: Or if another hath in his possession my goods, by delivery to him, or otherwise, and he sells or makes use of them without my consent, this is a conversion for which trover lies; so if he doth not actually convert them, but doth not deliver them to me on demand. 2 Lill. Abr. 618. It is called Trover and Conversion, and is a special action of the case, brought to recover the damages to the value of the goods, &c. In this action, the plaintiff surmisseth that he lost such and such goods, and that the defendant hath found them, and converted them to his own use at such a place; but the losing is but a mere suggestion, and not material: For if the plaintiff delivered the goods to the defendant; or if the defendant take the goods in his presence, &c. this action lies against him, if there be a conversion; which is the point of the action, and therefore must be particularly alledged: If a man finds goods, he may take possession of them, and no action lies; but he ought not to abuse or use them, for therein lies the offence: And where a man finds my goods, and refuseth to deliver them upon demand, it is a conversion in law; but if he answers that he knows not whether I am the true owner or not, and therefore denies to deliver them; this is no conversion if he keeps them from me. 1 Dawson. Abr. 21, 22, 23. A person finds the goods of another, and uses or wilfully abuses them; as if it be paper, and he put it into water, or the like, this action of trover lies against him: But not for any negligence in the keeping of them; as where one finds another's garment, and suffers it to be moth-eaten, &c. here no action will lie. 1 Cro. 219.

If in trover, an actual conversion cannot be proved, then proof is to be had of a demand made, before the action brought, of the thing for which the action is commenced, and that the thing demanded was not delivered: in this case, though an actual conversion may not be proved, a demand, and refusing to deliver the things demanded, is a sufficient evidence to the jury that he converted the same, till it appears to the contrary. 10 Rep. 56, 491. 2 Lill. 619.

Where a defendant comes to the point by finding, denial is a conversion; but if he had the goods, &c. by delivery, there denial is no conversion, but evidence of a conversion: And in both cases, the defendant hath a lawful possession, either by finding or by delivery: And where the possession is lawful, the plaintiff must shew a demand and a refusal, to make a conversion: Though if the possession was tortious, as if the defendant takes away the plaintiff's hat, the very taking is a sufficient proof of the conversion, without proving a demand and refusal. Sid. 264. 3 Salk. 365.

By Holt, Chief Justice, the denial of goods to him, who hath a right to demand them, is a conversion; and after a demand and refusal, if the defendant tender the goods, goods, and the plaintiff refuse to receive them, that will go only in mitigation of damages; not to the right of the action of trover, for the plaintiff may have that still. Mod. Caf. 212. 3 Nelf. Abr. 424, 425. An action of trover and conversion may be brought for goods, although the goods come into possession of the plaintiff before the action is brought; which doth not purge the wrong, or make satisfaction for that which was done to the plaintiff by detaining the goods: If a man takes my horse and rides him, and afterwards delivers him to me, trover lies against him; for this is a conversion, and the redelivery is no bar to the action. 1 Danv. Abr. 21. 2 Lill. 618.

If goods are delivered to one to deliver over to another, and he to whom they were first delivered do afterwards refuse to deliver them over, and converts them to his own use; he is liable to action of trover not only by him who first delivered them but also by him to whom they were to be delivered: And a plaintiff may chuse to have his action of trover against the first finder of goods; or any other who gets them afterwards by sale, &c. 1 Bulst. 68. 1 Leon. 183. If a common carrier has goods delivered to him to carry to a certain place, and a stranger takes them out of his possession, and converts the goods to his own use; action of trover and conversion lies for the carrier against him. 1 Mod. 31.

Trover doth lie against a common carrier for negligence in losing goods; though it doth not for an actual wrong: And if goods are stolen from a carrier, he may not be charged in trover and conversion; but action upon the case on the custom of the realm, &c. 2 Salk. 47.

It has been held, that where goods are stolen, and there is prosecution of the offender by indictment the party does not bring action of trover, it lies not; for so felonies are compounded: but where A. steals the goods or money of B. and is convicted, and hath his clergy, upon prosecution of B. If he brings trover and conversion for the money, and on not guilty pleaded this special verdict is found, the plaintiff shall recover. 1 Hale's P. C. 546.

If upon a feri facias the sheriff takes goods in execution, and before the sale of them, a stranger takes them away and converts them to his own use; the sheriff may have an action of trover and conversion, as he had a lawful possession, and is answerable for them. 2 Saund. 47.

And an executor may have trover for the goods of the testator; the law gives him a property, which draweth the possession to it, though there be not an actual possession. Litch. 214. There must be a right or property in the goods, or a lawful possession, &c. which is to be proved by the plaintiff in trover, before the goods came to the defendant's hands: And if a man finds his goods lost in the hands of another, if he bought them in open fair or market; this alters the property, and he cannot recover them. 1 Inst. 498. 1 Danv. 23. Adjudged that trover lay for the finder of a jewel, against a goldsmith who defrauded him of it. Ibid. 505. Drawing out part of a vessel, and filling it up with water, is conversion of all the liquor. Ibid. 576. A recovery in trover vests the property of the goods in the defendant. 2 Strang. 1078. In trover, the plaintiff may declare upon a conventum ad manus generally; or specially per inventionem ad conventum: And the plea on the defendant's part is commonly not guilty, on which the special matter may be given in evidence, to prove the plaintiff hath no cause of action; or to intitle the defendant to the thing in controversy. 2 Bulst. 313. Wood's Inst. 540. Vide also, 2 Salk. 654. Telv. 198. Cro. Car. 27. 2 Lill. 621.

In trover for a bond, the plaintiff need not shew the date; for the bond being lost or converted, he may not know the date; and if he should set out the date, and mistake it, he would fail in his action. Cro. Car. 262. If the defendant find the bond, and receive the money, action of account lieth against the receiver, and not trover. Cro. Eliz. 723.

The place of conversion must be generally mentioned in trover, or it will be naught. Cro. Eliz. 78, 79. And yet where the trover of goods is in one county, and the conversion in another county, the action brought for these goods may be laid in the county where the conversion was, or in any other county, as it is only a transitory action; and neither the place of trover, nor conversion, are traversable. Pasch. 23 Car. B. R. If there be trover, before the marriage of a female plaintiff, and conversion afterwards; the husband and wife may join, and it will be good. 2 Lev. 107.

Trover lies against baron and feme, setting forth that they converted the goods to the use of the husband; for the feme may be a trespasser, and convert them to the husband's use, or the use of the stranger, but not to her own use; and if the conversion be laid ad usum of herself and husband, or ad usum proprium, &c. it will not be good. Cro. Car. 494. In trover the plaintiff may lay a conversion here, and prove it in Ireland; it is otherwise in trespass quare clausum fregit, for there the party cannot prove the trespass but where it lies, nor lay it in any other place than where it is. Stile 331. 1 Mod. Entr. Engl. 303.

Action of trover, at the plaintiff's election, may be brought for goods detained; for it is but justice that the party should have his goods detained if they may be had, or else damages to the value for the detaining and conversion of them. 2 Lill. Abr. 618. And trespass or trover, lies for the same thing; though they cannot be brought in one declaration: And the allegation of the conversion of the goods in trespass, is for aggravation of the damages, &c. Cro. Jac. 50. Lutw. 1526.

Detinue doth not lie for money numbered; but trover and conversion lies for it: For though in the finding and converting generally, the money of one person cannot be distinguished from that of another, all money being alike; yet the proof that the plaintiff lost, and defendant converted so much, maintains the action, if the verdict finds it. Jenk. Cent. 208. Where money is given to a person to keep, though it be not in bags, action of trover will lie; because this action is not to recover the money, but damages. Poph. 91. 3 Salk. 365. In case a master delivers corn to his servant to sell, who does so and converts the money, the master may bring trover against the servant. 2 Bulst. 307. 1 Roll's Rep. 59.

There is no proper plea in action of trover, where it lies, but the general issue not guilty; on which the defendant may give in evidence that the goods and money were not the plaintiff's. Bro. 109. Trover lieth not for any part of a freehold; but if doors fixed are removed and converted, it will lie. Wood's Inst. 540. In trover, the defendant may not wage his law, as he may in detinue; wherefore it often takes place of that action. See Detinue and Black. Com. 3 V. 151. 4 V. 356.

Trug-Corn, (Truga frumenti) Is a measure of corn; and at Llunminster, at this day the vicar hath trug-corn allowed him for officiating at some chapels of ease within that parish. Liber Niger Heref.

Truncus, A trunk set in churches, to receive the oblations of pious people; of which, in the times of popery, there were many at several altars and images, like the boxes which since the reformation have been placed near the doors of churches for receiving all voluntary contributions for the poor: And the customary free-will offerings that were dropt into those trunks, made up a good part of the endowment of vicars, and thereby oftentimes rendered their condition better than in latter times.—Vicarius habebit oblationes quasunque ad truncos tum in dicta ecclesia de, &c. quam alibi infra parochiam ipsius ecclesie suas. Ordin. Vic. Lancast. Anno 1430.

Trussa, A truss or bundle of corn; mentioned among the customary services done by tenants. Cartular S. Edmund. MS.

Trust, (Fiducia, confidentia.) Is a confidence which one man reposes in another—but, as generally used in law, it is a right to receive the profits of land, and to dispose of the land itself (in many cases) for particular purposes, as directed by the lawful owner, or pointed out by settlement, &c. or that which is created by the person who created the trust. A trust is but a new name given to an use.—If a person in whom a trust is reposed, breaks or doth not perform the same, the remedy is by bill in Chancery, the Common law generally taking no notice of trusts. 2 Lill. Abr. 624. A trust and use were all one at Common law, till the Stat. 27 H. 8. which distinguishes them: The method of making conveyances by way of trust, was invented to evade the statute of uses; and these conveyances are not so much favoured in law, as plain and direct conveyances of estates. Pascb. 23 Car. B. R.

Trusts and legal estates are to be governed by the same rules; and this is a maxim which has universally prevailed. It is so in the rules of descent, as in gavelkind, and borough English lands; there is a possessio fratris of a trust, as well as of a legal estate. The like rules in limitations, and also of barring entails of trusts, as of legal estates; per the master of the rolls, who said he thought there was no exception out of this general rule, nor is there any reason that there should; and that it would be impossible to fix boundaries, and shew how far, and no farther, it ought to go; and that perhaps in early times the necessity of keeping thereto was not seen, or thoroughly considered. 2 P. Wms's Rep. 645. Sutton v. Sutton.

Declarations and creations of trust, of lands, tenements or hereditaments, are to be in writing, signed by the party empowered to declare such trust, &c. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. In the explanation of this statute, it is provided, that this shall not extend to resulting trusts, or trusts arising by implication or construction of law; which shall be of like force as before that act. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. And there is a statute by which infants seized of estates in fee in trust, may make conveyances of such estates, by order of the Chancery. 7 Ann. c. 19. If a man buys land in another person's name, and pays the money for the land, this will be a trust for him that paid the money, though there be no deed declaring the trust; because the statute of fraud extends not to trusts raised by the implication of law: And a bare declaration by parol, on a deed assigned, may prevent any resulting trust to the assignor. 2 Vent. Rep. 361. 2 Vern. 294. Where there has been fraud in gaining a conveyance from another, that is a reason of making the grantee considered as a trustee: But the Statute 29 Car. 2. c. 3. relates only to equitable trusts and interests, and not an use, which is a legal estate. 1 P. Williams 113. There are only two kinds of trusts by operation of law; either where the deed or conveyance has been taken in the name of one man, and the purchase-money paid by another; or where the owner of an estate has made a voluntary conveyance of it, and declared the trust with regard to one part to be for another person, but hath been silent as to the other part; in which case he himself ought to have the benefit of that, it being plainly his intent. Barnardist. 388. There shall be a tenancy by the curtesy. Esc. of a trust estate; but of such an estate a woman shall not be endowed. 1 P. Williams 109. Talbot's Caf. 139. See 2 P. Williams 147. A fine and recovery of Cestui que trust shall bar and transfer a trust, as it should an estate at law, if it were upon a consideration. Chanc. Rep. 49.

In equity trusts are so regarded, that the act of a trustee will prejudice the cestui que trust for though a purchaser, for valuable consideration, without notice, shall not have his title any ways impeached, yet the trustee must make good the trust: But if he purchases, having notice, then he is the trustee himself, and shall be accountable. Abr. Caf. Eq. 384. Where trustees in a settlement, join with tenant for life in any conveyance, to defeat a remainder, before it comes in esse; this is a plain breach of trust; and those who claim under such deed, having notice of the trust, will be liable to make good the estates. 2 Salk. 680. Yet in case a trustee joins with cestui que trust in tail, in a deed to bar the entail; as it is no more than what he may be compelled to, it is no breach of his trust. 1 Chanc. Caf. 49, 213.

It has been decreed, that a trust for a son, &c. shall pass with the lands into whose hands soever they come, and cannot be defeated by any act of the father or trustees. And though a husband and wife, have no children in many years, and they and the trustees agree to sell the land settled, &c. it will not be permitted in Chancery. Abr. Caf. Eq. 391. 1 Vern. 181. A tennor grants his lands in trust for himself for life, and to his wife for life, and after to his children for their lives, and then to A. B. This trust to A. B. is good; though if it had been to the heirs of their bodies, it would be otherwise: And a remote trust of a term, which tends to a perpetuity, has been decreed a void limitation. Chanc. Rep. 230, 239.

If a husband makes a lease for years, in trust for his wife, he may sell it, and it will bind her: But when a trust is first created for a wife bona fide, he cannot sell it, unless he join in a fine. Ibid. 307, 308. It has been adjudged, where a term is settled in trust for a jointure on a wife, or in pursuance of marriage articles, or if the term of the wife be assigned by her before marriage; the husband can neither charge nor sell it, &c. though if the assignment is made after marriage in trust for the wife, it is then voluntary and fraudulent. Ibid. 225.

A trust to pay portions, legacies, &c. out of the rents and profits of the lands, at the day prefixed, gives the trustees power to sell; if the annual profits will not do it within that time, then they may sell the land, being within the intention of the trust: And they cannot sell to raise the money, except it be to be paid at a certain time. Ibid. 176. A trustee for sale of lands for payment of debts, paying debts to the value of the land, thereby becomes a purchaser himself. Ibid. 199. Where a trustee for paying portions, pays one child his full share, and the trust estate decays, he shall not be allowed such payment. 2 Chanc. Ca. 132. If one devises lands to trustees until his debts are paid, with remainder over, and the trustees misapply the profits, they shall hold the land only till they might have paid the debts, if the rents had been duly applied; and after that the land is to be discharged, and the trustees are only answerable. 1 P. Williams 519. And a person having granted a lease of land to trustees, in trust to pay all the debts which he should owe at his death, in a just proportion, without any preference; it was here declared, that the simple contract debts became as debts due by mortgage, and should carry interest. Ibid. 229.

Trust of a fee-simple estate, or fee-tail, is forfeited by treason, but not by felony; for such forfeiture is by way of escheat, and an escheat cannot be but where there is a defect of a tenant, and here is a tenant. Hard. 495. See Jenk. Cent. 245. A trust for a term is forfeited to the King in case of treason or felony; and the trustees in equity shall be compelled to assign to the King. Cra. Jac. 513. If a bond be taken in another's name, or a lease be made to another in trust for a person, who is afterwards convicted of treason or felony, they are much liable to be forfeited as a bond or lease made in his own name, or in his possession. 2 Hawk. 450. Execution may be sued, and lands held in trust delivered, where any person is seized or possessed in trust for another; by the statute of frauds, 29 Car. 2. c. 3.

Trustees being obliged to join in receipts, one is not chargeable for money received by the other: In the case of executors it is otherwise. 1 Salk. 318. 2 Vern. Rep. 515. A trustee robbed by his own servant, shall be discharged discharged of it on account, though great negligence may charge him with more than he hath received, in the trust. 2 Chan. Cas. 2. 1 Vern. 144. There is a breach of trust in servants going away with their master's goods delivered them, &c.

Of a resulting trust, or trust by implication of law.

It was ruled by lord chancellor Cowper, that the statute of frauds, stat. 3. which says, 'That all conveyances, where trusts and confidences shall arise or result by implication of law, shall be as if that act had never been made,' must relate to trusts and equitable interests, and cannot relate to any use which is a legal estate. Mitch. 1709. in the case of Lamplugh v. Lamplugh, 1 P. Wms. 112.

No rule is more certain than that if a man makes a conveyance in trust for such persons, and such estates as he shall appoint, and makes no appointment, the resulting trust must be to him and his heirs. The trust in equity must follow the rules of law in the case of an use, and that it would be so in the case of an use is undoubtedly true, and that was Sir Edward Cleer's case in 6 Rep. per Lord Chancellor. Fitz-Gib. 223. Fitzgerald v. Ld. Faulconbridge.

Wherever there is a consideration there can be no resulting trust. But if a lease be made for years without a consideration, there well be a resulting trust to the lessor.

Where a daughter's portion was charged upon the father's land, she at the request of her father, had released her interest in the land, to the intent that he might be enabled to make a clear settlement thereof upon the son. It was declared by the lord keeper, that if this was done by the daughter without any consideration, there would be a resulting trust in the father, whereby he should be chargeable to the daughter for so much money. Freem. 305. Lady Tyrell's case.

But where a trustee purchases lands out of the profits of the trust estate, and takes the conveyance in his own name; tho' probably, if he cannot make other satisfaction for the misapplication, these lands may be sequestered, yet they cannot be declared to be a trust for cestui que use, no more than if A. borrows money of B. for it is not a trust in writing; and a resulting trust it cannot be, because that would be to contradict the deed by parol proof, directly against the statute of frauds. But if this purchase had been recited to have been made with the profits of the trust estate, this appearing in writing might ground a resulting trust. On appeal to the house of lords, this decree was affirmed. Chan. Proc. 84. pl. 77. Kirk v. Webb.

So where a testator impowered the executor to lay out the personal estate in land, and settled it on A. and his heirs: And the executor being about to purchase told A.'s mother of it, and asked her consent, but took the conveyance in his own name, and no trust in writing was declared, but it was proved that he at several times declared it must be sold to make A. satisfaction; yet the court (though inclined to decree a conveyance to A. the executor being dead insolvent) declared it could not, because there was no express proof of the application of the trust money. *Ch. Turn, or Tourn, Is the King's leet through all the county; of which the sheriff is judge, and this court is incident to his office; wherefore it is called the sheriff's tourn: And it had its name originally from the sheriff's taking a turn or circuit about his shire, and holding this court in several places; for the word turn properly taken, doth not signify the court of the sheriff, but his perambulation. Crompt. Jurisd. 230. 4 Inst. 260. 2 Hawk. P. C. 55. The turn is a court of record; and by the Common law, every sheriff ought to make his turn or circuit throughout all the hundreds in his county, in order to hold a court in every hundred for redressing common grievances, and preservation of the peace; and this court might be holden at any place within the hundred, and as often as the sheriff thought fit: But this having been found to give the sheriff too great power of oppressing the people, by holding his court at such times and places at which they could not conveniently attend, and thereby increase the number of his amercements; by the Stat. of Magna Charta, cap. 35. it was enacted, That no sheriff shall make his turn through a hundred but twice in a year, viz. once after Easter, and once after the feast of St. Michael; and at the place accustomed: Also a subsequent statute ordained, That every sheriff shall make his turn yearly, one time within the month after Easter, and another time within the month after Michaelmas; and if they hold them in any other manner, they shall lose their turn for that time. 37 Ed. 3. cap. 15.

Since these statutes, the sheriff is indictable for holding this court at another time, than what is therein limited, or at an unusual place: And it has been held, that an indictment found at a sheriff's turn, appearing to have been holden at another time, is void. Dalt. Sher. 390, 391. Dyer 151. 38 Hen. 6.

At Common law the sheriff might proceed to hear and determine any offence within his jurisdiction, being indicted before him, and requiring a trial, till sheriffs were restrained from holding pleas of the crown by Magna Charta, cap. 17. But that statute doth not restrain the sheriff's turn, from taking indictments or presentments, or awarding process thereon; tho' the power of awarding such process being abused, was taken from all the sheriffs (except those of London) by the 1 Ed. 4. c. 2. and lodged in the justices of peace at their sessions, who are to award process on such indictments delivered to them by the sheriff, as if they had been taken before themselves, &c. 2 Hawk. 57, 70, 71.

The sheriff's power in this court is still the same as anciently it was, in all cases not within the statutes above mentioned; he continues a judge of record, and may inquire in his turn of treasons and felonies, by the Common law; as well as the lowest offences against the King, such as purprestures, seizures of treasure trove, of waifs, eltrays, goods wrecked, &c. All common nuisances and annoyances, and other such like offences; as selling corrupt victuals, breaking the assize of beer and ale, or keeping false weights or measures, are here indictable; also all common disturbers of the peace, barretors, and common oppressors; and all dangerous and suspicious persons, &c. And the sheriff in his turn may impose a fine on all such as are guilty of contempts in the face of the court; and upon a tutor to the court making default, or refusing to be sworn on the jury; or on a bailiff not making a panel; or a tithingman neglecting to make his presentment; or a person whose constable refusing to be sworn, &c. And he may amerce for offences; which fines and amercements are leviable and recoverable by distress, &c. Id. 58, 60, 67. But notwithstanding this it has been observed, that great part of the business of the turn and leet, in several years past, through the negligence of sheriffs and stewards, devolved on the quarter sessions. Wood's Inst. See County-Court, and Court-Leet.

Turnpikes. There are statutes continually made for erecting turnpikes for repairing ways; empowering justices of peace and other commissioners to appoint surveyors of the roads to amend the same; and also collectors of the toll at the places where the turnpikes are set up.

Now by the stat. 7 Geo. 3. c. 40. all the laws relative to the turnpike roads are reduced into one law. The substance of that act is as follows:

By sect. 1. Five or more trustees for turnpike roads, at a general meeting, are empowered to erect weighing engines, for weighing carriages; and to take 20 s. (additional tolls) for every hundred weight which every narrow four wheel'd carriage, with the loading, shall weigh above 60 C. weight. So for all broad four wheeled carriages weighing above six tons; and also for all carts, or two wheeled carriages, with broad wheels, weighing above three tons;—to be levied as the other tolls, and applied in repair of the road.

2. Not to extend to waggons, &c. having axletrees of such different lengths, that the distance from wheel to wheel (of the narrower pair) be not more than four feet two inches; and that the distance from wheel to wheel of the other pair be such that the fore and hind wheels roll only one single path of sixteen inches wide at the least, on each side, and having the fellies of the breadth of nine inches at the bottom; but that the same shall pass on any turnpike road, and through any toll gate within 100 miles from London, on paying only so much of the tolls as shall not exceed one half of the full toll payable for waggons, &c. having the fellies of the breadth of nine inches from side to side, or for the beasts of draught drawing the same, and not rolling a path of sixteen inches.

3. Nor to extend to carriages employed in husbandry.

4. Trustees are empowered to order the fellies of carriages to be gaged.

5. No composition for tolls to be made in respect of narrow wheeled carriages.

6. Penalty of 5 l. on fraudulently unloading goods at or before the same come to any gate or weighing engine; or laying on goods after having passed the same;—the driver to be committed for one month: And collectors neglecting their duty are to be discharged, or forfeit 5 l. at the option of trustees.

7. No waggon, &c. shall pass along any turnpike road, above 20 miles from London or Westminster, having the fellies of the breadth of nine inches at the bottom, unless the same be made in such manner, that no pair of wheels (except such as roll a surface of sixteen inches) be wider than four feet six inches from inside to inside; and that the distance from the centre of the fore to the centre of the hind wheel of such waggon, &c. (not being used for carriage of timber only) be not above nine feet; on forfeiture of 5 l. by the owners.—Officers are required to measure such carriages:—5 l. penalty on obstructing them, &c.

8. No broad wheeled waggon, &c. to be drawn with more than eight horses; nor two wheeled carriages with more than five;—in pairs. Narrow four wheel'd carriages not to be drawn with more than four horses, &c. nor two wheel'd carriages with more than three;—on forfeiture of 20 s. and the supernumerary horses. v. sect. 13.

9. Five pounds penalty on fraudulently taking off any horse, or altering the distance of the wheels, before coming to any gate, &c.

10. And a driver travelling with more horses the same day, than he shall have passed through any gate with, shall be deemed guilty of a fraud.

11. Provided that where it is necessary, trustees may allow waggons, &c. with broad wheels to be drawn up hills by ten horses; and narrow wheel'd carriages by six.—the extent of the hills to be specified in the order of allowance, which is to be certified to the general quarter sessions: And the order, if approved, is to be confirmed, and filed; otherwise to be vacated; and after such confirmation and filing, no person shall be liable to any penalty for using such number of horses, as shall be allowed.

12. Provided also, that if it appear, that any waggon, &c. could not by reason of deep snow or ice, be drawn with the respective weights, and by the number of horses allowed; then it shall be lawful to stop all proceedings for recovery of any penalty which may have been incurred by drawing with more horses than allowed.

13. Narrow wheel'd carriages not to be drawn by horses in pairs; except four wheel'd carriages loaden with fish, rabbits, poultry, calves alive or slaughtered, or lambs only.

14. No carriage to be fraudulently turned out of a turnpike road, to avoid the tolls, on forfeiture of one of the horses, (not being the shaft horse) with all his gears and accoutrements, to the use of any person who shall seize and detain the same.

16. Driver of any waggon, &c. with wheels not duly constructed; or drawn by more horses than authorized, may be apprehended by any person, taken before a justice; and on conviction forfeits 5 l.

17. Drag irons to be flat at the sole, and of the breadth of the fellies, on forfeiture of 40 s.

18. The owner's real name and place of abode, to be painted on the sill, or most conspicuous part of each waggon, &c.; also the words Common Stage Waggon or Cart, as the case may be. Travelling without the owner's name and place of abode; or with a fictitious name thereon, forfeits 5 l. And without the words required, 40 s.

23. The act not to extend to "any chaise marine, coach, landau, berlin, chariot, chaise, calash, or hearse; or to any caravan, or covered carriage, or any nobleman or gentleman for his private use; or to such ammunition or artillery as shall be for his Majesty's service; or to any cart or—carriage drawn by one horse, or two oxen, and no more; or to any carriage, having the sole or bottom of the fellies of the wheels thereof less than breadth of nine inches, which shall be laden with one block of marble, one piece of metal, or one piece of timber."

24. But persons fraudulently taking the benefit of any exemption, forfeit not exceeding 5 l. nor less than 40 s.

28. Forty shillings penalty on surveyors suffering any obstruction to remain on the roads.

30. Direction posts to be set up where several highways meet; and where the highways are subject to deep or dangerous floods; and for guiding travellers in the safest tract. Mile stones also to be set up:—Expences to be defrayed out of the tolls.—Surveyors neglecting their duty herein, forfeit 20 s.

31. Penalty not exceeding 5*l.*, nor less than 10*s.* on pulling up or destroying posts or banks to be set up on the sides of the roads, for security thereof, or the parapets of bridges; or defacing mile-stones, or direction posts; or the offender may be committed and kept to hard labour, not exceeding a month, nor less than seven days, and whipt.

37. Nuisances on the road may be prosecuted at the expence of the revenues of the turnpike: But prosecutions are restrained, unless on offender's confession, or proof by witnesses.

48. Any seizure or distress made for any forfeiture incurred, unless by warrant, is to be delivered over to the constable till proof made of the offence before some justice; and if not made within six days after such delivery, the distress to be returned to the owner; and the seizer to pay expences of keeping; but on conviction, an order to be made for delivering the distress to the seizer.—Seizer not duly prosecuting such seizure forfeits 40*s.*

49. All convictions to be on confession; or oath of one or more witnesses:—Inhabitants competent witnesses:—Any justice (tho' a trustee) may act.

51. Penalties, &c. (not otherwise directed) are to be levied by distress and sale; one half to the informer, the other to the surveyor, towards repairs: For want of distress, &c. offender to be committed, not exceeding three months; unless the penalty, &c. be sooner paid.

53. Prosecutors or informers at liberty to sue, either as the act directs; or by action of debt for pecuniary penalties; or by action of trover for any beast of draught, or other goods, in which the forfeiture shall be sufficient evidence of property to plaintiff, he need not prove any seizure or demand; and shall have full costs:—But ten days notice in writing, to be given to the party offending, previous to the commencement of such action:—The same to be brought within one month after the offence.

54. Distress for money to be levied by virtue of the act, shall not be deemed unlawful, nor the party making it be deemed a trespasser, for default of form in the proceedings; nor shall the party distraint be deemed a trespasser ab initio, on account of any subsequent irregularity.

55. But no plaintiff shall recover in any action for such irregularity, if tender of sufficient amends has been made before action brought: And if no tender has been made, defendant may pay money into court before issue joined.

56. Appeal to the General Quarter Sessions, given.

60. Action against any person for any thing done in pursuance of the act, to be commenced within three months after the fact committed:—To be local.—Defendant may plead the general issue, and give the special matter in evidence:—If the action is brought after the time limited, or made transitory, the jury shall find for defendant; who in all cases shall have treble costs.

By this act the principal parts of all the former turnpike acts are repealed. See Highways.

Typtian, An accusation, impeachment, or charge, of any trespass or offence. Leg. Ethelred. c. 2.

Tylwith, (Brit. derived from Tyle, i. e. locus ubi stetit domus, vel locus edificandæ domus aptus, or from tylath, trab, tignus) Signifies a place whereon to build a house, or a beam in the building: And it is applied to familia, a tribe or family, derived forth of another, which in the old English heraldry is called second or third houses; so that in case the great paternal stock brancheth itself into several tylwiths, or houses, they carry no second or younger house farther; and the use of these tylwiths was to shew not only the originals of families as to the pedigree, but the several distinctions and distances of birth, that in case any line should make a failure, the next in any degree may claim their interest according to the rule of descent, &c.

Tynmouth. There is a customary descent of lands in the honour of Tynmouth, that if any tenant hath issue two or more daughters, and die seised in fee, the land shall go the eldest daughter for life only, and after to the cousins of the male-line; and for default thereof to escheat. 2 Keb. 111, 114.

Type, (Typus) A figure, example, or likeness of a thing. Litt. Dist.

Typographia, The trade of printing. Ibid.

Tythes, (Decimæ.) See Tithe.

V.

Vacant, Vacant, free, that is at leisure; also void. Litt. Dist.

Vacaria, A void place, or waste ground:—Dedimus omnia dominica nostra vacariis, & forestis, &c. Mem. in Scacc. Mich. 9 Edw. 1.

Vacat, See Judgment, and 21 Vin. Abr. 536.

Vacating Records. Imbezzling or vacating records, or falsifying certain other proceedings in a court of judicature, is a felonious offence against public justice. See the Statutes 8 H. 6. c. 12. 21 Jac. 1. c. 26. 4 W. & M. c. 4. and Black. Com. 4 V. 128.

Vacation, (Vacatio) Is all the time between the end of one term and the beginning of another; and it begins the last day of every term as soon as the court rises. The time from the death of a bishop, or other spiritual person, till the bishoprick or dignity is supplied with another, is also called vacation. Stat. Westm. 1. c. 21. 14 Ed. 3. c. 4. See Black. Com. 3 V. 276.

Vacatura, An avoidance of an ecclesiastical benefice; as prima vacatura, the first voidance, &c.

Vaccary, (Vaccaria) Is a house or place to keep cows in; a dairy-house, or cow pasture. Fleta, lib. 2.

Vaccarius, The cow-herd, who looks after the common herd of cows. Ibid.

Vadare Duellum, To wage a combat, where two contending parties on a challenge give and take a mutual pledge of fighting. Corwell.

Vadium ponere, Is to take security, bail, or pledges for the appearance of a defendant in a court of justice.—

Præcipimus tibi, &c. quod ponas per vadium & salvas plegios Johannem de B. &c. Reg. Orig.

Vadium Mortuum, A mortgage or pawn of lands so engaged to the creditor, that he hath a right to the mean profits for the use of his debt. Glanvil. lib. 10. cap. 8. See Black. Com. 2 V. 157.

Vadium

Adium bibum. A living pledge, as when a man borrows a sum of another, and grants him an estate, as of 20*l.* per annum, to hold until the rents and profits shall repay the sum borrowed. Black. Com. 2 V. 157.

Vagabond, (Vagabundus) One that wanders about, and has no certain dwelling; an idle fellow: And rogues, vagabonds, and sturdy beggars, are mentioned in divers statutes. See Vagrants, and Black. Com. 4 V. 170.

Vagrants, (Vagrantes) By the statute 17 Geo. 2. c. 5. They, who threaten to run away and leave their wives or children to the parish; or unlawfully return to a parish from whence they have been legally removed; or, not having wherewith to maintain themselves, live idle, and refuse to work for the usual wages; and all persons going from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, &c. to beg in the parishes where they dwell, shall be deemed idle and disorderly persons. All persons going about as patent gatherers, or gatherers of alms, under pretence of losses by fire, &c. or as collectors for prisons, &c. all fencers and bearwards; all common players of interludes, and persons who for hire, gain, or reward act, represent, or perform, or cause to be acted, or represented, tragedy, comedy, opera, play, farce, or other entertainment of the stage, or any part therein, not being authorised by law; all minstrels, jugglers; all persons pretending to be gypsies, or wandering in the habit or form of Egyptians, or pretending to have skill in physiognomy, palmistry, or other crafty science, or to tell fortunes, or using any subtle craft to deceive and impose on a person; or playing or betting at any unlawful games or plays; and all persons, who run away and leave their wives and children, whereby they become chargeable to any parish; all pedlars not duly licensed; all persons wandering abroad and lodging in ale-houses, barns, outhouses or in the open air, not giving a good account of themselves; and all persons wandering abroad, and begging, pretending to be soldiers, mariners, or pretending to go to work in harvest, not having proper certificates; and all other persons wandering abroad and begging; and all persons going from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, &c. to beg in the parishes where they dwell, and being apprehended for the same, shall resist or escape, shall be deemed rogues and vagabonds.

All end-gatherers offending against the Stat. 13 Geo. 1. c. 23. being convicted; all persons apprehended as rogues and vagabonds, and escaping, or refusing to go before a justice, or to be examined upon oath before such justice, or refusing to be conveyed by pass; or giving a false account of themselves after warning of the punishment; and all rogues or vagabonds breaking or escaping out of any house of correction; and all persons who having been punished as rogues and vagabonds shall again commit any of the said offences, and offenders against this act having children with them, (and such children being put out apprentices or servants pursuant to this act) being again found with the same children, shall be deemed incorrigible rogues.

The punishment of idle and disorderly persons is commitment to the house of correction, there to be kept to hard labour, not exceeding a month. Rogues and vagabonds are to be publicly whipped or sent to the house of correction until the next sessions, or any less time, and after such whipping or commitment may be passed to their last legal settlement or place of birth, or if under fourteen, and have a father or mother living, to the place of abode of such father and mother. And if committed until the next sessions and adjudged a rogue or vagabond, the justices may order him to be kept in the house of correction to hard labour not exceeding six months.

A person adjudged at the sessions an incorrigible rogue may be kept in the house of correction to hard labour, not exceeding two years, nor less than six months, and during the confinement be corrected by whipping, at such times and places as the justices shall think fit, and may then be passed as aforesaid: And if a male, and above the age of twelve years, the justices before his discharge may send him to be employed in the King's service, either by sea or land. If before the expiration of his confinement he shall escape from the house of correction, or offend again in the like manner, he shall be deemed to be guilty of felony, and transported for any time not exceeding seven years.

Any person may apprehend and carry before a justice any persons going about from door to door, or placing themselves in streets, highways or passages to beg alms in the parishes where they dwell, and the justices may order the overseers of the poor to pay such person 5*s.* for every offender, which on refusal of payment may be levied on the overseers goods. Any person may apprehend an offender against this act, and carry him before a justice.

A constable refusing or neglecting to use his endeavour to apprehend any offender shall forfeit not exceeding 5*l.* nor less than 10*s.* to the use of the poor, to be levied by distress. And any other person charged by a justice of peace to apprehend such offender, refusing so to do, shall forfeit 10*s.* A justice may order the high constable to pay to any person, whether a constable or not, who shall apprehend any such offender, 10*s.* for every offender. The justices are four times in the year at least, to cause a general privy search to be made in one night, for the apprehending rogues and vagabonds.

To prevent expences in passing rogues, vagabonds and incorrigible rogues, the justice is to deliver to the officer a note directing how they are to be conveyed, whether in a cart, by horse, or on foot. The constable is to convey such person in such manner and time as by the pass is directed, the next direct way way to the place where such person is ordered to be sent, if in the same county, &c. but if in another county, &c. he shall deliver the person to the proper officer of the first town in the next county, &c. in the direct way to the place where such person is to be conveyed, together with the pass and duplicate of examination, taking his receipt for the same; and such officer is immediately to apply to a justice of peace in the same county, who is to make a like note, and deliver it to the officer, who is to convey the person to the first parish, &c. in the next county, and so in like manner from one county to another, till they come to the place where such person is sent: And if the officer who shall receive such person there, shall think the examination to be false, he may carry the person before a justice of peace, who, if he see cause, may commit such person to the house of correction, till the next sessions, where the justices, if they see cause, may deal with such person as an incorrigible rogue, but he shall not be removed but by order of two justices.

If the vagrant upon search be found to have effects sufficient to pay all or part of the expence of passing him, the justice may order the same to be sold and employed for that purpose. The justices at sessions may direct what rates and allowances shall be made for passing such rogues, vagabonds, &c. and make orders for the more regular proceeding therein. The high constable is to pay to the petty constable or other officer the rates so allowed, on penalty of forfeiting double the sum, to be levied by distress.

When a vagrant is to be passed to Ireland, the Isle of Man, Jersey, Guernsey, or Scilly, the master of any ship bound to those places shall, on a warrant from a justice of peace, and being paid such allowance as the justice shall think proper, receive such vagrant and convey him to such place, and give a receipt for the vagrant and money on the back of the warrant, on penalty of 5*l.* to the poor, to be levied by distress; but not to be obliged to take above one vagrant for every twenty tons burden of his ship. The parish to which any vagrant shall be passed may employ him in work till he shall betake himself to some service, and if he shall refuse to work or go to service, he may be sent to the house of correction.

By the Stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 36. It shall be lawful for any two or more justices, in case any person apprehended, upon any general privy search, or by virtue of any special warrant, shall be charged before them with being a rogue and vagabond, or an idle and disorderly person, or with suspicion of felony (although no direct proof be then made thereof) to examine such person upon oath, not only to the parish or place where he was last legally settled, but also as to his means of livelihood, the substance of which examination shall be put into writing, and be subscribed by the persons so examined, and the said justice shall likewise sign the same, and transmit it to the next sessions of the peace to be there filed and kept on record: And if such person shall not appear to such justices, that he has a lawful way of getting his livelihood, or shall not procure some responsible housekeeper to appear to his character, and to give security for his appearance before such justices, at some day to be fixed (if the same shall be required) to commit such person to some prison or house of correction, for any time not exceeding six days, and in the mean time to order the overseers of the poor where such person shall be apprehended, to insert an advertisement in some public paper, describing such suspicious person, and any things which shall be found upon him, and which he shall be suspected not to have honestly come by, and mentioning the place to which he is committed, and the time and place when and where such person is to be again brought before them to be re-examined; and if no accusation shall then be laid against him, then such person shall be discharged. See Rogue, Lunatic. For the method of conveying vagrants, see 26 Geo. 2. c. 34. See also Black. Com. 4 V. 170.

Valer, Valest, or Valelet, (Valettus vel Valesta) Was anciently a name specially denoting young gentlemen, though of great descent or quality; but afterwards attributed to those of lower rank, and now a servitor, or gentleman of the chamber. Cam. Selden's Tit. Hon. Bract. lib. 3. In the accounts of the Inner Temple, it is used for a benchers's clerk or servant; and the butlers of the house corruptly call them Varlets.

Valentia, The value or price of any thing. See value.

Valerheria, Signifies the kindred of the slain, one on the father's side, and another on the side of the mother, to prove that a man was a Welfman. It is mentioned in Stat. Wallæ, 12 Edw. 1. c. 4.

Valor maritagii. Under the antient tenures, while an infant was in ward, the guardian had the power, of tendering him or her a suitable match without disparagement or inequality: Which if the infants refused, they forfeited the value of the marriage, valorem maritagii, to their guardian; that is so much as a jury would assess, or any one would bona fide give to the guardian for such an alliance: And if the infants married themselves without the guardians consent, they forfeited double the value, duplicem valorem maritagii. This was one of the greatest hardships of our antient tenures—But, the tenures being taken away, the law is abolished. See Black. Com. 2 V. 70.

Valuable Consideration. Is, in a deed, &c. money, marriage, labor, &c. See Black. Com. 2 V. 297.

Valvasors. The first name of dignity, next beneath a peer, was antiently that of vidames, vice domini, or valvasors, who are mentioned by our antient lawyers, as viri magnæ dignitatis; and Sir Edward Coke speaks highly of them. Yet they are now quite out of use; and our legal antiquarians are not agreed upon even their original or antient office. See Black. Com. 1 V. 403. and Valvasor.

Value, (Valentia, Valor) Is a known word; and the value of those things as to which offences are committed, is usually comprised in indictments; which seems necessary in theft to make a difference from petit larceny, and in trespass to aggravate the fault, &c. But in other cases a distinction has been made between value and price. If a plaintiff declares in an action of trespass for the taking away of live cattle, or one particular thing, he ought to say that the defendant took them away, pretii so much; if the declaration be for taking of things without life, it must be alleged ad valentiam, &c. so that live cattle are to be prized at such a price, as the owner of them did esteem them to be worth; and dead things to be reckoned at the value of the market which may be certainly known. Of coin not current it shall be pretii; but of common coin current, it shall be neither said pretii nor ad valentiam, for the value and price thereof is certain: The difference between pretii and ad valentiam may proceed from the rule in the register of writs, which shows it to be according to the antient forms used in the law. West. Symb. par. 2. 2 Lill. Abr. 629. A jewel it is said is not valuable in law, but only according to the valuation of the owner of it, and is very uncertain: But there seems to be a certain value for diamonds among the merchant jewellers, according to their weight and lustre, &c. Hill. 21 Car. B. R. 2 Lill. 628. A man cannot say that another owes him so much, when the value of the thing owing is uncertain; for which reason actions in these cases are always brought in the detinet, and the declaration ad valentiam, &c. 1 Lutw. 484. See money.

Value of Land. May be intended such as it was anciently, and not adjudged according to its improved value. 2 Leon. 44. Lutw. 1304. Vide Purch. fe.

Value of Marriage, (Valore maritagii) Was a writ that lay for the lord, having offered marriage to an infant without disparagement, if the man refused to take the lord's offer, and married another woman, to recover the value of the marriage. Reg. Orig. 164. This is also called forfeiture of marriage, forisfactura maritagii. See the statute 12 Car. 2. cap. 24.

Want, (S. v.) He wanted for me at the want, i. e. stood for me at the rent. Blount.

Wantarius, (Vancurfor) As vantarius Regis, the King's fore receiver. Richardus R. Miles ten. terras per serjeantiam esse wantarium regis, &c. Rot. de finibus. Term, Mich. 2 Edw. 2.

Variance, (Variantia, from the Fr. Varier, i. e. Alterare) signifies any alteration of a thing formerly laid in a plea, or where the declaration in a cause differs from the writ, or from the deed upon which it is grounded, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 629. If there is a variance between the declaration and the writ, it is error; and the writ shall abate. And if there appear to be a material variance between the matter pleaded and the manner of the pleading it, this is not a good plea; for the manner and matter of pleading ought to agree in substance, or there will be no certainty in it. Cro. Jac. 479. 2 Lill. 629. But when the pleading is good in substance, a small variance shall not hurt. 3 Mod. 227. If the record of Nisi Prius agrees with the declaration delivered, a variation from the issue is not material. 2 Strange 1131. Where the original writ varies from the declaration, it is not remedied by any statute of Jeofails. 5 Rep. 37. Though verdict in ejectment was for a messuage next the messuage of A. B. and the judgment for a messuage next another messuage in the occupation of A. B. This is no material variance, but is amendable by the Stat. 16 & 17 Car. 2. cap. 8. which enacts, That all omissions, variances, &c. not being against the right of the matter of the suit, shall be amended. Raym. 398. 3 Salk. 368. The original writ in C. B. concluded ad damnum 40*l.* and the declaration was ad damnum 100*l.* The jury gave 12*l.* damages; and on a writ of error brought, this variance was assigned; it was held that this had been a good objection in the original action on a demurrer to the declaration; but it is not so after verdict; not being matter in point of judgment, especially as the jury found only 12*l.* damages; but if the verdict had found more damages than what was mentioned in the writ, though less than what was set forth in the declaration, it had been ill, because there was no writ to warrant such damages. 2 Cro. 629. 1 Bull. 49.

If a defendant pleads a variance between the writ and declaration, he is to crave over of the writ before he shall have any advantage of the variance, because the writ and declaration are not upon the same roll; and therefore if the defendant plead to it without demanding over, on demurrer judgment may be for him to answer over, &c. 2 Salk. 658. If in the imparlance roll the declaration is indebt, and in the plea-roll it is in trespass; this is such a variance, that if the plaintiff hath judgment it shall be reversed. 3 Bull. 229. When a contract is intire, an action of debt cannot be brought for part of the money, without shewing how the other is satisfied; if it be, this variance from the true debt will make it ill. 3 Nels. Abr. 440.

In writ of error in the Exchequer chamber to remove a record out of B. R. of a certain trespass the husband and wife had done, the record certified was of a trespass done by the woman alone; and for this variance the writ was abated, and the record judged not removed. Sid. 269. 3 Salk. 369. If a lease be alledged to be made by two persons, and it appears on evidence they were tenants in common, and so several leases; it is a material variance: But on its appearing that the two lessors were coparceners, it will be otherwise, for it is there a lease of them both. 2 Roll. Abr. 719.

On variance in the persons or number of acres, &c. between a fine and an indenture to lead the uses; if the party avers, there was not any other consideration, or new agreement, but that the fine was levied according to the uses and intents mentioned in the indenture, it is good. 5 Rep. 25. Variance of the sum in a judgment, not cured by a remittit. 2 Strange 1171. A slight variance fatal in the name of a corporation. 2 Strange 787. Variance in the christian name of an earl immaterial. 1 Strange 316. Segrave and Seagrave no material variance upon an issue of null tiel record. 2 Strange 889. Variance in names, &c. how supplied by averment, that a man is the same person, and inquest of office, &c. See Averment, and Pardon. Vide Amendment and Cam. Dig. tit. Verdict.

Vassal, (Vassallus) In our ancient customs signified a tenant or feudatory; or person who vowed fidelity and homage to a lord, on account of some land, &c. and of him in fee; also a slave or servant, and especially a domestick of a prince. Du Cange. Vassalus is said to be quasi inferior socius, as the vassal is inferior to his lord, and must serve him; and yet he is in a manner his companion, because each of them is obliged to the other. Skene. See Black. Com. 2 V. 53.

Vassalage, Signifies the state of a vassal, or servitude and dependency on a superior lord: Liege vassalage belonged only to the King.

Vassalicia, Was the tenure of holding of vassals. Cowel.

Waste, Is a writ that lies against tenants for term of life or years, committing waste. F. N. B. 55. Reg. Orig. 72. See Waste.

Wastum, A waste or common lying open to the cattle of all tenants who have a right of commoning. Paroch. Antiq. 171.

Wastum forestae vel bosci, That part of a forest or wood, wherein the trees and underwood were so destroyed, that it lay in a manner waste and barren. Paroch. Antiq. p. 351.

Vavafors, Is one who was in dignity next to a baron. Camd. Brit. 109.—Sunt & alii Potentes Regni, qui dicuntur Barones hoc est, robur belli: et alii sunt qui dicuntur Vavafores, Viri Magnae Dignitatis, &c. Bract. lib. 1. cap. 8. Spelm. Gloss. See Vavafors.

Vavaforia, (Vavaforia) The lands that a Vavafor held. Bract. lib. 2.

Ubiquity of the King. The legal ubiquity of the King is a consequence of his prerogative. His Majesty, in the eye of the law, is always present in all his courts, though he cannot personally distribute justice. His judges are the mirror by which the King's image is reflected. It is the regal office, and not the royal person, that is always present in court, always ready to undertake prosecutions, or pronounce judgment, for the benefit and protection of the subject. And from this ubiquity it follows, that the King can never be nonsuit; for a nonsuit is the desertion of the suit or action by the non-appearance of the plaintiff in court. For the same reason also, in the forms of legal proceedings, the King is not said to appear by his attorney, as other men do; for he always appears in contemplation of law in his own proper person. Black. Com. 1 V. 270.

Went Money, The tenants within the manor of Bradford, in the county of Wilts, pay a yearly rent by this name to their lord, in lieu of went paid formerly in kind. Blount's Ten.

Wettigat Justiciarium, Is applied to money or fines paid to the King, to defray the charge he is at in maintaining the courts of justice, and protection of the people. 3 Salk. 33.

Wetours, (Vifores, from the Fr. Vetor, i. e. Cernere) Are such persons as are sent by the court, to take a view of any place in question, for the better decision of the right thereto. And it is used for those that are appointed to view an offence; as a man murdered, a woman ravished, &c. Old Nat. Br. 112. Bract. lib. 5.

Veltrai, (Ministerium de Veltraria) The office of dog-leader or a courser. Rot. Pip. 4 1176.

Veltraias, One who leads greyhounds, which dogs in Germany are called Welters, in Italy, Velures, &c. And lands are held per servitium inveniend. unum veltrarium Canes ducere, &c. Blount's Tenures, pag. 9.

Velum quadragesimale, A veil or piece of hangings, drawn before the altar in Lent, as a token of mourning and sorrow.—Item ad quodlibet altare, &c. Velum quadragesimale, Velum Nuptiale, Pallia Mortuorum, &c. Synod. Exon. Anno 1217.

Venaria, Are those beasts which are caught in the woods by hunting. Leg. Canut. c. 108.

Venatio, In the statute of Charta de Foresta signifies Venison, in Fr. Venaison: It is called Venaison, of the means whereby the beasts are taken, quoniam ex venatione capiuntur, and, being hunted are most wholesome: And they are termed beasts of venery (not venery) because they are gotten in hunting. 4 Inst. 316.

It is sometimes taken for the exercise of hunting.

Venditioni exponas, Is a judicial writ, directed to the sheriff, commanding him to sell goods which he hath formerly taken into his hands, for the satisfying a judgment given in the King's court. Reg. Judic. 33. Stat. 14. Car. 2. cap. 21. The sheriff upon a fieri facias takes goods in execution, and returns that he hath so done, and cannot find buyers; or if he delay to deliver them to the party, &c. then the writ Venditioni exponas shall issue to the sheriff, to make sale of the goods, and bring in the money. 13 H. 7. 1. Dyer 363. If a Superfedeas be not delivered to the sheriff till he hath in part executed a writ of execution, he may afterwards be authorized to go through with it by a Venditioni exponas; as he may also in the like case after a writ of error. Dyer 98. Cro. Eliz. 597. 1 Roll. Abr. 894.

Venditor Regis, The King's saleman; being the person who exposed to sale goods and chattels seized or distrained to answer any debt due to the King: This office was granted by King Edw. 1. to Philip de Lardimer, in the county of York: Item quod ipse vel certus suus attornatus ibit ad mandatum vice-comitis de loco in locum infra compred. sumptibus suis ad predictas venditiones faciendas, & capiat de unaquaque venditione pro feodo suo xxxii den. But the office was seized into the King's hands for the abuse thereof. Anno 2 Ed. 2.

Vendo, and Vendee. Vendo is a person who sells any thing, and vendee the person to whom it is sold. Where a man sells a thing to another, it is implied that the vendor shall make assurance by bill of sale to the vendee, but not unless it be demanded; per Finch Chancellor. 2 Chan. cases 5. Mich. 32. Cur. 2. Legate v. Hochwood. See 21 Vin. Abr. tit. Vendor and Vendee.

Venella, Is a narrow or strait way: It is mentioned in the Monast. 1 tom. pag. 408.

Venia, Is used for a kneeling or low prostration on the ground, by penitents. Walsing. 196.

Venire factas, A writ judicial awarded to the sheriff to cause a jury of the neighbourhood to appear, when a cause is brought to issue, to try the same; and if the jury come not at the day of this writ, then there shall go a habeas corpus, and after a disseise until they appear. Old Nat. Br. 157. But where a venire omits part of the issue to be tried, or any of the parties; if a jury is named in the habeas corpus, by a name different from that in the venire; or a jury returned on such a panel is omitted in the habeas corpus; or a venire or disseise are issued without any award on the roll to warrant them; it will be ill, and it is said to be a discontinuance. 2 Harok. P. C. 298, 299. A venire factas ought to be de aliquo adductis; and venire de vicinis clivibus, is good without naming of the parish within the city or of which the jurors are summoned. 2 Lill. 633, 636. Though it hath been held, that the venire factas may be of a town, parish, manor, or any place known; called a venia town; but not of a city or county. Cro. Eliz. 280. And yet where a venire cannot come from a vill, hamlet, &c. there it might be de corpore communitatis, to prevent vent failure of justice, before the statute 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. By which a venire facias may be from the body of the county, &c. In an information against a county for not repairing a bridge, it was held, that the attorney general might take venire to any adjacent county; and that it might be de corpore of the whole, or de vicineto of some particular place therein next adjoining. Trin. 3 Ann. 3 Salk. 381.

The plaintiff in assumpsit declared upon a promise made at Maidstone in Kent; and upon non assumpsit pleaded, the venire facias was de vicineto villa & parochia de Maidstone, and a trial was had: But it was resolved to be an insufficient trial, because the venire ought to be of a larger precinct than the plaintiff himself had alledged in his declaration. Telo. 104. And it will be error if the venire be short; as a defendant in trespass prescribed for a foot-way leading from Hinton so far as the foot-way of Horn-Castle, &c. Issue was taken upon this prescription, and the venire facias awarded de vicineto de Hinton only, when it should have been of Hinton and Horn-Castle; and the judgment was reversed. Moot 357, 412. So if in ejectment lands are laid in A. B. and C. and tried for the plaintiff by a visne out of A. only; this is insufficient. 5 Rep. 36. Though in action of trespass, &c. for rescuing a distress for rent, setting forth that the plaintiff made a lease of lands to the defendant, lying in three several places; the plaintiff having a verdict, it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the trial was insufficient, because the venire was from one place, when it ought to be from all three places where the lands lie; but adjudged, that this action being brought against a wrong doer, and not upon the lease itself, the venire may be laid in that very place where the wrong was done. Lutw. 213. but see 4 Ann. c. 16.

One venire facias is sufficient to try several issues, between the same parties, and in the same county. 2 Cro. 550. And where an action was brought against two, they both joined issue, and one died; and after the venire facias was awarded to try the issue between both, which was done; and held to be no error, though it issued against a dead person, because one of the defendants was living. Cro. Car. 308. 3 Nels. Abr. 444. If a venire facias is returned by the coroner for defect of the sheriff, &c. when it ought to be returned by the sheriff, the trial is wrong, and not remedied by any statute of jeofails. 5 Rep. 36. In all cases, where there is to be a special jury, the venire must be special: If the matter to be tried be within divers places, and one and the same county, the venire facias shall be general; and if in several counties, it shall be special. 2 Lill. Abr. 635.

If a matter of law be depending in court undetermined, and an issue also joined in the cause, there is to be a special venire awarded, tam ad triandum exitum, quam ad inquirendum de dampnis, &c. as well to try the issue, as to find the damages both upon the issue and the matter put in judgment of the court. Ibid. 636. The plaintiff's attorney ought to give a copy of the jury returned upon a venire facias, to the defendant's attorney, before the trial; and it is to be filed. Pafib. 24 Car. B. R. At a trial at nisi prius, the plaintiff changed the venire facias and panels, and had a jury the defendant knew not of; and ruled, that the defendant cannot be aided, if the first venire was not filed: And a difference was taken when the first venire was not filed, that he cannot be aided, because he may resort to the sheriff, and have a view of the panel, so be prepared for his challenges; but if the first venire was filed, then the defendant shall have a new trial. Raym. 79.

A venire facias after filed, cannot be altered without consent of parties: Though where a verdict in a cause is imperfect, so that judgment cannot be given upon it, there shall be a new venire facias to try the cause, and find a new verdict. 2 Lill. 634, 635. And if a plaintiff be nonsuit on a mistake in the nisi prius record, and the paper book and roll are right; the nonsuit may be set aside, and a venire facias de novo awarded, and the issue tried, &c. Cro. Jac. 669. A venire facias may be amended by the issue roll, when that is right, in some cases. 3 Nels. 446. Venire now little more than form.

Venire facias, Is also the common process upon any presentment, being in nature of a summons for the party to appear; and is a proper process to be first awarded on an indictment for any crime, under the degree of treason, felony, or maihem, except in such cases wherein other process is directed by statute: And if it appears by the return to such venire, that the party has lands in the county whereby he may be distrained, the distress infinite shall be awarded till he do appear; and he shall forfeit on every default, so much as the sheriff returns upon him in issues: But if a nihil be returned, a capias, alias, and plurins, shall issue, &c. 2 Hawk. 283. The venire facias ad respondendum may be without a day certain, because by an appearance the fault in this process is cured; but a venire facias ad triand. exitum must be returnable on a day certain, &c. 3 Salk. 371.

Venire facias tot Matronas, Is mentioned in Lambard's Eiren. lib. 4. See Ventr. inspiciendo.

Venitane, Is the book of Ecclesiasticus; so called because of the Venite Exultemus Domino Jubilate Deo, &c. writ in the hymn-book or psalter as it is appointed to be sung, &c. It often occurs in the history of our English synods; and is called Venitarium. Mon. Ang. Tom. 3. pag. 432.

Venter, signifies the belly; but it is also used for the children by a woman of one marriage: There is in law a first and second venter, &c. where a man hath children by several wives; and how they shall take in descents of land, vide Descend.

Ventre inspiciendo, Is a writ to search a woman that saith she is with child, and thereby with-holdeth lands from the next heir: The trial whereof is by a jury of women. Reg. Orig. 227. The law hath provided this writ for the benefit of right heirs, contra partus supposititios; and it is sued out of Chancery, and returnable in the Common pleas, &c. And if a man having lands in fee-simple, or fee-tail, dieth, and his wife soon after marries again, and feigns herself with child by her former husband, in this case, though she be married, the writ de ventre inspiciendo doth lie for the heir against her. 2 Lill. Abr. 631. Thomas de Aldbam of Surry, brother of Adam de Aldbam, Anno 4 Hen. 3. claimed his brother's estate: But Joan, widow of the said Adam, pleaded she was with child; whereupon the said Thomas obtained the writ venire inspiciendo directed to the sheriff—Quod assumptis tecum discretis & legalibus militibus & discretis & legalibus mulieribus de comitatu tuo in propria persona accedas ad ipsam Joannam, & ipsam a prædictis mulieribus coram præfatis militibus videri facias, & diligenter tractari per ubera & ventrem, & inquisitionem factam certificari facias sub sigillo tuo & sigillo duorum militum justiciarii nostri apud Westm. &c. And in Easter term 39 Elin. this writ was sued out of the Chancery into C. B. at the prosecution of Percival Willoughby, who had married the eldest of the five daughters of Sir Francis Willoughby, who died without any son, but left a wife named Dorothy, that at the time of his death pretended herself to be with child by Sir Francis; which if it were a son, all the five sisters would thereby lose the inheritance descended unto them; which writ was directed to the sheriffs of London, and they were commanded to cause the said Dorothy to be viewed by 12 knights, and searched by 12 women, in the presence of the 12 knights, ut ad triandum per ubera & ad ventrem inspiciendum, whether she were with child, and to certify the same to the court of Common pleas; and if she were with child, to certify for how long in their judgments, et quando sit paritura; upon which the sheriffs accordingly caused her to be searched, and returned that she was twenty weeks gone with child, and that within twenty weeks more fuisset paritura: Thereupon another writ issued out of C. B. requiring the sheriffs safely to keep her in such a house, and that the doors should be well guarded; and that every day they should cause her to be viewed by some of the women named in the writ, and when she should be delivered, that some of them should be with her to view her birth, whether it be male or female, to the intent that there should be no falsity: And upon this writ the sheriffs return'd, That they had caused her accordingly to be kept and and view'd, and that such a day she was delivered of a daughter. Cro. Eliz. 566.

In Moor 523. pl. 692. it is said the sheriffs of London, with a jury of women, whereof two were midwives, came to the lady's house, and into her chamber, and sent to her the women, sworn by the sheriffs before, to search, try, and speak the truth whether she was with child or not. The men all went out, and the women searched the lady, and gave their verdict that she was with child; whereupon the sheriffs returned the writ accordingly.

In the 22d year of K. James 1. the widow of one Duncomb married within a week after the death of her first husband, and his cousin and heir brought the writ ventre inspiciendo directed to the sheriff of L. who returned that he had caused her to be searched by such matrons who found her with child, et quod paritura fuit within such a time; and thereon it was prayed, that the sheriff might take her into his custody, and keep her till she was delivered, but because she ought to live with her husband, they would not take her from him; but he was ordered to enter into a recognizance not to remove her from his dwelling-house, and a writ was awarded to the sheriff to cause her to be inspected every day by two of the women which he had returned, had searched her, and that three of them should be present at her delivery, &c. Cro. Jac. 685. These two last cases are notable precedents of the form of prosecuting these writs: And where women condemn'd for crimes, who plead their bellies, pretending to be with child, are to be viewed, and tried by a jury of matrons, see Repricue, and 1 Black. Com. 456.

Venue, (Vicinitum, or Visnetum) Is taken for a neighbouring place, locus quem vicini habitant: It is the place from whence a jury are to come for trial of causes. F. N. B. 115. In actions of trespass and ejectment, the venue is to be from the vill or hamlet where the lands in question do lie: And in all real actions, the venue must be laid in that county where the thing is for which the action is brought. 2 Lill. Abr. 634, 635. But the judges may in all transitory actions, alter the venue from the place where by the law it otherwise should be, if they believe through any just cause, there cannot be an indifferent trial in the county the venue was first laid in; though if a defendant will move to change the venue, he must make affidavit that the cause of action (if any be) did arise in the county where he would have the venue to be, or elsewhere, and not in the county where the plaintiff hath laid his action: And if upon a motion the court orders the venue to be altered, the plaintiff is to alter his declaration, and lay his action in the other county, &c. Mich. 22 Car. B. R. Motion to change a venue must be within eight days after the declaration delivered; but this rule is not strictly observed: It is never granted after the rules for pleading are out; and it is a rule not to change a venue where necessary evidence arises in two counties to support the action, if the plaintiff will be bound to give some material evidence in the county where he laid his action. 2 Salk. 668, 669. If the defendant is a barrister or attorney, on motion the venue shall be changed into Middlesex, and where an attorney is plaintiff, and lays his action in Middlesex, there the venue shall continue. Ibid. Where an attorney is defendant he may change the venue into Middlesex. 2 Strange 1049. But not where there is another defendant joined with him. 1 Strange 610. A barrister may lay the venue in Middlesex. 2 Strange 822. The want of a venue is only curable by such a plea which admits the fact, for the trial whereof it was required to lay a venue. 3 Salk. 381. Vide Venire facias.

It is a general rule that the county in the margin of a declaration will help the venue laid in the body of it, but will not hurt it. See 1 Barnes's Notes, 345.

It is to be observed however, that in all real actions the venue ought to be laid in that county where the thing is for which the action is brought; for being local, it is only triable there; whereas matters which are transitory may be tried in any county. 2 Lil. Abr. 782.

With respect to criminal cases it is ordained by the statute 21 Jac. 1. cap. 4. that all informations on penal statutes shall be laid in the counties where the offences were committed. See the statute 21 Jac. 1. c. 4. and see 5 New Abr. 327, 329. See Black. Com. 3 V. 294, 484.

Verderer, (Viridarius, from the Fr. Verdeur, i. e. Custos Nemoris) Is an officer in the King's forest, whose office is properly to look to the vert, and see it well maintained; and he is sworn to keep the assises of the forest, and view, receive, and inrol the attachments, and presentments of trespasses of vert and venison, &c. Manwood par. 1. pag. 332.

Verdict (Vereditum, quasi dictum Veritatis) Is the answer of a jury given to the court, concerning the matter of fact in any cause committed to their trial; wherein every one of the twelve jurors must agree, or it cannot be a verdict: And the jurors are to try the fact, and the judges to adjudge according to the law that ariseth upon it. 1 Inst. 226.

Verdicts are either general or special. A general verdict is that which is brought into the court in like general terms to the general issue; as if a defendant pleads Not guilty, or nul tort. then the issue is general, whether he be guilty, or the fact be a wrong or not; which being committed to the jury, they upon consideration of the evidence, say for the plaintiff, that the defendant is guilty of a wrong, or for the defendant, that it is no wrong, &c. A special verdict is where they find the matter at large, according to the evidence given, that such a thing is done by the defendant; and declaring the course of the fact, as in their opinions it is proved, pray the judgment of the court as to what the law is in such a case. S. P. C. 1 Inst. 227. And a fact may be found specially, viz. Where a person is indicted of murder; the jury may bring him in guilty of manslaughter, &c. Or they may leave the matter to the judges, in which cases sometimes it is referred to the Lord Chief Justice of B. R. and all the judges, to determine it; wherein 'tis said a recorder of London who tried a prisoner hath given his opinion; and the King himself, to whom the matter was reported. (Sed quæ) 3 Lev. 255. 2 Nels. Abr. 97.

There are likewise publick and privy verdicts: Publick, when given in open court; and privy, when given out of the court, before any of the judge thereof; and is called privy, being to be kept secret from the parties 'till affirmed in court. 1 Inst. 227. But a privy verdict is in strictness no verdict; for it is only a favour which is allowed by the court to the jury for their ease: The jury may vary from it, and when come into court give a contrary verdict; but this must be before the privy verdict is recorded. 5 Mod. 351. 1 Inst. No privy verdict can be given in criminal matters, which concern life, as felony, &c. but it must be openly in court; because the jury are commanded to look upon the prisoner, when they give their verdict, and so the prisoner is to be there present: But in criminal causes, where the defendant is not to be personally present at the time of the verdict, and in informations, a privy verdict may be given. Raym. 191. 1 Ventr. 97.

A special verdict may be given in criminal or civil cases; and where the court directs the jury to find a special verdict in a civil cause, one of the counsel on each side agree upon notes for it, and draw them up and set their hands to them; and then they are to be delivered to the jury in convenient time, or the court will take a general verdict: If at the prayer of the plaintiff or defendant, a special verdict is ordered to be found, the party praying it is to prosecute the special verdict, that the matter in law may be determined; and if either party delay to join in drawing it up, and pay his part of the charges, or if the counsel for the defendant refuses to subscribe the special verdict, the party desiring it shall draw it up and enter it ex parte. 2 Lill. Abr. 645, 653. Where the parties disagree, or the special verdict is drawn contrary to the notes agreed upon, the court on motion will rectify it; and the court may amend a special verdict, to bring the special matter in question: Though if a matter of fact be left out in the notes of the special verdict drawn by counsel, this cannot be amended afterwards. Ibid. 646.

The plaintiff and defendant are both of them to appear in court to hear a special verdict, and the jury is to be called and to have a special verdict read unto them by the secondary; and upon the reading of it, if there be any mistake in the drawing it up, the counsel on either side may except against it; and when the counsel are agreed, then the secondary demands of the jury, whether they agree to find it so; and if they answer they do, the verdict is found; and it is to be afterwards entered, &c. Pasch. 23 Car. B. R. 2 Lill. 646. A special verdict, though agreed to by the counsel, &c. is not a special verdict till allowed by the court. Ibid.

In all cases and all actions, the jury may give a general or special verdict; and the court is bound to receive it, if pertinent to the point in issue; and if the jury doubt, they may refer themselves to the court, but are not bound so to do. 3 Salk. 373. Though the plaintiff and defendant in a cause consent to have the jury find a special verdict, yet they may find a general verdict; but this is not usual: And if the jury will take upon them to find, against the directions of the court, any thing in matter of law, the court will receive the verdict; but if they give a false verdict, they are liable to attain. Pasch. 23 Car.

The ancient course of laying a fine on jurors, barely for giving a verdict contrary to the directions of the court, is condemned as illegal, and disused: And it is the same if the verdict be given against evidence; for the jury may give it against evidence, if they know the facts themselves. Kel. 50, 58. If jurors eat or drink any thing at the charge of him for whom they give their verdict, before they are agreed; or if by casting of lots they find for the plaintiff or defendant; or if any writing, letter, &c. be delivered by the plaintiff, or in his behalf to the jury, concerning the matter in issue, after the jury are gone from the bar, and the verdict is found for the plaintiff; or either of the parties, their attorneys or solicitors, speak any thing to the jury before agreed on their verdict, which relates to the cause; as that 'tis a clear cause, or I hope you will find for such a person; or if any witness be sent for by the jury, after gone from the bar, and he repeats his evidence again, &c. In these cases the verdict shall be void and set aside: But though where the jury eat and drink at the charge of the plaintiff, and the verdict being found for him, it is void; it is not so if given for the defendant: And if the plaintiff, after the jury are gone from the bar, deliver any writing to any of the jurors, although the verdict shall be void if given for the plaintiff; it is otherwise if given for the defendant, and vice converso, &c. Also if the jury have eat or drank after they went from the bar, and before they gave their verdict, this ought to be shewn before the verdict is given. 1 Inst. 227. 1 Ventr. 125. 2 Lev. 140. Moor 17. 3 Nels. Abr. 454.

A jurymen withdrawing from his fellows, or keeping them from giving their verdict, without giving good reason for it shall be fined; but if he differ from them in judgment, he shall not: And although jurymen are punishable for misdemeanors, every misdemeanor of the jury before they give their verdict, is not a sufficient cause to make void the verdict. Dyer 53. 2 Lill. Abr. 647. If one of the jury that found a verdict, were outlawed at the time of the verdict, it is not good: And where a verdict is given by thirteen jurors, it is said to be a void verdict; because no attain will lie. 2 Lill. 644, 650. If there be eleven jurors agreed, and but one dissenting, the verdict shall not be taken, nor the refuser fined, &c. Though 'tis said anciently it was not necessary, that all the twelve should agree in civil causes. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 297.

In capital cases, a verdict must be actually given; and if the jury don't all agree upon it, they may be carried in carts after the judges, round the circuit till they agree; and in such case they may give their verdict in another county. 1 Inst. 227. 281. 1 Ventr. 97. The court may set aside a verdict that convicts a man contrary to evidence in a criminal cause; but they cannot set aside a verdict which acquits him. Wood's Inst. 648. If the jury acquit a person of an indictment of felony against evidence, the court, before the verdict is recorded, may order them to go out again and re-consider the matter; but this hath been thought hard, and of late years is not so frequently practised as formerly: There are instances where defendants acquitted of crimes contrary to evidence, have been bound to the good behaviour. 2 Hawk. P. C. 442.

In case a jury acquits a man upon trial against full evidence, and being sent back to consider better of it, are peremptory in and stand to their verdict, the court must take it, but may respite judgment upon the acquittal: And here the King may have an attain. And if the jury will by verdict convict a person against or without evidence, and against the opinion of the court; they may relieve him before judgment, and certify for his pardon. 2 Hale's Hist. P. C. 310.

When a verdict in a civil action is given against evidence, it shall be set aside, and a new trial had, &c. If the fact upon which the court was to judge, be not found by the verdict, a new venire facias may be granted. 1 Roll. Abr. 693. A verdict being given where no issue is joined, there can be no judgment upon it; but a repleader is to be had. Mod. Ca. 4. And if a verdict be ambiguous, insufficient, repugnant, imperfect, or uncertain, judgment shall not pass upon it. 1 Saund. 154, 155.

Verdicts must in all things directly answer the issue, or they will not be good; and if a verdict finds only part of the issue, it may be ill for the whole. 3 Salk. 374. But there is a difference between actions founded on a wrong, and on a contract; for where 'tis founded on a wrong, as on a trespass, or escape, &c. 'tis maintainable if any part of it is found: So in debt for rent, a less sum than demanded may be found by the verdict, because it may be apportioned; but where an action is founded on a contract, there 'tis intire, and otherwise. 2 Cro. 380. If several persons are indicted, or jointly charged in an information, a verdict may find some of the defendants guilty, and not others. And if the substance of an issue be found, or so much as will serve the plaintiff's turn, although not directly according to the issue, the verdict is good. 1 Lev. 142. Hob. 73. 1 Mod. 4. According to Glyn, Ch. Just. if an action be brought for 500*l.* the jury may find part paid against the plaintiff, and part unpaid against the defendant, and so divide the verdict. Trin. 1658. 2 Lill. Abr. 649. If the jury find the issue and more, it is good for the issue, and void for the residue: And where a jury find a point in issue, and a superfluous matter over and above, that shall not vitiate the verdict. 2 Lev. 253. Yet if a man brings an action of debt, and declares for 20*l.* and the jury upon nil debet pleaded, find that the defendant owed 40*l.* this verdict is ill; for the plaintiff cannot recover more than he demands; and in this case he may not recover what he demands, because the court cannot sever their judgment from the verdict. 3 Salk. 376.

A plaintiff failing to prove his issue, the verdict ought to be found for the defendant, and the court will give judgment for the defendant, where it appears that the plaintiff hath recovered by verdict without cause of action. 2 Lill. 644, 651. A verdict found against a record, which is of a higher nature than any verdict, is not good: But where a verdict may be any ways construed to make it good, it shall be so taken, and not to make it void. Ibid. Upon a general issue, a verdict which is contrary to another record, may be allowed; but not where the verdict found is against the same record upon which it is given. Dyer 300. A verdict against the confession of the party, is void: But it has been held, that the verdict may be good in the disjunctive, though it be not formal; but if it find a thing merely out of the issue, 'tis not good. Jenk. Cent. 257. Hob. 53, 54. And where the jury begin with a direct verdict, and end with special matter, &c. that shall make the verdict: Also if they begin with any special matter, and after make a general conclusion upon it, contrary to law; the judges will judge of the verdict, according to the special matter. Ibid. 53.

No verdict will make that good, which is not so by law, of which the court is to judge; judgment is to be given on verdicts, that stand with law; and what both parties have.

have agreed in the pleading, must be admitted so to be, though the jury find it otherwise, it being a rule in law. Hob. 112. 2 Cro. 678. 2 Mod. 4. The statute of jeofails helps after verdict; as it supposes the matter left out was given in evidence, and that the judge directed accordingly. 1 Mod. 292. If there be no original writ, it is helped by a verdict by the statute of jeofails; but not if there be a bad writ: A declaration that is not good, is in many cases helped after verdict; but not where the declaration doth not make it appear that the plaintiff had some cause of action, to warrant his declaration, &c.

A verdict may make an ill plea good, by intendment, &c. But a verdict will not help, where there is no issue; and what is good after verdict, would be ill on demurrer; also in criminal cases, real actions, or actions qui tam, if there be any errors in the proceedings, they are not helped after verdict, by the Stat. of jeofails. 2 Lill. Abr. 644, 647. 2 Bull. 41. 2 Salk. 664. 3 Mod. 161. Where a verdict is found for the plaintiff, and he will not enter it, the defendant may compel him to do it, upon motion; or the defendant may enter it himself. 2 Lill. Abr. 644. After a verdict is returned into court, it cannot be altered, but if there be any misprision, it is to be suggested before: And a mistake of the clerk of the assizes appearing to the court, was ordered to be amended. Cro. Eliz. 112, 150.

On return of verdicts, in civil causes, given at the assizes, to the courts at Westminster, judgment is had thereon; and generally if the judgment differ from the verdict, it may be reversed, &c. In debt on a covenant to pay money, the verdict must go to every part of the demand, and find as to the whole of the demand. 2 Strange 1089. A special verdict finding nothing as to one of the offences, is an acquittal of that offence. Ibid. 845. Where the plaintiff's cause of action is confessed by the defendant's plea, and thereupon, notwithstanding the parties go to issue, and a verdict is found for the defendant, yet the verdict shall be set aside, and a writ of inquiry awarded. Ibid. 873. Assets on a special verdict severed by the court. Ibid. 1036. Inquire damages severed by the court. Ibid. 1038. Verdict amended by the judges notes. Ibid. 1197. Special verdict amended by affidavit of the evidence. 1 Strange 514. See Issue and Judgment. See *5 New Abr. tit. Of verts there are divers kinds; some that bear fruit, which may serve for food, as chestnut-trees, service-trees, nut-trees, crab-trees, &c. And for the shelter of the game, some are called haut-boys, serving both for food and browze; also for the defence of them, as oaks, beeches, &c. and for shelter and defence, such as ashes, poplars, maples, alder, &c. Of sub-boys, some for browze and food of the game; of bushes and other vegetables, some are for food and shelter, as the hawthorn, black-thorn, &c. And some for hiding and shelter, such as brakes, gorse, heath, &c. But herbs and weeds, although they be green, our legal vert extendeth not to them. 4 Inst. 327. Mansuud divides vert into overt-vert and nether-vert; the overt-vert is that which the law books term haut-boys; and nether-vert, what they call sub-boys: And into special vert, which is all trees growing within the forest that bear fruit to feed deer; called special, because the destroying it is more grievously punished than of any other vert. Mansu. par. 2. pag. 33. And vert is sometimes taken for that power which a man hath by the King's grant to cut green wood in the forest. Verbise, A kind of cloth, mentioned in the statute 1 R. 3. c. 8. See Plunkets.

Very lord and very tenant, (Verus Dominus & Verus Tenens) Are they that are immediate lord and tenant one to another. Broke. In the taking of leases there is to be a very lord and very tenant; and a man is not a very tenant, until he hath attorned to the lord by some service, &c. *Old Nat. Vestry, A place adjoining to a church, where the vestments of the minister are kept; also a meeting at such place: And sometimes the bishop and priests sit together in vestries, to consult of the affairs of the church; in resemblance of which ancient custom, the ministers, churchwardens, and chief men of most parishes, do at this day make a parish vestry. By custom there may be select vestries, or a certain number of persons chosen to have the government of the parish, make rates, and take the accounts of churchwardens, &c. 2 Strange 728. And when rates are made, the parishioners must have notice of a vestry held for that purpose; and then all that are absent shall be concluded by a majority of those that are present, who in construction of law are the whole parish. Wood's Inst. 90. And if a parishioner be shut out of the vestry room by the clerk of the vestry; and he makes it appear that he hath a right to come into the room, and to be present and vote in the vestry, &c. action of the case lies, as a remedy. Mod. Ca. in L. 5 E. 52, 354.

Vestrymen in London are a select number of the chief parishioners in every parish within the city and suburbs, who yearly choose officers for the parish, and take care of its concerns, &c. by statute 15 Car. 2. c. 5. On erecting parishes for the new churches to be built in or near London and Westminster, the commissioners for building the churches are empowered to name a sufficient number of the inhabitants of each new parish to be vestrymen; and on their deaths or removal, the majority of the parishioners to choose others, &c. And the parish officers, with the vestry or principal inhabitants of the new parishes, are in Easter week to assess the rates for the poor, &c. 9 Ann. c. 22. Vestries of parishes are to be consulted by parish officers, and to give their assent on hiring of houses for the better employing and maintaining of the poor. 9 Geo. 1. c. 7. The right of adjoining a vestry is in the parish at large. 2 Strange 1045.

A vestry was called to consider about building a workhouse, where it was agreed to, and to borrow money for that purpose; and that whoever should be bound for it should be indemnified by the parish. This order was confirmed by another, and both signed by the vicar and so-veral of the inhabitants, 300 l. being the sum agreed upon, was borrowed of A. to whom B. gave bond for it. An order of vestry was made for raising the money, but upon appeal to the quarter-sessions by some new parishioners was quashed. B. was sued on the bond, and paid the money, and then brought a bill for relief. And the master of the Rolls decreed him his principal, interest, and costs at law, and in this court; and that the defendants the vicar, churchwardens, and overseers of the poor, call a vestry to make a rate for payment; and if the inhabitants refuse payment, the plaintiff to be at liberty to apply to the court: And said that he did not see why the court might not as well compel those who are not parties to pay the rate, as order tenants though not parties to pay the rates; and because the defendants had put in a fair answer, their costs were decreed to be raised by the same rate; but said, that if those who had appealed to the quarter-sessions had been before the court, they should have paid all the costs. 2 Wms. Rep. 1332. Trin. 1751. Blackburn v. Webster & al. See 21 Vin. Abr. p. 443.

Vestura, A crop of grass or corn; and mention is made of prima vestura, and secunda vestura, &c. Cartular. Abb. St. Edmund, MS. fol. 182. The word was often used for a vest, vesture, livery, delivery, i. e. an allowance of some set portion of the products of the earth, as corn, grass, wood, &c. for part of the salary or wages to some officer, servant or labourer, for their livery or vest. So foresters had a certain allowance of timber and underwood yearly out of the forest for their own use. Paroch. Antiq. p. 620.

Vesture, (Vestura) Signifies a garment; but in the law it is metaphorically applied to a possession or seisin. Stat. West. 2. cap. 5. And in this signification it is borrowed of the Feudists, with whom investitura imports a delivery of possession, and vestura possession itself. Hotom. Vestura of an acre of land is the profit of it; and it shall be enquired how much the vestura of an acre of ground is worth, and how much the land, &c. 4 Ed. 1. 14 Ed. 3. By grant of vestura terre, the soil will pass; and the vestura being the profit of land, 'tis generally all one to have that, as the land itself. 1 Vent. 393. 2 Roll. Abr. 2.

Vetitum nannum, Is where the bailiff of a lord distrains beasts or goods of another, and the lord forbids his bailiff to deliver them when the sheriff comes to make replevin: The word nannum signifying a taking or distress, and vetitum forbidden; and the owner of the cattle may demand satisfaction for the injury, which is called Placitum de vetito nanno. Divers lords of hundreds and courts baron, had power to hold plea de vetito nanno: Matilda de Morton clamat in manerio de M. duas law days, &c. Placito de Namio vetito, sine Brevis Domini Regis, &c. 2 Inst. 140. Via Regia, Is the highway or common road, called the King's way, because authorised by him, and under his protection: It is also denominated Via Militaris. Leg. Hen. 1. c. 80. Bract. lib. 4.

Vicar, (Vicarius, quasi vice fungens rectoris) The priest of every parish is called Rector, unless the predial tithes are appropriated, and then he is stiled vicar; and when rectories are appropriated, vicars are to supply the rectors places. At first a vicar was a meer curate to the impropriator of the church, temporary, and removeable at pleasure; as those who are now parish priests, in ancient times when there were no particular parishes, were only curates to the bishops; but by degrees the vicars got a settled maintenance of glebe, and some kind of tithes, and now claim their dues either by endowment or by prescription: And where the vicar is endowed, and comes in by institution and induction, he hath curam animarum actualiter; and is not to be removed at the pleasure of the rector, who in this case hath only curam animarum habitualiter; but where the vicar is not endowed, nor comes in by institution and induction, the rector hath curam animarum actualiter, and may remove the vicar. 1 Vent. 35. 3 Salk. 378. In every church appropriated, one is to be ordained perpetual vicar, and to be canonically instituted and inducted, and also endowed at the discretion of the ordinary; which endowment is a part of the rectory, set out by the patron, parson, and ordinary, for maintaining the vicar: The institution and induction, &c. of vicars is done in the same manner as that of rectors; and over and above they are to take an oath of perpetual residency, but this the bishop may dispense with; the statutes concerning pluralities, dilapidations, &c. relate to them as well as to parsons. 4 H. 4. 2 Roll. Abr. 337.

Upon endowment, the vicar hath an equal, though not so great an interest in the church as a rector; the freehold of the church, church-yard and glebe is in him; and as he hath the freehold of the glebe, he may prescribe to have all the tithes in the parish, except those of corn, &c. Many vicars have a good part of the great tithes; and some benefices, that were formerly severed by impropriation, have, by being united, had all the glebe and tithes given to the vicars: But tithes can no other way belong to the vicar than by gift, composition or prescription; for all tithes de jure appertain to the parson; and yet generally vicars are endowed with glebe and tithes, especially small tithes, &c. If a vicar be endowed of small tithes by prescription, and afterwards land, which had been arable time out of mind, is altered, and there are growing small tithes thereon, the vicar shall have them; for his endowment goes to such tithes, in any place within the parish. Cro. Eliz. 467. Hob. 39. But where the vicar is endowed out of the parsonage, he shall not have tithes of the parson's glebe, or of land that was part thereof at the time of the endowment, but now severed from it: Yet it seems to be otherwise, if the glebe lands are in the hands of the parson's lessee. Cro. Eliz. 479. Mallor. 2. Imped. 4. The endowment of vicarages hath been always favoured in law, the vicars for the most part having the cure of souls. 2 Roll. 335. Comp. Incumb. 347. March Rep. 11. See Black. Com. 1 V. 387.

Vicarage, (Vicaria) Of places did originally belong to the parsonage or rectory, being derived out of it: The rector of common right is patron of the vicarage; but it may be settled otherwise; for if he makes a lease of his parsonage, the patronage of the vicarage passes as incident to it. 2 Roll. Abr. 59. And if a vicarage become void, during the vacancy of the parsonage, the patron of the parsonage shall present to such vicarage. 19 Edw. 2. 41. If the profits of the parsonage or vicarage fall into decay, that either of them by itself is not sufficient to maintain a parson and vicar, they ought again to be re-united: Also if the vicarage be not sufficient to maintain a vicar, the bishop may compel the rector to augment the vicarage. 2 Roll. 337. Parf. Counsell. 195, 196. Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 8. Upon the appropriation of a church, and endowment of a vicar out of the same, the parsonage and vicarage are two distinct ecclesiastical benefices: And it hath been held, that where there is a parsonage and vicarage endowed, that the bishop in the vacation may dissolve the vicarage; but if the parsonage be impropriated, he cannot do it; for on a dissolution the cure must revert, which it cannot into lay hands. Comp. Incumb. 2 Cro. 518. Palm. 219. For the most part vicarages were endowed upon appropriations; but sometimes vicarages have been endowed without any appropriation of the parsonage; and there are several churches, where the tithes are wholly impropriated, and no vicarage endowed; and there the impropriators are bound to maintain curates to perform divine service, &c. The parson, patron and ordinary, may create a vicarage, and endow it: And in time of vacancy of the church, the patron and ordinary may do it; but the ordinary alone cannot create a vicarage, without the patron's assent. 17 Edw. 3. 51. Cro. Jac. 516. Where there is a vicarage and parsonage, and both are vacant, and in one person's patronage; if he presents his clerk as parson, who is thereupon inducted, this shall unite the parsonage and vicarage again. 11 Hen. 6. 32. Vicarage or not, is to be tried in the Spiritual court, because it could not begin to be created but by the ordinary. 3 Salk. 378. See Black. Com. 1 V. 387. 4 V. 431.

Writas deliberando occasione cuiusdam Recogni-tionis, &c. Is an ancient writ that lies for a spiritual person imprisoned, upon forfeiture of a recognizance, &c. mentioned in Reg. Orig. 147.

Vice-Admiral, An under admiral at sea; or admiral on the coasts, &c.

Vice Admiralty Courts. There are vice admiralty courts, in America, and our other plantations. From those courts appeals may be brought before the courts of admiralty in England, as being a branch of the admiral's jurisdiction, though they may also be brought before the King in council. But in case of prize vessels, taken in time of war, in any part of the world, and condemned in any courts of admiralty, or vice-admiralty as lawful prize, the appeal lies to certain commissioners of appeals consisting chiefly of the privy council and not to judges delegates. And this by virtue of divers treaties with foreign nations, &c. Black Com. 3 V. 69. which vide.

or near dwelling. Magn. Chart. c. 14. See Vijne.

There is common because of vicinage, or neighbourhood, where the inhabitants of two townships which lie contiguous, have usually intercommoned with one another; the beasts of the one straying mutually into the others fields, without any molestation from either. See

Writs & Wencillis mundandis, Is a writ which lieth against a mayor or bailiff of a town, &c. for the clean keeping of their streets. Reg. Orig. 267.

Viscount, or Viscount, (Vicecomes) Signifies as much as sheriff: Between which two words, there seems to be no other difference, but that the one comes from the Normans, the other from our ancestors the Sax- ons, of which, see more in Sheriff. Viscount also signifies a degree of nobility next to an earl, which Camd.
(Briton. pag. 170.) says, is an old name of office, but a new one of dignity, never heard of amongst us, till Henry the sixth's days, who in his eighteenth year in parliament created John lord Beaumont, viscount Beaumont, but far more ancient in other countries, Cassan. de gloria mundi, par. 5. consider 55. See Sheriff and Selden's Titles of honour, fol. 761.

Viscountiel, or Viscontiel, Is an adjective from viscount, and signifieth any thing that belongeth to the sheriff;
as writs viscontiel are such writs as are triable in the county or sheriff's court, of which kind there are divers writs of nuisance, &c. mentioned by Fitzherbert. Old Nat. Br. 109. F. N. B. 184. Viscontiels are certain farms, for which the sheriff pays a rent to the King, and he makes what profit he can of them: And viscontiel rents usually come under the title of firma comitatus; and the sheriff hath a particular roll of them given in to him, which he delivers back with his accounts. 33 & 34 H. 8. c. 16. 3 Ed. 6. 4. 22 Car. 2. c. 6.

Viscountiel Jurisdiction, Is that jurisdiction which belongs to the officers of a county; as to sheriffs, coroners, escheators, &c.

Viscountiel, or Viscontiel rents, mentioned 22 Car. 2.
cap. 6. See Viscontiel. The viscontiel rents, usually came under the title of Firma comitatus, which were written generally sub nomine vicecom. without expression of the particulars. The sheriff had a particular roll of the viscontiel rents given in to him, which roll he delivered back with the accounts. See Hale's sheriff's accounts, pag. 40.

Viduals, (Vidus) Sustainance, and things necessary to live by, as meat and provisions: viduallers are those that sell viduals; and we call now all common alehousekeepers by the name of viduallers. Viduallers shall sell their viduals at reasonable prices, or forfeit double value: And viduallers, fishmongers, poulterers, &c. coming with their viduals to London, shall be under the governance of the lord mayor and aldermen; and sell their viduals at prices appointed by justices, &c. 23 & 31
Edw. 3. c. 6. 7 R. 2. 13 R. 2. No person during the time that he is a mayor, or in office in any town, shall sell vic- tuals, on pain of forfeiture, &c. But if a vidualler be chosen mayor, whereby he is to keep the assize by statute, two discreet persons of the same place who are not viduallers, are to be sworn to assize bread, wine, and viduals, during the time that he is in office; and then, after the price assessed by such persons, it shall be lawful for the mayor to sell viduals, &c. 6 R. 2. c. 9.
3 Hen. 8. c. 8. If any one offend against these statutes, the party grieved may sue a writ directed to the justices of assize, commanding them to send for the parties, and to do right; or an attachment may be had against the mayor, officer, &c. to appear in B. R. Selling of corrupt viduals, or exposing them to sale, is punishable by statute 1 R. 3. c. 1. And in some manors they chuse yearly two surveyors of viduals, to see that no unwholesome viduals be sold, and destroy such as are corrupt. 1 Mod. 202. If any viduallers, butchers, brewers, poulterers, cooks, &c. conspire and agree together not to sell their viduals but at such prices; they shall forfeit for the first offence 10 l. for the second 20 l. for the third 40 l. Stat. 2 & 3 Edw. 6. c. 15. The rates of viduals in all places, except corporations, shall be assessed by the King's justices, &c. And viduals are not to be transported, by 25 H. 8. c. 2. See Fort- stallers.

Wit Pruis, Are words used in indictments, &c. to express the charge of a forcible and violent committing any crime or trespass: But on appeal of death, on a killing with a weapon, the words vi & armis are not necessary, because they are implied; so in an indictment

Witw, (Fr. Veue, i. e. Visus) Is generally where a real action is brought, and the tenant doth not know certainly what is in demand; in such case he may pray that the jury may view it. Briton, cap. 45. F. N. B.
178. This view is for a jury to see the land or thing claimed, and in controversy; and lies in ejectment, waste, assizes of novel disseisin, where at least six of the recognitors, must have the view before the assizes. 2 Lill.
Abr. 655. Stat. 13 Ed. 1. c. 48. 12 Edw. 2. And though formerly there could not have been a view in a personal action, but upon withdrawing of a juror after they were sworn, and consent of the parties by a rule of court; now by the act for the amendment of the law, it may be granted in any action brought in the courts at Westminster, where necessary the better to understand the evidence upon the trial; in which case the courts may order special writs of disfringas or habeas corpora to the sheriff.

sheriff, requiring him to have six of the jurors, or a greater number of them, at the place in question, some convenient time before the trial; who shall have the matter shewn to them by two persons named in the writ of distingas, and appointed by the court; and the said sheriff executing the writ is specially to return the view made accordingly, &c. 4 & 5 Ann. cap. 16. Upon a view, the thing in question is only to be shewn to the jury; and no evidence can be given on either side. 2 Lill. 656. But where in action of waste, several places are assigned, and the jury hath not the view of some of them, they may find no waste done in that part which they did not view: In waste for wailing of wood, if the jury view the wood without entering into it, it is good; also waste being assigned in every room of an house, the view of the house generally is sufficient. 1 Leon. 259, 267. If a rent or common is demanded, the land out of which it issues must be put in view. 1 Leon. 56. And if a view be denied, where it ought to be granted, or granted where it ought not to be, &c. it is error. 2 Lev. 217.

By stat. 3 Geo. 2. c. 25. (the balloting act) s. 14. it is provided, 'That where a view shall be allowed, six of the jurors named in the panel, or more shall have the view, and shall be the first sworn, (or such of them as appear,) before any drawing.' But as the having a view was not, by either of these statutes, made a matter of course, though such a practice had prevailed, and had been abused to the purposes of delay, the court thought it their duty to take care that their ordering a view should not obstruct justice, and prevent the cause from being tried: And they resolved not to order one any more, without a full examination into the propriety and necessity of it. For they were all clearly of opinion that the act of parliament meant that a view should not be granted, unless the court was satisfied that it was proper and necessary: And they thought it better that a cause should be tried upon a view had by any six, or by fewer than six, or even without any view, than be delayed for a greater length of time: Accordingly they added a clause to the usual rules for views, purporting that the party praying a view consented, 'That in case no view should be had; or if a view should be had by any of the jurors whomsoever (tho' not being six of the first twelve,) yet the trial should proceed, and no objection be made on account thereof, or for want of a proper return.' Since which, motions for views are become motions of course, with such additional consent annexed to them. Bur. Rep. 256.

See the form of the usual rule, and also of the modern addition, both in causes to be tried by special juries and those to be tried by common juries, respectively, recited verbatim, in Bur. Rep. 257, 258. See Affise, Vejours or Viewers, &c. and Black. Com. 3 V. 298, 358.

View of Frank-pledge (Visus Franci plegii) Signifies the office which the sheriff in his county court performs in looking to the King's peace, and seeing that every man be in some pledge, &c. Or it is a power of holding a court-leet, in which court formerly all persons at the age of fourteen were bound with their sureties or pledges for their truth to the King, and the steward was to certify on view, Bract. lib. 2. And there is a writ to exempt a person from coming to the view of frank-pledge, who is not resident within the hundred; as men are bound to this view by reason of their habitation only, and not of lands held where they dwell not; Which writ is called Visus Franci Plegii. Reg. Orig. 175. See Frank-pledge, and Black. Com. 4. V. 270.

Vigil, (Vigilia) Is the eve, or next day before any solemn feast; because then Christians were wont to watch, fast, and pray in their churches. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. c. 19.

Vi Laica Removenda, A writ that lies where two parsons contend for a church, and one of them enters into it with a great number of laymen, and holds out the other vi & armis; then he that is holden out shall have this writ directed to the sheriff, that he remove the force: But the sheriff ought not to remove the incumbent out of the church, whether he is there by right or wrong, but only the force F. N. B. 54. 3 Inst. 161. and see 5

R. 2. c. 2. And the writ vi laica removenda ought not to be granted, until the bishop of the diocese where such church is, hath certified into the chancery such refusing and force, &c. though it is said in the new natura brevium, it lieth upon a surmise made by the incumbent, or by him that is grieved, without any such certificate of the bishop. New Nat. Br. 121. A restitution was awarded to one who was put out of possession by the sheriff upon a vi laica amovenda. Cro. Eliz. 466. 5 Mod. 443.

Vill, or Village (Villa) Is sometimes taken for a Manor, and sometimes for a parish or part of it: But a vill is most commonly the out-part of a parish, consisting of a few houses, as it were separate from it. — Villa est ex pluribus mansionibus, vicinata, & collata ex pluribus vicinis. 1 Inst. 115. Fleta mentions the difference between a mansion, a village, and a manor, viz. a mansion may be of one or more houses, but it must be but one dwelling-place, and none near it; for if other houses are contiguous, it is a village; and a manor may consist of several villages, or one alone. Fleta, lib. 6. cap. 51. And according to Fortescue, the boundaries of villages, are not by houses or streets; but by a circuit of ground, within which there may be hamlets, woods, and waste ground, &c. Fortesc. de Laud. Leg. Ang. cap. 24. When a place is named generally, in legal proceedings, it is intended to be a vill, because as to civil purposes the kingdom was first divided into vills; and it is never intended a parish, that being an ecclesiastical division of the kingdom to spiritual purposes, though in many cases, the law takes notice of parishes as to civil purposes. 1 Mod. 250. 3 Nels. Abr. 57. If no vill, &c. is alleged, where a messuage and lands lie, no trial can be had concerning it: But some counties in the north of England, and in Wales, have no vills but parishes; where in both real and personal actions, a jury of the parish will serve. Jenk. Cent. 328, 33. A vill and a parish by intendment shall be all one; and in process of appeal, a parish may be intended a vill. Cro. Jac. 263. 3 Salk. 380. If a venue be laid in Gray's Inn, which is no parish or vill; the defendant must plead there is no such vill as Gray's Inn, or it shall be intended a vill after verdict, &c. 3 Salk. 381. Two houses in an extraparo-chial place are not enough to denominate a vill. 2 Strange 1004, 1071. See Parish, and Venire facias. See Black. Com. 1 V. 114.

Villa Regia, A title given to those country villages, where the Kings of England had a royal seat, and held the manor in their own demesne, having there commonly a free chapel, not subject to ecclesiastical jurisdiction; Paroch. Antig. 53.

Villain, Villein, (Villanus, Fr. Vilain, i. e. Vilis) Signifies a man of servile or base condition, a bondman, or servant. Of those bondmen or villains there were two sorts in England; one termed a villain in gross, who was immediately bound to the person of the lord, and his heirs: The other, a villain regardant to a manor, being bound to his lord as a member belonging and annexed to a manor, whereof the lord was owner. And he was properly a pure villain, of whom the lord took redemption to marry his daughter, and to make him free; and whom the lord might put out of his lands and tenements, goods and chattels at his will, and chastise, but not maim him: For if he maimed his villain, he might have appeal of maihem against the lord; as he could bring appeal of the death of an ancestor against his lord, or appeal of rape done to his wife. Bract. lib. 1. cap. 6. Old Nat. Br. 8. Terms de Ley.

Some were villains by title or prescription, that is to say, that all their blood have been villains regardant to the manor of the lord time out of mind: And some were made villains by their confession in a court of record, &c. Though the lord might make a manumission to his villain, and thereby enfranchise him: And if the villain brought any action against his lord, other than an appeal of maihem, &c. and the lord, without protestation, made answer to it; by this the villain was made free. Terms de Ley 576. Villain esse was contradistinguished to free estate, by the statute 8 Hen. 6. c. 11. And the villains were such as dwelt in villages, and of that servile condition, condition, that they were usually sold with the farm to which they respectively belonged; so that they were a kind of slaves, and used as such: And villanage or bondage, it is said, had beginning among the Hebrews, and its original of Canaan the son of Cham, who, because he had mocked his father Noe to scorn, was punished in his son Canaan with penalty of bondage, Ibid. 455.

Villanage cometh of villain, and was a base tenure of lands or tenements, whereby the tenant was bound to do all such services as the lord commanded, or were fit for a villain to perform: The division of villanage, by Bracton, was into purum villanagium a quo præstatur servitium incertum & indeterminatum, & villanagium focagium; which was to carry the lord's dung into his fields, to plough his ground at certain days, sow and reap his corn, &c. and even to empty his jakes, as the inhabitants of some places were bound to do, though afterwards turned into a rent, and that villanous service excused. Every one that held in villanage, was not a villain or bondman; for tenure in villanage could make no freeman villain, unless it were continued time out of mind; nor could free land make a villain free. Bract. lib. 2. c. 8. Copyhold tenures seem to be sprung from villanage. F. N. B. 28. And the slavery of this custom hath been long ago taken off; for we have hardly heard of any case in villanage since Crouche's case in Dyer's Rep. There are not properly any villains now; and the title and tenure of villanage are abolished by the stat. of Car. 2. See Neif. See farther as to Villain, generally, Black. Com. 2 V. 92. 4 V. 413. As to Villain in gross, id. 2 V. 93. Villain regardant, Id. 1b. Villain services, Id. 2 V. 61. Villain socage, Id. 2 V. 98.

Villain estate or condition, Contradistinguished to free estate. Stat. 8. H. 6. 11. They were called villains from villa, because they dwelt in villages; they were also called pagenes and rustici, a rusticus quæ excoluerunt; and they were of that servile condition, that they were usually sold with the farm to which they respectively belonged; so that they were slaves and used as such, and kinder usage made them insolent. Cowell.

Villanis regis subtrahitis reducendis, Is a writ that lay for the bringing back of the King's bond-men, that had been carried away by others out of his manors whereto they belonged. Reg. Orig. fol. 87.

Villanous Judgment, (Villanum Judicium) Is that which casts the reproach of villany and shame upon him against whom it is given, as a conspirator, &c. And the judgment in such a case shall be like the ancient judgment in attaint, viz. That the offender shall not be of any credit afterwards; nor shall it be lawful for him to approach the King's court; and his lands and goods shall be seized into the King's hands, his trees rooted up, and body imprisoned, &c. Staundf. P. C. 157. Lamb. Eiren. 63. Stat. 4 H. 5. And the punishment at this day appointed for perjury, may partake of the name of villanous judgment; as it hath somewhat more in it than corporal, or pecuniary pain, i. e. the discrediting the testimony of the offender for ever. See Black. Com. 4 V. 136.

Villain fleeces, Are bad fleeces of wool, shorn from scabbed sheep. 31 Edw. 3. cap. 8.

Villanage, (Villanagium) from villain, Signifies a servile kind of tenure belonging to land or tenements, whereby the tenant was bound to do all such services as the lord commanded, or were fit for a villain to do. Ubi sciri non poterit vespere quale servitium fieri debet manere. For every one that held in villanage, was not a villain or bondman: Villanagium vel servitium nihil detrahbat libertatis, habitu tamen distinctione utrum tales sunt villani & tenuerint in villano focagio de dominico domini regis. Bract. lib. 1. cap. 6. num. 1. The division of villanage was into villanage by blood, and villanage by tenure. Tenure in villanage could make no freeman villain unless it were continued time out of mind, nor even free land make a villain free. Bracton, lib. 2. cap. 8. num. 3. divides it into purum villanagium, a quo præstatur servitium incertum & indeterminatum, ubi sciri non poterit vespere, quale servitium fieri debet manere, viz. ubi quis facere tenetur quicquid ei præceptum fuerit; the other he calls villanum focagium, and was tied to the performance of certain services agreed upon between the lord and tenant, and was to carry the lord's dung into his field, to plough his ground at certain days, to reap his corn, plash his hedges, &c. as the inhabitants of Bickton were bound to do for those of Clun-castle in Shropshire, which was afterwards turned into a rent, now called Bickton silver, and the service excused. There were likewise villani sockmanni, which were those who held their land in socage, and there were villani adventitii, who were those who held lands by performing certain services expressed in their deeds. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 8. See Socage tenure, and Black. Com. 2 V. 90, 92, 98.

Vinagium, (Tributum a vino) A payment of a certain quantity of wine instead of rent, to the chief lord for a vineyard. Mon. Ang. 2. tom. pag. 980.

Vinculo Matrimonii, Divorce a. If a marriage is improper through some cause which existed previous to the marriage, and was such a one as rendered the marriage unlawful ab initio, as consanguinity, corporal imbecillity, or the like; in this case the law looks upon the marriage to have been always null and void, because contracted in fraudum legis, and decrees not only a separation from bed and board, but a vinculo matrimonii itself. Black. Com. 3 V. 94. See Divorce.

Vinegar and Verjuice. Duties on vinegar by former acts taken off, and a new duty imposed, 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 21. s. 8, &c. What to be deemed vinegar or liquors preparing for vinegar, 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 21. s. 11. Thirty four gallons to be deemed a barrel of vinegar, 10 & 11 W. 3. c. 21. s. 15. Informations against vinegar makers for a false quantity, &c. to be laid within three months, 12 & 13 W. 3. c. 11. s. 17. Vinegar made for pickles for sale to pay duties, 8 Ann. c. 7. s. 4. Vinegar made by the manufacturers of white lead exempt from duties, 8 Ann. c. 7. s. 5. Verjuice bought or made for sale how chargeable with duties, 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 30. s. 28. Every hoghead to pay 5 d. 8 Ann. c. 7. s. 1. Additional duty of 8 d. per ton on French vinegar imported, 3 Geo. 3. c. 12. And on all other vinegar imported, 4 l. per ton, ibid.

Vineyards, The owners of vineyards may make wine of British grapes only growing there, free from any duty. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 17.

Vinnet, A flower or border which printers use to ornament printed leaves of books; mentioned in the Stat. 14 Car. 2. cap. 33.

Vintners, The vintners company of London were incorporated 7 Jac. 1. with certain privileges for selling wine in the city, by all freemen within the same, &c. 2 Keb. 372. See Wine.

Violating the Queen, &c. If a man do violate the King's companion (i. e. the Queen) or the King's eldest daughter unmarried, or the wife of the King's eldest son and heir, it is high treason—By violation is understood carnal knowledge, as well without force as with it: And this is high treason in both parties, if both be consenting. Contra, as to violating a Queen or Princess Dowager. Black. Com. 4 V. 81.

Violence, (Violentia) All violence is unlawful: If a man assault another with an intention of beating him only, and he dieth, it is felony. And where a person knocks another on the head who is breaking his hedges, &c. this will be murder, because it is a violent act beyond the provocation. Kel. Rep. 64, 131. There is a violence in committing riots, &c.

Violent Presumption: This is many times equal to full proof; for there those circumstances appear which necessarily attend the fact. See Black. Com. 3 V. 371.—The enumerating of cases, would be of little use, as every case must be governed according to its own peculiar circumstances.

Virga, A rod or white staff, such as Sheriffs, bailliffs, &c. carry as a badge or ensign of their office. Cowell.

Virgata terræ, A yard land, ex 24 acris constat, quatuor virgatæ bidam faciunt, & quinque bidæ feodum militis. Kenner's Gloss.

Virge, Tenant by. A species of copyholders, i. e. such as are said to hold by the virge, or rod. In fact copyholders and customary tenants differ not so much in nature as in name, for though called by different names, yet yet they all agree in substance and kind of tenure: Their lands are holden in one general kind, that is, by custom and continuance of time. See Calhorpe on Copyholds, 51, 54, and Black. Com. 2 V. 147, 148.

Uiridario eligendo, Is a writ that lies for the choice of a viridario in the forest. Reg. Orig. 177.

Uirus Koba, A coat of many colours; for in the old books viridis is used for varius. Bract. lib. 3.

Uirilia, The privy members of a man; to cut off which was felony by the Common law, though the party consented to it. Bract. lib. 3. pag. 144.

Uis (Lat.) Is any kind of force, violence, or disturbance relating to a man's person, or his goods, right in lands, &c. See Force.

Viscount, (Viccomes) A degree of nobility next to an earl. See Viscount. They are now made by patent, as an earl; but their number is small in this kingdom, in comparison with the other degrees of peerage. Vide Black. Com. 1 V. 399.

Visitation, (Visitatio) Is that office which is performed by the bishop of every diocese once every three years, or by the archdeacon once a year, by visiting the churches and their rectors throughout the whole diocese; Ut populus illorum curæ commissis salubriter a pastoribus & ordine gubernetur: Et ne quid detrimenti capiat ecclesia, &c. Reform. Leg. Eccl. pag. 124. And when a visitation is made by the archbishop, all acts of the bishop are suspended by inhibition, &c. A commissary at his court of visitation, cannot cite lay parishioners, unless it be churchwardens and fidesmen; and to those he may give his articles, and inquire by them. Noy 123. 3 Salk. 370. Proxies and Procurations are paid by the parsons whose churches are visited, &c. Ibid.

Visitation Books of Heralds. The original visitation books of heralds, compiled when progresses were solemnly and regularly made into every part of the kingdom, to enquire into the state of families, and to register such marriages and descents as were verified to them upon oath, are allowed to be good evidence of pedigrees. Comb. 63. Black. Com. 3 V. 105.

Visitor, Is an inspector of the government of a corporation, &c. The ordinary is visitor of spiritual corporations; but corporations instituted for private charity, if they are lay, are visitable by the founder, or whom he shall appoint, and from the sentence of such visitor there lies no appeal. 3 Salk. 381. By implication of law, the founder and his heirs are visitors of lay foundations, if no particular person is appointed by him to see that the charity is not perverted. Ibid. And where founders are visitors of hospitals, &c. The appointment of a bishop without his christian name to be a visitor, extends to his successors. 2. Strange 913. The visitor in his citation must pursue his authority. Ibid. He may punish one man for acts done by him jointly with others. Ibid. Offences against the statutes of a college are not pardoned by an act of grace. Ibid. 912. See Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 5. 43 Eliz. c. 4. See farther as to visitor generally Black. Com. 1 V. 479 of Civil Corporations. Id. 1 V. 481 of Colleges. Id. 1 V. 482 of Hospitals, id. ib.

Visitor of Manners, In ancient time was wont to be the name of the Regarder's office in the forest. Manwood, par. 1. pag. 195.

Visne, (Visnctum) Signifies a neighbouring place, or place near at hand. 19 R. 2. cap. 6. See Venus.

Visus, View, or inspection; as wood is to be taken per visum forestarii, &c. Hoved. 784.

Vita Justitiæ & Legis, A sheriff of the county is said to be the life of justice, as no suit begins, and no process is served but by him; and after suits are ended, he hath the making execution, which is the life of the law. Co. Litt.

Vivary, (Vivarium) A place by land or water, where living creatures are kept: And in law it is most commonly used for a park, warren, piscary, &c. 2 Inst. 100.

Viva voce, Is where a witness is examined personally in open court. See Deposition.

Vivo vadio, Estate in. When a man borrows a sum of another, and grants him an estate until the rents and profits shall repay the sum borrowed; he is then said to have an estate in vivo vadio. See Vadium Vivum, and Black. Com. 2 V. 157.

Vltus, A hulk of a ship of burden. Leg. Ethelred.

Village, Is when there is want of measure in a cask, &c.

Vlnage, The same with Alnage. Vide Alnage.

Vlna ferrca, Is the standard ell of iron, kept in the Exchequer for the rule of measure, Mon. Angl. Tem. 2. pag. 383.

Umpirage, Is where there is but one arbitrator of matters submitted to award; and is usually when the parties submit themselves to the arbitrament of certain persons; and if they cannot agree, or are not ready to deliver their award in writing before such a time, then to the judgment of another as umpire: And this is often the effect of bonds of submission to arbitration. 1 Roll. Abr. 261, 262. See Arbitration.

Umpire, (Arbiter) One chosen by compromise to deal indifferently between both parties. Litt. See Arbitrament. Award.

Una cum omnibus aliis, In the grant of a deed, is a new addition of other things than were granted before; and hath its own conclusion attending it. Hob. 175.

Unanimity of Jurors. The necessity of a total unanimity of the jurors, on every trial, seems to be peculiar to our own constitution. See Black. Com. 3 V. 376.

Unceasefath: This is an obsolete word, mentioned in Leg. Inæ, cap. 37. viz. He who kills a thief, may make oath that he killed him in flying for the fact, & parentibus ipsius occisi juret unceasefath, that is, that his kindred will not revenge his death: From the Saxon ceas, liti, and un, which is a negative particle, and signifies without, and ath, which is oath, i. e. to swear that there shall be no contention about it. Cowell.

Uncertainty of the Law. On this subject we will state what is said, by one of our best authors, in his own words.

“ The uncertainty of legal proceedings is a notion so generally adopted, and has so long been the standing theme of wit and good humour, that he who should attempt to refute it would be looked upon as a man, who was either incapable of discernment himself, or else meant to impose upon others—yet it may not be amiss, before we enter into the several modes whereby certainty is meant to be obtained in our courts of justice, to inquire a little wherein the uncertainty, so frequently complained of, consists, and to what causes it owes its original.—It has sometimes been said to owe its original to the number of our municipal constitutions, and the multitude of our judicial decisions; which occasion, it is alledged, abundance of rules, that militate and thwart with each other, as the sentiments or caprice of successive legislatures and judges have happened to vary.—The fact of multiplicity is allowed, and that thereby the researches of the student are rendered more difficult and laborious: But that, with proper industry, the result of those inquiries will be doubt, and indecision, is a consequence that cannot be admitted.—People are apt to be angry at the want of simplicity in our laws: They mistake variety for confusion, and complicated cases for contradictory.—They bring us the examples of arbitrary governments, of Denmark, Muscovy, and Prussia; of wild and uncultivated nations, the savages of Africa and America; or of narrow domestic republics in ancient Greece and modern Switzerland; and unreasonably require the same paucity of laws, the same conciseness of practice, in a nation of freemen, a polite and commercial people, and a populous extent of territory.—In an arbitrary, despotic government, where the laws are at the disposal of the prince, the rules of succession, or the mode of enjoyment, must depend upon his will and pleasure.—Hence there can be but few legal determinations relating to the property, the descent, or the conveyance of real estates; and the same holds in a stronger degree with regard to goods and chattels, and the contracts relating thereto. Under a tyrannical sway, trade must be continually in jeopardy, and of consequence can never be extensive: This therefore puts an end to the necessity of

of an infinite number of rules, which the English merchant daily occurs to for adjusting commercial differences. — Marriages are there usually contracted with slaves; or at least women are treated as such: No laws can be therefore expected to regulate the rights of dower, jointures and marriage settlements. Few also are the persons, who can claim the privileges of any laws; the bulk of those nations, viz. the commonalty, boors, or peasants, being merely villeins and bondmen. — Those are therefore left to the private coercion of their laws, are esteemed (in the contemplation of these boasted legislators) incapable of either right or injury, and of consequence are intitled to no redress. We may see, in these arbitrary states how large a field of legal content is already rooted up and destroyed. — Again, were we a poor and naked people, as the savages of America are, strangers to science, to commerce and the arts as well of convenience, as of luxury, we might perhaps be content, as some of them are said to be, to refer all disputes to the next man we met upon the road, and so put a short end to every controversy. For in a state of nature there is no room for municipal laws; and the nearer any nation approaches to that state, the fewer they will have occasion for. When the people of Rome were little better than sturdy shepherds, or herdsmen, all their laws were contained in ten or twelve tables; but as luxury, politeness, and dominion increased, the civil law increased in the same proportion, and swelled to that amazing bulk which it now occupies, though successively pruned and retrenched by the emperors Theodosius and Justinian. — In like manner we may lastly observe, that in petty states, and narrow territories, much fewer laws will suffice than in large ones, because there are fewer objects upon which the laws can operate. The regulations of a private family are short and well known; those of a prince's household are necessarily more various and diffuse. — The causes therefore of the multiplicity of the English laws are, the extent of the country which they govern; the commerce and refinement of its inhabitants; but above all the LIBERTY and PROPERTY of the subject. These will naturally produce an infinite fund of disputes; which must be terminated in a judicial way: And it is essential to a free people, that these determinations be published and adhered to; that their property may be as certain and fixed as the very constitution of their state. For though in many other countries every thing is left in the breast of the judge to determine, yet with us he is only to declare and pronounce, not to make or new-model, the law. Hence a multitude of decisions, or cases adjudged, will arise; for seldom will it happen that any one rule will exactly suit with many cases. — And in proportion as the decisions of the courts of judicature are multiplied, the law will be loaded with decrees, that may sometimes (though rarely) interfere with each other: Either because succeeding judges may not be apprized of the prior adjudication; or because they may think differently from their predecessors; or because the same arguments did not occur formerly as at present; or in fine, because of the natural imbecillity and imperfection that attends all human proceedings. But, wherever this happens to be the case in any material point, the legislature is ready, and from time to time, both may, and frequently does, intervene to remove the doubt; and upon due deliberation had, determines by a declaratory statute how the law shall be held for the future. Whatever instances therefore of contradiction or uncertainty, may have been gleaned from our records, or reports, must be imputed to the defects of human laws in general, and are not owing to any particular ill construction of the English system. Indeed the reverse is most strictly true. The English law is less embarrassed with inconsistent resolutions and doubtful questions, than any other known system of the same extent and the same duration. I may instance in the civil law: The texts whereof as collected by Justinian and his agents, is extremely voluminous and diffuse; but the idle comments, obscure glosses, and jarring interpretations grafted thereupon by the learned jurists, are literally without number. And these glosses which are mere private opinions of scholastic doctors

(and not, like our books of reports, judicial determinations of the court) are all of authority sufficient to be vouched and relied on; which must needs breed great distraction and confusion in their tribunals. The same may be said of the Canon law; though the text thereof is not of half the antiquity with the Common law of England; and though the more antient any system of laws is, the more it is liable to be perplexed with the multitude of judicial decrees. When therefore a body of laws of so high antiquity as the English, is in general so clear and perspicuous, it argues deep wisdom and foresight in such as laid the foundations, and great care and circumspection, in such as have built the superstructure: But is not (it will be asked) the multitude of law-suits which we daily see and experience, an argument against the clearness and certainty of the law itself? by no means: For among the various disputes and controversies which are daily to be met with in the course of legal proceedings, it is obvious to observe how very few arise from obscurity in the rules or maxims of law. An action shall seldom be heard of to determine a question of inheritance, unless the fact of the descent be controverted. But the dubious points, which are usually agitated in our court, arise chiefly from the difficulty there is of ascertaining the intentions of individuals, in their solemn dispositions of property; in their contracts, conveyances and testaments. It is an object indeed of the utmost importance in this free and commercial country, to lay as few restraints as possible upon the transfer of possessions from hand to hand, or their various designations, marked out by the prudence, convenience, or necessities, or even by the caprice of their owners: Yet to investigate the intention of the owner is frequently matter of difficulty among heaps of entangled conveyances or wills of a various obscurity. The law rarely hesitates in declaring its own meaning. But the judges are frequently puzzled to find out the meaning of others. Thus the powers, the interest, the privileges, and properties of a tenant for life, and a tenant in tail, are clearly distinguished and precisely settled by law: But, what words in a will shall constitute this or that estate, has occasionally been disputed for more than two centuries past; and will continue to be disputed as long as the carelessness, the ignorance, or singularity of testators shall continue to cloathe their intentions in dark or new fangled expressions."

"But, notwithstanding so vast an accession of legal controversies, arising from so fertile a fund as the ignorance and wilfulness of individuals, these will bear no comparison in point of number to those which are founded upon the dishonesty and disingenuity of the parties: By either their suggesting complaints that are false in fact, and thereupon bringing groundless actions; or by their denying such facts as are true, in setting up unwarrantable defences, ex falso oritur jus: If therefore, the fact be perverted or misrepresented, the law which arises from thence will unavoidably be unjust or partial. And, in order to prevent this, it is necessary to set right the fact, and establish the truth contended for, by appealing to some mode of probation or trial, which the law of the country has ordained for a criterion of truth and falsehood."

"These modes of probation or trial form in every civilized country the great object of judicial decisions. And experience will abundantly shew, that above a hundred of our law-suits arise from disputed facts, for one where the law is doubted of. About twenty days in the year are sufficient, in Westminster-Hall, to settle (upon solemn argument) every demurrer or other special point of law that arises throughout the nation: But two months are annually spent in deciding the truth of facts, before six distinct tribunals, in the several circuits of England; exclusive of Middlesex and London, which afford a supply of causes much more than equivalent to any two of the largest circuits." Blackstone's Com. 3 V. 325, &c.

We may here with Blackstone observe, that trial is the examination of the matter of fact in issue; of which there are many different species, according to the difference of the subject, or thing to be tried. For the law of England so industriously endeavours to investigate truth at any rate, that it will not confine it self to one, or to a few manners of trial; but varies its examination of facts according to the nature of the facts themselves: This being the one invariable principle pursued, that as well the best method of trial, as the best evidence upon that trial, which the nature of the case affords, and no other, shall be admitted in the English courts of justice.

N. B. The species of trial in civil cases are seven. By Record; by Inspection or Examination; by Certificate; by Witnesses; by Wager of Battle; by Wager of Law; and by Jury.

Uncia, terrar, Uncia agri. These phrases often occur in the charters of the British Kings, and signify some measure or quantity of land. It was the quantity of 12 modii, and each modius possibly 100 foot square. Mon. Ang. tom. 3. p. 198.

Uncoere pñst. Is a plea of a defendant in nature of a plea in bar, where being sued for a debt due on bond at a day past, to save the forfeiture of the bond, he says that he tendered the money at the day and place, and that there was none there to receive it; and that he is also still ready to pay the same. This will save the defendant from the penalty of his obligation; and if the plaintiff now refuseth to receive the money, but takes issue upon the tender, and it is found against him, he loseth his money for ever. 7 Ed. 6. 6. 9 Rep. 70. PraB. Al-torn. Edit. 1st pag. 82, 83. See Black. Com. 3 V. 303.

Uncuth. A Saxon word, signifying as much as incognitus, i. e. unknown; and is used in the old Saxon laws for him that cometh to an inn guestwise, and lies there but one night. BraB. lib. 3.

Unde nihil habet. A writ of dower, for which see Dote unde nihil habet.

Under-Chamberlain of the Exchequer. Is an officer there that cleaves the tallies, written by the clerk of the tallies, and reads the same, that the clerk of the pell, and comptrollers thereof, may see their entries be true. He also makes searches for all records in the treasury, and hath the custody of Domesday book. There are two officers there of this name. Cowell. Vide Exchequer.

Under-Escheator, (Sub-Escheator.) Mentioned in stat. 5 E. 3. c. 4. See Escheator.

Under-Sheriff, (Sub-Fiscarius.) See Sheriff, 21 Vin. Abr. 59. and Black. Com. 1 V. 345.

Undertakers. Are such as the King's Parvours employed as their deputies; And those that undertake any great work; as drawing of tens, &c. Stat. 2 & 3 P. & M. c. 6. 43 Eliz. c. 11. 12 Car. 2. c. 24. Also persons that undertake funerals, are particularly so called.

Under-Treasurer of England, (Vice Thesaurarius Angliæ) An officer first created in the time of King Hen. 7th, but some think he was of a more antient original: His business was to chest up the King's treasure at the end of every term, to note the content of money in each chest, and see it carried into the King's treasury for the ease of the lord treasurer, as being a thing too mean for him, but fit to be performed by a man of great trust and secrecy: And in the vacancy of the lord treasurer's office, he did all things in the receipt, &c. This officer is mentioned in several statutes; and named treasurer of the exchequer till the reign of Queen Eliz. when he was termed under-treasurer of England. 39 Eliz. cap. 7.

Underwood, Stealing of. Stealing underwood, &c. is punishable criminally, by whipping, small fines, imprisonment, &c. See 43 Eliz. c. 7. 15 Car. 2. c. 2. 23 Geo. 2. c. 26. and 31 Geo. 2. c. 35.

Un Disce & Un Ray. Was the learned Judge Littleton's motto.

Underage. A word used for minors, or persons under age; not capable to bear arms, &c. Flam. lib. 1. c. 9.

Untrid. One that hath no quiet or peace. Sax.

Ungeld. A person out of the protection of the law, so that if he were murdered, no gold or fine should be paid, or composition made by him that killed him. Leg. Ethelred.

Ungifna ðær. This is mentioned in Bromton, Leg. Ethelred, pag. 898. and it signifies almost the same as ungeld, viz. where a man was killed attempting any felony, he was to lie in the field unburied, and no pecuniary compensation was to be paid for his death: From the Sax. un, without, gilda, solutio, and acera, ager. Cowell.

Uniformity, (Uniformitas) One form of publick prayers and administration of sacraments, and other rites and ceremonies of the church of England, prescribed by statutes, to which all must submit. 1 Eliz. c. 2. 14 Car. 2. c. 4. But see Dissenters.

Union, (Unio) Is a combining and consolidating of two churches into one: Also it is when one church is made subject to another, and one man is rector of both; and where a conventual church is made a cathedral. Lyndeswode. In the first signification, if two churches were so mean, that the tithes would not afford a competent provision for each incumbent, the ordinary, patron, and incumbents might unite them at Common law, before any statute was made for that purpose; and in such case it was agreed which patron should present first, &c. for though by the union, the incumbency of one church was lost, yet the patronage remained, and each patron might have a quare impedit upon a disturbance to present in his turn. 3 Nels. Abr. 480. The bishop, patron, and incumbent may unite churches, without licence from the King, by the statute of 37 H. 8. The licence of the King is not necessary to an union, as 'tis to the appropriation of advowsons; for an appropriation cannot be made by them without the King's licence; because that is a mortmain, and the patronage of the advowson is lost, and by consequence all tenths for first fruits. Dyer 259. Moor 409, 661.

By assent of the ordinary, patron, and incumbent two churches lying not above a mile distant one from the other, and whereof the value of the one is not above six pounds a year in the King's books of first fruits, may be united into one. Stat. 37 H. 8. c. 21. And by another statute, in cities and corporation towns, it shall be lawful for the bishop, patrons, and mayors, or chief magistrates of the place, &c. to unite churches therein; but where the income of the churches united exceeds 100 l. a year, the major part of the parishioners are to consent to the same; and after the union made, the patrons of the churches united shall present by turns, to that church only which shall be presentative, in such order as agreed; and notwithstanding the union, and each of the parishes united shall continue distinct as to rates, charges, &c. though the tithes are to be paid to the incumbent of the united church. 17 Car. 2. c. 3. A union where made of churches of greater yearly value than mentioned in the statute 37 H. 8. was held good at Common law; and by the Canon law, the ordinary with consent of the patron, might make an union of churches, of what value soever: So by statute, with the assent of the King. Dyer 259. 2 Roll. Abr. 778. And when two parochial churches were thus united, the reparations continued several as before; and therefore the inhabitants of the parish where any such church was demolished, were not obliged to contribute to the repairs of the remaining church to which it was united. Hob. 67. And this occasioned the statute 4 & 5 W. & M. by which it is ordained, That where any churches have been united, by virtue of the statute 17 Car. 2. and one of them is demolished; when the other church shall be out of repair, the parishioners of the parish whose church is down, shall pay in proportion towards the charge of such repairs, &c. Stat. 4 & 5 W. & M. c. 12.

Unity of Possession, (Unitas Possessionis) Is where a man hath a right to two estates, and holds them together jointly in his own hands; as if a man take a lease of lands from another at a certain rent, and after he buys the fee-simple, this is an unity of possession, by which the lease is extinguished, because that he who had before the occupation only for his rent, is now become lord and owner.

owner of the land. Terms de Ley. A lessee for years of an advowson, on the church becoming void, was presented by the lessor, and instituted and inducted; and it was held, that this was a surrender of his lease; for they cannot stand together in one person, and by the unity of possession one of them is extinguished. Hutt. 105. No unity will extinguish or suspend tithes; but notwithstanding any unity they remain, Ec. 11 Rep. 14. 2 Lill. 658. Unity of possession extinguisheth all privileges not expressly necessary; but not a way to a close, or water to a mill, Ec. because they are thus necessary. A way of ease is destroyed by unity of possession; and a rent, or easement, do not exist during the unity, wherefore they are gone. Latch. 153, 154. 1 Vent. 95. Trin. 7 W. See Black. Com. 2 V. 180.

University, (Universitas) Is a place where all kinds of literature are universally taught: It is likewise used by civilians for any corporation, or body politick. The universities with us are taken for those two bodies which are the nurseries of learning and liberal sciences in this kingdom, viz. Oxford and Cambridge; endowed with great privileges. And by the 13 Eliz. it is enacted, That each of the universities shall be incorporated by a certain name, though they were ancient corporations before; and that all letters patent and charters granted to the universities, shall be good and effectual in law: That the chancellor, masters, and scholars of either of the said universities, shall enjoy all manors, lands, liberties, franchises, and privileges, and all other things which the said corporated bodies have enjoyed, or of right ought to enjoy, according to the intent of the said letters patent; and all letters patent, and liberties, franchises, Ec. shall be established and confirmed, any law, usage Ec. to the contrary notwithstanding. The universities have the keeping of the assise of bread and beer, and are to punish offences concerning it: Also they have the assise of wine and ale, Ec. And the chancellor, his commissary, and deputy, are justices of peace for the vill of Oxon, county of Oxon, and Berks, by virtue of their offices; see the Stat. 51 H. 3. 31 Ed. 1. 7 Ed. 6. 2 & 3 P. & M. and the Chart. 29 Ed. 3. 14 H. 8. Ec. By letters patent, Anno 11 Car. 1. granted to the university of Oxford, the old privileges are explained, and larger granted: And the privilege of the university is allowed to scholars, and servants, Ec. 14 Car. 2. c. 4. Persons acting theatrical performances within the precincts of either university, or five miles thereof, shall be deemed vagrants; and the chancellor, Ec. may commit them to the house of correction, or common goal for one month. Stat. 10 Geo. 2. c. 19.

Their courts are called the chancellor's courts. The chancellors are usually peers of the realm, and are appointed over the whole university. But the courts are kept by their vice-chancellors their assistants or deputies; the causes are managed by advocates or proctors. Id. ibid. By charter of 14 H. 8.

These courts have jurisdiction in all causes ecclesiastical and civil (except mayhem, felony and freehold) where a scholar, servant or minister of the university is one of the parties in suit. Id. ibid. and Cro. Car. 73. Wilcocks v. Bradnell. But see the petition against the grant of H. 4. in Prynne's Animad. p. 368, 369.

Their proceedings are in a summary way according to the practice of the civil law; and in their sentences they follow the justice and equity of the civil law, or the laws, statutes, privileges, liberties and customs of the universities, or the laws of the land at the discretion of the chancellor. Cro. Car. 73. Wilcocks v. Bradnell. Hatley 25. Thomas Wilcocks's case. Hurd. 508, Castle v. Litchfield.

If there is an erroneous sentence in the chancellor's court of the university of Oxford, an appeal lies to the congregation, thence to the convocation, and from thence to the King in chancery, who nominates judges delegates to hear the appeal; the appeal is of the same nature in Cambridge. Wood's Inst. 549. 2 Ld. Raym. 13, 46. The King v. The chancellor, &c. of Cambridge.

As by charter confirmed, as above mentioned, by act of parliament, cognizance is granted to the university of all suits arising any where in law or equity against a scholar, servant or minister of the university, depending before the justices of the King's bench, Common pleas and others there mentioned, and before any other judge, tho' the matter concern the King: If an indultatus assumpsit is brought by quo minus in the exchequer against a scholar or other privileged person, the university shall have consuance, for the court of exchequer is included in the general words Cro. Car. 73. Wilcocks v. Bradnell. Hurd. 505. Castle v. Litchfield.

If a debtor and accountant to the King sues a scholar by bill in equity in the exchequer, or if an attorney sues a scholar by writ of privilege, it is said that the universities shall not have consuance, for a general grant shall not take away the special privilege of any court. Hurd. 189. Wilkins v. Shalcroft. Lit. Rep. 304. Oxford Letter patent. S. P. 3 Leon. 149. The lord Auderjon's case. 2 Danv. Abr. 164.

But in the cases where privilege is allowable, a scholar, Ec. cannot waive his privilege, and have a prohibition in the courts of Westminster, for the university by right has the consuance of the plea, where one is a privileged person; and a stranger is forced to sue a privileged person in their courts by reason of that right vested in them. Cro. Car. 73. Wilcocks v. Bradnell. Heil. 28. Thomas Wilcocks's case.

But a scholar ought to be resident in the university at the time of the suit commenced; and no other ought to be joined in the action with him, for in such case he shall not have privilege. Heil. 28. Thomas Wilcocks's case. Tho' it is said that servants of the university are privileged, yet it has been held, that a bailiff of a college was not capable of privilege. Brownl. 74. Carrel. v. Pask. Neither is a townsmen intitled to privilege, to exempt him from an office in the town, if he keeps a shop and follows a trade, tho' he is matriculated as servant to a scholar. 2 Ven. 106. The city of Oxford's case.

It is to be observed, that tho' mayhem, felony and freehold appear as above, to be the only causes excepted in their charter; yet it has been held that in actions for the recovery of the possession of a term, without claiming title to the freehold, they shall have no privilege, because the freehold may come in question. Cro. Car. 87, 88 Hayley's case. Lim. Rep. 252. Cripp's and Webb's case.

It hath been disputed how far the words of the grant intitled them to privilege in matters of equity. And the general principle of construction seems to be, that where chattels only are concerned, or where damages only are to be given, there their privilege is allowable, but where the suit is for the thing itself, there their privilege cannot be allowed. Vide 2 Vent. 362.

The franchises of the universities are confirmed by the Stat. 13. Eliz. c. 29. Where any fellow, Ec. resigns for reward, the person for whom it is given made incapable, Ec. 31 Eliz. c. 6. f. 3. The universities and royal colleges excepted out of the statute of charitable uses, 43 El. c. 4. f. 2. The presentation of benefices belonging to papists given to the two universities, 13 Jac. 1. c. 5. f. 18, 19. 1 W. & M. c. 26. 12 Ann. c. 14. Universities may file a bill in equity to discover trusts, 12 Ann. f. 2. c. 14. f. 4. Pending quare impedit, a rule may be made for examining patron and clerk, 12 Ann. f. 2. c. 14. f. 5.

Collegians refusing to take the oaths, King may nominate persons to succeed, 1 Geo. 1. c. 10. f. 12. Mandamus lies to admit King's nominee, 1 Geo. 1. c. 13. f. 13. Vice-chancellor of Cambridge may act as justice of the county without the landed qualification, 7 Geo. 2. c. 10. The universities and royal colleges excepted out of the mortmain act, 9 Geo. 2. c. 36. f. 4. Colleges possessed of more advowsons than a moiety of the fellows, not to purchase more, 9 Geo. 2. c. 36. f. 5.

Grants made by papists of ecclesiastical livings vested in the universities, void, 11 Geo. 2. c. 17. f. 5.

Unknown Persons, larceny from. An indictment will lie, for stealing the goods of a person unknown. 1 Hal P. C. 512. Black. Com. 4 V. 236.

Utlage, A Saxon word, denoting an unjust law; in which sense it is used in Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 34.

Unlawful Assembly, (Illicita Congregatio) The meeting of three persons or more together, by force, to commit some unlawful act. Lamb. Vide Assembly.

Unnatural, (Præternaturalis) That which is not of or by nature: And what is unnatural to man generally, must be the same to all men, and at all times; but what is unnatural to this or that person, is to him only, and but for the time 'tis so, Argument on incestuous marriages. Vaugh. 224.

Unques prift, Always ready to perform a thing: Used in pleading to an action, which if the plaintiff cannot prove to the contrary, he shall recover no damages. Kirch. 243.

Uociferatio, An out-cry, or hue and cry. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 12.

Vacatance, (Vacatio) Is a want of an incumbent upon an ecclesiastical benefice. Vid Avoidance.

Void and Voidable: In the law some things are absolutely void and some are voidable. A thing is void which is done against law at the very time of the doing of it, and it shall bind no person: But a thing which is only voidable, and not void, although it be what he that did it ought not to have done; yet when it is done, the doer cannot avoid the same; though by some act in law it may be made void by his heir, &c. 2 Lill. Abr. 653. Where a grant is void at the commencement, no act afterwards can make it good: If a lease is absolutely void, acceptance of rent will not affirm it; it is otherwise when a lease is only voidable, there it will make it good. 3 Rep. 64. A lease for life which is voidable only, must be made void by re-entry, &c. Ibid. It is generally held that covenants made in a void lease or deed, are also void. Yelv. 18. See Owen 136.

A deed of exchange, entered into by an infant, or one non sane memorie, is not void; but may be avoided by the infant, when arrived at age, or by the heir of him who is non sane memorie. Perk. 281. But it hath been adjudged, that a bond of an infant, or of one non compos, is void, because the law hath not appointed any thing to be done to avoid such bonds; for the party cannot plead non est factum, as the cause of nullity doth not appear upon the face of the deed. 2 Salk. 675. 3 Nels. Abr. 436. Where the condition of a bond is void, in part by statute, it may be void totally, though it is otherwise if void in part by the Common law, for there it shall be good for the residue. Moor 856. 1 Brownl. 64. A deed being voidable, is to be avoided by special pleading; and where an act of parliament says, that a deed, &c. shall be void, it is intended that it shall be by pleading, so as it is voidable, but not actually vacated. 5 Rep. 119. A judgment given by persons who had no good commission to do it, is void, without writ of error: But an erroneous attainder is not void, but voidable by writ of error, &c. 2 Harok. P. C. 459, 321.

Voire, A French word signifying truly. Law Fr. Dict.

Voire dire, (Fr. Veritatem dicere) Is when it is prayed upon a trial at law, that a witness may be sworn upon a voire dire; which is, that he shall on his oath speak the truth, whether he shall get or lose by the matter in controversy; and if it appears that he is unconcerned, his testimony is allowed, otherwise not. Blount. On a voire dire, a witness may be examined by the court, if he be not a party interested in the cause, as well as the person for whom he is a witness; and this has been often done, where a busy evidence, not otherwise to be excepted against, is suspected of partiality. Terms de Ley. 981.

Volumus, Is the first word of a clause in the King's writs of protection and letters patent; of protections some are cum clausula volumus. 13 R. 2. c. 16. Co. Litt. 199.

Voluntary, As applied to a deed, is where any conveyance is made without a consideration, either of money, or marriage, &c. And remainders limited in settlements, to a man's right heirs, &c. are deemed voluntary in equity, and the persons claiming under them called volunteers. Abr. Cas. Eq. 385. 3 Salk. 174. See Fraud. So an escape may be voluntary. See Escape, and Black. Com.

3 V. 415. 4 V. 130. So may oaths, see Oath, and Black. Com. 4 V. 137. So may waste, see Waste, and Black. Com. 2 V. 281.

Voluntas, Is when a tenant by lease holds lands at the will of the lessor; or a copyholder holdeth his lands at the will of the lord, by copy of court roll, according to the custom of the manor, &c.

Votum, A vow or promise, used by Flata for nuptia; so dies votorum, is the wedding day. Flata, lib. 4.

Vouche, (Fr. in Latin Voco) Signifies to call one to warrant lands, &c.

Voucher. The person who is vouched, in a writ of right, see Voucher, and Black. Com. 2 V. 358. xviii.

Voucher, Is a word of art, when the tenant in writ of right calls another into the court, who is bound to him to warranty; and is either to defend the right against the demandant, or yield him other lands to the value, &c. And it extends to lands or tenements of freehold or inheritance, and not to any chattel real, personal, or mixed: He that voucheth is called the voucher, (vocans) and he that is vouched, is called the vouchee, (varrantatus) and the process whereby the vouchee is called, is a summonas ad varrantizandum; on which writ if the sheriff return that the party hath nothing whereby he may be summoned, then goes out another writ called sequator sub suo periculo, &c. Co. Litt. 101. There is also a foreign voucher, when the tenant being impleaded within a particular jurisdiction, as in London, voucheth one to warranty in some other county out of the jurisdiction of that court, and prays that he may be summoned, &c. 2 Rep. 50. On a suit in England, a voucher doth not lie in Ireland: But it lies in Wales, and the tenant shall be summoned in the next county to it. A vouchee by entering into warranty, becomes tenant in law of the lands; and when the demandant counts against him, he may plead a release, &c. Jenk. Cent. 41, 100. In a writ of entry in the degrees, none shall vouch out of the line: And in writs of right and possession, it is a good counterplea, that neither the vouchee nor his ancestors had ever seisin of the land. Stat. 3 Ed. 1. c. 40. And the demandant may aver a vouchee to be dead, and that there is no such person, where the tenant voucheth a person deceased, to warranty. 14 Ed. 3. c. 18. Single, double, and treble voucher. See Recovery. And vide Warranty.

Voucher, Is also used for a ledger-book, or book of accounts, wherein are entered the acquittances or warrants for the accountant's discharge. Stat. 19 Car. 2. cap. 1.

Vox, Vocem non habere, A phrase made use of by Bracton, signifying an infamous person, one who is not to be admitted to be a witness. Bract. lib. 3.

Upholsters, None shall put to sale any beds, bolsters, &c. except such as are stuffed with one sort of dry pulled feathers, or clean down; and not mixed with scalded feathers, fen-down, thistle-down, sand, &c. on pain to forfeit the same, or the value: And they are to stuff quilts, mattresses and cushions, with clean wool, and flocks; without using horse-hair, &c. therein, under the like forfeiture. Stat. 11 H. 7. c. 19. and 5 & 6 Ed. 6. c. 23.

Upland, High ground, or terra firma, as it is called by some, contrary to marshy and low ground. Ingulph.

Usa, Is the river Isis; which river was termed Isis from the goddess of that name; for it was customary among the Pagans to dedicate hills, woods, and rivers, to favourite goddesses, and to call them after their names; and the Britons having the greatest reverence for Ceres and Proserpina, who was also called Isis, did for that reason name the river Isis: And the being the goddess of the Night, from thence they computed days by nights; as Seven Night, &c. Blount.

Usage, Differs from custom, and prescription: No man may claim a rent, common, or other inheritance by usage; though he may by prescription. 6 Rep. 65. See Prescription.

Usance, A calender month, as from May 20, to June 20, and double usance, is two such months; words used in Bills of Exchange. Merch. Dict.

Use, (Usus) Is in application of law, the profit or benefit of lands and tenements; or a trust and confidence reposed in a man for the holding of lands, That he to whole whose use the trust is made shall take the profits thereof. West. Symb. par. 1. 1 Inst. 272.

An use is only a trust or confidence which one man puts in another; and therefore it is not a thing issuing out of the land, but collateral to it, and annexed to the privacy of estate between them, (viz.) That he to whom the use is made shall have the profits; and that the tenant of the land shall make an estate as he shall direct: But the cestui que use hath neither jus in re or ad rem, his only remedy being in Chancery to compel the cestui que trust to execute the use. 3 Nels. Abr. 487. See infra.

The limitation of an use, was at the Common law but a matter of equity: But now feoffments to uses, &c. have the same acceptation as deeds at Common law; and uses limited by any conveyance, are governed and directed according to the rules of the law. 2 Lill. Abr. 664. There were two inventors of uses; fear in the time of trouble and civil war, for the saving of inheritances from forfeiture; and fraud in time of peace, to defeat debts, cheats, &c. And it is said the original of uses was the statute of Mortmain, which cramped the clergy so much that they were forced to take shelter under the laity, and make use of them to purchase lands in trust for them and to their use: Afterwards the wars between the houses of York and Lancaster coming on, trusts and uses increased more than ever; and although the Common law could take no cognizance of them, yet there were always, until King Henry 8th's reign, clergymen chancellors, who were ready upon all occasions to decree the performance of the trust and use. 2 Lill. 662, 663.

It hath been observed by some writers, that there were no such things as uses at Common law; the reason was, because the feoffee was always taken as the owner of the land; and it was very inconvenient and absurd that there should be two several fees, and the owners of the same land simul & semel; therefore by the Common law the feoffees to uses were the very tenants, &c. But the statute of uses hath united the estate to the use, so that now the feoffees to uses have no estate or interest at all, but in respect of the contingent estate and uses limited in the deed. 3 Salk. 386. Because in time many deceits were invented, by settling the possession in one man, and the use in another, inasmuch that the possession and the use were divided, which opened a gap for frauds: To avoid these inconveniencies, the statute of 27 H. 8. c. 10. gives the possession to him who has the use, and as before the statute the possession ruled the use, so now the use governs the possession; for this reason in conveyances, it is set down in the habendum to whose use the lands are conveyed, and whatever estate a man hath in the use, the same he hath in the possession at this day. 1 Rep. 121. 2 Leon. cap. 25.

The Stat. 27 H. 8. cap. 10. enacts, That where any are or shall be seised of lands, to the use of any other, by reason of any bargain and sale, feoffment, fine, recovery, contract, agreement or will, &c. he to whose use the lands are settled in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life, or otherwise, shall be esteemed in possession of the land to all intents and purposes: And where one is seised of lands to the use or intent that another shall have an yearly rent out of the same, cestui que use shall be deemed in possession and seisin of the said rent, and of like estate as in the use, &c. And if there are any uses limited in a new manner, they are void. 1 Rep. 129, 138.

But there are uses that are not executed by this statute; as if lands are granted to others in trust, that the feoffees shall take the profits, and deliver them to the feoffor and his heirs; also leases for years of lands in use, (which leases had their being before, and are granted over in use and trust) where the lessee is possessed only of his term, and not seised of any freehold, &c. and there still remains an use of goods and chattels personal, which is properly a Chancery trust, wherein the use and possession are divided; though in other cases the statute executes agreements as the Chancery would have done before. Wood's Inst. 256, 257.

All lands of inheritance, liberties, franchises, visible or local, may be conveyed by way of use: But inheritances personal, which have no relation to lands or local hereditaments, cannot be conveyed by way of use. And some questions having been made, out of what an use shall arise, it hath been held, That uses shall be raised only out of a freehold; that they cannot be raised out of a chattel, nor out of an use, or a bare right or power, nor out of an intended purpose, &c. Moor 509. 1 Leon. 148. 3 Salk. 386.

In uses there ought to be privacy of estate to erect the use upon: And there are four things required to the execution of a use within the statute, viz. There must be a person seised; but the King or a corporation, an alien, &c. cannot be seised to the use of another: There is to be a cestui que use in being; for the words of the act are, Stand and be seised to the use of any person or persons: There must be a use in esse, in possession, remainder, or reversion; and the estate of the feoffee, &c. out of which the use arises, is to be vested or transferred to cestui que use; and if any of these fail, the use will not be executed. 1 Rep. 126. 1 Inst. 19. 2 Cro. 50, 401.

Uses are in esse, either in possession, remainder, or reversion; or in contingency, which by possibility may fall into possession, or in reversion, &c. Contingent uses in posse, may be created though they are not executed by the statute, but remain at Common law: But when they come in esse, then the statute executes them; and before that, they may be destroyed, discontinued, or suspended. 1 Rep. 135.

A use is also express, or implied; express, as when a feoffment is made of land to A. B. and his heirs, to the use of C. D. and the heirs of his body, &c. Implied, where the use is not declared between the parties, but is left to the construction of the law: And if a man seised of lands makes a feoffment in fee without any consideration, and it is not declared to whose use, by implication of law it shall be to the use of the feoffor, &c.

It hath been adjudged, that if by feoffment, or lease and release, a man conveys any particular estate mediately or immediately to another person, there the residue of the estate shall by implication remain to the use of the party himself: But where no estate is limited to another, the whole conveyance is to no purpose, if the party be construed to have the resulting use in him; indeed upon a fine or recovery persons may have their particular estates in other respects, as barring upon nonclaims, &c. 1 Rep. 121. 2 Roll. Abr. 781, 782. 2 Salk. 678. 3 Salk. 387.

An use may be raised two manner of ways, 1st, By transmutation, or departing with the possession of the estate. 2dly, Without transmutation of the estate, by keeping the land in a man's own hands, and making the possession be to the use of another: Those uses that arise by transmutation of estate, are by feoffment, fine, recovery, &c. And those which arise without transmutation, being by bargain and sale inrolled, and covenant to stand seised to uses. 1 Plowd. 301. 1 Inst. 271.

Conveyances to uses are of three sorts; a covenant to stand seised; a feoffment, fine, or recovery to uses; and a bargain and sale; by which last a contingent use cannot be supported, though by the two first it may; and there is a difference between a feoffment to uses, and a covenant to stand seised, because the feoffor departs with his whole estate, but the covenantor departs with no more than what is actually vested in the cestui que use. 2 Sid. 64, 129. In bargains and sales, and covenants to stand seised, some consideration is necessary to make those deeds operate to uses; the consideration of money in a bargain and sale, and natural affection, blood, affinity, marriage, &c. in the covenant to stand seised: And they may be good to a man's wife or family without any consideration; but not to others. Plowd. 301. Dyer 169. 3 Leo. 306. The consideration, or reservation of 1 s. d. a penny, or a pepper-corn, are sufficient considerations to raise an use. 1 Mod. 251. 3 Salk. 287.

If a man covenants in consideration of marriage, or of a sum of money paid to him, that the covenantee shall have such lands; the time shall change the use immediately, for there are good considerations either to change or raise uses. Dyer 6. But if a person covenants to make an estate to certain persons to certain uses, in consideration of marriage; no use arises by such bare covenant, unless the estate be made accordingly: So where upon marriage there is a covenant to levy a fine, except the fine be levied; but if a fine be levied, it shall be to the use. Dalif. 112. 3 Lev. 306. Cro. Elin. 401.

An use arises when declared by estate executed, which needs no consideration: A fine itself without any consideration, doth raise use, where a marriage is intended; but in other conveyances, the consideration of marriage will not raise an use, if the marriage take not effect; because the consideration must be executed before the use shall arise. 1 Leon. 138.

A consideration of money given by one, may extend to all the estates; but if it be of blood, &c. it is singular, and will raise the use of that only to which it goeth: Though if I covenant with B. in consideration of the marriage of my son with his daughter, to be seised to the use of a stranger for life, and after to my son and his wife in tail; here the use shall arise to the stranger, to bear up the remainder, which is not good without a particular estate. Plowd. 307. Dyer 174. 11 Rep. 24. Yet if such covenant be to stand seised to the use of myself for life, and after to C. a stranger for the term of twenty years, and after that to my son in tail; in this case the use limited to C. is void, and my son after my death shall have the land. 1 Rep. 155.

A covenantant for natural affection, to be seised to the use of himself for life, and after his death that the land should descend or remain to his cousin B. in fee; resolved by all the judges, that no use is raised to B. by reason of the disjunctive, descend or remain. Jenk. Cent. 267. An use cannot be raised by any covenant, proviso, or bargain and sale, upon a general consideration, without special averment: And although he that hath the fee-simple of land, may make what uses he will of it in fee, for life or years; yet tenant in tail may not. 4 Shep. Abr. 180. 2 Cro. 400, 401. On a covenant to stand seised in consideration of natural love and affection, one named in the deed may aver himself to be a relation. 2 Strange 934. Uses may be made to a man and the wife he shall marry, or to his first, second, or third wife, &c. And if parties to a deed declare, that one of them shall make a feoffment, or levy a fine to the use and intent that one shall hold the land for life, and after his death another in tail, and after that a third in fee-simple, &c. the estate settleth according to the uses declared by the deed. 1 Rep. 13, 121.

A devise may be to an use, and be so executed: A man makes a feoffment to the use of his will, he hath the use in the mean time; and when the feoffor by will limits the estate pursuant to his power, the estate takes effect by the feoffment, and the use is directed by the will. Lutw. 823. 6 Rep. 17, 18. If uses are settled upon condition, the condition must first be performed; and a future use may well arise upon the non-performance of a condition. 2 Lill. Abr. 668.

There may be a future springing use, without a precedent estate made to support it, as a man covenants to stand seised after his death to the use of his kinsman and his heirs, the estate in the mean time is in him; for it cannot pass out of him during his life, and therefore in case of covenant he hath such estate. 1 Rep. 154. 2 Lev. 77.

An use is construed as favourably as may be, to comply with the intent of the party: Intention is the foundation of uses, but it ought to be out of the words of the deed, to be agreeable to law, and collected and taken from the intire deed. 1 Mod. 98. Lutw. 700, 790. If the meaning of the party doth appear, that he intended to pass his estate by way of raising an use; there the words give, grant, &c. shall enure as a covenant to stand seised: But where it doth not appear, that he intended to pass it by way of use, but by conveyance at Common law, no use is raised. March 50. Lands being once sold and settled to uses, the party that makes the use may not create any further uses: Where the estate out of which an use ariseth is gone, the use is gone likewise; and uses may be made void by release, or power of revocation. Dyer 186. 1 Inst. 237. Deeds of gift of goods, &c. made in trust to the use of the grantor, shall be void. 3 Hen. 7. c. 4. And no use will prevent dower of a woman after her husband's death, &c. Superstitious uses. By statute, a devise of lands or goods to superstitious uses, is where it is to find or maintain a chaplain or priest to pray for the souls of the dead, or lamp in a chapel, a stipendiary priest, &c. These, and such like, are declared to be superstitious uses; and the lands and goods so devised are forfeited to the King. 1 Ed. 6. c. 14. But a man devised lands to trustees and their heirs, to find a priest, to pray for his soul, so long as the laws of the land would permit; and if the laws would not permit it, then to apply the profits to the poor, with power to convert the profits to either of the said uses; adjudged this was not a devise to any superstitious uses. 3 Nelf. Abr. 259. And where certain profits arising out of lands are given to superstitious uses, the King shall have only so much of the yearly profits, which were to be applied to the superstitious uses; though when the land itself is given by the testator, declaring that the profit, without saying how much shall be employed for such uses, in this case the King shall have the land itself. Moor 129. If a sum certain is given to a priest, and other goods which depend upon the superstitious use, all is forfeited to the King; yet if land, &c. is given to find an obit, or anniversary, and for another good use; and there is no certainty how much shall be employed to the superstitious use, the gift to the good use shall preserve the whole from forfeiture. 4 Rep. 104. 2 R. II. 205. It has been held, where a superstitious use was void, so that the King could not have it; that it was not so far void, as to result to the heir at law; and therefore the King may apply it to charity. 1 Salk. 163. See the Stat. 23 H. 8. under Mortmain; and the 1 Geo. 1. Title Forfeiture.

Uter de Writon, Is the pursuing or bringing an action, in the proper county, &c. Brake 64.

Usher, (Fr. Huissier, a door-keeper) Is an officer in the King's house, as of the privy chamber, &c. And there are ushers of the courts of Chancery and Exchequer.

Usuraption, (Usuraptio) Signifies the enjoying by continuance of time; a long possession, or prescription. Terms de Leg.

Usufructuary, (Usufructuarius) One that hath the use and reaps the profit of a thing.

Usurious contract, Is any bargain or contract, whereby any man is obliged to pay more interest for money than the law allows. See Usury.

Usurpation, (Usurpatio) Is the using that which is another's; an interruption or disturbing a man in his right and possession, &c. And usurpations in the Civil and Canon law are called intrusions; and such intruders having not any right shall submit, or be excommunicated and deprived, &c. by Boniface's Constit. Gibf. Codex 817. The usurpation of a church benefice is, when one that hath no right, presenteth to the church, and his clerk is admitted and instituted into it, and hath quiet possession six months after institution before a quare impedit brought: It must commence upon a presentation, not a collation; because by a collation the church is not full, but the right patron may bring his writ at any time to remove the usurper. 1 Inst. 227. 6 Rep. 30. And by usurpation, the fee of an advowson may be gained, as well as the avoidance upon which the usurpation is made: And the true patron cannot remove the incumbent to regain the possession, without a writ of right of advowson, which he is driven to for recovery of the inheritance. 6 Rep. 49.

It has been formerly held, that upon an usurpation, the usurper gains a fee-simple in the advowson; in like manner as he who enters into land during a vacation, and claims the same as his inheritance by wrong: But as the dying seised of lands in that case, will not take away the entry of the successor; no more shall the usurpation on a vacancy, take away his right of presentation when the church becomes void. 2 Co. Inst. 360. 17 Edw. 3. c. 37. At Common law the patron in fee was put out of possession by an usurpation, and to recover the advowson itself by a writ of right; but he hath no remedy for the presentation hac vice, nor if another avoidance happen, unless he bring his writ of right of advowson, and re-continue the advowson: If the patron had the advowson in tail, or for life, this turn and also his whole advowson was gone. 3 Salk. 388. An usurpation upon a lessee for years, gains the fee-simple, and puts the true patron out of possession; and though by the Stat. Westm. 2. he in reversion after the determination of the lease for years, may have a quare impedit when the church is void, or may present; and if his clerk is instituted and inducted, then he is remitted to his former title; yet till that is done, the usurper hath the fee, and the writ of right of advowson lies against him. Hist. 66. 3 Salk. 389. Upon the Stat. 1 Eliz. if an usurpation be on a bishop, it shall bind him; but his successor may present to the next avoidance, or bring a quare impedit, although he is out of possession: All usurpations shall bind the bishop who suffers them, not their successors. 1 Leon. 80. 2 Cro. 673.

No one can usurp upon the King; but an usurpation may dispossess him of his presentation; so as he shall be obliged to bring a quare impedit; though it will not so divest his estate in an advowson, as to bind his inheritance, and put him to a writ of right. 3 Salk. 389. One Coparcener or jointenant, &c. cannot usurp upon the other: But where there are two patrons of churches united, if one presents in the other's turn, it is an usurpation; for they are not as coparceners, who are privy in blood. Dyer 259. 17 Edw. 3. If one presents to a church in time of war, the presentment shall not put the rightful patron out of possession: And a presentation which is void in law, as in case of simony, or to a church that is full, &c. makes no usurpation. 2 Rep. 93. Wood's Inst. 160. Also by a late statute, no usurpation on any avoidance, shall displace the estate or interest of any person intitled to an advowson; or hinder him to present upon the next avoidance, or to maintain a quare impedit to recover possession, &c. 7 Ann. c. 18. This statute hath quite altered the law concerning usurpations of churches. Mallor. 2. Imped. 146. See Black. Com. 3 V. 242.

Usurpation of Franchises and Liberties, Is when a subject unjustly uses any royal franchises, &c. And it is said to be an usurpation upon the King, who shall have the writ of quo warranto against the usurpers. See Quo Warranto, and Black. Com. 3 V. 262.

Usury (Usura) Is money given for the use of money; and is particularly defined to be the gain of any thing by contract above the principal, or that which was lent, exacted in consideration of loan thereof, whether it be of money, or any other thing. 3 Inst. 151. Some make usury to be the profit exacted for a loan made to a person in want and distress; but properly it consists in extorting an unreasonable rate for money, beyond what is allowed by statute. The letting money out at interest, or upon usury, was against the Common law; and in former times, if any one after his death had been found to be a usurer, all his goods and chattels were forfeited to the King, &c. And according to several ancient statutes, all usury is unlawful; but at this time neither the Common or Statute law, absolutely prohibit usury. 3 Inst. 151, 152.

Though excessive usury is liable to forfeiture of treble value of the money taken by statute; and if judgment cannot be given on the statute, if it be found that a person took money for forbearance by corrupt agreement, judgment may be given against him at Common law, which is fine and imprisonment. 3 Salk. 391.

Reasonable interest may be taken for the use of money at this day: The Stat. 27 Hen. 8. cap. 9. allowed 10 l. per cent. for money lent on mortgages, &c. The 13 Eliz. c. 8. ordained 8 l. per cent. And the 21 Jac. 1. c. 17. the like interest. The 12 Car. 2. c. 13. lowered the interest to 6 l. per cent. And the 12 Ann. cap. 16. to 5 l. per centum per annum. But it is said, that the Stat. 13 Eliz. and 21 Jac. 1. allowed not usury, but punish the excess of it; and the 12 Ann. is called the Statute against Excessive Usury.

By the Stat. 12 Ann. c. 16. no person shall take directly or indirectly, for loan of any money, or any thing, above the value of 5 l. for the forbearance of 100 l. for a year, and so proportionably for a greater or less sum; and all bonds, contracts, and assurances made for payment of any principal sum to be lent on usury, above the rate of 5 l. per cent. shall be void: And whoever shall take, accept or receive by way of corrupt bargain, loan,

&c. a greater interest, shall forfeit treble the value of the money lent; and scriveners, solicitors, and drivers of bargains, are not to take above 5 s. for procuring the loan of 100 l. for a year, on pain of forfeiting 20 l. &c.

It hath been adjudged on this statute, that a contract for 6 l. per cent. made before the statute, is not within the meaning of it; and therefore that it was still lawful to receive such interest, in respect of any such contract: And if a man, when interest was at 6 l. per cent. lent money at that rate, and after the statute comes and sinks the interest to 5 l. per cent. if he continues the old interest on that bond, the bond shall not be void as usurious; but it is said the party shall be liable to forfeit treble value. 1 Harw. 246. 1 Mod. 69. The receipt of higher interest than is allowed by the statute, by virtue of an agreement subsequent to the first contract, doth not avoid an assurance fairly made; and a bond made to secure a just debt, payable with lawful interest, shall not be avoided by a corrupt usurious agreement between others, to which the obligee was no ways privy: Nor shall mistakes in drawing writings make void a fair agreement. Ibid.

If the original contract be not usurious, nothing done afterwards can make it so: And a counter-bond to save one harmless against a bond made upon a corrupt agreement, will not be void by the statutes. But if the original agreement be corrupt between all the parties, and so within the statute, no colour will exempt it from the danger of the statutes against usury. 1 Brownl. 73. 2 And. 428. 4 Shep. Abr. 170. A fine levied, or judgment suffered as a security for money, in pursuance of an usurious contract, may be avoided by an averment of the corrupt agreement; as well as any common specialty, or parol contract: And it is not material, whether the payment of the principal and the usurious interest, be secured by the same, or by different conveyances; for all writings whatsoever for the strengthening such a contract are void; also a contract reserving to the lender a greater advantage than allowed, is usurious, if the whole is reserved by way of interest, or in part only under that name, and in part by way of rent for a house, let at a rate plainly exceeding the known value; so where part is taken before the end of the time, that the borrower hath not the profit of the whole principal money, &c. 1 Harw. P. C. 248. 3 Nelf. Abr. 509.

By Holt chief justice, if A. owes B. 100 l. who demands his money, and A. acquaints him, that he hath not the money ready, but is desirous to pay it, if B. can procure it to be lent by any other person; and thereupon B. having present occasion for his money, contracts with C. that if he will lend A. 100 l. he will give him 10 l. on which C. lends the money, and the debt is paid to B. this is a good and lawful contract, and not usurious between B. and C. Carthew's Rep. 252. It is not usury, if there be not a corrupt agreement, for more than the statute interest; and the defendant shall not be punished, unless he receive some part of the money in affirmance of the usurious agreement. 3 Salk. 390.

There can be no usury, without a loan; and the court hath distinguished between a bargain and a loan. 1 Lutw. 273. Sid. 27. If a man lend another 100 l. for two years, to pay for the loan 30 l. and if he pays the principal at the year's end, he shall pay nothing for interest; this is not usury, because the party may pay it at the year's end; and so discharge himself. Cro. Jac. 509. 5 Rep. 69. And it is the same where a person by special agreement, is to pay double the sum borrowed, &c. by way of penalty, for non-payment of the principal debt; the penalty being in lieu of damages, and the borrower might repay the principal at the time agreed, and avoid the penalty. 2 Inst. 89. 2 Roll. Abr. 801.

A man surrenders a copyhold estate to another upon condition that if he pays 80 l. at a certain day, then the surrender to be void; and after it is agreed between them that the money shall not be paid, but that the surrenderor shall forfeit, &c. In consideration whereof, the surrenderer promises to pay to the surrenderor out of certain day 60 l. or 6 l. per annum from the said day, pro usura & interest of the said 60 l. till that sum is paid: This 6 l. shall be taken to be interest damnum, and not lucrum, and and not limited as a penalty for non-payment of the 60*l.* as a nomine pene, &c. 2 Roll. Rep. 406. 1 Danv. Abr. 44. On a loan of 100*l.* or other sum of money for a year, the lender may agree to take his interest half-yearly, or quarterly & to receive the profits of a manor or lands, &c. and be no usury, though such profits are rendered every day. Cro. Jac. 26.

If a grant of rent, or lease for 20*l.* a year of land which is worth 100*l.* per annum be made for one hundred pounds, it is not usurious; if there be not an agreement, that this grant or lease shall be void, upon payment of the principal and arrears, &c. Jenk. Cent. 249. But if two men speak together, and one desires the other to lend him an hundred pounds, and for the loan of it, he will give more than legal interest; and to evade the statute, he grants to him 30*l.* per Annum out of his land for ten years, or makes a lease for one hundred years to him, and the lessee regrants it upon condition that he shall pay 30*l.* yearly for the ten years: In this case it is usury, tho' the lender never have his own hundred pounds again. 1 Cro. 27. See 1 Leon. 119.

A man granted a large rent for years, for a small sum of money: The statute of usury was pleaded; and it was adjudged, that if it had been laid to be upon a loan of money, it had been usurious; though it is otherwise if it be a contract for an annuity. 4 Shep. Abr. 170. If one hath a rent-charge of 30*l.* a year, and another asketh what he shall give for it, and they agree for 100*l.* this is a plain contract for the rent-charge, and no usury. 3 Nelf. 510. The grant of an annuity for lives, not only exceeding the rate allowed for interest, but also the proportion for contracts of this kind, in consideration of a certain sum of money, is not within the statutes against usury; and so of a grant of an annuity, on condition, &c. Cro. Jac. 253. 2 Lev. 7. See 1 Sid. 182. Where interest exceeds 5*l.* per cent. per annum on a bond, if possibly the principal and interest are in hazard, upon a contingency, or casualty; or if there is a hazard that one may have less than his principal, as when a bond is to pay money upon the return of a ship from sea, &c. these are not usury. 2 Cro. 208, 508. 1 Cro. 27. Show. 8. Though where B. lends to D. three hundred pounds on bond, upon an adventure during the life of E. for such a time; if therefore D. pays to B. twenty pounds in three months, and at the end of six months, the principal sum, with a further premium, at the rate of 6*d.* per pound a month; or if before the times mentioned E. dies, then the bond to be void: This differing from the hazard in a bottomry bond, was adjudged an usurious contract. Carthrew 67, 68. Comberb. 125.

One hundred pounds is lent to have 120*l.* at the year's end, upon a casualty; if the casualty goes to the interest only, and not the principal, it is usury: The difference in the books is, that where the principal and interest are both in danger of being lost, there the contract for extraordinary interest is not usurious; but when the principal is well secured, it otherwise. 3 Salk. 391. Discounting notes beyond legal interest held usurious. 2 Strange 1243. A person secures the interest and principal; if it be at the will of the party who is to pay, it is no usury. 2 Cro. 509. And a lender accepting a voluntary gratuity from the borrower, on payment of the principal and interest; or receiving the interest before due, &c. without any corrupt agreement, shall not be within the statutes against usury. 2 Cro. 677. 3 Cro. 501. Also if one gives an usurious bond, and tenders the whole money; yet if the party will take only legal interest, he shall not forfeit the treble value by Statute. 4 Lev. 43. Judgment on an indictment for usury was arrested, because it only laid a corrupt agreement, without any loan, or taking excessive interest in pursuance of it. 2 Strange 816.

Or an information upon the statute of usury, he who borrows the money may be a witness, after he hath paid the money. Raym. 191. But cannot be a witness to prove the repayment of the money, because till that is proved he is no witness at all. 1 Strange 633. In action for usury, a corrupt agreement must be set forth: It is not sufficient to plead the statute, and say that for the lending of 20*l.* the defendant took more than 5*l.* per cent. without setting forth a corrupt agreement, or contract. Lutw. 466.

Utter Barristers, (Juris consulti) Are barristers at law, newly called, who plead without the bar, &c. Vide Barrister.

Uttering false Money. By 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 11. If any person bring into the realm false or counterfeit foreign money, being current here, knowing the same to be false, and shall utter the same in payment, they shall be deemed offenders in high-treason. See Black. Com. 4 V. 89. By 15 & 16 Geo. 2. c. 28. If any person shall tender in payment any counterfeit coin, knowing it so to be, he shall for the first offence be imprisoned six months, and find sureties for his good behaviour six months more; for the second offence shall be imprisoned and find sureties for two years; and for the third offence shall be guilty of felony without benefit of clergy. See the Stat. and Black. Com. 4 V. 99.

Utlgaris Purgatio. The most ancient species of trial, was that by ordal, which was peculiarly distinguished by the appellation of Judicium Dei; and sometimes vulgaris purgatio, to distinguish it from the canonical purgation, which was by the oath of the party. See Black. Com. 4 V. 336.

Utraba, A wound in the face — Utrivam 50 fol. componat. Leg. Sax.

Utrius de Luca, The image of our crucified Saviour kept at Lucca in the church of the Holy Cross: And Will. 1. called the Conqueror, often swore per sanctum vultum de Luca. Eadmer. lib. 1. Malmsh. lib. 4.

Uxorium, A mulct or fine paid for not marrying. Litt. Dist.

W.

Wade, (Vado) To wade or ford over a river. Litt.

Wastors, (Wastores) Are conductors of vessels at sea; King Edw. 4. constituted certain officers with naval power, whom he styled custodes, conductores, and wastores, to guard our fishing vessels on the coasts of Norfolk and Suffolk. Pat. 22 Edw. 4.

Wage,

Wage, (Vadiare, from Fr. Gage) Signifies the giving of security for performance of any thing; as to wage or gage deliverance, to wage law, &c. Co. Litt. 294.

Wager of Battel. A species of trial of great antiquity, but much disused; though still in force if the parties chuse to abide by it. This mode of trial was used in the court-martial, or court of chivalry and honour: In appeals of felony; and on issues joined in writs of right. See Black. Com. 3 V. 337, 339. iii. 4 V. 340. 411, 414, 417.

Wager of Law, (Vadiare Legem) Is where an action of debt is brought against a man upon a simple contract between the parties, without deed or record; and the defendant swears in court in the presence of his purgators, that he oweth the plaintiff nothing in manner and form as he hath declared: And the reason of waging of law is, because the defendant may pay the plaintiff his debt in private, or before witnesses who may be all dead, and therefore the law allows him to wage his law in his discharge; and his oath shall rather be accepted to discharge himself, than the law will suffer him to be charged upon the bare allegation of the plaintiff. 2 Inst. 45. Wager of law is used in actions of debt without specialty; and also in action of detinue, for goods or chattels lent or left with the defendant, who may swear on a book, and certain persons with him, that he detaineth not the goods in manner as the plaintiff has declared, and his compurgators are to be six, eight or twelve of his neighbours, as the court shall assign him. Terms de Ley.

The manner of waging law is thus: He that is to do it, must bring six compurgators with him into court, and stand at the end of the bar towards the right-hand of the chief justice; and the secondary asks him whether he will wage his law? If he answers that he will, the judge admonisheth him to be well advised, and tell him the danger of taking a false oath; and if he still persists, the secondary says, and he that wages his law repeats after him: Hear this ye justices, That I A. B. do not owe to C. D. the sum of, &c. nor any penny thereof in manner and form as the said C. D. hath declared against me: So help me God. Though before he takes the oath, the plaintiff is called by the crier thrice; and if he do not appear he becomes nonsuited, and then the defendant goes quit without taking his oath; and if he appear, and the defendant swears that he owes the plaintiff nothing, and the compurgators do give it upon oath that they believe he swears true, the plaintiff is barred for ever; for when a person has waged his law, it is as much as if a verdict has passed against the plaintiff: If the plaintiff do not appear to hear the defendant perform his law, so that he is nonsuited; he is not barred, but may bring a new action. 1 Inst. 155. 2 Lill. Abr. 674.

In an action of debt on a by-law, the defendant waged law; a day being given on the roll for him to come and make his law, he was set at the right corner of the bar, and the secondary asked him if he was ready to wage his law; who answering that he was, he laid his hand on the book, and then the plaintiff was called: Then the judges admonished him and his compurgators not to swear rashly; and thereupon he made oath, that he did not owe the money modo & forma as the plaintiff had declared; and then his compurgators, who were standing behind him, were called, and each of them laying his right-hand upon the book, made oath that they believed what the defendant had sworn was true. 2 Vent. 171. 2 Salk. 682. The defendant cannot wage his law in any action, but personal actions, where the cause is secret; and wager of law has been denied on hearing the case, and the defendant been advised to plead to issue, &c. Also this wager of law being, it is said, abused by the iniquity of the times, the law was forced to find another way to do justice, and that was by turning actions of debt on simple contract, &c. into action upon the case by indebitat. assumpti, which hath ousted the defendant of his ley gager. 2 Lill. 675, 676. See Black. Com. 3 V. 341. 4 V. 407, 417.

Wagering Policies. By Stat. 19. Geo. 2. c. 37. All insurances interest or no interest, or without farther proof of interest, than the policy itself, or by way of gaming or wagering, or without benefit of salvage to the insurer, shall be totally null and void, except upon private ships, or ships in the Spanish and Portuguese trade. See the Statute.

Wagers. By statute, all wagers laid upon a contingency relating to the late war with France, and all securities, &c. therefore, were declared to be void; and persons concerned to forfeit double the sums laid. 7 Ann. cap. 17.

Wages, Is what is agreed upon by a master to be paid to a servant, or any other person which he hires to do business for him. 2 Lill. Abr. 677. The wages of servants, labourers, &c. is to be assessed by justices. 5 Elin. cap. 4. 1 Jac. 1. cap. 6. And justices of peace may order payment of wages for husbandry, &c. but not in other cases. Mod. Caf. 204, 205. The statute of labourers wages extends to covenant servants in husbandry; though an order of justices was quashed in B. R. because made upon the servant's oath, without other evidence. 2 Ld. Raym. 1305. See Servants. Wages of seamen, vide Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. 1 Geo. 1. c. 25. For the better adjusting and more easy recovery of the wages of certain servants, see Stat. 20. Geo. 2. c. 19. 27 Geo. 2. c. 6.

Wages of Members of Parliament. The rate of these wages established in the reign of Edw. 3. was four shillings a day for a knight of the shire, and two shillings for a citizen or burghers.

Waggons and Waggoners, see Carts, Highways, Turnpikes.

Waifs, (From the Sax. Wafian, Fr. Chose guaiue, Lat. Bona Wavata) Are goods which are stolen and waved, or left by the felon, on his being pursued, for fear of being apprehended; which are forfeited to the King or lord of the manor. Kitch. 81. If a felon in pursuit waves the goods, or having them in his custody, and thinking that pursuit was made, for his own ease and more speedy flight, flies away and leaves the goods behind him; then the King's officer or the bailiff of the lord of the manor, within whose jurisdiction they are left, who hath the franchise of waif, may seize the goods to the King's or lord's use and keep them; except the owner makes fresh pursuit after the felon, and sue an appeal of robbery within a year and a day, or give evidence against him whereby he is attainted, &c. In which case, the owner shall have restitution of his goods so stolen and waved. 21 H. 8. cap. 11. 5 Rep. 109. Goods waved by a felon, in his flight from those who pursue him, shall be forfeited: And tho' waif is generally spoken of goods stolen; yet if a man be pursued with hue and cry as a felon, and he flies and leaves his own goods, these will be forfeited as goods stolen; but they are properly fugitive's goods, and not forfeited till it be found before the coroner, or other wife of record, that he fled for the felony. 3 Hawk. 450. 5 Rep. The law makes a forfeiture of goods waved, as a punishment to the owner of the goods, for not bringing the felon to justice: But if the thief had not the goods in his possession, when he fled, there is no forfeiture: If a felon steals goods and hides them, and afterwards flies, these goods are not forfeited; so where he leaves stolen goods any where, with an intent to fetch them at another time, they are not waved; and in these cases the owner may take his goods where he finds them, without fresh suit, &c. Cro. Eliz. 694. 5 Rep. 109. Moor 785. Waifs and strays are said to be nullius in bonis; and therefore they belong to the lord of the franchise where found. Briton, cap. 17. We read of placita coronæ & wif, in the manor of Upton, &c. in com. Salop. See 22 Vin. Abr. 408—410.

Wain, (Plaustrum) A cart, waggon, or plough to till land.

Wainable, i. e. That may be ploughed, or manured; land tillable. Chart. finē dar'.

Wainage, (Wainagium) According to Sir Edw. Coke, signifies the contentment of a villain; or the furniture of his cart or wain. 2 Inst. 28. And the villain of any other, if he fall into our mercy, shall be amerced saving his wainage. Magn. Chart. c. 14. Wainage has been also used for tillage. Mon. Ang. Tum. 2. p. 612. See Gainage.

Waive, (Waivare) In the general signification, is to forsake; but is specially applied to a woman, who for any crime, crime, for which a man may be enslaved, is termed Wale. Reg. Orig. 132.

Waiver, Signifies the passing by of a thing, or a refusal to accept it: Sometimes it is applied to an estate, or something conveyed to a man, and sometimes to a plea, &c. And a waiver or disagreement as to goods and chattels, in case of a gift, will be effectual. Litt. Sect. 710. If a joingure of lands be made to a woman after marriage, she may waive this after her husband's death. 3 Rep. 27. And an infant, or if he die, his heirs may by waiver avoid an estate made to him during his minority. 1 Inst. 23, 348. But where a particular estate is given with a remainder over, there regularly he that hath it may not waive it, to the damage of him in remainder: Though it is otherwise where one hath a reversion; for that shall not be hurt by such Waiver. 4 Shep. Abr. 192. After special issue joined in any action, the parties cannot waive it, without motion of court. 1 Keb. 225. Assignment of Error by attorney on an outlawry, ordered to be waived, and the party to assign in person, after demurrer for this cause. See 2 Keb. 15.

Wake, The eve-feast of the dedication of churches; which in many country places, is observed with feasting and rural diversions, &c. Paroch. Antiq. 609.

Wakeman, (Quasi watchman) the chief magistrate of the town of Rippon in Yorkshire, is so called. Camd.

Wales, (Wallia) Is part of England on the west side formerly divided into three provinces, North-Wales, South-Wales, and West-Wales, and inhabited by the offspring of the ancient Britons; chased thither by the Saxons, called in to assist them against the Picts and Scots. Lamb. Stat. Wallia, 12 Edw. 1. England and Wales were originally but one nation, and so they continued till the time of the Roman conquest: but when the Romans came, those Britons who would not submit to their yoke, betook themselves to the mountains of Wales, from whence they came again soon after the Romans were drove away by their dissensions here: After this came the Saxons, and gave them another disturbance, and then the kingdom was divided into an heptarchy; and then also began the Welsh to be distinguished from the English: Yet it is observable, that though Wales had princes of their own, the King of England had superiority over them, for to him they paid homage. Camd. 67. 2 Mod. 11.

The Stat. 28 Edw. 3. c. 2. annexed the marches of Wales perpetually to the crown of England; so as not to be of the principality of Wales. And by the 27 Hen. 8. c. 26. Wales was incorporated to and united with England; and all persons born in Wales shall enjoy the like liberties as those born in England, and lands descend there according to the English laws: The laws of England are to be executed in Wales; and the King to have a Chancery and Exchequer at Brecknock and Denbigh: Officers of law and ministers shall keep courts in the English tongue; and the Welsh laws and customs to be inquired into by commission, and such of them as shall be thought fit continued; but the laws and customs of North Wales are saved. By 34 & 35 Hen. 8. cap. 26. A division of Wales was made into twelve counties; and a president and council shall remain in Wales and the marches thereof, with officers, &c. Two justices are to be assigned to hold a session twice every year, and determine pleas of the crown, and assises, and all other actions; and justices of peace shall be appointed as in England, &c. The 18 Eliz. cap. 8. enacts, That the King may appoint two other persons learned in the laws, to be judges in each of the Welsh circuits, which had but one justice before; or grant commissions of association, &c.

An office for inrolments was erected, and the fees and proceedings regulated in passing fines and recoveries in Wales, by 27 Eliz. cap. 9. Persons living in Wales, may give and dispose of their goods and chattels by will, in like manner as may be done within any part of the province of Cambridge, or elsewhere. 7 & 8 W. 3. c. 38. Jurors returned to try issues in Wales, are to have 6*l.* a year of freehold or copyhold, above reprises: And none shall be held to bail in Wales, unless affidavit be made that the cause of action is 20*l.* or upwards. 11 & 12 W. 3. cap. 9. In actions where the debt, &c. amounts not to 10*l.* in the court of great sessions in Wales, the plaintiff shall sue out a writ or process, and serve the defendant with a copy eight days before holding of the said court, &c. who shall appear at the return, or before the third court; or the plaintiff may enter an appearance, and proceed. 6 Geo. 2. c. 14. Murders and felonies in any part of Wales may be tried in the next English county. 1 Strange 553. A certiorari lies to Wales on indictments for misdemeanours. 1 Strange 704. A habeas corpus may be granted of course to remove a prisoner from Wales to an English county. 2 Strange 945. A prohibition granted to the great sessions to stay a suit on a subpoena served out of the jurisdiction. 1 Strange 630. Of process into Wales, judgments, and courts there, &c. See 3 Nels. Abr. 519, 520, 522, and Courts of Wales. Prince of Wales, vide Prince.

Walscheria, The learned Spelman says signifies Wallie pars: But by others it is interpreted parentela hominis infernalis; the same with valesheria.

Walscus, (i. e. Servus) A servant, or any ministerial officer. Leg. Ina. c. 34.

Walkers, Are foresters within a certain space of ground, assigned to their care in forests, &c. Crompt. Jurisd. 145.

Wall, Sea-Wall, A bank of earth. See Water-gate.

Waltingham. The demesne lands in Waltingham may be let by copy, and shall be copyholds. 35 Hen. 8. c. 13.

Waltingham Blacks. In the reign of K. Geo. 1. there sprung up a set of desperate villains called Waltingham Blacks, headed by one whom they stiled K. John; who blacking their faces, and using other disguises, robbed forests, parks, and warrens, destroyed cattle, levied money on their neighbours, by threats and menaces to fire their houses, and committed divers other violences and outrages to the great terror of the people; but they were suppressed, and declared felons, by Stat. 9 Geo. 1. c. 22.

Wandering Soldiers and Mariners. Such, or persons pretending so to be, wandering about, and not having a testimonial from a justice of peace, &c. guilty of felony, per Stat. 39 Eliz. c. 17. which vide.

Wang, (Sax.) We use for the cheek, or jaw wherein the teeth are set: Hence Chaucer called the cheek-teeth or grinders, Wangs or wang-teeth; which is recorded in this old way of sealing writings:

And in witness that this is sooth,
I bite the wax with my wang-tooth,

Wanga, An iron instrument with teeth. Consuetud. Dom. de Farend. MS. 18.

Wanlass, or driving the wanlass, is to drive deer to a stand, that the lord may have a shoot; which is one of our ancient customary tenures of lands. Blount's Ten. 140.

Want. Whether a man in extreme want of food or clothing, may justify stealing either, to relieve his present necessity; hath occasioned great speculation among the writers of general law. Some of our own lawyers have held that he might. Briston, c. 10. Mirr. c. 4. f. 16. But it is now antiquated, the law of England admitting no such excuse at present. 1 Hal. P. C. 54. Black. Com. 4 V. 31. And we may add, very properly, as a judge may respite, and a merciful king pardon. The ancient doctrine, if now in force, would open a door to many villainies.

Wapentake, (From the Sax. Weapon, i. e. Armatura, & Tac. tabus) Is all one with what we call a hundred; specially used in the north countries beyond the river Trent. Bract. lib. 3. Lamb. The words seem to be of Danish original, and to be so called for this reason; when first this kingdom, or part thereof, was divided into wapentakes, he who was the chief of the wapentake or hundred, and whom we now call a high constable, as soon as he entered upon his office, appeared in the field on a certain day on horseback with a pike in his hand, and all the chief men of the hundred met him there with their lances, and touched his pike; which was a sign that they were firmly united to each other, by the touching their weapons. Hoveden. Flita. lib. 2. But Sir Thomas Smith says, that antiently musters were made of the armour and weapons of the several inhabitants of every wapentake; and from those that could not find sufficient pledges for their good abearing, their weapons were taken away, and given to others; from whence he derives this word. Rep. Angl. lib. 2. cap. 16. Camd. Brit. 159. 2 Inst. 99. Stat. 3. Hen. 5. c. 2. 9 Hen. 6. cap. 10. 15 Hen. 6. cap. 7. — Wapentak hoc est quitancia de feitis & bundredis quod dicitur Wapentake. MS. in Bibl. Cotton.

Wapping. An act was made for the partition of Wapping marsh. Stat. 35. H. 8. c. 9. And persons sheltering themselves from debts, and obstructing the execution of writs in Wapping, Stepney, &c. to be guilty of felony, by 11 Geo. 1. c. 22.

War, (Bellum) A fighting between two Kings, princes or parties, in vindication of their just rights; also the state of war, or all the time it lasts. By our law, when the courts of justice are open, so that the King's judges distribute justice to all, and protect men from wrong and violence, it is said to be a time of peace: But when by invasion, rebellion, &c. the peaceable course of justice is stopt, then it is adjudged to be a time of war: And this shall be tried by the records and judges, whether justice at such a time had her equal course of proceeding or not. For time of war gives privilege to them that are in war, and all others within the kingdom. 1 Inst. 249. In the civil wars of K. Char. 1. it was computed that there were not fewer than 200,000 foot and 50,000 horse in arms on both sides; which was an extraordinary host, considering it composed of Britains sufficient to have shaken Europe, though it was otherwise fatally employed. And in ancient times, when the Kings of England were to be served with soldiers in their wars, a knight or squire that had revenues, farmers and tenants, would covenant with the King by indenture inrolled in the Exchequer, to furnish him with such a number of military men; and those men were to serve under him, whom they knew and honoured, and with whom they must live at their return. 1 Inst. 71. This was an excellent institution; but we have had many statutes which have altered this method of recruiting the army, by introducing the lifting of soldiers, and retaining them by virtue of money paid and advanced, &c. The statute 25 Edw. 3. enacted, That none should be constrained to find men of arms but by tenure of land, or grant in parliament. And what persons are obliged to attend upon the King, when he goes in person himself to the wars, &c. Vide 11 H. 7. c. 18. See Laws of arms, and Soldiers. See Black. Com. 1 V. 257.

Wara, A certain quantity or measure of ground. Mon. Ang. Tom. 1. p. 172.

Ward, (Custodia) Is variously used in our old books: A ward in London is a district or division of the city, committed to the special charge of one of the aldermen; and in London there are twenty-six wards, according to the number of the mayor and aldermen, of which every one has his ward for his proper guard and jurisdiction. Stow's Surv. A forest is divided into wards. Manwood, par. 1. p. 97. And a prison is called a ward. Lastly, The heir of the King's tenant, that held in capite, was termed a Ward, during his nonage: But this wardship is taken away by the Stat. 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

Warda, The custody of a town or castle, which the inhabitants were bound to keep at their own charge. Mon. Ang. Tom. 1. p. 372.

Wardage, (Wardagium) Seems to be the same with Wardpeny.

Warden, (Gardianus, Fr. Gardin) Is he that hath the keeping or charge of any persons or things by office; as the wardens of the fellowships or companies in London. 14 H. 8. cap. 2. Wardens of the marches of Wales, &c. 14 H. 7. cap. 8. Wardens of the peace. 2 Ed. 3. c. 3. Wardens of the tables of the King's exchange. 2 Ed. 3. c. 7. Warden of the armour in the Tower. 1 Ed. 4. c. 1. Wardens of the rolls of the Chaucery. 1 Ed. 4. c. 5. Warden of the King's writs and records of his court of Common Bench. Ibid. Warden of the lands for repairing Rochester bridge. 18 Eliz. c. 7. Warden of the flanneries. 14 Car. 2. c. 3. Warden and minor Canons of St. Paul's church. 22 & 23 Car. 2. Warden of the Fleet prison. 8 & 9 W. 3. c. 27. &c. See Guardian.

Wardmote, (Wardmotus) Is a court kept in every ward in London; ordinarily called the Wardmote court: And the wardmote inquest hath power every year to inquire into and present all defaults concerning the watch, and constables doing their duty; that engines, &c. are provided against fire; persons selling ale and beer be honest, and suffer no disorders, nor permit gaming, &c. that they sell in lawful measures; and searches to be made for vagrants, beggars, and idle persons, &c. who shall be punished. Chart. K. Hen. 2. Lex Lond. 185.

Wardwit, Is to be quit of giving money for keeping of wards. Terms de Ley.

Wards, Was a court first erected in the reign of King Hen. 8. and afterwards augmented by him with the office of Liveries; wherefore it was stiled the Court of Wardens and Liveries, now discharged by the 12 Car. 2. c. 24.

Ward-Staff, The constable or watchman's staff: And the manor of Langbourn in Essex is held by the service of the ward-staff, and watching the same in an extraordinary manner, when it is brought to the town of Abridge. Camd.

Wareffare, To plough up land designed for wheat in the spring, in order to let it lie fallow for better improvement; which in Kent is called Summer-land: Hence wareabilis campus, a fallow field; campus ad wareffam, terra wareffata, &c.

Wares. Certain wares not to be brought into this realm from abroad, to be sold or exchanged here, on pain or forfeiture. See Stat. 5 Eliz. cap. 7.

Wargus, A banished rogue. Leg. Hen. 1. cap. 83.

Warnoth. It is an ancient custom, if any tenant holding of the castle of Dover failed in paying his rent at the day, that he should forfeit double, and for the second failure treble: And the lands so held are called Terris cultis & terris de Warnoth. Mon. Angl. Tom. 2. pag. 589.

Warrant, A precept under hand and seal to some officer to bring any offender before the person granting it: And warrants of commitment are issued by the privy council, a secretary of state, or a justice of peace, &c. where there hath been a private information, or a witness has deposed against an offender. Wood's Inst. 614. Any one under the degree of nobility, may be arrested for a misdemeanor, or any thing done against the peace of the kingdom, by warrant from a justice of peace; though if the person be a peer of the realm, and he must be apprehended for a breach of the peace by process out of B. R. &c. Dals. Just. 263. A constable ought not to execute a justice's warrant, where the warrant is unlawful, or the justice hath no jurisdiction; if he doth, he may be punished. Plowd. 394. But if any person abuse by throwing in the dirt, &c. or refuse to execute a lawful warrant; it is a contempt of the King's process, for which the offender may be indicted and fined. Crompt. 149. See Constable, Justices of Peace. For the apprehending persons in any county, upon warrants granted by justices of any other county. See Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 55. For warrants of distress, see Stat. 27 Geo. 2. c. 20.

Warrant of Attorney, Is an authority and power given by a client to his attorney, to appear and plead for him; or to suffer judgment to pass against him by confessing the action, by Nil dicit, non sum informatus, &c. And although a warrant of attorney given by a man in custody to confess a judgment, no attorney being present, is void as to the entry of a judgment; yet it may be a good warrant to appear and file common bail. 2 Lill. Abr. 682. A warrant of attorney which warrants the action, is of course put in by the attorneys for the plaintiff and defendant; so that it differs from a letter of attorney which passes ordinarily under the hand and seal of him that makes it, and is made before witnesses, &c. Though a warrant of attorney to suffer a common recovery by the tenant, is acknowledged before such persons as a commission for the doing thereof directs. West's Symb. par. 2. A warrant of attorney filed of any term pendente Lite is sufficient. 1 Strange 526. 2 Strange 807. Vide Stat. 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16.

Warrantia

Warrantia Chartae, is a writ that lieth where a man is infeoffed of lands with warranty, and then he is sued or impleaded. And if the feoffee be impleaded in assise, or other action, in which he cannot vouch or call to warranty, he shall have this writ against the feoffor, or his heirs, to compel them to warrant the land unto him; and if the land be recovered from him, he shall recover as much lands in value against the warrantor, &c. But the warrantia chartae ought to be brought by the feoffee depending the first writ against him, or he hath lost his advantage. F. N. B. 134. Terms de Ley 372, 588. And if a person doth infeoff another of lands by deed with warranty, and the feoffee make a feoffment over, and taketh back an estate in fee, the warranty is determined; and he shall not have the writ warrantia chartae, because he is in of another estate: Also where one makes a feoffment in fee with warranty against him and his heirs, the feoffee shall not a warrantia chartae upon this warranty against the feoffor or his heirs, if he be impleaded by them; but the nature of it is to rebut against the feoffor and his heirs. Dalt. 48. 2 Lill. Abr. 684.

This writ may be sued forth before a man is impleaded in any action, but the writ doth suppose that he is impleaded; and if the defendant appear and say, that he is not impleaded, by that plea he confesseth the warranty, and the plaintiff shall have judgment, &c. and the party shall recover in value of the lands against the vouchee, which he had at the time of the purchase of his warrantia chartae; and therefore it may be good policy to bring it against him before he is sued, to bind the lands as he had at that time; for if he have aliened his lands before the voucher, he shall render nothing in value. New Nat. Br. 298, 299. If a man recover his warranty in warrantia chartae, and after he is impleaded; he ought to give notice to him against whom he had recovered, of the action, and pray him to shew what plea he will plead, to defend the land, &c. And where one upon a warranty doth vouch and recover in value, if he is then impleaded of the land recovered, he may not vouch again, for the warranty was once executed. 23 Ed. 3. 12. In a warranty to the feoffee in land, made by the feoffor; upon voucher if special matter be shewed by the vouchee, when he entered into the warranty, viz. That the land at the time of the feoffment was worth only 100*l.* and now at the time of the voucher it is worth 200*l.* by the industry of the feoffee; the plaintiff in a warrantia chartae, &c. shall recover only the value as it was at the time of the sale. Jenk. Cent. 35. If the vouchee can shew cause why he should not warrant, that must be tried, &c.

Warrantia Dicit, Is an ancient writ lying where one having a day assigned personally to appear in court to any action, is in the mean time employed in the King's service, so that he cannot come at the day appointed: And it is directed to the justices to this end, that they neither take nor record him in default for that time. Reg. Orig. 18. F. N. B. 17. See Effoin.

Warranty, (Warrantia) Is a promise or covenant by deed made by the bargainor, for himself and his heirs, to warrant or secure the bargainee and his heirs, against all men for the enjoying of the thing granted. Bract. lib. 2. § 5. West's Symb. par. 1.

A warranty is real or personal; real, when it concerns lands and tenements, granted in fee, or for life, &c. And real warranties are either in deed, as by the word warrantize or warrant expressly; or in law, by the word dedi, &c. And a deed of gift and exchange, have a warranty in law implied. Litt. 697. Sir Edward Coke defines a real warranty to be a covenant real annexed to lands, whereby a man and his heirs are bound to warrant the same to some other and his heirs; and that they shall quietly hold and enjoy the lands, and upon voucher, or by writ of warrantia chartae, to yield other lands and tenements to the value of those that shall be evicted by elder title: And warranty being a covenant real, bindeth to yield lands in recompence. 1 Inst. 365, 384.

Warranty is also of three sorts, viz. Warranty lineal, warranty collateral, and warranty that commences by disseisin: Warranty lineal is where a man seised in fee makes a feoffment, and binds himself and his heirs by the deed to warranty, and hath issue a son and dies, and the warranty descends to his son and heir; for if no deed with warranty had been made, then the right of the lands should have descended to the son as heir to his father, and he would have conveyed the descent from father to son: This warranty binds the right of fee-simple; but not the right of an estate-tail, unless the lineal warranty be with assets in fee-simple. Litt. 697, 703. 1 Inst. 370.

Collateral warranty is when the party upon whom the warranty descends, cannot convey the title which he hath in the land from him that made the warranty, or shew that he is his heir, &c. As if tenant in tail discontinues the tail, or alienates the land, and then dieth, leaving issue, and the uncle of the issue releases to the discontinuance with warranty, and dies without issue; this is a collateral warranty to the issue in tail, and bindeth his right, without assets, it descending upon him, and he can't make a title to the intail from his uncle. Litt. 704. 1 Inst. 373, 376.

Warranty by disseisin, is where one that hath no right to the freehold of another, entereth and conveyeth it away with warranty; which shall not bind or bar the person disseised, or the right heir that ought to have the land: And if where tenant for life, remainder in tail, leases for years with agreement with the lessee, that he shall make a feoffment of the land, and then he will release with warranty, which is done accordingly; adjudged that this collateral warranty commencing by disseisin, shall not bind the heir in tail, upon whom it descended. Litt. 698. 1 Inst. 366, 367. Cro. Car. 483. Accomp. Conv. 1 Vol. 56.

He that makes a warranty, may make it as large, or as strait as he pleases; as for himself and his heirs, and what heirs, &c. And if the warranty be made for life, or in tail, 'tis good, and shall bind for so long only. 1 Inst. 387. 1 And. 262, 305. But no warranty can enlarge an estate granted; for if the lessor by deed doth release to his lessee for life, and warrant the land to him and his heirs, it shall not make his estate greater. 1 Inst. 389. And where one binds him and his heirs to warranty; by this they are not bound to warrant new titles, or any right that commences after warranty made, but such as were in esse at that time. Bridgm. 77. If one make an estate, and grant to warrant the land, but doth not say for how long; it shall be taken for so long as the estate to which the warranty is knit doth last: A man grants to warrant lands to another, and says not against what persons; here it will be held a general warranty against all men. 1 Rep. 1.

A warranty may be annexed to estates of inheritance or freehold, and that not only to houses and lands, but also rents, advowsons, commons, &c. which issue out of lands or tenements. 1 Inst. 366, 389. And to every good warranty in deed, to make it binding; the person that doth warrant must be a person able; it is necessary that there be some estate to which the warranty is annexed, to support it; that the warranty descend upon him who is heir of the whole blood by the Common law, to him that made it, and not upon another; and that the heir claim by the same right as the ancestor; that it take effect in the life-time of such ancestor; and he be bound thereby; and the estate of freehold, which is to be barred, be put to a right before, or at the time of the warranty; and that he to whom the warranty descends, have then but right to the land. 1 Inst. 367, 370, 384, 388. 10 Rep. 96, 97. If one be a successor only in case of a corporation, he shall not be bound by the warranty of his natural ancestor; and he that comes into land merely by act of law, as the lord by escheat, &c. shall never take advantage of a warranty; but it is otherwise where the estate arises by limitation of use, or a common recovery, which is the act of the party. 1 Inst. 370. 3 Rep. 62. Though if the estate the warranty is annexed to be spent, the warranty is gone: So if a feoffment with warranty be made to two or more, and they being jointenants, do after by deed make partition.

But where one enfeoffs two men and their heirs, and a feoffment is made in fee by one of them; the other may notwithstanding have the benefit of the warranty. 10 Rep. 96. 6 Rep. 12. 1 Inst. 385. Two persons make a feoffment with warranty, the survivor shall not be charged alone, without the heir of the other; and if both die, the heirs of both shall be equally bound. 3 Rep. 14.

All warranties before the Statute of Gloucester, which descended to those who were heirs to the warrantors, were bars to the same heirs to demand any of the lands; except the warranty began by disseisin. That statute hath ordained, that the warranty of the father shall be no bar to his son for the lands which come by the heritage of the mother; nor the warranty of the mother be binding to the son for the lands which come by the heritage of the father; but neither the statute 11 H. 7. cap. 20. or any other statute hath provided any remedy against a collateral warranty; therefore such warranty is yet in force, and shall be a bar to the issue in tail. Litt. Terms de Ley 370, 371. But by the 4 & 5 Ann. c. 16. for amendment of the law, warranties made by tenant for life, of any lands, coming or descending on him in reversion or remainder, shall be void; and all collateral warranties made of any lands, &c. by any ancestor, who hath not an estate of inheritance in possession therein, shall be also void against the heir.

If lands are held of a man and his heirs, by certain service, without any clause of warranty, they are bound to warranty: But when the deed is dedi & concessi, &c. to be holden of the chief lord of the fee, or of others, and not the feoffors and their heirs, reserving no service, and without the aforesaid clause; here the heirs of the feoffor shall not be bound to warranty. Stat. 4 Ed. 1. A warranty according to law is intire, and extends to all the lands, and is a bar to every person on whom it descends; and where several have a right, jointly or severally, every one of them are barred: Though there is this difference as to warranties; where the entry is gone, and only a right of action is left, there a warranty descending upon the heir at law, shall bind: And where there is a right of entry, it shall not bind. 8 Rep. 54. 2 Lill. Abr. 684. And if any person make a deed with warranty, by which his heir should be barred, and after the warrantor is attainted of felony; his heir shall not be bound by such warranty, for it cannot descend upon him, the blood being corrupted. Litt.

If a warranty descend upon an infant, it shall not bind him, in case his entry into the lands be lawful; but he must take care not to suffer a descent after his full age, before he hath made his re-entry. 1 Rep. 140. Popb. 71. Warranty may be added to any conveyance of lands, tenements, or hereditaments; as upon fines, feoffments, gifts, release and confirmation, &c. And the ancient form of a warranty is in this manner.—Et ego præfatus A. B. & heredes mei prædicti. messuag. & decem acras terræ cum pertinentiis suis, præfato D. hereditibus & assignatis suis contra omnes gentes warrantizabimus in perpetuum per præsentis, &c.

Warranty of goods sold, A man offers plate to sale with a warranty, and afterwards sells it to the same person for less money, the warranty does not extend to this sale. 1 Strange 414: Vide Action on the Case, and Sale.

Warren, (Warrenna, from Germ. Wabren, i. e. Custodire, or the Fr. Garenne) Is a franchise or place privileged, by prescription or grant from the King, for the keeping of beasts and fowls of the warren; which are hares and conies, partridges, pheasants, and some add quails, woodcocks and water fowl, &c. Terms de Ley 589. 1 Inst. 233. A person may have a warren in another's land, for none may alien the land, and reserve the franchise: But none can make a warren, and appropriate those creatures that are feræ naturæ, without licence from the King, or where a warren is claimed by prescription. 8 Rep. 108. 11 Rep. 87. A warren may lie open; and there is no necessity of inclosing it, as there is of a park. 4 Inst. 318. If any person offend in a free warren, he is punishable by the Common law, and by Stat. 21 Ed. 3. And if any one enter wrongfully into any warren, and chase, take or kill any conies, without the consent of the owner, he shall forfeit treble damages, and suffer three months imprisonment, &c. by 22 & 23 Car. 2. c. 25. When conies are on the soil of the party, he hath a property in them by reason of the possession, and action lies for killing them; but if they run out of the warren, and eat up a neighbour's corn, the owner of the land may sue them, and no action will lie. 5 Rep. 104. 1 Cro. 526. In waste, &c. against a lessee of a warren, the waste assigned was for stopping coney-boroughs; and it was held, that this action did not lie, because a man cannot have the inheritance of conies; and action may be brought against him who makes holes in the land, but not against him that stops them, by reason the land is made better by it. Owen 66. 3 Nels. Abr. 530.

Warth, A customary payment for cattle-guard. Blount's Ten. 60.

Wath, A shallow part of a river, or arm of the sea; as the wishes in Lincolnshire, &c. Knight 1346.

Wassail, (Sax.) A festival song, heretofore sung from door to door about the time of the Epiphany.

Waste, (Vastum,) Hath divers significations: First, It is a spoil made either in house, wood, lands, &c. by the tenant for life or years, to the prejudice of the heir, or of him in the reversion or remainder. Kitchin, fol. 168. Whereupon the writ of waste is brought, for the recovery of the thing wasted, and treble damages. Waste of the forest is most properly where a man cuts down his own woods within the forest, without licence of the King, or Lord Chief Justice in Eyre. See Manwood, part 2. cap. 8. numb. 4 & 5. Secondly, Waste is taken for those lands which are not in any man's occupation, but lie common; which seem to be so called because the lord cannot make such profit of them as of his other lands, by reason of that use which others have of it in passing to and fro; upon this none may build, cut down trees, dig, &c. without the lord's licence. Thirdly, Year, day and waste, Annus, dies & vastum, is a punishment or forfeiture belonging to petit treason or felony, whereof see Staundf. Pl. Cor. lib. 3. cap. 30. And see Year, Day and Waste. Cowell.

Waste is the committing any spoil or destruction in houses, lands, &c. by tenants, to the damage of the heir, or of him in reversion or remainder: Whereupon the writ or action of waste is brought for the recovery of the thing wasted, and damages for the waste done. 5 New Abr. 459.

1. Of the several kinds of waste, and of the Stat. of Marlebridge, with observations thereon.
2. What acts shall be deemed waste.
3. What waste shall be deemed excusable and justifiable.
4. Who may bring an action of waste, and against whom it may be brought.
5. In what cases general waste may be restrained by injunction in equity.
6. What relief may be given in equity in cases of waste.
7. Of the process, &c. in waste.

1. Of the several kinds of waste, and of the Stat. of Marlebridge, with observations thereon.

There are two kinds of waste, viz. voluntary or actual, and negligent or permissive. Voluntary waste may be done by pulling down or prostrating houses, or cutting down timber-trees: negligent waste may be by suffering a house to be uncovered, whereby the spars or rafters, planches or other timber of the house are rotten. 1 Inst. 53. a. Vide Dyer 38. pl. 35. Owen 92. Dyer 281. pl. 21.

The statute of Marlebridge, 52 Hen. 3. c. 23. stat. 2. enacts, that "Farmers, during their term, shall not make waste, sale, nor exile, of houses, woods and men, nor of any thing belonging to the tenements that they have to farm, without special licence had by writing of covenant, making mention that they may do it; which thing if they do, and thereof be convicted, they shall yield full damage, and shall be punished by amercement grievously."

This act provideth remedy for waste done by lessee for life, or lessee for years, and it is the first statute that gave remedy in those cases: For the rule of the Register is, that there are five manner of writs for waste, viz. two at the Common law, as for waste done by tenant in dower, or by the guardian; and three by statute or special law, as tenant for life, tenant for years, and tenant by the curtesy 2 Inst. 145. • This statute is a penal law, and yet because it is a remedial law, it has been interpreted by equity. Arg. 10 Mod. 281. In case of Hammond v. Webb.

Farmers] Here farmers do comprehend all such as hold by lease for life or lives, or for years, by deed or without deed. 2 Inst. 145. It has been resolved likewise that it should extend to strangers. Arg. 10 Mod. 281. In case of Hammond v. Webb. Altho' the Register says sciend' that per statutum de Marlebridge, cap. 23. data fuit quedam prohibitio vasti versus tenentium annorum, which is true; yet the stat. extends to farmers for life also, but this act extended not to tenant by the curtesy, for he is not a farmer, but if a lease be made for life or years, he is a farmer tho' no rent be reserved. 2 Inst. 145.

Shall not make waste] By these words they are prohibited to justify waste, for it has been resolved that this act extends to waste omittendo, tho' the word is faciant, which literally imports active waste. Arg. 10 Mod. 281. In case of Hammond v. Webb.

Nor of any thing] Houses, woods, and men were before particularly named, and these words do comprehend lands and meadows belonging to the farm. 2 Inst. 146. Altho' these general words have a further signification, and therefore, if there had been a farmer for life, or years, of a manor, and a tenancy had escheated, this tenancy so escheated did belong to the tenement, that he held in farm, and therefore this extended to it; and the lessor shall have a writ generally, and suppose a lease made of the lands escheated by the lessor, and maintain it by the special matter. 2 Inst. 146.

Special licence by writing] This grant ought to be by deed, for all waste tends to the disinheritation of the lessor, and therefore no man can claim to be dispensable of waste without deed. 2 Inst. 146. Likewise this special grant is intended to be absque impetratione vasti; without impeachment of waste. 2 Inst. 146.

Yield full damage] And this must be understood such a prohibition of waste upon this statute as lay against a tenant in dower at the Common law, and single damages were given by this statute against lessee for life, and lessee for years. 2 Inst. 146.

But waste may be committed not only in houses and lands, but in gardens, orchards, timber-trees, dove-houses, warrens, parks, fish-ponds, and other subjects of property, as will be shewn. 1 Inst. 53. a.

2. What acts shall be deemed waste.

It has been laid down as a general principle, that the law will not allow that to be waste, which is not any way prejudicial to the inheritance. Heil. 35. Barret v. Barret. Nevertheless it has been held, that a lessee or tenant cannot change the nature of the thing demised: tho' in some cases, the alteration may be for the greater profit of the lessor. Thus if a lessee converts a corn-mill into a fulling-mill, it is waste; altho' the conversion be for the lessor's advantage. Cro. Jac. 182. Circuit. Lond. v. Greyme. Also converting a brewhouse of 120 l. per ann. into other houses let for 200 l. a year, is waste; because of the alteration of the nature of the thing, and of the evidence. 1 Lev. 309. Cole v. Green.

We will now consider what shall be deemed waste with respect to particular subjects of property.

Waste in lands. If the tenant converts arable into wood, or vice versa, it is waste; for it did not only change the course of husbandry, but also the proof of evidence. Holmes's Rep. case 296. p. 234. But if a lessee suffers arable land to lie fresh, and not manured, so that the land grows full of thorns, &c. this is not waste, but ill husbandry. 2 Roll. Abr. 814. Likewise, the conversion of meadow into arable is waste, for it not only changes the course of husbandry, but the proof of his evidence. 1 Inst. 53. b. But if meadow be sometimes arable, and sometimes meadow, and sometimes pasture, there the plowing of it is not waste. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. Neither is the division of a great meadow into many parcels, by making of ditches, waste; for the meadows may be better for it, and it is for the profit and ease of the occupiers of it. 2 Le. 174. pl. 210.

Likewise converting a meadow into a hop-garden, is not waste; for it is employed to a greater profit, and it may be meadow again; per Windham and Rhodes J. But Periam said tho' it be a greater profit, yet it is also with greater labour and charges. 2 Le. 174. pl. 210. But converting a meadow into an orchard, is waste, tho' it be to the greater profit of the occupier. Per Periam. Id. ibid. If a lessee ploughs the land sowed with conies, this is no waste; unless it be a warren by charter or prescription. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. So if a lessee of land destroys the coney-boroughs in the land, it not being a free warren by charter or prescription, it seems is not waste; for a man can have no property in them, but only a possession. Id. ibid. Ow. 66. Moyle v. Moyle.

It is waste to suffer of a wall of the sea to be in decay, so as by the flowing and reflowing of the sea the meadow or marsh is surrounded, whereby the same becomes unprofitable. But if it be surrounded suddenly by the rage and violence of the sea, occasioned by wind, tempest, or the like, without any default in the tenant, this is not waste. Yet if the tenant repair not the banks or walls against rivers or other waters, whereby the meadows or marshes be surrounded and become rushy and unprofitable, this is waste. 1 Inst. 53. b. So a fortiori, if arable land be surrounded by such default; for the surrounding washes away the marle and other manurance from the land. 2 Roll. Abr. 816.

Waste in trees and woods. Trees are parcel of the inheritance, and therefore, if a lessee assigneth his term, and excepts the timber-trees, it is void; for he cannot except that which doth not belong to him by law. 5 Rep. 12. Saunders's case. The lessor, after he has made a lease for life or years, may by deed grant the trees, or reasonable estovers out of them, to another and his heirs; and the same shall take effect after the death of the lessee. But such a gift to a stranger is void during the estate for life, because of the particular prejudice which might be done to the lessee. 11 Rep. 48. Lisford's case. The lessee hath but a particular interest in the trees, but the general interest of the trees doth remain in the lessor: for the lessee shall have the waste and fruit of the trees, and the shadow for his cattle, &c. But the interest of the body of the tree is in the lessor, as parcel of his inheritance. Therefore if trees are overthrown, by the lessee or any other, or by wind or tempest, or by any other means disjoined from the inheritance, the lessor shall have them in respect of his general ownership. 11 Rep. 81. Bowles's case.

With respect to timber-trees, such as oak, ash, elm, (which are timber-trees in all places) waste may be committed in them, either by cutting them down, or lopping of them, or doing any act whereby the timber may decay. Also in countries where timber is scarce, and beeches or the like are converted to building for the habitation of man, they are also accounted timber. 1 Inst. 53. a. 54. b. Thus, waste may be committed in cutting of beeches in Buckinghamshire, because there by the custom of the country it is the best timber. 2 Roll. Abr. 814.

So waste may be committed in cutting of birches in Berkshire, because they are the principal trees there for the most part. Ibid. If the tenant cut down timber-trees, or such as are accounted timber, as is aforesaid, this is waste; and if he suffer the young germins to be destroyed, this is a destruction. So it is, if the tenant cut down underwood (as he may by law), yet if he suffer the young germins to be destroyed, or if he stub up the same, this is destruction. 1 Inst. 53. a. If lessee or his servants suffer a wood to be open, by which beasts enter and eat the germins, tho' they grow again, yet it is waste; for after such eating they never will be great trees, but shrubs. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. If a termor cuts down underwood of hazel, willows, maple, or oak, which is seasonable, it is not waste. 2 Roll. Abr. 817. If ashes are seasonable wood to cut from ten years, it is not waste to cut them down for house-wood. Ibid.

But if the ashes are grofs of the age of nine years, and able for great timber, it is waste to cut them down. Id. ibid.

If oaks are seasonable, and have been used to be cut always at the age of twenty years, it is not waste to cut them at such age, or under, for in some countries, where there is a great plenty, oaks of such age are but seasonable wood. Id. ibid. But after the age of twenty-one years, oaks cannot be said to be wood seasonable, and therefore it shall be waste to cut them down. Id. ibid. Cutting down of willows, beech, birch, asp, maple, or the like, standing in the defence and safeguard of the house, is destruction. If there be a quickset fence of white thorn, if the tenant stub it up, or suffer it to be destroyed, this is also destruction: And for all these and the like destructions an action of waste lieth. 1 Inst. 53. a. The cutting of horn-beams, hazels, willows, fallows, though of forty years growth, is no waste, because these trees would never be timber. Per Meade Just. Godb. 4. pl. 6.

If the lessee covenant, that he will leave the wood at the end of the term as he found it; if the lessee cut down the trees, the lessor shall presently have an action of covenant: For it is not possible for him to leave the trees at the end of the term. So that the impossibility of performing the covenant shall give a present action on a future covenant. But it is otherwise in the case of a house; for there, though the lessee commit waste, yet he may repair the waste done, before the term expires. 5 Rep. 21. Mayne's case.

The cutting down of trees is justifiable for house-boot, hay-boot, plow-boot, and fire-boot. 1 Inst. 53. b. Hob. Rep. c. 296. Br. Waste, 130. By the Common law lessee shall have them, though the deed does not express it; but if he takes more than is necessary he shall be punished in waste. Bro. Waste, pl. 30. The tenant may take sufficient wood to repair the walls, pales, fences, hedges and ditches as he found them, but he cannot make new. 1 Inst. 53. b. Cutting of dead wood is no waste. 1 Inst. 53. But converting trees into coals for fuel, where there is sufficient dead wood, is waste. Id. ibid.

Waste in digging for gravel, mines, &c. If the tenant digs for gravel, lime, clay, brick, earth or stone, hid in the ground, or for mines of metal or coal, or the like, not being open at the time of the lease, it is waste. 1 Inst. 53. b. If a man hath land in which there is a mine of coals, or the like, and maketh a lease of the land, (without mentioning any mines) for life or for years, the lessee for such mines as were open at the time of the lease made, may dig and take the profits thereof. But he cannot dig for any new mine that was not open at the time of the lease made, for that would be adjudged waste. 1 Inst. 54. b. Likewise, if there be open mines in the land, and the owner leases it to another, with the mines in it, he may dig in the open mines, but not in the close mines; but otherwise it would be if there was not any open mine there; for then the lessee might dig for mines, otherwise the grant would take no effect. Id. ibid. If lessee dig slate-stone out of the land, it is waste. And, digging for stones, unless in a quarry, is waste, though the lessee fill it up again. 2 Roll. Abr. 816. Ow. 66. Moyle v. Moyle. Likewise, if he have a lease of land, in which there was a coal mine, but not open at the time of the lease; if the lessee open it, and assigns his interest, it is still waste in the assignee; but where the lease is of lands, and all mines in it, there he may dig in it. 5 Rep. 12. a. b. Saunderson's case.

But if lessee of land, with mines of coals, iron, and stone, digs the coals, iron, and stones, so much as is necessary for him to use without selling, it is not waste. 2 Roll. Abr. 816. If a lessee digs earth, and carries it out of the land, action of waste lies. Id. ibid. If a lessee digs for gravel or clay, for reparation of the house, not being open at the time of the lease, it is not waste, any more than the cutting of trees for reparation. 1 Inst. 53. b.

Waste in gardens, orchards, fish-ponds, dove-houses, parks, &c. If the tenant cut down or destroy any fruit-trees growing in the garden or orchard, it is waste: But if such trees grow upon any of the ground, which the tenant holdeth out of the garden or orchard, it is no waste. 1 Inst. 53. a. Breaking a hedge also is no waste. Id. ibid. Likewise destruction of saffron heads in a garden, is not waste. Bro. Waste, pl. 143. cites 10 A. 7. c. 2. If the tenant of a dove-house, warren, park, vivary, estanges, or such like, takes so many that so much store is not left as he found at the time of the demise, it is waste. 1 Inst. 53. a. Hob. Rep. c. 296. Likewise if the lessee of a pigeon-house stops the holes, that the pigeons cannot build, it is waste. 1 Inst. 53. a. So likewise, suffering the pales of a park to decay, whereby the deer are dispersed; is waste. Id. ibid. Also, if the lessee of a hop-ground plow it up and sow grain there, it is waste. Ow. 66. Moyle v. Moyle. The breaking a weare is waste, and so of the banks of a fish-pond, so that the water and fish run out. Ow. 66. Moyle v. Moyle.

Waste with respect to houses. Waste may be done in houses, by pulling them down or prostrating them, or by suffering the same to be uncovered, whereby the spars or rafters, plances or other timber of the house are rotten. 1 Inst. 53. a. Default of coverture of an house is waste, though the timber be standing. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. But if the house be uncovered, when the tenant cometh in, it is no waste in the tenant to suffer the same to fall down. 1 Inst. 53. a. Though there be no timber growing upon the ground, yet the tenant at his peril must keep the houses from wasting. 1 Inst. 53. a. If a lessee rases the house, and builds a new house, if it be not so long and wide as the other, it is waste. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. So if he rebuilds it more large than it was before, it is waste; for it will be more charge for the lessor to repair it. 1 Inst. 53. a.

But if a lessee of land makes a new house upon the land where there was not any before, this is not waste; for it is for the benefit of the lessor. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. But according to lord Coke, if the tenant build a new house, it is waste; and if he suffer it to be wasted, it is a new waste. Yet if the house be prostrated by enemies or the like, without default of the tenant, or was ruinous at his coming in, and fall down, the tenant may build the same again with such materials as remain, and with the other timber, which he may take growing on the ground, for his habitation; but he must not make the house larger than it was. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. 1 Inst. 53. a. If the house be uncovered by tempest, the tenant must in convenient time repair it. 1 Inst. 53. a. If a lessee flings down a wall between a parlour and a chamber, by which he makes a parlour more large, it is waste; it cannot be intended for the benefit of the lessor, nor is it in the power of the lessee to transpose the house. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. So if he pulls down a partition between chamber and chamber, it is waste. Bro. Waste, 143. Or if a lessee pulls down a hall or parlour, and makes a stable of it, it is waste. 2 Roll. Abr. 815. If a lessee pulls down a garret over head, and makes it all one and the same thing, it is waste. Id. ibid. If a lessee permits a chamber fore in decays pro defectu plastrationis, per quod grossum mabiremium devenit putridum, & camera illa turpissima & foetissima devenit, action of waste lies for it. Id. ibid. So if a lessee permits the wall to be in decay for default of daubing, per quod mabiremium devenit putridum, action of waste lies. Id. ibid. Breaking of a pale or of a wall uncovered, is not waste. Bro. Waste, pl. 94. But breaking of a wall covered with thatch, and of a pale of timber covered, is waste. Id. ibid. Burning the house by negligence or mischance, is waste. 1 Inst. 53. a. But by the 6 Ann. c. 31. No action is to be prosecuted against any person in whose house or chamber, any fire accidentally begins. If the tenant do or suffer waste to be done in his house, yet if he repair them before any action brought, there lieth no action of waste against him, but he cannot plead, quod non fecit vastum, but the special matter. 1 Inst. 53. a.

Waste in things annexed to the freehold. The removing a post in a house is waste. 42 Edw. 3. 6. So the removing of a door. Id. ibid. 1 Inst. 53. So the removing of a window. 42 Edw. 3. 6. The digging up a furnace annexed to the frank-tenement, and selling it, is waste. Bro. Waste, pl. 143. The removing of a bench is waste, though annexed by the tenant himself.

Bro.

Bro. Waste, pl. 143. 1 Inst. 53. a. If waincot annexed to the house be taken away, it is waste. Id. ibid. Of tables dormant and fixed in the land, and not to the walls by termor, and taken off within his term, waste does not lie; for the house is not impaired by it. Per Kingsmill J. and Grevil Scrj. Bro. Waste, pl. 104.

Beating down a wooden wall, or suffering a brick wall to fall, is no waste, unless it be expressly alledged, that the walls were coped or covered. Dyer 108. b. pl. 31. Earl of Bedford v. Smith. If waste be assigned in pulling up a plank floor and mangers of a stable, plaintiff must shew that the same were fixed. Id. ibid. If lessee erects a partition, he cannot break it down without being liable to an action of waste, for he has joined it to the frank tenement. Mo. 178. Cooke's case. Shelves are parcel of the house, and not to be taken away; and though it is not shewed that the shelves were fixed, it ought to be intended that they were fixed. Per Coke Chief Justice. 2 Bulst. 113. Lady St. John v. Pratt. Pavement is a structure, for they use lime to finish it. Id. ibid. If the tenant suffers the groundfells to waste, in his default of defence or removing the water from off them, or of dirt or dung or other nuisance which lies or hangs upon it, the tenant shall be charged, for he is bound to keep it in as good case as he took it. Ow. 43. Strick-leborne v. Hetchman.

3. What waste shall be deemed excusable, and justifiable.

It may be observed in general, that waste which ensues from the act of God is excusable: Thus if a house falls by tempest, the tenant shall be excused in action of waste; but if it be uncovered by tempest, and stands there, if the tenant has sufficient timber to repair it, and does not, the lessor, if the lease be made on condition of re-entry for waste, may re-enter, but not immediately upon the tempest, for it is no waste 'till the tenant suffers it to be so long unrepaired, that the timber be rotted, and then it is waste. Per Hull. Br. Cond. pl. 40.

Likewise, if a house be abated by lightning, or thrown down by a great wind, it is not waste. 1 Inst. 53. a. So if apple-trees are torn up by a great wind, if lessee afterwards cuts them, it is not waste. Bro. Waste, pl. 39. If the banks are well repaired by the lessee, and the water notwithstanding subverts them, and surrounds his meadow, by which it is become rushy, it is not waste. 2 Roll. Abr. 280. Contra, 20 H. 6. c. 1. b. The lessor cannot give trees during the tenant's lease. But if he grants them to a stranger, and commands the tenant to cut and deliver them, who does it, this shall excuse him in an action of waste. And yet the tenant was not bound by law to obey and execute this command. Bro. Done, &c. 13. Tenant in tail may commit waste in houses as well as in all other parts of the estate, notwithstanding any restraint to the contrary, and no instance can be shewn, where a tenant in tail has been restrained from committing waste by injunction of the court of Chancery. Caf. Temp. Ld. Talb. 16. Glenorchy v. Bosville.

If tenant in tail grants all his estate, his grantee is punishable of waste; so such grantee's grantee is also punishable; Per Clerk J. 3 Le. 121. pl. 173. Anon. If a man devises land to two in tail, and after the one devisee dies without issue, by which the reversion in fee of one moiety reverts to the heir of the donor; but the other devisee is tenant for life of the whole, and after he commits waste, action of waste lies against him by the heir of the donor for the one moiety. New Abr. 469. But action of waste does not lie against tenant in tail after possibility, for the greatness of the estate of inheritance which was once in him; and also, as some say, because the estate was not within the statute at the creation. 11 Rep. 80. a. Lewis v. Bowles.

If lands are given to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the body of the husband, the remainder to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies begotten, and the husband dies without issue: The wife shall not be tenant in tail after possibility; for the remainder in special tail was utterly void, for that it could never take effect. For so long as the husband should have issue, it should inherit by force of the general tail; and if the husband die without issue, then the special tail cannot take effect, inasmuch as the issue which should inherit in special tail; must be begotten by the husband; and so the general, which is larger and greater, hath frustrated the special, which is lesser; and the wife, in that case, shall be punished for waste. 1 Inst. 28. b.

It has been agreed, that tenant for years may cut wood; but it has been doubted, if tenant at will may; but it seems, that as long as tenant at will is not countermanded he may cut seasonable wood, &c. Bro. Waste, pl. 114. Where a man leases a wood which consists only of great trees, the lessee cannot cut them. Hobart's Rep. Caf. 296. Nevertheless, if the lessee cuts trees for reparation, and sells them, and after buys them again, and employs them in reparation, yet it is waste by the sale. 1 Inst. 53. b. So if lessee cuts trees, and sells them for money, though with the money he repairs the house, yet it is waste. Id. ibid. As to the cutting of timber-trees for repairs by lessee, there is no difference whether the lessor or lessee covenants to repair the houses; for in either case it is not waste, if lessee cuts them. Mo. 23. pl. 88. Anon.

If a house be prostrated by enemies of the King, or such like, without default of the lessee, the lessee may rebuild it again with the same materials that remain, and may cut other timber upon the land to rebuild it, but he must not make the house larger than it was. 1 Inst. 53. a. So if the house was ruinous at the time of the lease, and fell within the term, this is not waste in the tenant. 1 Inst. 53. a. Bro. Waste, pl. 130. But the lessee shall not cut trees to make a new house where there was not any at the time of the lease. Hobart's Rep. Caf. 296. So if a lessee suffers a house to fall for default of covering, which is waste, he cannot cut trees to repair the house. Br. Waste, pl. 39. And in general, if the tenant suffer the house to be wasted, he cannot justify the felling of timber to repair it. 1 Inst. 53. b. If a house be ruinous at the time of the lease, though the lessee is not bound to repair it, yet he may cut trees to repair it, 1 Inst. 54. b. The tenant may likewise dig for gravel or clay for the reparation of the house, though the soil was not open when the tenant came in; and it is justifiable as well as cutting of trees. 1 Inst. 53. b. So with regard to a stable, if it fall without default of the lessee in time of the lessor, the lessee take trees of the heir to make a new stable, if it be of necessity. Bro. Waste, pl. 67. But if the stable falls in default of the lessee, in time of the lessor, he cannot in time of the heir cut trees to make a new stable. Br. Waste, pl. 67.

Cutting wood to burn, where the tenant has sufficient hedge wood is waste. F. N. B. 59. (M.) Where lessee for years has power to take hedge-boot by assignment, yet he may take it without assignment; for the affirmative does not take away the power which the law gives him. Dy. 19. pl. 115. If lessor excepts his trees in his lease, the lessee shall not have fire-boot, hay-boot, &c. which he should have otherwise; and the property of the trees is in the lessor himself. 4 Le. 162. pl. 269. Sir Richard Lowkner's case. Yet it has been said, that lessee for years, the trees being excepted, has liberty to take the shrouds and loppings for fire-boot; but if he cuts any tree, it shall be waste, as well for the lopping as for the body of the tree. Noy 29. Rich v. Makepeace. If a tenant that has fire-boot to his house in another man's land, cuts wood for that intent to make his boot-wood, and the owner of the land takes it away, an action of trover and conversion lies against him by the tenant of the land who hath such fire-boot. Clayt. 40. pl. 69. Coram Berkeley, Anon. See Dyer 36. pl. 38. Clayt. 47. pl. 81. 1 Lev. 171. Cutting of dead wood is no waste. F. N. B. 59. (M.)

If a man leases lands with general words of all mines of coals, where there is not any mine of coals open at the time of the demise, and after the lessee opens a mine, he cannot justify the cutting of timber-trees for making punchions, corfes, roll-scoops, and other utensils in and about the mine, though without them he could not dig and get the coals out of the mine: And this is like a new house built after the demise, for the reparation of which he cannot take timber upon the land; and it had been been waste to open it, if it had not been granted by express words: And it was said by Hobart, that the law had been the same if the mine was open at the time of the demise. Hobart's Rep. c. 296. Lady Darcy v. Ashwith. And see Hutt. 19. where the case is more fully reported.

4. Who may bring an action of waste, and against whom it may be brought.

By Stat. 13 Edw. 1. cap. 28. the action of waste is given to one tenant in common against another.

Where there are tenants in common for life, the one shall not have trespass of trees cut against the other, but shall have waste pro indiviso, though they are only tenants for term of life, &c. but the one may have trespass of corn cut against the other. Br. Waste, pl. 79. Qu. If one coparcener before partition makes feoffment to another, and one of them does waste in the trees, waste lies. 11 Rep. 49. a. Lifford's case. Likewise, if two jointenants do waste, and after the one enters into religion, waste lies against the other alone. 2 Roll. Abr. 828.

By the 20 Edw. 1. Stat. 2. An action of waste is maintainable by the heir for waste done in the time of his ancestor, as well as for waste done in his own time.

This action must be brought by him that hath the immediate estate and inheritance in fee-simple or fee-tail, but sometimes another may join with him. 1 Inst. 53. a. 285. a. It is said, that the reversion must continue in the same state that it was at the time of the waste done, and not granted over; for 'tho' the reversioner taketh the estate back again, the action is gone, because the estate did not continue: But in some special cases an action of waste shall lie; tho' the lessor had nothing in the reversion at the time of the waste done: for if a bishop makes a lease for life or years and dies, and the lessee, the fee being void, doth waste, the successor shall have an action of waste. This is allowed, though the statute of 20 Edw. 1. speaks of those that are inheritors. 1 Inst. 53. b. 356. a. 2 Roll. Abr. 825.

A tenant for life cannot have this action, but a parson, &c. may have an action of waste, and the writ shall say, Ad exheredationem ecclesie, for it is the dowry of the church. If a tenant doth waste, and he in reversion dieth, the heir shall not have an action of waste for waste done in the life of the ancestor: For he cannot say that the waste was done to his disinherison, neither shall a bishop, master of an hospital, parson, &c. have an action of waste done in the time of their predecessors. 1 Inst. 341. a. 1 Inst. 53. b. 356. a. If a lease is made to A. for life, the remainder to B. for life, remainder to C. in fee; no action of waste lieth against the first lessee during the estate in the mean remainder, for then his estate would be destroyed. Otherwise if B. had a mean remainder for years, for that would be no impediment, the recovery not destroying the term of years. 5 Rep. 76, 77. 1 Inst. 54. a.

If lessee for years commit waste, and the years do expire, yet the lessor shall have an action of waste for treble damages, tho' he cannot recover the place wasted; but if the lessor accepteth of a surrender of a lease after the waste done, he shall not have his action of waste. It is said that if a tenant repairs before action brought, he in reversion cannot have an action of waste; but he cannot plead that he did no waste, therefore he must plead the special matter. 1 Inst. 283. a. 285. a. 306. 5 Rep. 119. 2 Cro. 658. Likewise, by 11 H. 6. c. 5. where tenants for life, or for another's life, or for years, grant over their estates, and take their profits to their own use, and commit waste, they in reversion may have an action of waste against them. 2 Inst. 302. He in the remainder as well as the reversioner may bring this action, and every assignee of the first lessee, mediate or immediate, is within this act, 5 Rep. 77. Page's case. 2 Inst. 302.

It has been said, that there are five writs of waste, two at the Common law, as for waste done by tenant in dower, or by guardian; three by statute, as against tenant for life, tenant for years, and tenant by the curtesy. It has been said however, that tenant by the curtesy was punishable for waste by the Common law, for that the law created his estate as well as that of the tenant in dower, and therefore the law gives like remedy against them. 1 Inst. 54. a. 2 Inst. 145, 299, 301, 305. But on this subject the authorities in the books are very contradictory, as the reader will perceive by attending to the note subjoining to the following clause of the statute of Gloucester, 6 Ed. 1. cap. 5. which enacts, that "A man from henceforth shall have a writ of waste in the Chancery against him that holdeth by the law of England, or otherwise for term of life, or for term of years, or a woman in dower."

No action of waste lay before the statute of Gloucester, but against tenant in dower and guardian, and by the statute, action of waste is given against the tenant by the curtesy, tenant for term of life, and tenant for term of years. Br. Waste, pl. 88. Lord Coke says, a reason is required, (that seeing as well the estate of the tenant by the curtesy, as the tenant in dower are created by act in law,) wherefore the prohibition of waste did not lie as well against tenant by the curtesy as the tenant in dower, at the Common law; and the reason he assigns is this, for that by having issue the state of the tenant by the curtesy, is originally created, and yet after that he shall do homage alone in the life of the wife, which proves a larger estate; and seeing that at the creation of his estate he might do waste, the prohibition of waste lay not against him after his wife's decease; but in the case of tenant in dower, she is punishable of waste at the first creation of her estate. 2 Inst. 145. But 2 Inst. 299. says, that at the Common law, waste was punishable in three persons, (viz.) tenant in dower, tenant by the curtesy, and the guardian, but not against tenant for life or tenant for years; and the reason of the diversity was, for that the law created their estates and interest; and therefore the law gave remedy against them; but tenant for life and for years came in by demise and lease of the owner of the land, &c. and therefore he might in his demise provide against the doing of waste by his lessee; and if he did not, it was his negligence and default.

Shall have a writ of waste] Neither this act, nor the statute of Murlebridge, doth create new kind of waste, but gives new remedies for old wastes; and what is waste, and what is not, must be determined by the Common law. 2 Inst. 300, 301.

Against him] If two are jointenants for years or for life, and one of them does waste, this is the waste of them both as to the place wasted, notwithstanding the words of the act are, (him that holds). 2 Inst. 302.

Holds by the law of England] Here tenant by the curtesy is named for two causes. 1st, For that albeit the common opinion was, that an action of waste did lie against him, yet some doubted of the same in respect to this word, (tenet) in the writ, for that the tenant by the curtesy did not hold of the heir, but of the lord Paramount; and after this act, the writ of waste grounded thereupon doth recite this statute; 2dly, for that greater penalties were inflicted by this act than were at the Common law. 2 Inst. 301.

Or otherwise for term of life, or for term of years] A lessee for his own life, or for another man's life, is within the words and meaning of this law, and in this point this act introduces that which was not at the Common law. 2 Inst. 301. If some lessee for life takes husband, the husband does waste, the wife dies, the husband shall not be punished by this law; for the words of this act be (a man that holds, &c. for life) and the husband held not for life; for he was seized but in right of his wife, and the estate was in his wife. 2 Inst. 301. He that hath an estate for life by conveyance at Common law, or by limitation of use, is a tenant within the statute. 2 Inst. 302. Tenant for years of a moiety, 3d or 4th part, pro indiviso, is within this act; and so it is of a tenant by the curtesy, or other tenant for life of a moiety, &c. 2 Inst. 302.

Or a woman in dower] This is to be understood of all the five kinds of dowers whereof Littleton speaks, viz. dower at Common law, dower by the custom, dower ad ossium ecclesie, dower ex assensu patris, and dower de la plus beale; and against all these the action of waste did lie lie at the Common law. 2 Inst. 303. If tenant in dower be of a manor, and a copyholder thereof commits waste, an action of waste lies against tenant in dower. 2 Inst. 303. Action of waste lies against an occupant for life, because he has the estate of the lessee for life, and holds for life, as the statute mentions. 6 Rep. 37. b. Dean and chapter of Worcester. If a lessee for life be attainted of treason, by which the lease is forfeited to the King, who grants it over to I. S. and he afterwards does waste, though he comes en le poss. yet action of waste lies against him. 2 Roll. Abr. 826. So if a man disseises the tenant for life, and does waste, yet action of waste lies against the tenant for term of life; for he may have his remedy over against the disseisor. Br. Waste, pl. 138. Likewise, if an estate be made to A. and his heirs, during the life of B. A. dies, the heir of A. shall be punished in an action of waste. 1 Inst. 54. a.

But an action of waste does not lie against tenant by statute merchant, elegit or staple, because it is not an estate for life or years, and the statute mentions those who hold in any manner for life or years. Contra, Fitzb. Nat. 58 H. and there said, that in the register is a writ against him. 6 Rep. 37. Some books give the reason of it to be, because the consolor, if he commits waste, may have a venire facias ad computandum, and the waste shall be recovered in the debt. Fitz. Nat. 58. b. (K.) If a man makes a lease for years, and puts out the lessee, and makes a lease for life, and the lessee for years enters upon the lessee for life, and does waste, the lessee for life shall not be punished for it. 2 Inst. 303. If lessee for years makes a lease of one moiety to A. and of the other moiety to B. and A. does waste; the action shall be against both; for the waste of the one is the waste of the other. Brownl. 238. Anon.

An action of waste lies against a devisee, and the writ may suppose it ex legatione, for it is within equity of the statute. Br. Waste, pl. 132. If an estate of land to be made to baron and feme, to hold to them during the coverture. &c. if they waste, the feoffor shall have writ of waste against them. Lit. sect. 381. If feme lessee for life marries, and the husband does waste, action lies against both. 2 Roll. Abr. 827. And if in the above case, the husband dies, action of waste lies against the feme for the waste he committed. Id. ibid.

But if tenant in dower marries, and the husband does waste and dies, the feme shall not be punished for this. Id. ibid. Likewise, if baron and feme are lessees for life, and baron does waste, and dies, the feme shall be punished in waste, if she agrees to the estate. Id. ibid. 1 Inst. 54. Kel. 113. But if she waives the estate, she shall not be charged. 2 Roll. Abr. 827. So upon lease for years made to the baron and feme, waste lies against both. Id. ibid. And if baron and feme are joint lessees for years, and baron does waste, and dies, action of waste lies for this against the feme. Id. ibid. Upon lease for life, to baron and feme, waste lies against both. Id. ibid. Likewise, if feme commits waste, and then marries, the action shall be brought against both. Id. ibid. And the writ may be Quod fecerunt vastum, or Quod uxor, dum sola fuit, fecit vastum. Br. Waste, pl. 55.

If baron, seised for life of his wife in right of his wife, does waste, and after the feme dies, no action of waste lies against the baron in the tenuit, because he was seised only in right of his wife, and the frank-tenement was in the feme. 1 Inst. 54. 5 Rep. 75. b. But if the baron, possessed for years in right of the feme, does waste, and after the feme dies, action of waste lies against the baron, because the law gives the term to him. 1 Inst. 54. See Good. 4, 5, pl. 6. Ow. 45.

5. In what cases in general, waste may be restrained by injunction in equity.

If a tenant for life plant wood on the land, which is of so poisonous a quality that it destroys the principles of vegetation, without an express power in his lease, where it is usual to have such powers, it may be considered as waste, and the court of Chancery may grant an injunction. 5 New Abr. 493. MSS. Rep. Marquis of Powis v. Derall, Canc.

If there be lessee for life, remainder for life, the reversion or remainder in fee, and the lessee in possession wastes the lands, though he is not punishable for waste by the Common law, by reason of the mean remainder for life; yet he shall be restrained in Chancery, for this is a particular mischief. Moor 554. S. P. 1 Vern. 23. S. P.

But if such lessee has in his lease an express clause of without impeachment of waste, he shall not be enjoined in equity. 1 Vern. 23.

If A. is tenant for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to first and other sons of B. in tail male, remainder to B. in tail, &c. and B. (before the birth of any son) brings a bill against A. to stay waste, and A. demurs to this bill, because the plaintiff had no right to the trees, and no one that had the inheritance was party; yet the demurrer will be over-ruled, because waste is to the damage of the publick, and B. is to take care of the inheritance for his children, if he has any, and has a particular interest himself, in case he comes to the estate. Dawp. v. Chapnes, 1 Eq. Caf. Abr. 400. See ibid. Cook v. Whaley, and Carew v. Carew.

It seems to be a general principle, that tenant in tail, after possibility, shall be restrained in equity from doing waste by injunction, &c. because the court will never see a man disinherited; per Chan. Finch. And he took a diversity where a man is not punishable for waste, and where he hath a right to do waste; and cited Uvedale's case, 24 Car. 1. Ruled by lord Roll, to warrant that distinction. 2 Show. 69. pl. 53. Abraham v. Bubb.

A. devised lands, on which timber was growing, to his wife for life, remainder to B. in fee, paying several legacies within a limited time, and in default of payment, the remainder to C. he paying the legacies; and on a bill brought by B. the court gave him leave to cut timber for the payment of the legacies, though it was opposed by the tenant for life and the devisee over, he making satisfaction to the widow for breaking the ground by carriage, waste, &c. 2 Vern. 152. Claxton v. Claxton. See ib. 218. Affinwale v. Leigh & al.

A lease without impeachment of waste takes off all restraint from the tenant of doing it; and he may in such case pull up, or cut down wood or timber, or dig mines, &c. at his pleasure, and not be liable to any action. Plowd. 135. But though the tenant may let the houses be out of repair, and cut down trees, and convert them to his own use; yet where a tenant in fee-simple made a lease for years without impeachment of waste, it was adjudged that the lessor had still such property, that if he cut and carried away the trees, the lessee could only recover damages in action for the trespass, and not for the trees: Also it hath been held, that tenant for life, without impeachment of waste, if he cuts down trees, is only exempt from an action of waste, &c. 11 Rep. 82. 1 Inst. 220. 2 Inst. 146. 6 Rep. 63. Dyer 184. And if the words are, to hold without impeachment of waste, or any writ or action of waste, the lessor may seize the trees, if the lessee cuts them down, or bring trover for them. Wood's Inst. 574.

In many cases, likewise, the court of Chancery will restrain waste through the lease, &c. be made without impeachment of waste. For,—the clause of without impeachment of waste, never was extended to allow the destruction of the estate itself, but only to excuse for permissive waste, and therefore such a clause would not give leave to fell or cut down trees ornamental or sheltering of a house, much less to destroy or demolish a house itself. See 5 New Abr. 495. MSS. Rep. in Chan. 1744. Packington v. Packington, and 2 Freem. Rep. 53. Abraham v. Bubb. Where A., on the marriage of his eldest son, in consideration of 10,000*l.* portion, settled (inter alia) Raby castle on himself for life, without impeachment of waste, remainder on his son for life, and to his first and other sons in tail male; afterwards, having taken some displeasure to his son, he got 200 workmen together, and of a sudden stripped the castle of the lead, iron, glass, doors, and boards, &c. to the value of 3000*l.* And the court, on the son's filing his bill, granted an injunction to stay committing waste in pulling down the castle, and upon hearing the cause, not only the injunction to continue, but that the castle should be repaired, and put in the same condition it was in; and for that purpose a commission was to issue to ascertain what ought to be repaired, and a master to see it done at the charge and expence of the father, and the son to have his costs. 2 Vern. 738, 739. 1 Colk. 161. 6. What relief may be given in equity, in cases of waste.

A bill was brought to restrain tenant in dower from getting peat; Lord Chancellor dismissed it with costs, as it appeared to be vexatious; the peat she sold not being above the value of 10*d.* But herein it was said, that digging peat is in many places the ordinary boot; and perhaps the only fruit that can rise from the land. They do not carry away the soil, for they dig off the turff, then take away the peat, and lay the turff down again: And the tenant for life can no more dig peat to sell, than cut down timber to sell; and the Chancellor said, if he was to give any relief, he must direct an issue; but that the cause was of too frivolous a nature to maintain the expence. 5 New Abr. 496. MSS. Rep. Wilson v. Bragg. 1742. Vide 2 Vern. 392. Hanson v. Derby.

A tenant for life, remainder to trustees to preserve, &c. remainder to C. the plaintiff in tail, remainder over, with power to A. with consent of trustees, to fell timber, and the money arising to be vested in lands, &c. to the same uses, &c. A. felled timber to the value of 3000*l.* without consent of trustees, who never intermeddled; and A. had suffered some of the houses to go out of repair, C. by bill prayed an account and injunction. The master of the rolls said, that the timber might be considered under two denominations, to wit, such as was thriving and not fit to be felled; and such as was unthriving; and what a prudent man and good husband would fell, &c. and ordered the master to take an account, &c. and the value of the former, which was waste, and therefore belongs to the plaintiff, who is next in remainder of the inheritance, is to go to the plaintiff, and the value of the other is to be laid out according to the settlement, &c. but as to repairs, the court never interposes in case of permissive waste, either to prohibit or give satisfaction, as it does in case of wilful waste; and where the court hath jurisdiction of the principal, viz. the prohibiting, it does in consequence give relief for waste done, either by way of account, as for timber felled, or by obliging the party to rebuild, &c. as in case of houses, &c. and mentioned Lord Bernard's case as to Raby Castle. 2 Vern. 738. But as to repairs, it was objected, that the plaintiff here had no remedy at law by reason of the demesne estate for life to the trustees, between plaintiff's remainder in tail, and the defendant's estate for life, and that therefore equity ought to interpose, &c. and that it was a point of conscience. Sed non allocatur. 5 New Abr. 496. MSS. Rep. Mish. vac. 1733. Castlemain v. Lord Craven.

A lord of a manor may bring a bill for an account of oar dug, or timber cut by the defendant's testator. Thus,

A customary tenant of lands, in which was a copper mine, that never had been opened, opened the same, and dug out and sold great quantities of oar, and died; and his heir continued digging and disposing of great quantities out of the same mine. The lord of the manor brought a bill in equity against the executor and heir, praying an account of the said oar; and alledged that these customary tenants were as copyhold tenants, and that the freehold was in the plaintiff as lord of the manor and owner of the soil; and that the manner of passing the premises, was by surrender into the hands of the lord, to the use of the surrendree. It was insisted for the defendants, that it did not appear, that the admittance in this case was to hold ad voluntatem domini secundum consuetudinem, &c. without which words, it was insisted, that there could be no copyhold, as had been adjudged in Lord Ch. J. Hell's time. And Lord Chan. Cowper said it would be a reproach to equity to say, that where a man has taken another's property, as oar, or timber, and disposed of it in his life-time, and dies, there should be no remedy. P. Will. Rep. 406. pl. 112. Bishop of Winchester v.

Knight. Vide Fin. Rep. 135. Wile v. Sir Ed. Stradling. 2 Vern. 263. pl. 247.

One seised in fee of lands in which there were mines, all of them unopened, by a deed conveyed those lands, and all mines, waters, trees, &c. to trustees and their heirs, to the use of the grantor for life, (who soon after died) remainder to the use of A. for life, remainder to his first, &c. son in tail male successively; remainder to B. for life, remainder to his first, &c. son in tail male successively, remainder to his two sisters C. and D. and the heirs of their bodies, remainder to the grantor in fee. A. and B. had no sons, and C. one of the sisters died without issue, by which the heir of the grantor as to one moiety of the premises, had the first estate of inheritance: A. having cut down timber and sold it, and threatened to open the mines; the heir of the grantor, being seised of one moiety ut supra, by the death of one of the sisters without issue, brought his bill for an account of the moiety of the timber; and to stay A's opening of any mine: And it was adjudged the right to this timber belongs to those, who at the time of its being severed from the freehold, were seised of the first estate of inheritance, and the property becomes vested in them. 2 P. Will. 240. H'isfield v. Bewit.

A bill was brought against the executors of a jointress, to have a satisfaction out of assets for permissive waste upon the jointure of the testatrix, &c. But by Cowper J. the bill must be dismissed, for here is no covenant that the jointress shall keep the jointure in good repair; and in the common case, without some particular circumstances, there is no remedy in law or equity for permissive waste after the death of the particular tenant. Fin. Abr. tit. Waste, p. 523. cites MSS. Rep. 1 Geo. 1. in Canc. Turner v. Buck.

It has been said in equity, that remainder-man for life shall, in waste, recover damages in proportion to the wrong done to the inheritance, and not in proportion only to his own estate for life. 1 Vern. 158. Brown v. Brown.

A. being tenant for ninety-nine years, if he should so long live, with trustees to preserve remainder to his first and other sons in tail, remainder to B. in tail. A. and B. before issue born of A. fell timber. The eldest son of A. afterwards bring his bill, for an account and satisfaction of the timber against B. Per Lord Chan. Plaintiff has no remedy at law either in his own name, or in the name of his trustees. A. if he had not consented to it, should have brought trespass; for tenant for years is considered as a fiduciary for remainder-man or his lessor. If A. had had an estate for life, and no limitation to trustees, the plaintiff could have had no remedy; because tenant for life might have barred, or surrendered the whole estate to the remainder-man: But here the freehold was in the trustees; and the possession of lessee for years is in law the possession of the owner of the freehold. The trustees however could not here have maintained waste, because the Common law gave no action of waste, but to the owner of the inheritance; and the statute of Gloucester gives the writ to the same person; but the trustees are in no other condition than remainder-man for life. Trustees may bring a bill in equity to stay waste, before the contingent remainder comes in esse. If the trustees had brought such a bill, the court, as to trees actually cut, would have obliged them to have made satisfaction in money, to have been secured to attend the contingent uses. Where there is tenant for life or years subject to waste, and timber is blown down, the owner of the first remainder in tail vested, shall have it; for the Common law considers an estate in contingency as no estate: and when the tree is severed the property vests in somebody. If there be tenant for life, remainder for life, remainder in fee, remainder-man can have no action for waste; because plaintiff must recover the place wasted, which would be injustice to the remainder over; but such a remainder-man of the inheritance after the intervening estate may have trover for the trees, and if remainder-man for life dies in the life of remainder-man in fee, he may bring waste.—Though an injunction is a proper remedy, yet it has never been determined that a bill for an account account cannot be maintained afterwards: And tho' a recovery was suffered after waste done, it was to the use of plaintiff and his heirs, which is no new use, and ought not to bar waste in equity. It is true, action of waste dies with the person, but tho' waste will not lie at law, as the person committing it is dead, yet he may have relief in this court. It has been held in all cases of fraud, the remedy never dies with the person, but relief may be had against the executor out of assets; and this court will follow the assets of the party liable to the demand; and collusion in this court is the same as fraud. Decreed a satisfaction to be made to the plaintiff for the value of the timber, as he is now tenant in fee of the estate; but would not give any interest, as that would be carrying it too far. *5 New Abr. 499. 7. Of the process, &c. in waste.

The process incident to action of waste, is first a writ of summons made by the curitor of the county where the land lies, and on the return of this writ the defendant may essoign, and the plaintiff adjourn, &c. Then a pone is to be made out by the filazer of the county, on the return of which a distingas issues for the defendant to appear, and upon his appearing the plaintiff declares, and the defendant pleads, &c. Or if the defendant makes default, a writ of enquiry goes to the sheriff to enquire by the oath of twelve jurors what damage the plaintiff hath sustained, and then the party hath judgment to recover the treble of it; also after judgment entered, a writ of seisin is awarded to the sheriff to give possession to the plaintiff of the place wasted. Comp. Attorn. 250, 251, 258, 259. And a plaintiff shall have costs in all actions of waste, where the damages found do not exceed twenty nobles, which he could not by the Common law. Stat. 8 Ed. 9 W. 3. c. 11. A common writ of waste is of this form. *GEORGE the Third, &c. There are two sorts of weights in use with us, viz. Troy-weight and Averdupois: Troy-weight contains twelve ounces to the pound, and no more; by which are weighed gold, silver, pearl, jewels, medicines, silk, wheat-bread, &c. and Averdupois contains sixteen ounces in the pound, by which grocery wares, copper, iron, lead, flesh, cheese, butter, tallow, hemp, wool, &c. are weighed: and here twelve pounds over are allowed to every hundred, so as one hundred and twelve pounds make the hundred weight. Dalt. 248. In the composition of Troy-weight, twenty pennyweights make an ounce; twenty-four grains a pennyweight, twenty mites a grain, twenty-four droits a mite, twenty perits a droit, and twenty-four blanks a perit: And the Troy-weight is said to be 20 s. sterling in the pound; and the Averdupois weight 25 s. sterling. 4 Shep. Abr. 194. Fleta mentions a weight, called a Tromeweight, being the same with what we now call Troy-weight; and according to the same author, all our weights have their composition from the penny sterling, which ought to weigh thirty-two wheat-corns of the middle sort; twenty of which pence make an ounce, and twelve such ounces a pound; but fifteen ounces make the merchants pound. Fleta lib. 2. c. 12. By Magna Charta, 9 H. 3. c. 25. 14 Ed. 3. c. 12. 25 Ed. 3. c. 10. 27 Ed. 3. &c. There is to be but one weight, &c. throughout the kingdom; but this is to be understood of the same species of goods, otherwise the Troy and Averdupois weights would not be permitted. Every city, borough and town, shall have a common balance, with common weights sealed; on pain of 10 l. in the city, 5 l. the borough, and 40 s. the town. 8 H. 6. c. 5. But only cities and market-towns are enjoined to have common balances, weights and measures, by 11 H. 7. c. 4. And by this statute, weights are to be marked by the chief officers of places, and sealed, &c. Refusing or delaying to do it, is liable to a penalty of 40 s. And allowing weights not agreeable to the standard, incurs a forfeiture of 5 l. &c. And the mayors and such officers are once a year to view all weights and measures, and burn and destroy those which are defective; also fine the offenders, &c. And two justices of peace have power to hear and determine the defaults of mayors. See the statutes 17 Car. 1. c. 19. 22 Car. 2. c. 8. &c. and vide Measure.

Weights of Bunel, mentioned in stat. 14 Ed. 3. H. 1. c. 12. See Auncel-weight.

Wend, (Wendus, i. e. Perambulatio, from the Sax. Wend) Signifies a certain quantity or circuit of ground. Rental. Regal. Maner. de Wye, pag. 31.

Were, (Sax. Wera) Is the sum paid in ancient time for killing a man, when such crimes were punished with pecuniary mulcts, not death: Or, it is pretium redemptionis of the offender. 12g. Ed. Conf. cap. 11.

Werelada, (from the Sax. Wera, i. e. Pretium Capitis Hominis Occisi, & Ladian purgare) Was where a man was slain, and the price at which he was valued not paid to his relations; but the party denied the fact; when he was to purge himself by the oaths of several persons, according to his degree and quality, which was called Werelada. Leg. H. 1. c. 12.

Wergild, (Wergildus) The price of homicide; paid partly to the King for the loss of a subject, partly to the lord whose vassal he was, and partly to the next of kin of the person slain. LL. H. 1. See Black. Com. 4 V. 188, 308, 406.

West-Saxonlage, Was the law of the West-Saxons. See Merchenlage, and Black. Com. 1 V. 65. 4 V. 405.

Westminster, (Westmonasterium, Sax. West-mynster, i. e. Occidentale Monasterium) The ancient seat of our Kings; and is now the well known place where the High Court of Parliament, and courts of judicature sit: It had great privileges granted by Pope Nicholas; among others, Ut amplius in perpetuum Regie constitutionis locus sit atque repository regium insignium. 4 Inst. 255. Whale-fishing, In the northern seas, &c. See Greenland.

Wharf, (Wharfa) A broad plain place, near some creek or haven, to lay goods and wares on that are brought to or from the water. 12 Car. 2. c. 4.

Wharfage, (Wharfagium) Is money paid for landing of goods at a wharf, or for shipping and taking goods into a boat or barge from thence: It is mentioned in the statutes 17 H. 8. c. 26. and 22 Car. 2. c. 11.

Wharfs. By statutes 1 Eliz. c. 11. and 13 & 14 Car. 2. c. 11. sect. 14. the crown is enabled by commission to ascertain the limits of all ports, and to assign proper wharfs and quays in each port, for the exclusive landing and loading of merchandize. Vide the Statutes.

Wharfinger, Is he that owns or keeps a wharf: 12 Car. 2. and 22 Car. 2. And wharfingers commonly keep boats or lighters of their own, for the carrying out and bringing in of goods, in which if a loss or damage happens, they may in some cases be made answerable. Lex Mercat. 133.

Whiniard, A sword, from the Sax. Winn, i. e. to get, and Are honour; because honour is gained by the sword.

Whipping, A punishment inflicted for many of the smaller offences.

White-ashes. None shall ship, lade, or convey away any white-ashes, to parts beyond sea, under the penalty of 6 s. 8 d. a bushel. Stat. 2 & 3 Ed. 6. cap. 6.

Whitehart-Silver, Is a mulct on certain lands in or near the forest of Whitehart, paid yearly into the Exchequer imposed by King Hen. 3. upon Thomas de la Linde, for killing a beautiful white hart which that King before had spared in hunting. Camb. Brit. 150.

White-meats, Are milk, butter, cheese, eggs, and any composition of them, which before the reformation were forbid in Lent as well as flesh, till King Hen. 8. published a proclamation allowing the eating of white-meats in Lent. Anno 1543.

White-Rent, A duty or rent payable by the tinners in Devonshire to the Duke of Cornwall. See Quit-Rent.

White-Rents. Payments or chief rents reserved in silver or white money, called white-rents or blanch-farms, reditus albi; in contradistinction to rents reserved in work, grain, &c. Black. Com. 2 V. 42.

White-spurs, A kind of Esquires called by this name.

Whitstontide, The feast of Pentecoste, being the fiftieth day after Easter: And is so called, saith Blount, because those who were newly baptized came to the church between Easter and Pentecoste in white garments. Blount's Dict.

Whitson-farthings, Mentioned in letters patent of King Hen. 8. to the Dean of Worcester. See Pentecostials.

White-straits, A kind of coarse cloth in Devonshire, about a yard and half a quarter broad, raw, mentioned in Stat. 5 H. 8. c. 2.

Whole-blood. A kinsman of the whole blood is he that is derived, not only from the same ancestor, but from the same couple of ancestors. See Black. Com. 2 V. 227.

Wille, A place on the sea-shore, on the bank of a river. 1 Inst. 4. But it more properly signifies a town, village, or dwelling-place; and it is often in the Saxon language made a termination to the name of the town, which had a complete name without it, as Lunden-wic, i. e. London town; so Ipswich is written in some old charters Villa de Gippo Wico, which is the same thing, for Gipps is the name, and Gipps Wic is Gips Town.

Wicca, A country house or farm, and there are many such houses now called the Wick and the Wike. Cartular. Abbat. Glaston. pag. 29.

Wichencrif, A Saxon word for witchcraft, which occurs in the laws of K. Canut. cap. 27.

Widow, (Vidua, Relicta) A married woman bereft of her husband, left all alone. Litt. The widow of a freeman of London, may use her husband's trade, so long as she continues a widow. Chart. K. Cha. I.

Widow's-Chamber. In London the widow of a freeman, is, by the custom of the city, intitled to her apparel, and the furniture of her bed-chamber, called the Widow's Chamber.

Widow of the King, (Vidua Regis) Was she that after her husband's death, being the King's tenant in capite, could not marry again without the King's consent. Staudf. Prærog. cap. 4. Stat. 17 Edw. 2. and 32 H. 8. cap. 46.

Wife, (Uxor) Is a woman married; and after marriage the will of the wife, in judgment of law, is subject to the will of the husband; and it is said a wife hath no will, sed fulget radiis mariti. Plowd. 344. 4 Rep. A wife cannot contract for any thing; or bring actions, &c. without her husband. See Baron and Feme. Wife granted to another, vide Dower.

Wigrebe, (From the Sax. Wig, i. e. Sylva, and Grewa, Præpositus) The overseer of a wood. Spelm.

Wight Island, Was anciently called Gnith by the Britains; whence it had many other names, as Ista, Wotha, &c. Law Lat. Diff. See Stat. 4. Hen. 7. c. 16.

Wild-fowl, Are not to be destroyed by nets or otherwise, nor their eggs taken, under divers penalties by Stat. 25 Hen. 8. c. 11. 1 Jac. 1. c. 17. 9 Ann. c. 25. Vide Game.

Will, Deft of. An involuntary act, as it hath no claim to merit, so neither can it induce any guilt: The concurrence of the will, when it hath its choice either to do, or to avoid the fact in question, being the only thing that renders human actions either praise-worthy or culpable. See Black. Com. 4 V. 20, 21. But note, trespasses will lie for an accidental hurt.

Will, Estates at. An estate at will is where lands or tenements are let by one man to another, to have and to hold at the will of the lessor; and the tenant by virtue of this lease obtains possession. Every estate at will is at the will of both parties, landlord and tenant, so that either of them may determine his will, and quit his connections with the other at his own pleasure. Note, if tenant at will sows his lands, and the landlord before the corn is reaped, puts him out, yet the tenant shall have the emblements and free ingress, egress and regress, to cut and carry away the profits. See Black. Com. 2 V. 145, 146.

Will of the Lord. Though in general copyholders are still said to hold their estates at the will of the lord, yet it is such a will as is agreeable to the custom of the manor; which customs are preserved and evidenced by the rolls of the several courts baron in which they are entered or kept on foot by the constant immemorial usage of the several manors in which the lands lie. See Black. Com. 2 V. 95, 147.

Will, vitious. In all temporal jurisdictions an overt act, or some open evidence of an intended crime, is necessary, in order to demonstrate the depravity of the will, before the man is liable to punishment. And, as a vitious will without a vitious act is no civil crime, so, on the other hand, an unwarrantable act, without a vicious will is no crime at all. So that to constitute a crime against human laws, there must be, first, a vitious will; and, secondly, an unlawful act consequent upon such vitious will. See Black. Com. 4 V. 20, 21.

Will, or Last Will and Testament, (Testamentum, ultima voluntas) Is a solemn act or instrument, whereby a person declares his mind and intention, as to the disposal of his lands, goods or effects, and what he would have done after his death. Co. Litt. 111.

1. Of wills generally, and the technical terms, &c.
2. Who are capable of making a will or testament.
3. What are the requisites, to constitute a good will.
4. Of wills to pass lands and tenements.
5. In what language a will may be written, and of the circumstances of signing, sealing, attestation and publication.
6. Of re-publishing of a will; what shall amount to a re-publication, and where a re-publication shall make a devise good.
7. What shall be a sufficient proof of a will, and in what cases devisees, legatees and creditors may be admitted to prove a will.
8. Of nuncupative wills.
9. Of the nature and effect of a will or testament and of a codicil; and how wills shall be construed.
10. Of revoking a will, and where a will shall be set aside for fraud.

1. Of wills generally, and the technical terms, &c.

The Common law calls that a will when lands or tenements are given; and where it concerns goods and chattels alone, it is termed a testament: In a will of goods there must be an executor appointed, but not of lands only without goods; an executor having nothing to do with the freehold. 1 Inst. 111. If lands are given by will, it is called a devise; and goods and chattels a legacy: And there is this diversity between lands and goods given by a will, that when lands are devised in fee, or for life, the devisee shall enter without the appointment of others: In case of goods and chattels there must be the assent of the executor, &c. Swinb. 24. If lands are given and devised by will, the will ought to be proved in the Chancery; and of goods it must be in the spiritual court: A will both of lands and goods, may be proved in the spiritual court. Ibid. A will hath not force till after the testator's decease; but then without any further grant, livery, &c. it gives and transfers estates, and alters the property of lands and goods, as effectually as any deed or conveyance executed in a man's lifetime; and hereby descents may be prevented, estates in fee-simple, fee-tail, for life or years, &c. be made: And he that takes land by devise, is in nature of a purchaser. Litt. 167. A devisee is in by act executed in the devisor's life-time, though it be not consummated till his death. Roll. Rep. And therefore a devise shall take effect, before a descent: But an heir may be in the land by descent, notwithstanding a devise made to him; and to give a thing by will to such a person to whom the law gives it, is as if it had not been given. 2 And. 11. Moor, Ca. 496. Styles, 149.

He who makes the testament, is called the testator; and when a man dies without a will, he is said to die intestate. Shep. Abr. part. 4. voc. Testament. A testamentary schedule without witnesses, or an executor, has been declared a will. 2 Lord Raym. 282. Powell v. Berresford. There are two sorts of wills or testaments: First, in writing, which is, where the mind of the testator, in his life-time, by himself, or some other by his appointment, is put in writing: Or, secondly, by word, or without writing, which is, where a man is sick, and for fear that death, or want of memory or speech, should surprize him, that he should be prevented, if he staid the writing of his testament, desires his neighbours and friends to bear witness of his last will, and then declares the same presently, by word, before them: And this is called a nuncupative or nuncupatory will or testament; and this being after the death proved by witnesses, and put in writing writing by the ordinary, is of as great force for any other thing, but land, as when at the first in the life of the testator it is put in writing. 1 Inst. 111. Perk. f. 476. Wood, part 1. 187. A codicil is also in writing or by word, as a will or testament is. The civilians have other divisions of wills and testaments, solemn and unsolemn, privileged and unprivileged, whereof the Common law makes no mention. Id. ibid.

2. Who are capable of making a will or testament.

An infant, until he be of the age of 21 years, can make no will of his lands by statute 32 H. 8. c. 1. But by special custom in some places, where land is devisable by custom, he may devise it sooner; and of his goods and chattels, if he be a boy, he may make a will at fourteen years of age, and not before; and if a maid, at twelve years of age, and not before: And then they may do it without and against the consent of their tutor, father, or guardian. 32 H. 8. c. 1. 34 H. 8. c. 5. Swinb. part 11. sect. 2.

If he or she hath attained to the last day of 14 or 12 years, the testament by him or her in the very last day of their several ages aforesaid, is as good and lawful, as if the same day were already then expired. Ibid. Likewise, if after they have accomplished these years of 14 or 12, he or she do expressly approve the testament made in their minority, the same by the new will and declaration is made strong and effectual. Swinb. part 11. sect. 2. And yet some say an infant cannot make a will of his goods and chattels until he be of 18 years age. 1 Inst. 89. b. It has however been agreed in equity, that a female may make a will at 12 years of age of a personal estate, and a male at 17 years of age or 15, if he be a person of discretion. 2 Vern. 469.

A feme covert cannot make a will of her lands and goods, except it be in some special cases: For of her lands she can make no will with or without her husband's consent, stat. 32 & 33 H. 8. c. 4. Rep. 51. Bro. Testament, 13. But of the goods and chattels she has, as executrix to any other, she may make an executor without her husband's consent; for if she does not so, the administration of them must be granted to the next akin to the deceased testator, and shall not go to the husband. 12 H. 7. c. 24. Perk. sect. 502. Fitz. Exec. 40. But now even of them she can make no devise with or without her husband's leave, for they are not devisable; and if she devises them, the devise is void. Plowd. 526.

Of the things due to the wife, whereof she was not possessed during the marriage, as things in action, and the like, she may make her will, at least she may make her husband executor of her paraphernalia, viz. her necessary wearing apparel, being that which is fit for one of her rank. Some say, she may make a will without her husband's leave, others doubt of this; however all agree, that she, and not his executor, shall have this after her husband's death; and that the husband cannot give it away from her, and of the goods and chattels her husband has either by her or otherwise, she may not make a will without the licence and consent of her husband first had so to do: But with leave and consent she may make a will of goods, and make him her executor if she will. And it is said also, that if she does make a will of his goods in truth without his leave and consent, and after her death he suffers the will to be proved, and delivers the goods accordingly, in this case the testament is good: And yet if the husband gives the wife leave to make a will of his goods, and she does so, he may revoke the same at any time in her life-time, or after her death, before the will is proved. But a woman after a contract with any man, before marriage, may make a will as well as any other, and not at all disabled hereby. 12 H. 7. c. 24. 18 Edw. 4. c. 11. Perk. sect. 501. Fitz. Exec. 28, 109. Bro. Testa. 11. Likewise, a wife, whose husband is banished by act of parliament for life, may make a will as a feme sole. 2 Vern. 104.

A mad or lunatick person, during the time of his insanity of mind, cannot make a will of lands or goods; but such a one as hath his lucida intervalla, clear or calm intermissions, may, during the time of such quietness and freedom of mind, make his will, and it will be good; Swinb. 11. f. 3. So an idiot, i. e. such an one as cannot number twenty, or tell what age he is, or the like, cannot make a will or dispose of his lands or goods; and although he make a wife, reasonable, and sensible will, yet it is void: But such a one as is of a mean understanding only, that has grossum caput, and is of the middle sort, between a wise man and a fool, is not prohibited to make a will. Id. part 11. f. 4. An old man likewise, who, by reason of his great age, is childish again, or so forgetful that he forgets his own name, cannot make a will, for a will made by such an one is void. Id. ibid. par. 11. f. 1. 6 Rep. 23. Marquis of Winchester's case. So also it seems a drunken man, who is so excessively drunk that he is deprived of the use of his reason and understanding, during that time may not make a will, for it is requisite that when the testator makes his will, he should be of sound and perfect memory, i. e. that he have a competent memory and understanding to dispose of his estate with reason. Swinb. part 11. f. 1. and sect. 6.

A man who is both deaf and dumb, and is so by nature, cannot make a will; but a man who is so by accident, may by writing or signs make a will. Id. part 11. f. 1. & 10. And so also may a man that is blind. Id. part 1. f. 1 & 11. But an alien enemy, persons convicted and attainted, and recusants convicted, cannot make a testament of lands or goods. Wood's Inst. 335. Neither may the head, or any of the members of a corporation, make a will of the lands or goods they have in common, for they shall go in succession. Fitz. Abr. Test. 1. Perk. 498.

A traitor attainted, from the time of the treason committed, can make no will of his lands or goods, for they are forfeited to the King: But after the time he has a pardon from the King for his offence, he may make a will of his lands and goods to another man. Swinb. part 11. f. 12. 5 & 6 Edw. 6. c. 11. f. 9. A man who is attainted or convicted of felony cannot make a testament of his lands or goods, for they are forfeited; but if a man be only indicted, and dies before the attainer, his will is good for his lands and goods both; and if he be indicted, and will not answer upon his arraignment, but stands mute, &c. in this case his lands are not forfeited, and therefore he may make a will of them. Swinb. part 11. f. 13. N. B. If a man kill himself, his will as to his goods and chattels is void, but as to his lands is good. Plowd. 261. Hales v. Pettit.

A man likewise, who is outlawed in a personal action, cannot make a will of his goods and chattels, so long as the outlawry continues in force, but of lands he may make a will. Swinb. part 11. f. 21. But note, that however the wills of traitors, aliens, felons, and outlawed persons are void as to the King or lord that has right to the lands or goods by forfeiture or otherwise; yet the will is good against the testator himself, and all others but such persons only. Wood, Com. v. Shep. Abr. part 4. voc. Testament. And note also, by the civil law the wills of divers others, as excommunicate persons, hereticks, usurers, incestuous persons, sodomites, libellers, and the like, are void; but by our law the wills of such persons, at least as to their lands, are good by the statutes that enable men to devise their lands. Id. ibid.

In short, all persons whatsoever, male or female, old or young, lay or spiritual, at any time before their death, whilst they are able to speak so distinctly, or write so plainly, that another may understand them, and perceive that they understand themselves, may make wills of their lands, goods and chattels, and that although they have sworn to the contrary; and none are restrained of this liberty, but such as are before named. Id. ibid.

3. What are the requisites to constitute a good will.

To constitute a good will it is necessary,

1. That the testator be a person legally capable of making a will.

2. The

2. The second thing required to the making of a good testament, is, that there be a person to take, and one that is capable; for in all gifts by devise, or otherwise, that are good, there must be a donee in esse, and not potest only, and one that shall have capacity to take the thing given, when it is to vest, or the gift shall be void. Shep. Abr. part 4. f. 13. voc. Test.

And hence it is, that where the devisee of lands or goods, or an executor of a will, doth die before the deviser, or him that makes the will, the devise and will is void, and that neither the heir or executor shall have the thing devised. Id. ibid. Plowd. 345. Brett v. Rigden. A devise to the wife for life, and after to the children unpreferred, is good. 1 And. 60. Amner v. Luddington. But a devise by a man to his heir and his heirs, is void. 2 And. 11. Garryn v. Arsfate.

One devised his lease of lands to B. his eldest son, except the sum of 140*l.* to be paid out for portions for his daughters, and made B. his executor; and held a good devise to them after this manner, and that the daughters might sue for it in the ecclesiastical court, or court of equity. Shep. part 4. p. 13. voc. Test.

If one devise to the son in tail, and if he die without issue, to the next of his name; the daughter after married cannot have it, for she is not of his name. Cro. Eliz. 532. Bon v. Smith. One seized of a manor and lands, deviseth the same to his son, and after, by another part of his will, deviseth part of the same to another of his sons; these devises are good, and they shall be joint-tenants. 3 Leo. 11.

3. That the testator, at the time of making his will, have animum testandi, i. e. a mind or serious intention to make such a will.

For it is the mind, not the words of the testator that gives life to the will: Since if a man rashly, unadvisedly, incidently, jestingly or boastfully, and not seriously, writes or says, that such a one shall be his executor, or have all his goods, or that he will give to such a one such a thing; this is no will, nor to be regarded. And the mind of the testator herein is to be discovered by circumstances; for if at the time he be sick, or sets himself seriously to make his will, or requires witnesses to bear witness of it, it shall be deemed in earnest; but if it be by way of discourse only, or somewhat he will do hereafter, or the like, it shall be taken for nothing. Swinb. part 1. f. 3.

4. That the mind of the testator in making his will be free, and not moved by fear, fraud, or flattery.

For when the testator is moved to make his testament by fear, or circumvented by fraud, or overcome by some immoderate flattery, the same is void, or at least voidable by exception: And therefore, if a man, by occasion of some present fear or violence, or threatening of future evil, does at the same time, or afterwards by the same motive, make a will, it is void, not only as to him that puts him in fear, but as to all others, altho' the testator confirms it with an oath: but if the cause of fear be some vain matter, or, being weighty, is removed, and the testator afterwards, when the fear is past, confirms the testament, in this case, perhaps, the will may be good. And if a man, by occasion of some fraud or deceit, be moved to make a will, if the deceit be such as may move a prudent man or woman, and if the end be evil also, the will is void, or voidable at the least; but if the deceit be light and small, or if it be to a good end, as where a man is about to give all his estate to some lewd person, from his wife and children, and they persuade the testator that the lewd fellow is dead, or the like, and thereby procure him to give his estate to them, this is a good will. And one may, by honest intercessions, and modest persuasions, procure another, to make himself or a stranger executor to him, or the like, and this will not hurt the will; also a man may use fair and flattering speeches to move the testator to make his will, and to give his estate unto himself or some friend of his; except it be in case where the flatterer first threatens him, or puts him in fear, or to his flattery joins fraud and deceit; or where the testator is a person of weak judgment, or under the government of the flatterer, or in danger from him; as when the physician shall persuade his patient wh-der his hand to make his will, and give his estate to himself; or the wife attending on her husband in his sickness shall neglect him, and in the mean time flatter him to give her all: Or where the persuader is importunate, and will have no denial: Or where there is another testament made before; for in all these cases, the will will be in danger to be avoided. If I be much privy to another man's mind, and he tells me often in his health how he intends to settle his estate, and he being sick, I of my own head, draw a will according to his mind, before declared to me, and bring it to him, and ask him whether this shall be his will or no; and he considers of it, and then delivers it back to me, and says, yes; this is a good will. But if otherwise, some friends of a sick man, of their own heads shall make a will, and bring it to a man in extremity of sickness, and read it to him, and ask him, whether this shall be his will, and he says, yes, yes: Or if a man be in great extremity, and his friends press him much, and so wrest words from him; especially if it be in advantage of them, or some friends of theirs; in these cases the wills are very suspicious. Id. ibid. part 11. f. 25. and part 7. sect. 2, 3, & 4.

5. That the will be made in the form prescribed by law.

4. Of wills to pass lands and tenements.

By the Common law, no lands or tenements (except by particular custom) were deviseable by any last will or testament, neither could they be transferred from one to another, but by solemn livery of seisin, matter of record or sufficient writing. Because it was presumed, that the testator would do that in extremis, that he would not do in his health; that it proceeded from the distemper of his mind by the anguish of his disease, or by finitior persuation to which in his sickness he was more subject. 1 Inst. 111. b. 1 Roll. Abr. 608.

The true reason seems to be from the nature of the feudal tenure, and the relation that was first established betwixt the lord and his tenant. For though donations after length of time were made to the tenant and his heirs, or the heirs males or females of his body, under certain duties and services, expressly reserved, or which the law created; and though the word heirs, &c. he words of limitation, and appropriated to measure out the length or continuance of the estate: yet they were always understood, the heirs of the present tenant, who being liable to the same services when they came into the tenancy, the lord was to have the tuition and education of such heirs, in case they happened, by reason of their minority to be incapable of performing the services, that so he might, by his care and discipline, secure to himself tenants always capable thereof, either in their own persons, if they happen to be males, or by proper marriages with his tenants if they proved to be females; and therefore by no act of the tenants could he dispose of the feud, so as to defeat the lord of the advantages of his seignior; and hence it was, that a tenant could not devise it even to his own heir, so as to make him a purchaser thereof; for then he coming in, not by the donation of the lord, but the disposition of the tenant, though he remained liable to the naked services, yet the lord lost the advantages of wardship, marriages, &c. which were annexed only to those who came in upon the terms of his own donation by descent. 1 Eq. Caf. Abr. 401.

The Stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 1. usually called the statute of wills, enacts, "That every person having manors, lands, &c. shall have power to give, dispose, will, and devise by will, in writing or otherwise, by act-executed in his life-time, all his said manors, &c. any law, statute &c. to the contrary notwithstanding."

There have been several resolutions concerning wills made pursuant to this statute since the making thereof: But as the Stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. (vide infra) is now the proper pattern to follow, having altered the forms, by requiring more ceremony and greater exactness, it will be sufficient barely to mention some of the cases on this statute of 32 H. 8. viz. That the lands must be free, and therefore lands purchased after a will is made will not pass. Vide Plow. 344. A devise of an authority to executors to sell fell is within the act. Moer 341. A man beyond sea wrote a letter, in which he declared his will to be, that his lands should go in such a manner; and adjudged a good will. Moer 177. So if a man had ordered one to make his will, and thereby to devise Whiteacre to A. and his heirs, and Blackacre to C. and his heirs, and he had written the devise to A. but before the devise to C. was wrote, the deviser died, yet as to A. this had been a good devise. 3 Co. 31. b. So a will was held good where a lawyer took only short note, with design to reduce it into form, which he afterwards did, but the deviser died before it was read to him. 1 And. 34. A will wrote without the appointment of the testator, if read to him, and approved by him, was held good; signing and sealing was not necessary. Cro. Eliz. 100. Dyer 72. a. 2 Leon. 35. As to signing see infra.

By the statute of frauds and perjuries, 29 Car. 2 c. 3. §. 5. All devises and bequests of any lands or tenements devisable by the statute of wills, or by any particular custom, shall be in writing, and signed by the party devising the same, or some other person in his presence, and by his express directions, and shall be attested and subscribed in the presence of the said deviser by three or four credible witnesses, or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect.

And by §. 6. "No devise in writing of lands, tenements or hereditaments, or any clause thereof, shall be revocable other than by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing declaring the same, or by burning, cancelling, tearing or obliterating the same by the testator himself, or in his presence, and by his directions and consent: But all such devises and bequests shall remain in force until the same be burnt, &c. in manner aforesaid, or unless the same be altered by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing of the deviser, signed in presence of three witnesses, declaring the same."

Therefore if a will be of lands or tenements, it must be in writing, and it must be committed to writing at the time of the making thereof; and it is not sufficient that it be put in writing after the death of the testator, being first made by word of mouth only, for then it is but nuncupative still. See Wood, part 1. 798. Dyer 72. Plowd. 345.

5. In what language a will may be written, and of the circumstances of signing, sealing, attestation and publication,

It is not material in what matter or stuff, whether in paper or parchment, nor in what language, whether in Latin, French, Dutch, or any other tongue, or in what hand or letters, whether in secretary hand, roman hand, or court hand, or in any other hand, a will be written, so that it be fair and legible, that it be read and understood; neither is it material whether the same be written at large or by notes or characters usual or unusual, as XX. for twenty, or when the figure 1 is used instead of the letter A. if it be usual in the testator's writing, or the like; for the will is good notwithstanding. So also, if some words be omitted, or improper sentence used, when the intent and meaning is apparent; as where a man says, I make my wife of this my last will and testament, leaving out the word executrix, yet the will is good; and this shall be understood. But if it be so done as it cannot be read, or by reading the mind of the testator cannot be known, then the will is void and of no force, in like manner as a nuncupative will is when the words spoken are so ambiguous, obscure, and uncertain that thereby the meaning of the testator cannot be known or understood. Swinb. part 4. §. 28.

The clauses of the 29 Car. 2. c. 3. above recited, having rendered the circumstances of signing, &c. necessary, it is next to be inquired, when, in legal construction, these requisites shall be deemed to have been complied with; which may be best collected by an attention to the following cases.

It has been held, that sealing of a will, is a signing within the statute of frauds and perjuries. 2 Str. 764.

Warnford v. Warnford. But a will in writing need not be sealed. Park. 477.

Where the testator owns his hand before the witnesses who subscribe the will in the testator's presence, the will is good, though all the witnesses did not see the testator sign; and it is observable that the statute of frauds does not say that the testator shall sign his will in the presence of three witnesses; but requires these three things, first, That the will should be in writing. Secondly, That it is signed by the testator. And thirdly, That it should be subscribed by three witnesses in the presence of the testator. 3 P. Will. 254. Stonehouse & ux' v. Evelyn. Nevertheless a will has been held to have been well executed, though it was not mentioned in the attestation to have been signed in the presence of the testator. 2 Str. 1109. Croft v. Pawlet. If a will be attested by three witnesses, who severally signed their names, not being present together; yet each signing being in the presence of the testator, makes it a good will within the statute. 2 Chan. Cases 109. Anon.

But if a man subscribes his will in the presence of two witnesses, and they subscribe it in his presence, and after makes a codicil in writing, reciting that he had made a former will and confirmed the same, (except what was excepted by the codicil) and declares, that the codicil shall be taken as part of his will, and publishes it in the presence of one of the witnesses to the first will and another new witness, this is not a good will, for there were not three subscribing witnesses in the presence of the testator; and one of the witnesses to the codicil never saw the will. Adjudged, though it was objected, the will and codicil made but one will, and the circumstance of three witnesses wanting, the will was perfected by the codicil. 3 Mod. 263. Lee v. Lib. Sed qu. So if a man makes a will in several pieces of paper, and there are three witnesses to the last paper, and none of them ever saw the first, this is not a good will. 3 Mod. 263. v. infra.

A will of lands was originally executed in the presence of two witnesses only, and at the distance of four years afterwards, the testator re-executed his will, by drawing a pen on the old strokes, in the presence of one other person, who likewise subscribed his name as a witness to it. Upon an ejectment brought by the heir at law, and on a special verdict, it was determined by the court, that this will was properly executed, and attested, under the statute of frauds and perjuries. 5 New Abr. 509. MSS. Rep. Jones v. Dale, B. R. Hill. 16 Geo. 2.

It was determined by Lord chancellor, that a will is well proved, tho' the witnesses did not see the testator sign his name; if he declares it to be his hand-writing to them, and they attest it in his presence, and in the presence of each other. 5 New Abr. 509. MSS. Rep. Grayson v. — in Chan. 25, 26 Geo. 2.

A will was attested by three witnesses, in the presence of the testator and of each other, but the testator did not write his name or put his seal in their presence, but pointed to the paper, and said, that was his will, and he had writ it, and that his name, William Ellis subscribed, was his writing and name; and laid his hand on the seal, and said, that was his seal. Determined by Lord Hardwicke, assisted by Lord Ch. J. Wilkes, Strange master of the Rolls and the Ch. Baron, on a question in this cause, whether this will so executed, was good as a revocation of a former will, under the sixth section of the statute of frauds? And held clearly that it was; it not being doubted but that it was good, as an original will, according to the authorities determined on this head, that the owning it to be his hand-writing was sufficient. 5 New Abr. 509. MSS. Rep. Ellis v. Smith, Hill. & Mich. 27 Geo. 2.

The testator desired the witnesses to go into another room, seven yards distance, to attest his will, in which there was a window broken, through which the testator might see them. And it was held, that this will was according to the statute of frauds; for tho' the statute requires attesting in his presence, to prevent obtruding any other will in the place of the true one, yet it is enough if the testator might see. It is not necessary that he should actually see them signing; for, at that rate, if a man should should but turn his back, or look off, it would vitiate the will: And the signing was in the view of the testator; he might have seen it, and that is enough. So if the testator, being sick, should be in bed and the curtain drawn. 2 Salk. 688. Shires v. Glisfcock.

But where one devised lands to I. S. and his heirs, and duly subscribed his will in the presence of three witnesses; who, for the ease of the testator, went down stairs into another room, and attested the will there, which was out of the presence of the testator; and the heir at law was prevailed on to join in a lease and release of the devised premises, in trust for the devisee; the will and the release were both set aside, for the release reciting that the will was duly executed, was suggestio falsi, and the concealing from the heir, that it was not duly executed, was suppressio veri; either of which circumstances are good reasons for setting aside a release or conveyance. 1 P. Will. 239. Broderick v. Broderick.

If the testator writes the will with his own hand, tho' he does not subscribe his name, but seal and publishes it, and three witnesses subscribe their names in his presence, it is a good will; for his name being wrote in the will it is a sufficient signing: And the statute does not direct, whether it shall be at the top, bottom, &c. and by three judges against one, sealing is a signing within the act. And note, it is not said in the act, that the signing shall be in the presence of the three witnesses at the same time. 3 Lev. 1. Lemayne v. Stanley. See Comyn's Rep. 197. Peate v. Ougley. 2 Raym. 1282.

A. by will in writing, attested by three witnesses, devised a copyhold estate to his wife: And afterwards the testator, on the day of his death, directed his nephew to obliterate some devises, but said nothing as to the copyhold devised to his wife, and then caused a memorandum to be written, that he examined, perused, and approved of the will as so obliterated and altered by his nephew, in his presence, but did not republish it in the presence of three witnesses, but directed his nephew to have it wrote out fair; but before it was brought back he became delirious; and this was held a good will as to the copyhold. 2 Vern. 498. Burkitt v. Burkitt.

It has been determined, that a trust of an inheritance must be devised in the same manner as a legal estate. Vide 2 Will. Rep. 258.—Wagstaff v. Wagstaff.

J. S. possessed of a term of five hundred years in Blackacre, afterwards purchases the fee-simple in B's name, and devises Blackacre by will, all of his own hand-writing, to C. in fee; but the will was neither dated, subscribed, or attested. Decreed per his honour, that as this was a term which would have attended the inheritance, and in equity have gone to the heir, and not to the executor, in which respect it was to be considered as part of the inheritance; so the will which was not attested by three witnesses, as the law required it to be, when land was to pass, should not carry this term. 2 Will. Rep. 236. Whitchurch v. Whitchurch.

An ejectment by the heir at law, the question for the opinion of the court was, whether it should be left to a jury to determine, whether the witnesses to a will (being all dead) set their names in the presence of the testator, and this merely upon circumstances without any positive proof? Per Cur. This is a matter fit to be left to a jury, which is all that is referred to the court. The witnesses, by the statute of frauds, ought to set their names as witnesses in the presence of the testator; but it is not required by the statute that this should be taken notice of in the subscription to the will: And whether inserted or not, it must be proved: If inserted, it does not conclude but it may be proved contra, and the verdict may find contra; then if not conclusive when inserted, the omission does not conclude it was not so, and therefore must be proved by the best proof the nature of the thing will admit. In case the witnesses be dead, there cannot probably be any express proof, since at the execution of wills few are present but the deviser and witnesses; then, as in other cases, the proof must be circumstantial, and here are circumstances. First, three witnesses have set their names, and it must be intended they did it regularly. Secondly, one witness was an attorney of good character, and may be presumed to understand what ought to be done, rather than the contrary. And there may be circumstances to induce a jury to believe, that the witnesses set their hands in the presence of the testator, rather than the contrary; and it being a matter of fact, was proper to be left to them; as whether the litem was given on a feoffment, when no livery is indorsed; whether a deed was executed when only a counterpart was produced, &c. And the court was of opinion, that the plaintiff ought to be non-suited. Comyn's Rep. 531. Hands v. James. See also Vir. Abr. tit. Devise, (N. 9.) Ca. 4. p. 128. Croft on Dem. of Dalby v. Parvles.

A will shall not be read in proof of a witness's hand, unless there be positive proof that he is dead. Comyn's Rep. 614. Bishop v. Burton.

If a copyholder, after admittance, surrenders the lands to the use of his last will, and by his will gives them to A. but the will is not attested by any witnesses; yet A. is well intitled to the lands. Per Lord Chan. Barnard. Rep. in Chan. 11, 12. Tufnell v. Page.

N. B. It was considered as sufficient to declare the uses of the surrender.

A surrender was made of a copyhold estate to trustees, to the use of the will; which was made with only two witnesses to it. It was admitted, that a will of a copyhold estate does not require three witnesses. Select Ca. in Chan. 42. Appleyard v. Wood.

A will made beyond sea, of lands in England, must be attested by three witnesses. 2 H. L. Rep. 293. See Vir. Abr. tit. Devise, (N. 2.) ca. 16. p. 119. and (N. 10.) ca. 3. p. 128.

If a testator signs his will, but delivers it as his act and deed; yet this will be a sufficient publication. Vir. Abr. tit. Devise, (N. 7.) ca. 13. pl. 125.

An uncle having devised his estate from his nephew and heir at law, a younger brother of the heir at law, at the uncle's funeral, snatched the will out of the hands of the executor, and tore it in many small pieces, but muck of them, and particularly such part wherein was the devise of the land, were picked up and stitched together again: And on a bill to have the will established, it was decreed that the devisee should hold against the heir, and he to convey to him, altho' there was no direct proof made that the heir directed the tearing of the will. 2 Vern. 441. Haynes v. Haynes.

6. Of re-publishing a will; and what shall amount to a re-publication, and where a re-publication shall make a devise good.

If a man devises certain lands, and after aliens the land to a stranger, and re-purchases; and after shews his intent, that the said will shall be his will: This is a new publication, and the land shall pass by the devise. 1 Vern. 330. Hall v. Dunch.

So the testator's saying his will was in a box in his study, amounted to a new publication. 2 Vern. 209. Cotton v. Cotton.

If a man seized of lands, devises all the lands to I. S. and afterwards purchases the manor of D. and afterwards writes his will that I. D. shall be his executor: yet this is not any new publication, to make the land pass. 1 Roll. Abr. 618.

But if after the purchase of the manor of D. he delivers the first will as his will, and says, that it shall be his will, without putting any words thereto: yet this is a new publication to make the lands newly purchased pass. Id. ibid. 1 Salk. 237.

So if a man seized of lands in D. devises to another, by his bill in writing, all his lands in D. and after purchases other lands in D. and afterwards I. S. comes to him, and requests him to give him the buying of the lands last purchased: And he answers him, that he will not, but that his intent was, that those lands should go to the executors (the devisee being made executor by the will) as his other lands should: And after the deviser causes a codicil to be written, in which there is a devise of several personal things, as corn and implements of household, and annexes it to his first will: And after dies without other publication; yet this shall be a sufficient publication to make the lands newly purchased to pass by by the will, for there need no other words in the will than there were before; and his intent appears, that it should be his will, by the annexing the codicil. 1 Roll. Abr. 618.

But if a man has issue two daughters A and B, and he devises lands to A, and to the heirs of her body, and for want of issue to B, and A dies in the life-time of the testator, having issue; tho' after the testator annexes a codicil to his will, and thereby disposes of some part of his personal estate; yet this will not amount to a republication of the will, nor give any title to the issue of A, tho' the testator had declared in his will, that B, had married against his consent, and that what he had given her, was in full of her portion, and in bar of any further part of his real estate. 1 Abr. Eq. Cases 407. 2 Fern. 722. Lutton v. Simpson.

It has been said, that if a codicil be executed after making a will and purchasing lands, it will amount to a republication, and pass the land purchased after making the will, and that it was so determined by all the judges in the case of Acherly and Vernon; which see infra, sed. 2. Unless it appears he had his real estate under consideration. 5 New Abr. 516. MSS. Rep. Gibson v. Rogers, in Chanc. Trin. 23 Geo. 2.

A, having given a legacy inter alia to his son Joseph; Joseph died, and he afterwards had another Joseph, and then by a codicil to his will, confirming his will, he took notice, that since the last, it had pleased God to give him another son, and gave him a smaller legacy. Determined, that this was a re-publication of his will, and amounted to a substituting Joseph in the place of the first; and gave him the first legacy as well as the second. MSS. Rep. Perkins v. Micklethwaite. See Cro. Eliz. 422. 1 Lev. 243. 1 Vent. 341. 2 Jones 135. Raym. 408.

J. S. after making his will, and devising his real and personal estate, to trustees, for particular purposes, purchases several fee farm-rents, assart rents, and other lands and tenements, and then by a codicil he recites that he made a will, dated 17th Jan. 1711, and then says, "I hereby ratify and confirm the said will, except in the alterations hereafter mentioned. The portion to my niece L. shall be made up 6000*l.* and what I have given to my sister and niece, shall be accepted by them in satisfaction of all they may claim out of my real and personal estate, and on condition they release all right, &c. to my executors and trustees in my will named; and thus having provided for my sister and niece, I devise all the lands by me purchased since my will, to my trustees and executors in my will named, to the same uses, and subject to the same trusts to which I have mentioned to devise the manor of H. and the bulk of my estate; and I revoke that part of my will, whereby I appoint A. B. and C. three of my trustees, in my will, and I desire K. and N. to be two of my trustees, and devise my said real estate to them accordingly." Lord Macclesfield, 20th Nov. 1723. decreed, that the will was confirmed by the codicil; that J. S. signing and publishing his codicil in the presence of three witnesses was a re-publication of his will, and both together made but one will; and by the said will and codicil, his fee-farm rents, assart rents, and lands, contracted to be purchased, and all his real and personal estate (except the copyhold purchased before his will) did well pass. On appeal to the lords, the decree was affirmed. Comyns's Rep. 381. Acherly v. Vernon.

It was determined upon the opinion of all the judges, that if a will be made, and afterwards another will without cancelling the former; and then by an act subsequent to both, the first will be confirmed, the limitations in that will so confirmed, will take place: Also that if there are two inconsistent wills of the same date, neither of which can be proved to be last executed; they are both void by the Common law for uncertainty, and will let in the heir at law: Also, that although the wills are dated the same day, the limitations may take place if they are consistent in both, to the disinherison of the heir at law: And upon this opinion, the order appealed from, which was a dismission of the plaintiff's bill in the court of Exchequer in Ireland, was confirmed in favour of Lord Anglesey, by the house of lords. 5 New Abr. 517.

MS. Rep. Phips v. Anglesea in Dom. proc. June 1751. See the printed copy.

7. What shall be a sufficient proof of a will; and in what cases devisees, legatees and creditors may be admitted to prove a will.

A written will, when it is written with the testator's own hand, proves itself, and therefore needs not the help of witnesses to prove it; and for this cause, if a man's will be found written fair and perfect, with his own hand, after his death, although it be not subscribed with his name, sealed with his seal, or have any witnesses to it, if it be known or can be proved to be his hand, it is held to be a good testament, and a sufficient proof of itself; but if it be sealed with his seal, and subscribed with the name of the testator, and can be proved by witnesses, it is more authentick; and when it is found amongst the choicest evidences of the testator, or fast locked up in a safe place, it is the more esteemed; for if it be written in another hand, and the testator's hand and seal, or one of them, not to it, although it be found in such a place as before, yet some proof will be expected of it further by witnesses in that case; and if a writing be found under the testator's own hand, yet if it be but a scribbling writing, written copywise, with a great distance between every line, without any date, in strange characters, with many interlineations, and lying amongst his void papers, or the like: This will not be esteemed a sufficient will, nor a good proof of it, but it shall be accounted rather a draught or image of the testator's will, for a direction to him after to make his will by; and yet, if it can be proved that the testator did declare himself that this should be his will, this will be a good will, and a good proof of it. Swinb. part 4. sect. 28. and part 7. sect. 13. This as to personal.

If it be proved, that the testator said his testament was in such a schedule, in the hands of J. S. and J. S. produces a writing, deposing it to be the same, this is a sufficient proof: qu. But if he says withal, it is written with his own hand, then it seems some other proof, as by comparing hands, or the like, that it is his hand wherein it is written, will be expected. Id. ibid. If the witnesses will prove the writing produced to be the last will of the testator, or that he said it was, or it should be his last will, or that it was the same writing that was shewn to them, and whereunto they are witnesses, although they never heard it read, or set their hands to it, it is a sufficient proof. Id. ib.

Where there is no question or opposition moved or had about or against a will, there the oath of the executor alone is esteemed a sufficient proof of it; and in that case regularly no other proof is required; and where more proof is necessary, it is in the discretion of the ordinary what proof to admit and allow: And those witnesses, for number, nature and quality, or such other proof that he deems and accepts for sufficient, is sufficient; and the will so proved by such witnesses, or such other proof, is sufficiently proved. 5 New Abr. 519. This as to personal.

All persons, male and female, rich and poor, are esteemed competent witnesses to prove a will, save only such as are infamous, as perjured persons, and the like; such as want understanding and judgment, as children, infants, and the like; and such as are presumed to bear affection, as kindred, tenants, servants, &c. Swinb. par. 4. sect. 24. Qu. as to the latter sort.

But an interested witness, such as a legatee, &c. was not, (before the stat. 25 Geo. 2. c. 6.) a credible witness. 5 New Abr. 519. MSS. Rep. Aussy v. Dowling. Mich. 1746. B. R.

Devisees, legatees, and creditors, are now made competent witnesses to wills, for by the act of the 25 Geo. 2. c. 6. for avoiding and putting an end to certain doubts and questions, relating to the attestation of wills and codicils, concerning real estates, in that part of Great Britain called England, and in his Majesty's colonies and plantations in America, it is enacted, That if any person shall attest the execution of any will or codicil, which shall be made after the 24th of June 1752, to whom any beneficial devise, legacy, estate, interest, gift or appointment of, or affecting any real or personal estate, (other than except charges on lands, tenements, or hereditaments, for payment of any debt or debts which shall be thereby given or made,) such devise, &c. or appointment, shall, so far only as concerns such persons attesting the execution of such will or codicil, or any person claiming under him, be utterly null and void; and such person shall be admitted as a witness to the execution of such will or codicil, within the intent of the act of 29 Car. 2. notwithstanding such devise, &c.

And it is also enacted, That in case by any will or codicil made or to be made, any lands, tenements, or hereditaments are or shall be charged with debts; and any creditor whose debt is so charged, hath attested, or shall attest, the execution of such will or codicil, such creditor shall be admitted as a witness to the execution of such will or codicil, within the intent of the said act. That if any person hath attested the execution of any will already made, or shall attest the execution of any will, &c. made on or before the 24 June 1752, to whom any legacy is or shall be thereby given, whether charged upon lands, tenements or hereditaments, or not; and such person before he shall give his testimony concerning the execution of such will, &c. shall have been paid, or have accepted or released, or shall have refused to accept such legacy or bequest, upon tender made thereof; such person shall be admitted as a witness to the execution of such will, &c. within the intent of the said act. Provided that in case of tender and refusal, such legatee shall in no wise be intitled to such legacy.

This act not to extend to the case of any heir at law, or of any devisee in a prior will or codicil of the same testator, executed and attested according to the act of 29 Car. 2. or any person claiming under them respectively, who has been in quiet possession for two years next preceding the 6th of May 1751; as to such lands, tenements, or hereditaments, whereof he has been in quiet possession as aforesaid. This act not to extend to any will or codicil, the validity or due execution whereof hath been contested in law or equity by the heir of such deviser, or devisee, in any such prior will or codicil so contested, or any part thereof, or for obtaining any other judgment or decree for the lands, &c. mentioned to be devised, in any other judgment, or decree relative thereto, on or before the said 6th of May 1751, and which has been already determined in favour of such heir at law, or devisee in such prior will or codicil, or any person claiming under them respectively, or which is still depending, and has been prosecuted with due diligence; but the validity of every such will or codicil, and the competency of the witnesses thereto, shall be adjudged and determined in the same manner as if this act had never been made.

No possession of any heir at law, or devisee in such prior will or codicil as aforesaid, or of any person claiming under them respectively, which is consistent with, or may be warranted by or under any will or codicil attested according to the intent of this act, or where the estate descended or might have descended to such heir at law, till a future or executory devise by virtue of any will or codicil attested according to this act, should or might take effect, shall be deemed to be a possession within the intent of the clause herein last contained. This act shall extend to such of the British colonies in America, where the 29 Car. 2. is by act of assembly made, or by usage received as a law; or where by act of assembly or usage, the attestation and subscription of a witness or witnesses are made necessary to devises of lands, &c. And shall have the same force and effect in the construction of, or for the avoiding of doubts upon the said acts or assembly and laws of the said colonies, as the same ought to have in the construction of, or for the avoiding doubts, upon the said act in England. Provided always, that as to the cases arising in any of the said colonies, no such devise, legacy, or bequest aforesaid, shall be made null and void by virtue of this act, unless the will or codicil whereby such devise, &c. shall be given, shall be made after March 1. 1753.

In the case of Wyndham v. Chetwynd in B. R. Bur. Rep. 414 to 431. On a will of land, dated 14 May 1750, and a codicil of the same date, an objection was made, "that the subscribing witnesses to the will were not, at the time of their attestation, credible witnesses," the witnesses being creditors. But in that case, it was resolved they were credible witnesses.

In another case, which afterwards came before the court of Common Pleas for determination (the present Lord Camden Chief Justice,) viz. the case of Doe on the demise of Hindson v. Kersey, the principles laid down in the former case, were controverted.

In the latter case, there was a devise to certain poor persons, of the parish of A. Some of the parishioners were witnesses; and adjudged they were not credible, for that a devise to the poor of any place, being in rate of the poor rate, the parishioners were interested. These two last cases, and the arguments at length, as delivered, in the respective cases, by Lord Mansfield and Lord Camden, are published together, in a quarto pamphlet, to which we refer, as being too long to state fully, in a work of this kind.

8. Of nuncupative wills.

By the stat. 29 Car. 2. c. 3. s. 19. For the preventing fraudulent practices, it is enacted, "That no nuncupative will shall be good where the estate thereby bequeathed shall exceed the value of 30 pounds, that is not proved by the oaths of three witnesses, at the least, that were present at the making thereof, and bid by the testator to bear witness that such was his will, or to that effect." And by stat. 4 Ann. c. 16. s. 14. it is declared, "That all such witnesses, as are and ought to be allowed to be good witnesses upon trial at law by the laws and customs of this realm, shall be deemed good witnesses to prove any nuncupative will, or any thing relating thereto. Nor unless such nuncupative will were made in the time of the last sickness of the deceased, and in the habitation where he or she has been resident for ten days next before making of such will, except where such person was surprised or taken sick, being from his own home, and died before he returned. That after six months passed after the speaking of the testamentary words, no testimony shall be received to prove any will nuncupative, except the said testimony, or the substance thereof, were committed to writing within six days after the making of the said will. That no letters testamentary, or probate of any nuncupative will, shall pass the seal of any court, till fourteen days, at the least, after the decease of the testator be fully expired, nor shall any nuncupative will be at any time received to be proved, unless process have first issued to call in the widow, or the next of kindred to the deceased, to the end they may contest the same, if they please. That no will in writing concerning any goods or chattels, or personal estate, shall be repealed; nor shall any clause, devise, or bequest therein, be altered or changed by any words, or will by word of mouth only, except the same be in the life of the testator committed to writing, and after the writing thereof read to the testator, and allowed by him, and proved to be so done by three witnesses at the least."

" Provided that any soldier in actual military service, or any mariner or seaman being at sea, may dispose of his moveables, wages, and personal estate, as before the making of this act."

A. being ill, desired B. to make her will, who wrote down only names and initial letters to this effect, viz: to Tho. West 200 l. to Jo. Dav. 100 l. to Rob. Cro. 50 l. to self, 10 l. and to several other persons in like manner, to above 400 l. which being more than her estate, B. made an alteration in the second column, by subtracting part of the sums of the legatees, as set down in the second column, and then told A. the sense of the proposed devise: There were two persons in the room that did not hear any thing that passed between A. and B. but only heard the testatrix at last pronounce, that all was well. B. went to a scrivener to have the devise drawn out at length and in form, and before she returned the testatrix died: The judge below pronounced for this will; but upon appeal to the delegates, it was reversed; and in this case it was agreed, that if the will had been written in words at length, so as they had carried a sense and meaning in themselves, it had been a good will; for that there was one witness that wrote it, and two that heard the testatrix pronounce, that it was well: Which would have been intended to have amounted to a second witness, in regard it appeared on all hands, by several witnesses, that the testatrix did then seriously dispose herself to make her will; and for that was quoted the case of one Pepper, where a person disposed herself to make her will, and dictated it to a person who wrote it down; and another, not called in as a witness, lay behind the hanging, out of curtesy; and yet such will was allowed to be good, being proved by these two witnesses: But they distinguished this case because the will was not substantive, but was to take its sense from the interpretation of the witness; and so there would be innuendo upon innuendo, which made purely a nuncupative will: And as such, not being attested by the number of witnesses appointed by the statute of frauds and perjuries, the will and legacies were void. 1 Abbr. Eg. Caf. 403.

Dr. Shallmer, by will in writing, gave 200 l. to the parish of St. Clement's Danes, and after, Prew the reader coming to pray with him, his wife put him in mind to give 200 l. more towards the charges of building their church, at which, tho' Dr. Shallmer was at first disturbed, yet after, he said he would give it, and bid Prew take notice of it: And the next day he bid Prew remember of what he had said to him the day before, and died that day. Within three or four days after, the doctor's wife puts down a memorandum in writing of the said last devise, and so did her maid. Prew died about a month after, and amongst his papers was found a memorandum of his own writing, dated three weeks after the doctor's death, of what the doctor said to him about the 200 l. and purporting that he had put it in writing the same day it was spoken: But the writing which was mentioned to be made the same day it was spoken did not appear, and these three memorandums did not expressly agree. About a year after, on application by the parish to the commissioners of charitable uses, and producing these memorandums and proof by Mrs. Shallmer and her maid, they decreed the 200 l. but on the exceptions taken by the executors, the decree was discharged of this 200 l. and Lord Chancellor held it not good, because it was not proved by the oath of three witnesses; for tho' Mrs. Shallmer and her maid had made proof, yet Prew was dead; and the statute in that branch requires not only three to be present, but that the proof shall be by the oath of three witnesses. 1 Abbr. Eg. Caf. 404.

A daughter deposits 180 l. in the hands of her mother (the defendant); and afterwards makes her will in writing, and thereby devises several legacies, and makes her mother executrix, but takes no manner of notice of this 180 l. afterwards, by word of mouth, she desires her mother to give this 180 l. to the plaintiff, if she thought fit, and then soon after died: The mother proved the will, and this bill was brought against her, to have the 180 l. paid. The mother, by her answer, admits she had such a sum in her hands, and that her daughter did make such a request to her, but that she left it to her election whether she would give it to the plaintiff or not, by the very form of the devise: And insisted, that she did not think fit to give it to the plaintiff. And in this case it was agreed, that this was not as a nuncupative will, being above 10 l. and not reduced into writing within six days after the speaking, as the statute requires. 2dly, That if the defendant had insisted on the statute of frauds and perjuries, the court could not have relieved the plaintiff as upon a trust: But in this case the defendant having by answer confessed the trust, there was no danger of perjury from variety of proof, which was the mischief the statute intended to provide against; and therefore the court took it to be in nature of a trust, and decreed for the plaintiff: Tho' the defendant expressly swore, she did not think fit to give it to the plaintiff, and that the testatrix had left her at liberty. But this decree was against the opinion of several at the bar, who thought too hard on the election left in the mother: But the court principally relied on the case of Kingman v. Kingman, where a man devised away an estate of 2000 l. per ann. and upwards, from his son and heir to a bargeman. And by his will devised 20 l. per ann. to his son, with this clause, that if he behaved himself well, and gave no trouble or disturbance concerning his will, that he might make it up 80 l. if he thought fit. And the court decreed the 80 l. per ann. to the son. But note, the 80 l. per ann. in the case of Kingman v. Kingman seems to have been decreed purely upon the circumstances and hardships of the case: But in the present case there were no such circumstances or ingredients of hardship on the plaintiff: But quære, for it seems to be a trust in the hands of the mother. Id. ibid. Gil. Eg. Rep. 146. Jones v. Nabbs.

9. Of the nature and effect of a will or testament, and of a codicil; and how wills shall be construed.

A will or testament is of that nature, that it differs much from other acts and deeds that men do and execute in their life-time: For although it be made, sealed, and published in ever so solemn a manner, yet it has no life, no virtue in it, until the testator's death: For it is a maxim in law, Omne testamentum morte consummationem est, et voluntas est ambulatoria usque ad extremum vitæ exitum; it is therefore resembled until death to the interlocutory sentence, and after death to the definitive sentence of a judge; and hence it is said, Sed legum servanda fides, suprema voluntas quod mandat ferique jubet parere necesse est. 1 Inst. 112. 4 Rep. 61. b. Forse v. Hembling's case.

And for this reason a man may alter or make void his will at his pleasure; and he may make as many new wills and testaments as he pleases, and there is no way to bar a man of this liberty. Shep. Abr. part 4. p. 9. Voc. Test.

And the latter testament always revokes and overthrows the former: But otherwise it is of a codicil, for a man may make as many of these as he will, and make no testament at all: Or if he makes a testament, he may afterwards make as many codicils as he will, and one of them will not overthrow the other; for in the first case they must be all annexed to the letters of administration, and the administrator must perform them; and in the latter case they must be all annexed to the testament, and the executor must take care to perform them. Lit. 168. Swinb. p. 1. sect. 5. Br. Testament 20.

A testament therefore is said to have three degrees. 1st, An inception, which is the making of it, 2dly, A progression, which is the publication of it, 3dly, A consummation, which is the death of the testator. Shep. Abr. part 4. p. 9. Voc. Test.

In grants therefore the first is of the greatest force, but in testaments the last is of greatest force. 1 Inst. 112. b.

But when a testament is perfected by the death of the party, it as effectually gives and transfers estates, and alters the property of lands and goods, as acts executed by deed in the life-time of the parties: For hereby devises of lands are prevented. And a man may make estates in fee-simple, or fee-tail, for life or years, of lands, tenements, rents, reversions or services, as effectually as by deed; and these estates also will be good without any livery livery of seisin or attornment, and hereby also rents and power to distrain for them, may be reserved, conditions created and annexed to estates or things devised. Shep. Abr. part 4. p. 10. Voc. Test. And therefore they that take by devises of land, are said to take in the nature of purchasers. And therefore if a testator in tail makes a feoffment to the use of himself in fee, and after devises the same to his wife in fee, and dies, the son is not remitted though the father dies seised, for the devise prevents the descent.

It is to be observed, that where the words of a will have a plain sense, and no doubt is in any matter within or without the words, touching the matter of the devise, there the words of the will shall always be taken to be the intent of the devisor, and his intent to be what the words say. 2 And. 17. Lowen v. Bedd. That all the words of a will are to be carried to answer the intent of the devisor; but this is to be understood in cases where the intent of the party may be known by the words that are in the will. 2 And. 10, 11, 134. That if there are inconsistent and contradictory words in a will, some words must be rejected to make it sense. Thus where a testator gave the interest of a sum of 6000 l. to Mary Comfortle, his daughter, for her life, and after her decease gave the money between Charles Comfortle her husband, and their children: And in another part of the will he said, and in case there be no such child or children, I give it to Charles Comfortle and such children. — Lord Chancellor rejected these latter words, as they were absurd and contradictory. 5 New Abr. 525. MS. Rep. Boon v. Comfortle, Pasch. 24 Geo. 2. in Chan.

A. having a wife and no children, made his will, and said, lest it should please God that he should not return, he gave and devised a real and personal estate, or to that effect. He returns, has children and dies, without altering his will: The plaintiff being a legatee, and there being a direction in the will, for the sale of the real estate to pay his legacy; Lord Chancellor was of opinion, that the disposition was merely contingent, and that no part of the will was to take effect but on the contingency of his return. 5 New Abr. 525. MSS. Rep. Parsons v. Lennox, Hill 22 Geo. 2. in Chan.

That a will must have a favourable interpretation, and as near to the mind and intent of the testator as may be, and yet so withal as his intent may stand with the rules of law, and not be repugnant thereunto; it being a rule or maxim of law, Quod ultima voluntas testatoris perimplenda est, secundum veram intentionem; and that, sed legum servanda fides, suprema voluntas quod mandat ferique jubet parere necesse est. In deeds the rule of construction is, that the intention must be directed by the words, but in wills, the words must follow the intent of the devisor; and such a construction is to be made of them, as to make use of all the words, and not of part, and so as they may stand together, and have no contrariety in them: Shep. Abr. part 10. Voc. Testament. Bridg. 105. Standish v. Short.

That such a sense shall be made of a devise, that it may be for the profit of the devisee, and not to his prejudice. Shep. Abr. 11. p. 11. Voc. Test. That general and doubtful words in a will, shall not alter an express devise before, nor carry any thing contrary to the apparent intent. Id. ibid. That the clauses and sentences of a will shall be severally transposed to serve the meaning of it. And construction shall be made of the words to satisfy the intent, and they shall be put in such order as the intent may be fulfilled. Id. ibid. That no sense may be framed upon the words of a will, wherein the testator's meaning cannot be found. Id. ibid. That to give a thing to such a person to whom the law gives it, is as if it had not been given; and so a devise of a man's land to his heirs is void. Styles 148, 149. That a construction of a will must be gathered out of the words of the will, and not by any averment. Shep. Abr. part 11. p. 11. Voc. Test.

That though a parol averment shall not be admitted to explain a will, so as to expound it contrary to the import of the words, yet when the words will bear it, a parol averment may be admitted. As, for instance, to ascertain a person, but in no case to alter the estate.

Freem. 292. Sleade v. Berrier. 5 Rep. 68. Lord Chyney's case.

That one part of a will shall be expounded by another: as where a man leaves an estate to another and his heirs, and afterwards mentions to have given him an estate tail, his heirs shall be taken to mean heirs of the body, and the devisee shall take only an estate tail. 2 Freem. 267. Bamfield v. Popham. See farther on this subject, the cases of Strong, Clerk, v. Teatt, lessee of Merwyn &c. Bur. Rep. 912—924.—Doe ex Dm. Long, v. Laming. Bur. Rep. 1110—1113.—Bagshaw v. Spencer, 5 A.P. 1 Vesey, 142, &c. before Lord Hardwicke on an appeal from the rolls.

The case in short was, Benjamin Ashton by will of 7 September 1725, devised all his manors, lands, &c. to five trustees, in trust, int. al. as to one moiety to Benjamin Bagshaw for his natural life without impeachment of waste, and after determination of that estate to the trustees to preserve contingent uses, but to permit Benjamin Bagshaw to receive the rents for his natural life, and after his decease, then to the use and behoof of the heirs of the body of said Benjamin Bagshaw lawfully begotten, and to be begotten, and in default of such issue, then, &c.

Benjamin Bagshaw suffered a common recovery of his moiety: At the rolls, his honour declared, that Benjamin Bagshaw took an estate-tail, and decreed accordingly.

On the appeal, the case was reduced by the chancellor, to two general questions, viz.

1. Whether the estate devised to Benjamin Bagshaw was a legal estate, that is an use executed by the statute of uses, or a mere trust in equity?

2. Supposing it to be a mere trust in equity, whether it was an estate-tail, or an estate for his life only, with contingent remainders over to all the issue of his body respectively?

As to the first question, Lord Hardwicke was of opinion, that it was a trust in equity.

As to the second question, his lordship observed, it would depend on the construction of the words, "heirs of the body of Benjamin Bagshaw, lawfully begotten or to be begotten," as they stood in the will. If they were to be taken as words of limitation, then he was tenant in tail, and his recovery was good in equity; if words of purchase, then he was tenant for life only, and his recovery was void.

And his lordship was of opinion, that he was tenant for life only, and therefore his recovery was void. And his judgment was to reverse so much of the decree made at the rolls, as declared that Benjamin Bradshaw took an estate-tail by the will, &c. See the reasonings at large in Vesey. — It is a case of great consequence, and treated in a very masterly manner by the chancellor.

10. Of revoking a will; and where a will shall be set aside for fraud.

By Stat. 29 Car. 2. cap. 3. it is enacted, "that no devise in writing of lands, tenements, or hereditaments, or any clause thereof shall be revokable, otherwise than by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing, declaring the same, or by burning; cancelling, tearing or obliterating the same, by the testator himself, or in his presence, and by his directions and consent, but shall continue, &c. unless altered by some other will or codicil in writing, or other writing of the devisor, signed in the presence of three or more credible witnesses, declaring the same: And by the same act, no will in writing, concerning personal estates, shall be repealed, nor any clause or bequest therein altered by words, or will by word of mouth only, except the same be, in the life of the testator, committed to writing, and read to, and allowed by him, and proved to be done by three witnesses."

But where a man, by will in writing, devised the residue of his personal estate to his wife, and after, she dying, he, by a nuncupative codicil, bequeathed to J. S. all that he hath given to his wife, it was resolved good; for, by the death of the wife, the devise of the residue was totally void; and the codicil was no alteration of the former former will, but a new will for the residue. Raym. 334.

Revocations by the act of the party are either express, as where the devisor expressly declares his mind, that his will should be revoked; or implied, as where the estate or thing devised is altered after making of the will. 2 Abr. Eq. Caf. 769. Sir Richard Templeman's case, Micb. 4 Ann. in C. 6.

Lord Hatfield, Lord Chancellor: The general principle is, that at the time of the devise the devisor must have a disposing capacity, and an estate in the land devised; and the estate must remain in the same plight and condition until his death: For the least alteration by an act of his, makes it a different estate, and shews a different intention, and therefore is an actual revocation. Thus if one seised in fee devises, then in fee to another to the use of himself in fee, tho' it is the old use that remains, yet it is a revocation, tho' it is his own reversion. So of a bargain and sale without enrolment. So if a man thinking himself tenant in fee, devises, and then apprehending himself to be only tenant in tail, suffers a recovery, with intent to confirm his will, it is a revocation. As to mortgages, they are exceptions out of the rule. At law a mortgage for years, and in equity a mortgage in fee, are revocations pro tanto only; and the reason is, that a mortgage is only a security; and tho' it be a conveyance of a real estate, yet in this court it is a chattel interest only, and goes to the executor, and it gives no dower. In the case wherein these leading principles were established, after the testator had devised all the manors, lands, tenements, and hereditaments, he by a deed conveyed an advowson which he was seised of at the time of making his will, to and to the use of trustees and their heirs; in trust to present the church when void to a particular person, if qualified, on the terms prescribed therein: And if such a person should be incapable, then to present such clerk as A. should nominate; and in default of nomination by him, as the trustees should think fit. The person intended was presented; and on a bill brought by the heir at law of the testator, to have a legal conveyance of the residue of the advowson, the question was, Whether this deed, being only a trust for a particular purpose, as it was alleged, was a total or partial revocation? And determined by Lord Chancellor, after arguing as above, that it was a total revocation; it being a grant of the legal interest; and the trust was a real and beneficial interest given by it to the trustees, that of nominating themselves in default of A.'s nominating: And he decreed, a conveyance to be made according to the prayer of the bill. 5 New Abr. 527. cites MS. Rep. Sparrow v. Hardcastle in Canc. Pafe. 17 Geo. 2.

I. S. seised of a lease for lives, devises it; and afterwards I. S. surrenders the old lease, and takes a new one to him and his heirs for 3 lives. Decreed by Lord Chancellor King, that this renewal of the lease was a revocation of the will, as to this particular. 3 P. Will. Rep. 166, 170. Marnwood v. Turner.

So were a testator devised by his will, a leasehold estate under Magdalen College, Oxon. and after the making of this will, before his death, renewed his lease, by surrendering the old one, and taking a new lease. Determined by Lord Chancellor, that this was a revocation of his will. And tho' the testator, after the renewal, looking amongst his papers, had said, this is my will, that was held to be no republication. 5 New Abr. 527. cites MS. Rep. Sir Tho. Abney v. Miller, in Canc. Trin. 1743.

If the latter part of a will is inconsistent with the former part of it, it supercedes and revokes it. Per Reynold Ch. B. and Comyns and Thompson, Barons in Scacc. Fitzgibbons 195. Attorney General v. Gower and Co. of Chelsea water-works.

It was agreed to be the constant rule of this court, that where a legacy was given to a child, who afterwards upon marriage, or otherwise, hath the like or greater sum, it should be intended in satisfaction of the legacy, unless the testator should declare his intent otherwise; and it was said the words of ratifying, and confirming do not alter the case, tho' they amount to a new publication, being only words of form, and declaring nothing of the testator's intent in this matter. 2 Freem. Rep. 224. Irod v. Hurst.

Defendant's testator by his will gave his four daughters 600 l. a-piece, and afterwards married his eldest daughter to the plaintiff, and gave her 700 l. portion; after that he makes a codicil, and gives 100 l. a-piece to his unmarried daughters, and thereby ratifies and confirms his will, and dies. Plaintiff preferred his bill for the legacy of 600 l. given to his wife by the said will. And his honour held, that the portion given by the testator in his life-time, should be intended in satisfaction of the legacy. Id. ibid. See farther, Pre. in Chan. 183. Ward v. Lant. Vin. Abr. tit. Devise. (R. 2.) Ca. 16. p. 140. Parker v. Lamb. Pre. in Chan. 263. Hofkins v. Hopkins. Vin. Abr. tit. Devise (P.) Ca. 10. p. 136. Pre. in Chan. 298. Bird v. Hooper.

A man makes his will duly executed and attested according to the statute of frauds and perjuries, and at the same time, in like manner, executes a duplicate thereof; sometime after, the testator having a mind to change one of his trustees, orders his will to be wrote over again, without any variation whatsoever from the first, save only in the name of that trustee. And when it was so wrote over, he executes it in the presence of three witnesses, and the three witnesses subscribed their names, but not in his presence. After this the testator cancels the duplicate, by tearing off the seal, and then dies. And the question was, Whether this second will, not being good, as a will to pass lands, should yet be a revocation of the first, and if it should not, whether the cancelling the other should be a revocation thereof within the statute of frauds and perjuries. And it was decreed, that neither the making of the second, nor the cancelling the first, was a revocation thereof; tho' in the second there was an express clause, that he did thereby revoke all former and other wills; wherein my Lord Chancellor took this distinction, that the second was not intended barely a revocation of the first, so as to signify his intention of dying intestate, or without any will; but it was intended as an effectual will to pass the lands to the persons, and in the manner thereby devised: And therefore if it was not good as a will to that purpose, it was no revocation of the first, but as it was supposed to be valid as a will for passing the lands by the second: And if a man by his will devises lands to A. and after makes a second will, and thereby devises the lands to B. if this second will be not good, as a will to pass the lands to B. it shall be no revocation of the devise in the first to A. for it is plain, A. was to lose only what B. was to gain; and if B. gains nothing by the second, A. shall lose nothing that was given him by the first: But if a man executes a second will, which appears to have no other intention than to revoke the first, and to die intestate, tho' this second be not in all circumstances duly executed as a will whereby to pass lands, yet it will operate as a revocation of the first: And as to the cancelling or tearing of the first will, that is no revocation of it in this case, because that was no self-subsisting independent act, but done to accompany, or in a way of affirmation of the second: It was done from an opinion, that the second had effectually revoked the first, and therefore he tears the first as of no use: But the first was not effectually revoked by the second: And the act of tearing the first will, will not destroy it neither: For though a man may, by the statute of frauds, as effectually destroy his will, by tearing or cancelling it, as by making a second; yet if he does make a second, and intends that as revocation of the first, if it be insufficient for that purpose, as in the principal case, the tearing and cancelling being only in consequence of his opinion, that he made a good second will, it shall not destroy the first; but it ought to be set up again in equity. 1 Abr. Eq. Cases 407. See as to part, Cont. 10 Mod. 233. Vin. Abr. tit. Devise, (R. 3.) p. 141.

But if a man cancels or revokes either the duplicate or original will, this is an effectual avoiding of both, they being both but one will; and therefore must stand or fall together. 2 Fern. 742. Onions v. Tyrer.

A man makes his will in writing, and thereby devises all his real and personal estate to his wife, her heirs and executors, executors, in trust to pay his debts and legacies; and then devises several legacies to his children and other persons, and concludes, "In witness whereof I have, to this my last will and testament, containing nine sheets of paper, and to a duplicate thereof, to be left in the hands of such a one, set my seal to every sheet thereof, and to the last of the said sheets my hand and seal, in the presence of three witnesses, who all subscribed their names in due form of law." Afterwards the testator being minded to add other trustees to his wife, and make some alterations in his will, sends for a scrivener, and gave directions to prepare a draught of instructions for another will, which the scrivener does accordingly, and the testator read it over and approved of it very well, and sets his hand to it; and being at a tavern, thinking he had now made a new will, he pulls out of his pocket the first will and tears off the seal from the first eight sheets, which the scrivener seeing, asked him what he was doing; why says he, I am cancelling my first will. Pray says the scrivener hold your hand, the other will is not perfected; it will not pass your real estate for want of being executed pursuant to the statute of frauds and perjuries. I am sorry for that, says he, and immediately desisted from tearing off any more of the seals; and in some short time dies without having done any thing further to perfect the second will, or to cancel the first.

Lord Chancellor held, that the subsequent will could be no revocation as to the real estate, not being executed according to the statute of frauds and perjuries: And that as to the tearing off the seals from the first eight sheets, that not being done animo cancellandi, was no revocation; and that the seal remaining whole to the last sheet was sufficient, and in strictness it was not necessary that all the sheets should be sealed. *Abr. If A. devises lands to B. and his heirs, and afterwards mortgages the same lands to J. S. for years, or in fee, though a mortgage in fee be a total revocation at law, yet in equity it shall be a revocation pro tanto only. 1 Vern. 329, 342, 97, 141, 182. 1 Salk. 158. S. P. So if a man seised in fee devises to J. S. in fee or for life, and afterwards makes a lease to J. D. for years, this, even at law, shall not be a revocation, but during the years; for his intent does not appear further than during the term for years. 1 Roll. Abr. 616. Montagu v. Jeffries. So if a husband possessed of a term for 40 years, devises it to his wife, and after leases the land to another for twenty years, and dies; this lease is not any revocation of the whole estate; but only during the twenty years, and the wife shall have the residue of the devise. Id. ibid. Wilcox's case.

But if A. devises lands to B. and his heirs, and twelve years after leases the same lands to B. for sixty years, to commence after his death, and delivers the deed to a stranger, to the use of B. who does not deliver it to B. till after the death of A. This is a revocation of the whole estate, for both estates are not consistent nor can vest in B. at the same time; and it was plainly the intention of the deviser, that B. should have the less estate only. And it was so adjudged, though objected, that it was the intention of A. that B. should have his liberty to take by the lease or devise, B. not having agreed to the lease in the life-time of A. 1 Abr. Eq. Caf. 410. But if the lease made to the devisee had been to begin either in presenti or future, in the life of the deviser, it had not been a revocation, for inasmuch as the lease might have determined in his life, it was consistent with his will. Cro. Jac. 49, Coke v. Bullock. So where A. by will devised to his younger son a certain messuage for ninety-nine years, if three lives lived so long, yielding and paying to his sister the plaintiff 20*l.* per ann. until twelve years old, and thence 40*l.* per ann. for life: And afterwards the said A. for 300*l.* fine, demised the said messuage to J. S. for ninety-nine years, if three lives lived so long, yielding and paying 50*l.* per ann. to A. the testator, his heirs and assigns; and though it was held at the Rolls to be a revocation, yet on an appeal to my Lord Keeper, he decreed it to be no revocation, and that the daughter should be paid her annuity; and he said, that the rule is, where a subsequent act shall amount to a revocation by implication, it must be a necessary implication. And the act must be wholly inconsistent with the devise. 2 Vern. 495. Lamb v. Parker. 2 Freem. 284. S. C.

So if A. devises lands to trustees to pay his debts, and then to pay his wife 200*l.* per ann. for her life; and the testator living several years after, his debts increased from 2000*l.* to 10,000*l.* for 8000*l.* whereof his said trustees were bound, and afterwards A. the testator, by deed and fine, conveys his lands to his said trustees, to sell to pay his debts, and the surplus to him and his heirs, and tho' the wife joined with him in the fine and conveyance, yet this shall be no revocation of the wife's 200*l.* per ann. and she shall have the 200*l.* per ann. out of the surplus money after the debts are paid. *2 Vern. 241, Vernon v. A. having issue four daughters, and no male issue, devises lands to trustees, in trust to permit his daughter S. to receive the rents and profits until her marriage or death, and in case she married with the consent of two of the trustees and her mother, then to convey the premises to her and her heirs: But if she died before marriage, or married without such consent, then to convey to other persons: Afterwards S. married in the life-time of her father, and with his consent, and he settled part of those lands on her and her husband, and died. And it was held, that this settlement was no revocation of the will, as to the devise of the other lands. *2 Vern. 720. Clarke v. Berkley. See Vin. Abr. tit. Devise, Ca. 11. p. 154. Clarke and Ux. v. If A. by his will devises all the residue of his personal estate to B. and C. and makes them executors; and after, by a codicil, cancels and revokes every legacy, thing, and part relating to B. and revokes his being executor; C. shall have the whole. A revocation, with a new gift, shall have the same effect as if it had been expressly given; and whether it be by codicil or obliteration, it is the same. 5 New Abr. 535. MSS. Rep. Humphries v. Taylor, in Chan. Hil. 25 Geo. 2.

Though marriage and the having of children has been deemed a revocation of a will, yet it is only a presumptive revocation; for if it appears by any expression, or other means, to be the intent of the deviser, that his will should continue in force, the marriage will be no revocation of it. *1 Ld. By marriage articles it was agreed, that the wife's lands, whereof she was seised in tail, should be conveyed to the husband in fee; they married, the husband made his will and devised those lands; then the husband and wife suffered a recovery of those lands, to such uses, and for such estates, as they should jointly appoint, and in default of such appointment, to the use of the husband and his heirs. She died without appointing. Per Hardwicke Chanc. This amounts to a revocation of the will. And in this case the following rules were laid down.

If a man seised in fee devises, and then makes a conveyance by fine, feoffment, or recovery, and takes back a new estate, it is certainly a revocation; and so if he takes back the old use unaltered, from a presumption that he could not have made such a conveyance, without an intention to alter his will: But if after making his will he had made a lease, or charged it with a sum of money, &c. it would only have been a revocation pro tanto. The rules are the same in the devise of a real, and of a personal estate, with regard to charges made afterwards: But if a man, having an equitable estate in fee, devises it, and then takes a conveyance of the legal estate; it is no revocation. The equitable estate will not pass by will, but the heir at law by descent of the legal estate, may become a trustee for the devisee, who may call for a conveyance of the estate. If a man contracts by articles for the purchase of lands, and before a conveyance devises the lands and dies; the devisee shall have the lands, and call for a conveyance from the vendor. If a man, seised of a legal estate, makes his will, and then conveys the legal estate to another in trust for himself, it is a revocation. If in this case the husband had only taken the legal estate by the recovery to execute it into the equitable estate, it would have been no revocation; but new uses are appointed, and tho' the wife died without making any appointment, that will not alter the case, for here he took the fee by the recovery differently qualified, subject to different conditions, differently conveyed: But if two parceners make partition, levy a fine, and declare the use, that will not be a revocation, because it is to effectuate the partition. 5 New Abr. 538. *MSS. Though a covenant or articles do not at law revoke a will, yet if entered into for a valuable consideration, amounting in equity to a conveyance, they must consequently be an equitable revocation of a will, or of any writing in nature thereof. As to setting aside wills for fraud, Jekyl Lord Commissioner took a difference between a will and a deed gained upon a weak man, and upon a misrepresentation or fraud; for if a will be gained from such by false misrepresentation, this is not a sufficient reason to set it aside in equity; as was determined in the Duke of Newcastle's will, betwixt Lord Thane and Lord Clare, and in the case of Bodvil and Roberts: But where a deed which is not revokable as a will is, is so gained from such a person, and without any valuable consideration, the same ought to be set aside in equity. 2 P. B. A will having relation only to the testator's death, and not to the making, (for till his death he is master of his own will,) therefore the will of a papist in Ireland, was held to be avoided by a subsequent statute made in that kingdom, which enacts, that the lands of papists there shall not be devisable, but descend in gavelkind. *Vin. Withernam, (From the Sax. Witber, i. e. altera, or, as some say, contra, & Nam, captio) Is where a distress is driven out of the county, and the sheriff upon a replevin cannot make deliverance to the party distrained: In this case the writ of withernam is directed to the sheriff, for the taking as many of his beasts or goods, who did thus unlawfully distrain, into his keeping till the party make deliverance of the first distress, &c. West. 2. 13 Ed. 1. c. 2. This writ is granted on the return of the sheriff upon the alias and pluries in replevin, that the cattle, &c. are esloined, by reason whereof he cannot replevy them; and it appears by our books, that the sheriff may award withernam on replevin sued by plaintiff, if it be found by inquest in the county, that the cattle were esloined according to the bailiff's return, &c. Though upon the withernam awarded in the county-court, if the bailiff doth return that the other party hath not any thing, there shall be an alias and pluries, and so infinite, and no other remedy there: But on a withernam returned in the King's Bench, or Common Pleas, if the sheriff return that the party hath not any thing, &c. a capias shall issue against him, and exigent and outlawry. *New Nat. In replevin, &c. the sheriff returns averia elongata sunt by the defendant; thereupon a writ of withernam is awarded; and if he return nihil, the plaintiff proceeds to outlawry by alias and pluries cap. in withernam, and so to exigent: And there is some difference where the defendant appeareth upon the return of the pluries capias, and when he stays longer, and appears on the return of the exigent and not before; for in the first case his cattle shall not be taken in withernam, but he must find pledges to make deliverance, or be committed; and in the last case, he shall not only find pledges for making deliverance, but shall be fined, and his cattle may be taken in withernam: In both cases, the plaintiff may declare for the unjust taking, and yet detaining of his cattle, and so go to trial upon the right; and if 'tis found for him, then he shall recover the value of the cattle with costs and damages, or may have the cattle again by a return. habendo directed to the sheriff; but if it be found for the defendant, he shall keep the cattle, and have costs and damages for the unjust prosecution. 1 Brownl. 180. 3 Nelf. Abr. 553, 554.

A defendant in replevin may have a writ of withernam against the plaintiff; as if the defendant hath a return awarded for him, and he sueth a writ de return. habendo, and the sheriff return upon the pluries, quod averia elongata sunt, he shall have a fei. fac. against the pledges which the plaintiff put in to prosecute, &c. and if they have nothing, then he shall have a capias ad withernam against the plaintiff. Ibid. And the cattle taken in withernam are to be ad valentiam, i. e. to the value of the cattle that were first taken and detained; for it is to be understood not only of the number of the cattle, but according to the worth and value; otherwise he that brings the replevin and withernam, will be deprived of his satisfaction.

Witnesham. 3 Lill. Abr. 690. Where cattle have been taken in witnesham, they have been by a rule of court delivered back and restored to the owner, on his payment to the plaintiff of all his damages, costs and expenses. Ibid. Cattle taken in witnesham may be milked, or worked reasonably; because they are delivered to the party as his own cattle, &c. Contrā of cattle distrained. 1 Leon. 302. This word witnesham also signifies reprisals taken at sea by letters of mart ships. See Replevin.

Wittherlake. An apostate, or perfidious renegade. Leg. Canut. cap. 27.

Witness. (Testis) Is one that gives evidence in a cause; an indifferent person to each party, sworn to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth: And if he will be a gainer or loser by the suit, he shall not be sworn as a witness. 2 Lill. Abr. 700. If a witness to a bond becomes administrator of the obligee, his hand may be proved. 1 Strange 34. If a witness becomes interested, his deposition taken before cannot be read. Ibid. 101. qu. A party whose deed is forged, is no witness on an indictment for the forgery. 2 Strange 728. Party supposed to be defrauded, allowed a witness in perjury. Ibid. 1229. The proprietor of a note allowed a witness on an indictment for tearing it. 1 Strange 595. Giver of a note no witness on an indictment for perjury, in denying an agreement relating to it. 2 Strange 1043. Defendant in ejectment no witness, on an indictment for perjury at the trial. Ibid. 1104. The creditor of a bankrupt is no witness to prove him a gamester. 1 Strange 507. A creditor allowed to prove the debtor not intitled to his discharge, on the mint act. Ibid. 650. Wood. If any person purposely burn any pile of wood, or bark any trees, &c. the owner may recover treble damages for it in trespass. Stat. 37 Hen. 6. c. 6. None may destroy any woods, by turning them into tillage or pasture, &c. if two acres or more in quantity, on pain of 40 s. an acre: And no person shall suffer his swine to go in a wood unringed, under penalties. Where there is wood or coppice in common, the lord may inclose a fourth part, &c. 35 H. 8. c. 17. 13 Elix. c. 25. If coppice wood is felled at or under twenty-four years growth, there must be left twelve standils of oaks in every acre, or the like number of ash, elm, &c. on pain of forfeiting 3 s. 6 d. for every standil wanting; and they are not to be cut down till ten inches square within three foot of the ground, or until so many years after left, under the penalty of 6 s. 8 d. &c. Stat. 35 H. 8. cap. 17. All woods or coppices felled at fourteen years growth, shall be preserved from destruction for eight years; and no cattle be put into the ground from the time of felling, till five years afterwards, by 13 Elix. cap. 25. The statutes 43 Elix. cap. 7. and 15 Car. 2. cap. 2. provide against woodstealing, ordaining recompence to be made, and inflicting a forfeiture of 10 s. &c. Burning woods, or underwood, is made felony: And persons maliciously cutting or spoiling timber-trees, fruit-trees, &c. are to be sent to the house of correction for three months, and whipt once a month, by 1 Geo. 1. c. 48. Also where persons destroy trees, woods, or break open hedges, the owners shall have satisfaction from the inhabitants of the place, as for dikes overthrown in the night, provided by 13 Ed. 1. under approvement: If the offenders be not convicted in six months, &c. 6 Geo. 1. cap. 16. It has been adjudged, that if A. plants a tree upon his own ground, and in growing its roots extend into the land of B. adjoining, they are tenants in common of this tree: But if all the root grows in the ground of A. though the boughs overshadow B.'s land, yet the branches follow the root, and the property of the whole is in A. 1 Ld. Raym. 737.

Woodward.

Woodward, Is an officer of the forest, whose office consists in looking after the woods, and vert and venison, and presenting offences relating to the same, &c. And woodwards may not walk with bow and shafts, but with forest bills. Crompt. Jur. if. 201. Manswood, par. 1. 189.

Wool, Being a staple commodity of the greatest value in this kingdom; the employment of our poor at home, and our most beneficial trade abroad, depending in a great measure upon it; there have been divers good laws made to preserve the same intirely to ourselves, and to prevent its being transported to other nations. The Stat. 27 Ed. 3. declared it felony to transport wool: But the felony was repealed by 38 Ed. 3. cap. 6. By the 12 Car. 2. cap. 32. If any person shall export any wool, yarn, &c. he shall forfeit the same, and for every pound weight of goods 3s. And the owners of the ship in which it shall be transported, being privy to the offence, shall forfeit all their interest in the said ship; also the master and mariners assisting, all their goods; and any persons may seize such wool, and shall be intitled to one moiety, and the King to the other moiety of forfeitures, &c. The 13 & 14 Car. 2. cap. 18. made the transportation of wool felony again; though this being thought too severe, the 7 & 8 W. 3. cap. 26. a second time repeals the felony, and ordains that exporting wool beyond sea shall incur a forfeiture of the vessel, and treble value; and persons aiding and assisting, to suffer three years imprisonment.

By the stat. 9 & 10 W. 3. cap. 40. the former laws are explained, and a further provision is made against transporting wool; by obliging entries to be made of wool shorn, and wool not to be carried near the sea-coasts, but between sun-rising and sun-setting, &c. Unlawful exporters of wool, where judgment is obtained against them, are to pay the sum recovered within three months; or be liable to transportation for seven years as felons. 4 Geo. 1. cap. 11. The Admiralty shall appoint three sixth rate ships, and eight sloops to cruise on the coasts, and search and seize vessels having manufactures of wool of the kingdom of Ireland, to be exported to foreign parts; which with the ships shall be forfeited, &c. Stat. 5 Geo. 2. cap. 21. All woollen manufactures are to be shipped from Dublin, and certain other ports in Ireland, and imported here into Biddesford, and ports named, and none others; and be brought from thence hither in ships built in Great Britain or Ireland, and duly registered on oath. 12 Geo. 2. cap. 21. Wool-fells, &c. shall be packed up in leather, or canvas marked, and not in any box, &c. on pain of forfeiting 3s. for every pound: Also no coverlets, waddings, or beds, &c. stuffed with combed wool, may be exported under the like penalties as for exportation of wool. Stat. Ibid. Persons that by way of insurance, undertake to carry woollen goods abroad, shall forfeit 500 l. And if they give a bribe or reward to any officer to connive at exporting wool, they are liable to 300 l. forfeiture; and persons obstructing the officer, or being armed, &c. rescuing any goods, shall be transported as felons, for seven years. Ibid. See 13 Geo. 2. c. 8.

Woolwinders, Those that wind up every fleece of wool, intended to be packed and sold by weight, into a kind of bundle, after it is cleaned as required by statute, to avoid deceits by thrusking in locks of refuse wool, and thrums, to gain weight: They must be sworn to perform this office truly, between the owner and the wool buyer or merchant, by Stat. 8. Hen. 6. c. 22. 2d Hen. 8. c. 17. Persons winding and selling deceitful wool, shall forfeit for every fleece 6 d. And if wool-packers do not make good and due packing, without putting any locks, pelt wool, sand, earth, dirt, &c. in fleeces, action of trespass and deceit lies against them, &c. Stat. Ibid.

Worcester. A market for hops to be held by the guardians of the poor of the city of Worcester; and the liberty of holding the said market, and all tolls usually had by the mayor, aldermen and citizens, shall be vested in such guardians, for the uses expressed in the act 2 & 3 Ann. c. 8. Stat. 4 Geo. 2. c. 25.

Worcesters, and worsted cloths, are mentioned in many of our old statutes, as 17 R. 2. 7 E. 4. 14 & 15 Hen. 8. c. 3. &c. See Abr. Stat.

Words, Which may be taken or interpreted by law in a general or common sense, ought not to receive a strained or unusual construction: And ambiguous words are to be construed so as to make them stand with law and equity; and not to be wrested to do wrong. A Latin word in pleading, which signified divers things, was well used to express tharthing intended to be expressed by it: Incertain words in a declaration, are made good and certain by a plea in bar, where notice is taken of the meaning of them; and words which are in themselves uncertain, may be made certain by subsequent or following words. The different placing of the same words may cause them to have a different sense, and construction: A word which is written short or abbreviated, is not good without a dash to distinguish it: And senseless words are void and idle; though they shall not hurt where it is good without them. Nor shall words in deeds that are needless, impeach a clause certain and perfect without such words. 2 Lill. Abr. 711, 712, 713, 714. Hob. 313. Vide Scilicet.

Words Defamatory that are actionable, and criminal, making libels, and high treason; words how expounded in wills, &c. See the Heads.

Words, reasonable. It seems clearly to be agreed, that by the Common law, and the statute of Edward 3. words spoken amount only to a high misdemeanor, and no treason. See Black. Com. 4 V. 80.

Work-houses. The most considerable work-house in the city of London, is that in Bishopgate-street; wherein some hundreds of idle persons are constantly employed in beating hemp, &c. and a great many poor children maintained and educated. Stat. 13 & 14 Car. 2. And in the city of Bristol a great work-house is erected, for the better employing and maintaining the poor, governed by a corporation, &c. 7 & 8 W. 3. So in the cities of Worcester, Gloucester, and Canterbury, by the *Stat. 3 Ann. 13 Geo. 1. and 1 Geo. 2. Wreck, (Lat. Wreckum Maris, Fr. Wreck de Mer, sometimes writ Wreche, Wreche & Sew-wreche, quasi Sew-up-wreche, i. e. Ejectur Maris) Signifies in our law such goods as, after a ship-wreck, are cast upon the land by the sea, and left there within some county; for they are not wrecks so long as they remain at sea, in the jurisdiction of the Admiralty. 2 Inst. 167. Where a ship perishes on the sea, and no man escapes alive out of it, this is called wreck: And the goods in the ship being brought to land by the waves, belong belong to the King by his prerogative, or to the lord of the manor: 5 Rep. 106. By the Common law all wrecks belonged to the crown; and therefore they are not chargeable with any customs, and for that goods coming into the kingdom by wreck, are not imported by any body, but cast ashore by the wind and sea: But it was usual to seize wrecks to the King's use, only when no owner could be found; And in that case, the property being in no man, it of consequence belongs to the King, as lord of the narrow seas, &c. Bract. lib. 2. cap. 5. And by the Stat. of Westm. 1. 3 Ed. 1. cap. 4. it is enacted, that when a man or any living creature, escapes alive out of a ship cast away, whereby the owner of the goods may be known, the ship or goods shall not be wreck; but the same shall be kept a year and a day by the sheriff, to be restored to any person that can prove a property in the goods within that time; and if no body comes, then the same shall be forfeited as wreck. The year and day shall be accounted from the seizure; and if the owner of the goods dies within the year, his executors or administrators may make proof: And when the goods are bona peritura, the sheriff may sell them within the year; so as he disposes of them to the best advantage, and accounts for them, &c. 2 Inst. 167. 5 Rep. 106. Wood's Inst. 214. If a man have a grant of wreck, and goods are wrecked upon his lands, and another taketh them away before seizure, he may bring action of trespass &c. For before they are seized, there is no property gained, to make it felony. 1 Hawk. P. C. 94.

If goods wrecked are seized by persons having no authority, the owner may have his action against them; or if the wrong-doers are unknown, he may have a commission to enquire, &c. 2 Inst. 166. Goods lost by tempest, or piracy, &c. and not by wreck, if they afterwards come to land shall be restored to the owner. 27 Ed. 3. cap. 13. Where a ship is ready to sink, and all the men therein, for the preservation of their lives quit the ship, and afterwards she perishes; if any of the men are saved and come to land, the goods are not lost: A ship on the sea was chased by an enemy; the men therein for the security of their lives forsook the ship, which was taken by the enemy, and spoiled of her goods and tackle, and then turned to sea; after this by stress or weather she was cast on land, where it happened her men safely arrived; and it was resolved that this was no wreck. 2 Inst. 167. If a wreck happens by any fault or negligence in the master or mariners, the master must make good the loss; but if the same was occasioned by tempest, enemies, &c. he shall be excused: And making holes in ships, or doing any thing wilfully tending to the loss thereof, is felony, by Stat. 12 Ann. . . Which act requires justices of peace to command assistance for preserving ships in danger of wrecks on the coasts; and officers of men of war, and other ships, are to be aiding, &c. under the penalty of 100*l.* No person shall enter any such ship without leave from the commander, or a constable, &c. And persons carrying away goods from such ships, are liable to pay treble value; but the persons giving assistance, shall be paid by the masters a reasonable reward for salvage, &c. 12 Ann. St. 2. c. 18. See Pilot. Mariners shipwrecked how relieved abroad, by Stat. 1 & 9 Geo. 2. See Stat. 26 Geo. 2. c. 19. For enforcing the laws against persons, who shall steal or detain shipwrecked goods, and for the relief of persons suffering losses thereby: Whereby it is enacted (amongst other things) That persons convicted of plundering, stealing, &c. shipwrecked goods, &c. or of obstructing the escape of any person from a wreck, or of putting out false lights to bring any ship or vessel into danger, shall suffer death. Vide Mariner.

Wreckfree, is to be exempt from the forfeiture of shipwrecked goods and vessels; which K. Edw. 1. by charter granted to the Barons of the Cinque Ports. Placit. temp. Edw. 1.

Writ, (Brevs in Sax. Writan, i. e. scribere) in general is the King's precept, in writing under seal, issuing out of some court to the sheriff, or other person, and commanding something to be done touching a suit or action, or giving commission to have it done. Termin. de Ley. 1 Inst. 73. Also a writ is said to be a formal letter of the King's, in parchment sealed with a seal, directed to some judge, officer, or minister, &c. at the suit or plaint of a subject, requiring to have a thing done, for the cause briefly expressed, which is to be discussed in the proper court according to law. Old Nat. Br. 4. Shep. Abr. 245. Of writs there are divers kinds, in many respects; some writs are grounded on rights of action, and some in nature of commissions; some mandatory and extrajudicial, and others remedial; and some are patent or open, and some close or sealed up; some writs issue at the suit of parties; some are of office, some ordinary, and others of privilege; and some writs are directed to the sheriffs, and in special cases to the party, &c. 1 Inst. 289. 2 Inst. 39. 7 Rep. 20.

The writs in civil actions are either original or judicial: Original writs are issued out in the court of Chancery, for the summoning a defendant to appear, and are granted before the suit is begun, to begin the same; and judicial writs issue out of the court where the original is returned, after the suit is begun: The originals bear date in the name of the King; but judicial writs bear teste in the name of the chief justice: And it is observed, that a writ without a teste is not good, for the time may be material when it was taken out, and it is proved by the teste; and if it be out of the Common law courts, it must bear date some day in term, (not being Sunday) but in Chancery writs may be issued in vacation as well as term-time, as that court is always open; also there are to be fifteen days between the teste and return of all writs, where the suit is by original; but by statute delays in actions by reason of fifteen days between the teste and return of writs in personal actions, and ejectments, are remedied. F. N. B. 51, 147. 2 Inst. 40. Lutw. 337. 13 Car. 2. cap. 2.

Writs in actions are likewise real; concerning the possession of lands, called Writs of Entry, or of right touching the property, &c. Personal, relating to goods, chattels, and personal injuries; and mixed, for the recovery of the thing, and damages. 2 Inst. 39. And writs may be possessory, of a man's own possession; or ancestral, of the seisin and possession of his ancestor: And there are certain writs of prevention or anticipation; and of restitution, &c. But the most common writs in daily use, are in debt, detinue, trespass, action upon the case, account, and covenant, &c. which with others must be rightly directed, or they will be naught. F. N. B. Style 42, 237. And in all writs care is to be taken, that they be laid and formed according to the cause or ground of them, and so pursued in the process thereof: Though the writ in some cases may be general; and the count or declaration special. Hob. 18, 84, 251. After the action is fixed on, for a wrong done, or right detained, such a writ must be taken out as is suitable to the action; for the writ is different from the action; though they are often confounded: The writ is to be grounded upon the action, and is the means to bring the plaintiff to his right. Wood's Inst. 560.

The King's writs cannot be denied to the subject; and it is regularly true, that no man shall be punished for suing of writs in the King's courts, be it of right or wrong: But writs may be abated in several cases, &c. Ibid. An original writ defective in form is abatable; but no abatement of the writ is admitted after judgment in the cause, the writ being allowed by the pleadings and proceedings; and a writ that did not pursue the exact form of the register, has been held good: 2 Lill. Abr. 717. Hob. 51. 3 Nels. Abr. 575. Writs judicial, if erroneous, may be amended; original writs are not amendable, if the error be by default of the party who gave instructions; yet a new original may be taken out, where it is not amendable. 2 Lill. 716.

Writs may be renewed every term, until a defendant is arrested; but in B. R. if the latitat be not renewed in five terms, a new writ is to be taken out, and the plaintiff may not renew the old one. The sheriff's bailiffs cannot execute a writ directed to the sheriff, without his warrant; and if in a writ several persons are included, (for four defendants may be in one writ) there must be several warrants from the sheriff to execute the same. Comp. Attorn. All writs are to be returned and filed in due time, to avoid post-terminum; and it is very unsafe to keep writs unfiled, because the filing them is the warranty for the proceedings: And where a writ is issued out directed to the sheriff, when it comes to his hands, though the plaintiff requires the writ back again, the sheriff must return and file it in the court where returnable; unless the plaintiff procure a writ of superfideas. 2 Lill. Abr. 720. Attachment lies against sheriffs, &c. for not executing a writ, or for doing it oppressively by force, extorting money thereon, or not doing it effectually, thro' any corrupt practice. Vide 8 Rep. 86. The court of B. R. cannot give judgment of a writ but where it is before them; and has deferred to quash it, because the defendant was not present in court. 1 Ld. Raym. 618, 620. See Arrests, Variance, &c

Writ of Assistance, Is a writ issuing out of the Exchequer, to authorise any person to take a constable, or other publick officer, to seize goods or merchandize prohibited and uncustomed, &c. Writ of Entry. See Entry.

Writ of Inquiry of Damages, Is a judicial writ, that issues out to the sheriff upon a judgment by default, in action of the case, covenant, trespass, trover, &c. commanding him to summon a jury to inquire what damages the plaintiff hath sustained occasione præmissorum; and when this is returned with the inquisition, the rule for judgment is given upon it; and if nothing be said to the contrary, judgment is thereupon entered. 2 Lill. Abr. 721. This writ lies on a nihil dicit, non sum informatus, or a demurrer; but not upon a verdict; and it is executed before the sheriff, or his deputy, at the which time both parties have the liberty of being heard before the sheriff, by their counsel or attornies, and evidence may be given on both sides: It is the duty of the jury diligently to inquire what damages have been sustained by the plaintiff, and this cannot be without evidence given them; and if where an indebitat. assumpsit is brought for 100l. for goods sold, and the defendant lets this go by default; if the plaintiff at the executing the writ of inquiry, gives no evidence to the jury of any goods sold or delivered to the defendant: In this case, the jury must find some damages, because the defendant hath confessed the action, and admitted that there is damage; but there not being any proved, they ought to find only a penny, or some such small matter. 2 Lill. Abr. 721, 722.

If a writ of inquiry be executed without giving due notice thereof to the defendant, it shall be quashed. 2 Lill. 721. In action of covenant, judgment was given for the plaintiff in the Common Pleas by default, and a writ of inquiry of damages executed, and final judgment for the plaintiff. And on a writ of error brought in B. R. amongst other exceptions, one was, that no day was given on the writ of inquiry, and therefore it might be a discontinuance; but the court resolved, that they never give a day in C. B. on this writ, nor is it necessary, because nothing is done but to ascertain the damages. 1 Ld. Raym. 388. A writ of inquiry was ordered to be executed before the Lord Chief Justice, the action being laid for very large damages: And such writ hath been set aside where the jury gave too little damages; and a new writ of inquiry ordered by rule of court, on payment of costs, &c. Mod. Caf. in L. and E. 213, 240. A judgment shall not be set aside, after a writ of inquiry executed, unless in particular cases.

Year, (Annus) In the full extent of the word, contains a system or cycle of several months usually twelve; and is the time wherein the sun goes round his compass through the twelve signs, viz. three hundred and sixty-five days, and about six hours. A year is twelve months, as divided by Julius Cæsar: And the church begins the year on the first day of January, called New-year's-day; but the civil civil account formerly, not till March the 25th. It appears by ancient grants and charters, that our ancestors began the year at Christmas, which was observed here till the time of William I. commonly called the Conqueror; but afterwards, for some time the year of our Lord was seldom mentioned in grants, only the year of the reign of the King. *Mss. There is a year of the world, and a year of Christ: And besides the annus solaris: the lunar year, being the time in which any of the celestial bodies finish their course; and thirty days, by which the Egyptians reckoned. Year is also taken for time in general; and the age of man. Litt. By the Stat. 24 Geo. 2. c. 23. It is enacted, That the first day of January next following the last day of December 1751. shall be the first day of the year 1752. And that the first day of January next after the first day of January 1752, shall be the first day of the year 1753. And so on, the first day of January in every year, shall be the first day of the year. And that after the first day of January 1752. the several days of each month shall go on in the same order; and the feast of Easter and other moveable feasts thereon depending, shall be ascertained according to the same method they then were until the second day of September 1752. and that the natural day next following the said second day of September, shall be reckoned the fourteenth day of September, omitting for that time only the eleven intermediate days. And that the several natural days which shall succeed the said fourteenth day of September, shall be reckoned in numerical order according to the order and succession of days now used in the present calendar. All writings, &c. after the first of January 1752. to be dated according to the new stile: After 2 September 1752. Hilary and Michaelmas terms, and all courts to be held on the same nominal days and times they then were: The several years 1800, 1900, 2100, 2200, 2300, or any other hundredth year, (except every four hundredth year, of which the year 2000 shall be the first) shall not be deemed Bissextile or Leap Year, but common years consisting of 365 days. The years 2000, 2400, 2800, and every other four hundredth year from the year 2000 inclusive, and all other years, which are now esteemed Bissextile or Leap Years, shall for the future be esteemed Bissextile or Leap Years consisting of 366 days.

A calendar, and certain tables and rules for the fixing the true time for the celebration of the feast of Easter, and the finding of the times of the full moons on which the same depends, are annexed to this act, which shall be prefixed to all future editions of the Common-Prayer Book. Courts of Session and Exchequer in Scotland, and markets, fairs, and marts to be held upon the same natural days they should have been holden on, if this act had not been made. The natural days and times for the opening and inclosing of commons of pasture, not altered by this act. The natural days and times of payment of rents, annuities, sums of money or interest, or of the delivery of goods, commencement or expiration of leases, &c. Or of attaining the age of 21 years, &c. not altered by this act. See 25 Geo. 2. c. 30. 26 Geo. 2. c. 9. 34.

Year and Day. A year and a day is given to prosecute appeals; and for actions in a writ of right, &c. after entry or claim, to avoid a fine: And if a person wounded die in a year and day, it makes the offender guilty of murder, &c. 3 Inst. 53. 6 Rep. 107. Year, Day and Waste, (Annus, Dies & Vastum) Is a part of the King's prerogative, whereby he hath the profits of lands and tenements for a year and a day of those that are attainted of petit treason or felony, whosoever is lord of the manor whereto the lands or tenements do belong ; and the King may cause waste to be made on the tenements, by destroying the houses, ploughing up the meadows and pastures, rooting up the woods, &c. except the lord of the fee agree with him for the redemption of such waste ; afterwards restoring it to the lord of the Fee. Staudf. Prærog. 44.

Stat. 9 H. 3. cap. 22. "We will not hold the lands of them that be convict of felony but one year and one day, and then those land shall be delivered to the lords of the fee."

This appears by Glanvill to be due to the King by his ancient prerogative, 2 Inst. 36. cites Glanvill 7. cap. 17. fol. 59.

This chapter of Magna Charta Charter doth expresse that which doth belong to the King, viz. the year and the day, and omits the waste as not belonging to him; and this is notably explained by our ancient books with an uniform consent. 2 Inst. 36. cites Braddon, lib. 3. fol. 129. c. 137. and Britton, cap. 5. fol. 14. and Flota, lib. 1. cap. 28. and Mirror, c. 5. f. 2. The mirror, speaking of this chapter, saith; Le point des terres aux felons tenir per un an, est de fustie, car pei la ou le roy ne duist aver que le gult de droit, ou l'an en noisme de fine pur salver le fief de l'efcriptement preignent les ministres le roy ambideux. Upon all which it appears, that the King originally was to have no benefit in this case upon the attainder of felony, where the free land was holden of a subject, but only in detestation of the crime, Ut poena ad paucos, metus ad omnes perveniat; to prostrate the houses, to extirpate the gardens, to eradicate his wood and to plow up the meadows of the felon; for saving whereof, and pro bono publico, the lords, of whom the lands were holden, were contented to yield the lands to the king for a year and a day; and therefore not only the waste was justly limited out of this chapter of Magna Charta, but thereby it is enacted, that after the year and day the land shall be rendered to the lord of the fee, after which no waste can be done. 2 Inst. 37. Sejeant Hawkins says it seems agreed, that by the Common law, upon an attainder of felony, the King had a right utterly to waste the lands holden of any but himself, whereof the person attainted was seised of an estate of inheritance, either in his own or in his wife's right. And it is said by some, that the King hath both this right, and also a right to hold such lands for a year and a day. But it is holden by others, that the right to hold over the lands for a year and a day was given to the King in lieu of the waste, and it seems implied in Magna Charta, cap. 22. which saying, that the King shall not hold over the lands of those convicted of felony but for one year and a day, and making no mention of the waste, it seems plainly to intimate, that at the time of the making that statute the King was thought to have no other right but only to the year and day, 2 Hawk. Pl. C. 449. cap. 49. f. 8. ibid. in marg. says it seems admitted, 8 Edw. 3. Fitz. Trav. 489. Prescription 50. That the King was intitled to the waste, as well as to the year and day since that statute.

And where the treatise of prærogativa regis, made in 17 Edw. 2. says, Et postquam dominus rex habuerit annum, diem, & vassum, tunc redditur tenementum illud capitali domino feodi illius, nisi prius faciat finem pro anno, die & vasso; which is so to be expounded, that forasmuch as it appears in the said old books, that the officers and ministers did demand both for the waite and for year and day, that came in lieu thereof, therefore this treatise nameth both, not that both were due, but that a reasonable fee might be paid for all that which the King might lawfully claim. But if this act of 17 Ed. 2. be against this branch of Magna Charta, then it is repealed by the act of 4 Ed. 3. cap. 1. 2 Inst. 37. 2 Hawk. Pl. C. 449, cap. 49. f. 8. says, that the statute de prærogativa regis, made in 17 Ed. 2. having declared the King's right to the year and day, and also to the waite, it seems to have been the more general opinion since that time, that he had a right to both. Indeed if this statute had been against the express purview of Magna Charta, it would have been clearly repealed by those many subsequent statutes, which repeal all statutes contrary to Magna Charta; but being not contrary trary to the express words of it, but only to what is argumentatively drawn from it, it may be well argued that it is still in force. 2 Hawk. Pl. C. 449. cap. 49. § 8.

Hereby it also appears how necessary the reading ancient authors is for understanding of ancient statutes. And out of these old books you may observe, that when any thing is given to the King in lieu, or satisfaction of any ancient right of his crown, when once he is in possession of the new recompence, and the same in charge, his officers and ministers will many times demand the old also, which may turn to great prejudice, if it be not duly and discreetly prevented. 2 Inst. 37.

If there be lord, mesne, and tenant, and the mesne is attainted of felony, the lord paramount shall have the mesnalty, presently; for this prerogative belonging to the King, extends only to the land, which might be wasted, in lieu whereof the year and day was granted, 2 Inst. 37. And this is to be understood when a tenant in fee simple is attainted: for when tenant in tail, or tenant for life is attainted, there the King shall have the profits of the lands during the life of tenant in tail, or of the tenant for life. 2 Inst. 37.

[That be convict] Here convict, in a large sense, is taken for attainted: For the nature and true sense of both these words, see the first part of the Institutes; and likewise for this word felony there. 2 Inst. 37.

[Of felony] Must be understood of all manner of felonies punished by death, and not of petit larceny, which notwithstanding is felony. 2 Inst. 38. If lord and tenant are, and the tenant is attainted of felony, and the King has annum, diem & wastum, yet if the lord enters without due process, and the writ sued to the escheator, the land shall be re-seized, and he shall answer for the mesne issues and profits. Br. Re-Seizer, pl. 36. cites Ed. 2. and Fitz. Traverser, 48.

The statute de prerogativa Regis, cap. 15. wills, that if a felon has land, tunc Rex statim illam habeat, & habeat inde annum & wastum & terra destruetur, &c. & tunc reddatur capitali domino, &c. Quere, if this word (statim) shall be otherwise intended but after office found. Br. Corone, pl. 209.

Tenant by copy of court-roll by the verge in ancient demesne committed felony, and was attainted of it, and annum, diem & wastum was awarded for the King; and the reason seems to be, inasmuch as franktenants in ancient demesne have no other evidence but copies of court-rolls; for otherwise it seems to be of a mere copyholder out of ancient demesne for other frank tenement. Br. Tenant per copie, &c. pl. 22. cites 3 Ed. 3.

A man was outlawed of felony, and aliened his land to J. N. on which scire facias issued against him, who came and would have traversed the felony; and the court doubted if he might traverse it, by reason that he is a stranger to the record; but per Pigot by 7 Ed. 4. c. 2. he cannot traverse it in case of felony bring a stranger to the record; contra in case of trespass; on which it was prayed for the King, that year, day, and waste be adjudged for the King immediately, and so it was immediately from that day till a year and a day next after; quod nota. Quere, if the King may take the year and the day at what time he pleases; it seems he cannot. Br. Corone, pl. 205. cites 49 Ass. 2.

The King shall have the first year and day and waste of the land of him who is attainted of felony, which comes after the attainder, and whosoever takes the profits the year shall answer the profits to the King; per Fitzherbert. But it seems that this is to be understood after office found, or that the inquest which attaints him finds also what lands he had at the time of the felony committed, or after. And in the case above of 49 Ass. 2. the outlawry of felony was 18 Ed. 3. and writ issued to the coroner to inquire of his goods, lands and tenements, 48 Ed. 3. which returned that he had land, and aliened to J. N. after the outlawry; and upon this scire facias issued against J. N. who came and would have traversed the felony; and the year and day was awarded to the King with the waste. And so it seems that the King cannot take it, unless after office, which was thirty years after, as there. But Quere if, upon the office found, he who receives the profits the first year after the felony shall not be charged; it seems he shall per Fitzherbert. above; Quere the experience thereof in B. R. Br. Corone, pl. 207. cites F. N. B. fol. 144.

Year-books. Reports in a regular series from the reign of King Edw. 2. inclusive, to the time of Hen. 8. which were taken by the prothonotaries, or chief scribes of the court, at the expence of the crown, and published annually, whence they are known under the denomination of the year-books. Black. Com. 1 V. 71, 72.

Years, Estates for. An estate for years is a contract, for the possession of lands or tenements, for some determinate period: and it happens where a man letteth them to another, for the term of a certain number of years, agreed between the lessor and lessee, and the lessee enters thereon. If the lease be but for half a year, or a quarter, or any less time, this lessee is respected as a tenant for years, and is styled so in some legal proceedings. See Lease and Black. Com. 2 V. 140.

Yeoman, or Peoman, or Poman. A derivative of the Saxon, geman, i. e. communis. These Camden. in his Brit. pag. 105. placeth next in order to gentlemen, calling them ingenues, whose opinion the statute affirms, anno 6 Rich. 2. cap. 4. and 20 Rich. 2. cap. 2. Sir Thomas Smith in his Republ. Anglorum, lib. 1. c. 23. calls him a yeoman, whom our law calls legalem hominem, which (says he) is in the English a free-born man, that may dispend of his own free-land in yearly revenues to the sum of forty shillings sterling. Verstegan in his Restitution of decayed Intelligence, cap. 10. writes, That geman among the ancient Teutonicks, and gemein among the modern, signifies as much as common, and the latter being turned into y, is written yemen, which therefore signifies a commoner. Yeoman also signifies an officer in the King's house, in the middle place between the serjeant and the groom, as yeoman of the chandry, yeoman of the scullery, 33 H. 8. cap. 12. yeoman of the crown, 3 E. 4. 5. The word youngmen is used for yeomen, in the statute 33 H. 8. cap. 10. Cowell. See Black. Com. 1 V. 406.

Yeme, Is an ancient corruption of hieme, winter. Ib. id.

Yeben, or Yeoben, (as we use at the end of indentures and other instruments, Yeoven, the day and year first above written) Is derived from the Saxon, ceorian, i. e. dare, and is the same with given. So Diñum de Kenelworth concludes with—Yeoven, and proclaimed in the castle of Kenelworth the day before the calends of Nov. anno 1256. Cowell.

Yew, Is derived from the Greek ἔνυ, to hurt, and probably because before the invention of guns our ancestors made bows with this wood, with which they annoy'd their enemies, and therefore they took care to plant the trees in the church-yards, where they might be often seen and preserved by the people. Minshew.

Yielding and paying, (Reddendo & Solvendo) Comes from the Sax. Galdan & Gildan; and in Domesday, Gildare is frequently used for Solvere, Reddere, the Sax. G. being often turned into Y.

Yingman, Mentioned in the laws of King Hen. 1. c. 15. Spelman thinks may be a mistake for Inglishman or as we now say Englishman: But perhaps the yingme were rather youngmen, printed for yeomen and yemen, in Stat. 33 H. 8. cap. 10.

Yokelet, (Sax. Yoclet) Is a little farm, &c. in some parts of Kent, so called from its requiring but a yoke of oxen to till it. Sax. Diñ.

Yoke and Yokelet. Persons inhabiting, or those who have any goods within the province of York, may by Will dispose of all their personal estate, &c. 4 & 5 W. & M. cap. 2. And narrow woollen cloths shall have the names of the maker, millman, and searcher searcher stamped thereon; and not stretched above a yard in length, &c. under diverse penalties. See Stat. 7 Ann. c. 13. 1 Geo. 1. c. 15. 11 Geo. 2. c. 24. 7 Geo. 2. c. 25. 11 Geo. 2. c. 28. and 14 Geo. 2. c. 35.

Widow's Custom of. In the city of London, and province of York, the effects of an intestate after payment of his debts, are in general divided, according the ancient universal doctrine of the pars rationabilis. If the deceased leaves a widow and children, his substance, deducting the widow's apparel and furniture of her bed-chamber, which in London is called the widow's chamber, is divided into three parts; one of which belongs to the widow, another to the children, and the third to the administrator: if only a widow, or only children, they shall respectively, in either case, take one moiety, and the administrator the other: If neither widow nor child, the administrator shall have the whole. And this portion of dead man's part the administrator was wont to apply to his own use, 'till the Stat. 1 Jac. 2. c. 17. declared that the same should be subject to the statutes of distribution. So that if a man dies worth 1800 l. leaving a widow and two children, the estate shall be divided into eighteen parts; whereof the widow shall have eight, six by the custom, and two by the statute; and each of the children five, three by the custom, and two by the statute: if he leaves a widow and one child, they shall each have a moiety of the whole, or nine such eighteenth parts, six by the custom, and three by the statute: if he leaves a widow and no child, the widow shall have three-fourths of the whole, two by the custom, and one by the statute; and the remaining fourth shall go by the statute to the next of kin. If the wife be provided for by a jointure before marriage, in bar of her customary part, it puts her in a state of non-entity, with regard to the custom only; but she shall be intitled to her share of the dead-man's part, under the statute of distributions, unless barred by special agreement. And if any of the children are advanced by the father in his life-time, with any sum of money, (not amounting to their full proportionable part) they shall bring that portion into hotchpot with the rest of the brothers and sisters, (but not with the widow,) before they are intitled to any benefit under the custom: but if they are fully advanced, the custom intitles them to no farther dividend. Black. Com. 2 V. 518, 519. In the province of York, the heir at Commonlaw, who inherits any lands in fee or in tail, is excluded from any filial portion, or reasonable part. Black. Com. 2 V. 519.

Widow's Buildings Company. A corporation or company erected by statute for raising Thames water, in York-Buildings; and this company having bought the forfeited estates in Scotland on the rebellion anno 1 Geo. 1. to enable them to make good their engagements to the government, they were empowered to dispose of rent-charges, grant annuities, &c. and any person may purchase annuities of the said company. 7 Geo. 1. cap. 20.

Yule. In the North of England, the country people call the Feast of the Nativity of our Lord by the name of Yule, which is the proper Scotch word for Christmas; and the sports used at Christmas here, called Christmas Gambols, in Scotland they term Yule Games. A statute was made not long since for the repeal of a repealing act passed in the parliament of Scotland, intitled an act for discharging the Yule-vacance. 1 Geo. 1. c. 8.
